GENERAL POST-OFFICE.—NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.—On and after the 1st of March next the postage upon all late letters posted at the provincial offices, as well as the late letter fee, must be paid by attaching the requisite number of postage stamps. As any letter not bearing the requisite stamps, as determined by the office scales, must be detained until the next despatch, the public are advised in every case in which such detention would be inconvenient carefully to avoid all doubt as to the sufficiency of the stamps. As this arrangement will facilitate the receipt of late letters, the hours of closing the late letter boxes have been revised throughout the kingdom, and they will, whenever practicable, be kept open later than heretofore.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

FINANCIAL REFORM

MEETING AT MARYLEBONE.

A meeting of the parishioners of Marylebone was held on Tuesday, in the school-room of the workhouse, New-road, for the purpose of devising and adopting means for effecting a financial reform. The room, which is capable of holding several hundreds, was densely crowded

Amongst those present were Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P.; Mr. John Williams, M.P.; Sir Joshua Walmsley, M.P.; Mr. W. H. Williams, late M.P. for Coventry; Mr. Nisbet, Churchwarden; and a large body of the Vestrymen of Marylebone

Mr. Hume, M.P., on taking the Chair, said, that 37b members of the House of Commons had divided against Sir Cobden's motion, whilst all those who could now be called Reformers in that House, were eight in number, divided with Mr. Cobden and himself (Mr. Hume), thus making the minority but eight. (Cries of "Shame!") That House of Commons having thus manifested so great an indifference to the difficulty and distress of the country, and to the feelings, wishes, and wants of the people, it behoved the inhabitants of Marylebone, and of every parish in the kingdom, to demand those reforms which would place the control of the public expenditure directly in the hands of the people. He did not, however, so much blame the Ministers as he did the House of Commons in this matter. They were there to show the Government that a reduction in taxation, and a better representation of the people in the House of Commons were necessary, and that they were determined to have them. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. W. Williams (late M.P. for Coventry) proposed the first resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Nicholay:—"That in the opinion of this meeting the national expenditure has been increased by successive Governments to an extent not warranted by the exigences of the public services; that the taxation required to uphold this wasteful extravagance is impoverishing the people of this country; and that in order to obtain effectual reduction of taxation, and economy in the public expenditure, and secure a continuance thereof, it is indispensable that the Commons House of Parliament should be further reformed."

The resolution was carried amidst loud and prolonged acclamations.

Mr. Hodges moved second resolution:—"That this present mode of levying taxes is unjust in principle, and presses most unfairly on that portion of the community least able to bear its weight, and therefore such a revision has become indispensable as will have the effect of placing the burden of taxation on the property of the country, instead of the present unequal, complicated, and expensively collected system."

The Chairman here read a letter just received from one of the honourable members for Marylebone, Sir B. Hall, expressive of his regret that serious illness prevented his attendance at the meeting, and that the same cause also prevented his attendance to vote with Mr. Cobden on the previous evening.

Lord Dudley Stuart believed that financial reform was much needed, and that a reduction in the taxation, as well as expenditure, of the country ought to take place. (Cheers.) The absorbing proportion of this country was ground down by taxation, but he had little hope of obtaining any reduction until the people obtained a greater extension of political and Parliamentary reform. (Cheers.)

Mr. Hume, before putting this resolution, took the opportunity of mentioning that it was his intention again to bring before the House the motion he made last session for Parliamentary reform. (Great cheering.)

The resolution was carried without a dissentient.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS, M.P., said he had been sneered at for being a shopkeeper; but he had taken stock of the parish vestry offices, and he found a number of useless personages in the public offices who never thought of doing any work. There was one department where there were 250 clerks kept, the accounts of which department had not been balanced for eight years. (Loud shame.) The Government had been compelled to call in an accountant, and that gentleman, after three months' labour, had proved a large balance to be due; and the same gentleman had also declared that, by keeping the books by the system of double entry, he would do the whole of the work for 'h' 200 clerks were employed, with 29. Was not this a monstrous state of things? (Cries of "No, no! Hear, hear." and "Shame, shame.") He knew one noble Lord the member for Marylebone, that nothing could be done without a reform in the House of Commons: but he must confess that he considered the fault in a great measure rested with the people themselves in insufficiently electing to represent them, instead of men identified with the people. (Cheers.) Mr. Williams moved "That the attainment of the objects set forth in the preceding resolutions, it is expedient that an association be now formed, to be entitled the Marylebone Financial and Reform Association, and that the following be the objects of such association:—1. To use all legal and constitutional means of introducing the most rigid economy in the expenditure of the Government, consistent with due efficiency in the several departments of the public service, and to endeavour to obtain for the people a more direct control over the same by a further Reform of the House of Commons. 2. To obtain a complete revisal of taxation, and the substitution of an impost fairly levied on property and income, in lieu of the present unequal, complicated, and expensively collected duties upon commodities; political partisanship is distinctly disavowed, the association being composed of men of all political parties." (Loud cheers.)

This resolution was also carried unanimously, and the proceedings terminated.

MEETING AT SOUTHWARK.—A similar meeting of the inhabitants of the borough of Southwark was held also on Thursday was held also on that of the Literary Institution, Borough-road, at which resolutions were passed to the effect that the plan of financial reform, proposed by Mr. Cobden, M.P., was deserving of the utmost support, and that Sir W. Molesworth, Alderman Wood, and Mr. Wakley were worth, the members for the borough, be requested to aid his efforts in the House of Commons for its legislative adoption, and otherwise to promote a more equitable adjustment and a general reduction of taxation.

MEETING OF THE GRADUATES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—On Tuesday evening, at a meeting of the graduates of the University of London, in the Freemasons' Tavern, for the purpose of obtaining a new charter, that would, firstly, secure to graduates in arts the privilege of voting for a new government of the University; secondly, to watch over the academical and general interests of the medical graduates, and protect them from threatened legislative annihilation; and, thirdly, to obtain a public recognition of their degrees Mr. A. J. Wood in the chair; it was resolved, "That a committee be appointed, with full power to act on behalf of the graduates with reference to the obtaining a new charter."

A GRAVEDIGGER BURIED ALIVE.—Mr. Baker held an inquest on Wednesday, at the Green Dragon, Well-street, Hackney, on view of the body of Charles Barker, aged 72, a gravedigger attached to South Hackney Old Church, who was buried alive in a grave he was digging, on last Saturday afternoon.

It was a ten-foot grave, and was formed without shores or props. Deceased had dug the proper depth, and the assistant grave-digger was standing at the edge, in the act of receiving the last pail of earth from the deceased, when one side fell in, by which deceased was completely covered. An alarm was immediately given, and several persons came to the assistance; when he was extricated, he was quite extinct. Three quarters of an hour elapsed before he was extricated. By the Coroner:—The deceased was attributed to the grave being constructed too near another recently formed. Mr. Brett, sexton, stated that deceased had ordered and props provided for the grave-diggers, who thought it too much trouble to use them. The Coroner said that he hoped that the sexton would take care that proper precaution was taken in future. Verdict—"Accidental death."

HIGHWAY ROBBERY AND MURDER AT PENTONVILLE.—On Wednesday morning the body of a gentleman was found near the Model Prison, Pentonville, who to all appearance had been murdered and afterwards robbed. His throat was cut from ear to ear, and other marks of violence were detected on his person. The name of the gentleman murdered is Mr. Thomas Lewis, a physician of Kentish-town. It is said that he left home on the previous evening, having a large sum of money in his possession, for the purpose of taking a walk; but not returning, his absence caused alarm, and the inquiries which had been set on foot led to the identification of the deceased in the vault of St. Mary's Church, Islington, whither the body had been removed.

THE STORM ON WEDNESDAY.—The high wind and rain that prevailed in the metropolis all Wednesday caused no inconsiderable loss to the varied interests exposed to their influence, but more especially to the shipping. In the Pool, several of the smaller craft were visited with the full fury of the squall, blowing now a fierce north-easter, and anon from all points of the compass, rendering it indispensable that all hands should "look alive." Notwithstanding the utmost exertions, several colliers and brigs sought their cables, which it required all the experience and skill of the crews to prevent the vessels running foul of each other; and, in a few instances, the bowsprits of sloops came in contact with the stern of the larger ships, whereby the outer fittings and running fixed, rendering it difficult to disengage them. The Thames steamers, too, came in for a full share of the little hurricane, but, though they laboured hard, we have not heard of any serious befalling them.

THE BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN LONDON during the week ending Saturday last were—Births, 1493; deaths, 1191. The deaths are 22 above the average, but were a decrease on the previous week. The number of fatal mortality from diseases of the respiratory organs is the same as on the average has prevailed in five previous winters; for though, as we observed last week, the deaths from bronchitis are 116, or 45 above the average, those from pneumonia are 58, or 15 below it. But zymotic diseases continue to show a great excess; they were fatal to 169 persons more than died weekly in the previous 5 years. The prevailing epidemics being hooping-cough, erysipelas, and cholera. Hooping-cough, which carries off the young, as bronchitis the old, caused 9 deaths, or 34 more than the average; scarlatina 31, or 18 above the average. It is remarked that the cases in which death followed from this complaint in the scarlatina are considerably fewer, relatively, than when the epidemic was at its height. The mortality from typhus is at present low; that from small-pox is near the average. Four persons died of intemperance, on one of whom an inquest was held; a case of delirium tremens, which is in many cases the result of intemperance. A boy of sixteen is certified to have died of "starvation after an attack of small-pox," (no inquest). A woman died in Lambeth at the advanced age of 100 years from ulceration of the throat, after an illness of two months! Of the 60 deaths from chicken pox (being a decrease of 9 on the preceding week) 10 occurred at the Female Refuge for the Destitute in Shoreditch, and 16 at Warburton's Lunatic Asylum in Bethnal-green.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Barometer, mean from six observations corrected 29.314 · thermometer, highest dry, mean, 51.2; lowest, 38 ; mean from six observations, corrected, 45 4; mean dew point, 40.4; highest in the sun, 59.2; lowest on the grass, 34.6. Wind variable.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The extreme fluctuation in the English Market during the past week has been one and three-quarters per cent. On Monday Consols opened flatly, at 91 for money and account, afterwards receding to 92¼, and closing [illegible] confidence of sales of stock for the public, joined to a rumour that Austrian troops were moving in the direction of the Roman States. So great at one period of the day was the demand for loans on stock, that the value of money rose to three per cent., a tolerable proof that the speculators for the rise have overbought themselves, and are borrowing money on the stock to avoid selling to close their accounts. The continental news on Thursday being, however, more favourable, prices gradually advanced from the opening quotation of 91¾ ⅞ for Money, to 92¾ ⅞, at which quotation they closed. Indian Bonds receded on Wednesday to 99 ½, and Exchequer Bills to 33 to 35. At the close of the week there was rather more firmness in the market; but an anticipation generally prevails, that the late sales, which have been generally on foreign account, will be followed by a large amount of similar orders. There can be little doubt that as affairs tranquilise on the Continent, the capital invested by foreigners in our funds between April and October last year will be gradually withdrawn, the profit on a rise of nearly 15 per cent being an inducement to hasten the operation. Thus the anomaly may be witnessed of tranquility on the Continent and an improvement at some producing a fall in Consols. The annexed list shows the rate of the latest bargains:—Bank Stock, 193½; Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities, 92¾; Three per Cent. Consol. Annuities, 92¾; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, 98 ; Long Annuities, to expire Jan., 1860, 8 13-16; Ditto, 30 years, Oct. 10, 1859, 8¾; Ditto, 30 years, Jan. 5, 1856, 8¾; India Stock, 263 ; India Bonds, £1000, 88 p; Ditto, under £1000, 88 p; Consols for Account, 92¾; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 42 p; £500, June, 40 p; Small, June, 40 p; Ditto, July, 37 p.

In the Foreign market there has been an average amount of business transacted. Speculation, however, has merely confined itself to the scrip of the New Danish Loan. On Monday the opening price was 6, from which it gradually advanced to 8 ; it has since, however, receded to 7. Venezuelan has been quoted at 29, 26, and 27 ; the last value is the present. Mexican has undergone a reaction from 26½ to 26¾, but leaves off 26¾. Spanish [illegible] more buoyant. At the close of the week the market was animated, as the following quotations will show:—Brazilian, 103 ; Buenos Ayres Bonds, [illegible]; Danish Bonds, 5 per cent. scrip, 1849, 8 p; Mexican 5 per cent. [illegible]; Peruvian Bonds, 6 per Cents, 30 ; [illegible] 5 per Cents, Account, 20½ ; Spanish 5 per cent., 1840, 24½ ; Ditto, Account, 19½ ; Ditto, Passive, 4½ ; Ditto, 3 per Cent., Account, 20½ ; Venezuela Bonds, 25 per cent., 26½ ; Ditto, Deferred, 7½ ; Dutch 2½ per cent., 48½ ; Ditto, 4 per cent., 79.

English Shares have been generally flatter during the week, the foreign lines, on the contrary, improving. To the result of the different railway meetings, the effect upon the English Stock may be attributed. The Eastern Counties meeting was a very unfavourable one, shares have not shown any numerical reaction. The low prices of the established lines offer a tempting opportunity for those who have bought at high prices, to now invest at low, and thus average their difficulties. The Midland quietly progresses for some time past on the part of the watchful portion of the public; hence the slight reaction that has occurred in price. The last rates are, for Aberdeen, Preference, 95½ ; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, calls not paid, or with a guarantee, 26½ ; Buckinghamshire, 24 ds ; Caledonian, 23¾ x d ; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 8 ; Ditto, New £10 Preference, 11¼ ; Chester and Holyhead, 8¾ ; East Anglia, £25, L. and E. and I. and D., 3 ; Ditto, £18, E. and R., 2 ¼ ; Ditto, £3 10s., 2¾ ; Eastern Counties, 10¾ ; Eastern Union Scrip (6 per cent.), 18¾ ; East Lancashire, New, 19¾ ; East Lincolnshire, 2¾ ; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 44 ; Great Northern, 113½ ; Ditto, 2½ B., 6 per Cent., 6¾ ; Great Western, 97¾ x d ; Ditto, Half Shares, 49¾ x d ; Lancashire and Yorkshire, Fifths, 7¾ ; Ditto, Thirds, 5 ; Leeds and Bradford, 104 x d ; London and Blackwall, 6¾ x d ; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 35½ ; Ditto, New £5, Guaranteed Six per Cent., 6; London and North-Western, 137 x d ; Ditto, New, 12¾ x d ; Ditto, Fifths, 2¾ ; London, Chatham, and Dover, 3¾ ; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, New £10 Preference, 10½ ; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, New £50 Preference, 10¾ ; Midland, 88 x d ; Ditto, ditto, £50 Shares, 18½ ; Ditto, Birmingham and Derby 55 x d ; Ditto, Consolidated Three per Cent. Preference, 81 ; Ditto, Bristol and Gloucester, 84 ; Ditto, Guaranteed Five-and-a-Half per Cent., 42 x d ; North British, Halves, 7¾ ; Ditto, Quarters, 3¾ ; Ditto Thirds, 4¾ ; North Staffordshire, 14¾ ; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 21 ; Scottish Central, 13 ; Scarborough and Birmingham, Class B, 2¾ ; Ditto, New Guaranteed, 10 ; Shrewsbury and Chester, Halves, 9¾ x d ; Shropshire Union, 5¾ ; South Staffordshire, 4¾ ; South Eastern, 25½ ; Ditto, No. 2, 17 ; Ditto, Registered, No. 4, 7¾ ; Ditto, Scrip, No. 4, 2¾ ; South Wales, 18 ; Sheffield, Rotherham, and Goole (N. Dv.), Guaranteed Five per Cent., 8¾ ; York, Newcastle, and Berwick (Original New and Berwick), 20 x d ; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, 19½ x d : Ditto, G. N.E. Preference, 8 ; York and North Midland, 50 ; Ditto, Preference, 10½ ; Ditto, East and West Riding Junction, 3¾ x d ; Bordeaux and Cette, 4¾ ; Central of France (Nouvelle Compagnie), 18 ; Namur and Liege, 8¾ ; Northern of France, 11¾ ; Orleans and Bordeaux, 3¾ ; Paris and Rouen, 20¾ ; Paris and Strasbourg, 4¾ x ¼ ; Rouen and Havre, 13¾ ; Sambre and Meuse, 8 ; Tours and Nantes, 5¾

THE MARKETS.

[illegible] Scarcely any English wheat has been received up to our market this week, coastwise or by land carriage. To-day the show of samples of both red and white was scanty, from the unwonted severity of the weather; what for sale, the deliveries were in a very inactive state, the millers buying only to retail at about Monday's quotations. The factors generally were disposed to accept lower rates, but the bulk of the parcels were not disposed of. Nearly 21,000 quarters of [illegible] Secured prices moved off slowly, at quotations previously given. The show of the publishing and inferior kinds was somewhat plentiful. Fleeting cargoes were offering at a trifle less money. [illegible] Maltster samples sold at full prices. Grinding and distilling sorts were in request, and fine Indian corn without alteration. Flour moved off slowly, at [illegible] pose, and Indian corn without alteration. Flour moved off slowly, at [illegible]

English: wheat, 2266; barley, 4180; oats, 2850. Irish: oats, 3420. Foreign [illegible] 2; rye, 60; barley, 1660. Flour, 5810 sacks; malt, 39.0 quarters.

English. Wheat: Essex and Kent, white, 48s to 52s; ditto, red, 44s to 52s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 40s to 50s; ditto, white, 44s to 52s; rye, 32s to 32s; grinding barley, 24s to 26s; distilling ditto, 27s to 28s; malting ditto, 29s to 30s; Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 56s to 58s; brown ditto, 46s to 50s; Kingston and Ware, 58s to 59s; Chevalier, 59s to 60s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 21s, potato ditto, 20s to 22s; Tougal and Cork, black, 16s to 19s, ditto, white, 16s to 20s, tick beans, new, 30s to 34s; ditto, old, —s to —s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 36s to 38s; white ditto, 37s to 39s; Lisbon, 38s to 40s; Egyptian, 32s to 34s; Harrow, 42s to 44s; Suffolk, 34s to 36s, Stockton and Yorkshire, 34s to 36s, per 280 lbs.—Foreign: Danish wheat, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; malt, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 23s to 27s per barrel; Baltic, [illegible]

The Seed Market.—Clover seed is steady, and prices are on the advance. Canary seed is lodging at the late reduction. In other seeds very little is doing.

Linseed. English, sowing, 56s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 50s to 54s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 48s to 50s; hempseed, 40s to 42s per quarter; cakes, 10s to 10s 10d per ton. Rapeseed, 36s to 41s; white do., 38s to 42s; tares, 4s to 5s per bushel; trefoil, 20s to 30s per cwt.; red clover, £27 to £30 per ton; white ditto, £30 to £34 per cwt. English, 28s to 31s; white ditto, 32s to 36s; foreign, 24s to 27s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £4 4s to £4 5s per ton; canary, 10s to 11s per quarter. English clover-seed, —s to —s; ditto, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; trefoil, —s to —s.

Bread. The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 9d; of household ditto, 5d to 6d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 46s 4d; barley, 29s 8d; oats, 17s 5d; rye, 27s 10d; peas, 34s 11d.

Similar Average.—Wheat, 46s 10d; barley, 29s 8d; oats, 17s 2d; rye, 27s 10d; beans, 36s 6d; peas, 35s 0d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 10s; barley, 5s; oats, 2s 6d; rye, 5s 0d; beans, 5s; peas, 5s 6d.

Cattle.—Only a moderate business is doing in most kinds of meat; yet prices are fairly supported.

Sugar.—Good and fine qualities of raw sugar have advanced from 6d to 1s per cwt. the week. The refiners, however, are still very backward in operating, as the stocks on hand are large. Refined sugar has remained in [illegible]

Coffee. This article is dull, and former rates are with difficulty supported. Native Ceylon, 51s to 53s 6d per cwt.

Rice.—Most kinds have receded in value 4d per cwt. The supply is considerably in excess of the demand.

Provisions. The best Dutch butter is scarce, at 112s to 116s for [illegible] Friesland, 4s; 100s to 104s per cwt for fine Holland. Rather more business is doing in Irish butter, in full [illegible] Carlow and Kilkenny, fresh, landed, 76s to 80s; Clonmel, 76s to 76s; Cork 68s to [illegible]; Limerick, 66s to 68s; Waterford, 68s per cwt. Bacon is in fair request, at 52s to 54s for [illegible] Mild cures, 44s to 46s per cwt. Hams, 60s to 70s. Lard, 48s to 50s per cwt. Pork, 70s to 80s; Clonmel, 70s to 76s; Cork 68s to [illegible]; Limerick, 66s to 68s; Waterford, 68s per cwt. Beef, 70s to 80s per tierce. The demand for [illegible] is very moderate, at 44s to 46s for fine Ostend. Fresh, 10s to 12s per dozen lbs. Bacon is slow in sale at former rates. Hams, 60s to 70s per cwt. Lard, 48s to 50s per cwt. Pork, 70s to 80s; Clonmel, 70s to 76s; Cork 68s to [illegible]; Limerick, 66s to 68s; Waterford, 68s per cwt. Beef, 70s to 80s per tierce. Butter is in fair request, at 112s to 116s for fine Irish. Carlow and Kilkenny, fresh, landed, 76s to 80s; Clonmel, 76s to 76s; Cork 68s to [illegible]; Limerick, 66s to 68s; Waterford, 68s per cwt. Bacon is in fair request, at 52s to 54s for [illegible] Mild cures, 44s to 46s per cwt. Hams, 60s to 70s. Lard, 48s to 50s per cwt. Pork, 70s to 80s; Clonmel, 70s to 76s; Cork 68s to [illegible]; Limerick, 66s to 68s; Waterford, 68s per cwt. Beef, 70s to 80s per tierce. Butter is in fair request, at 112s to 116s for fine Irish. Carlow and Kilkenny, fresh, landed, 76s to 80s; Clonmel, 76

ADVERTISEMENTS.

COLLEGE LIFE: A Series of Original Etchings, by EDWARD BRADLEY, B.A. Part II., Price 5s. 6d., is now ready. London, HODGE; Oxford, Ryman; Cambridge, Leighton Bowbank, Andrews

THE CALIFORNIAN or GOLDEN POLKA. [illegible] Title Composed by J. F. REDDIE, for the [illegible] forte [illegible] To be had of all Music-sellers.

MDLLE. JENNY LIND'S BALLAD, "THE LONELY ROSE," composed expressly by Mr. Balfe, and sung by Mdlle Lind at his Concert at Exeter Hall. "It is one of the happiest inspirations of the composer. Nothing could be more perfect than Mdlle. Lind's singing of this ballad."—Times, Jan. 30 CRAMER, BEALE, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

NEW SONG.—"THE SECRET." By the Author and Composer of "Will You Love Me Then as Now?" and "Dearer, Then I'm Dear You Must Be." Free by post (post paid) The very charming Song [illegible] by the Author and composer of the above favourite Songs, as both words and music are highly interesting.—Rachewood London: LEVEY and HOLLOWAY, 65, Oxford-street

[illegible] Office, 67, Paternoster-row, [illegible]

LA DAME BLANCHE, as Piano Solos, is just added to the PIANISTA, No. 102, 2s. Also, New Books of Somnambula, La Figlia, Les Rugonots, Lucia, Figaro, Barbier, and 20 other Operas. In each Number. Post-free, 30 Stamps. Catalogues gratis

MESSRS. COCKS' NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

ELIZA COOK'S LATEST BALLAD—Music by those eminent composers, STEPHEN GLOVER, LODER and H. HERBERT ROSWELL, Esqs. "It is a song my mother will get, 'The Song of the Forest Bird,' " "The Song of the Mother Boy," "Also the reviewers, we shall our friendship be." "The Old Palace," "Come let us part," and "The Rostrums of the Dove." 2s. each LLEWELLYN'S BRIDE, Ballad, written by Mrs. CRAWFORD, sung by GEORGE BARKLEY, most rapturously encored at his last entertainments, beautifully illustrated by B. Gard Price 2s. 6d. N.B. A few copies on usual of Cocks' Musical Almanack for 1849, price 1s.

FLEUR DE MARIE, Ballad, words by COOKE, set by GEORGE BARKER. Always encored, musically demanded at his ballad entertainments; most exquisitely illustrated by Brandard Price 2s. 6d.

SACRED MUSIC.—WARREN'S CHANT-ERS HAND-GUIDE, for the use of churches, chapels, training colleges, schools, &c.; containing the Morning and Evening Service pointed for Chanting, with 10 of the most favourite single and double Chants. Price 1s., or thirteen 2s. 6d. per dozen. postage free. London: Printed only by [illegible] COCKS & Co., 6, New Burlington-street, Publishers to the Queen Dowager

NEW WORKS JUST PUBLISHED

LOFODEN; or, The Exiles of Norway. By [illegible] WARDLOW, Esq., Author of "The Bushman" 2 vols post 8vo, 21s. cloth.

THE EMIGRANT FAMILY; or, the Story of an Australian Settler. By the Author of "Settlers and Convicts." 2 vols post 8vo, 2s 6d cloth.

ADVENTURES of the FIRST SETTLERS on the OREGON or COLUMBIA RIVER. By ALEXANDER ROSS. 1 vol post 8vo, 10s 6d cloth

AGLANCE at REVOLUTIONIZED ITALY. By CHARLES MACFARLANE, Author of "Sports, Pastimes, a Recollection of the South of Italy" &c. &c. 2 vols post 8vo 21s Cloth Uncut leaves.

"A clever, well informed book Morning Chronicle.

"In author's relation of the late struggles is told in a spirit of impartiality" Morning Herald

"A very graphic and powerful picture of the recent condition of Italy" —Morning Advertiser

"Two most instructive and instructive [illegible] Magazine.

[illegible] ELDER and Co., 65, Cornhill

THE MAN in the MOON.—The March Number [illegible] this popular periodical is now publishing, at the Office [illegible] Yard-street; also at No. 17, Warwick-lane, London Sold by all Booksellers and Newsvendors; and at the Railway Stations and Steamboat Piers. This Number is full of Quaint Conceits and Comicalities, and abounds in Queer Cuts and Quidnuncs Price only 3d.

GLENNY'S HANDBOOK to the FLOWER GARDEN, and GREENHOUSE, now ready, price 6d. This most useful Handbook contains the Culture, Propagation, Management, and Description of all the popular Flowers and Plants worthy of cultivation in this country, with a Calendar of Operations for the Flower Garden, Greenhouse, and Boudoir, for every month. GLENNY'S [illegible] Twelve Monthly Parts.—[illegible] and sold by all booksellers

Second Edition, 18mo, with Frontispiece, price 3s., post free 3s. 6d.

THE TEETH: Popular Observations on their [illegible] with, Irregularities, and Management, from Infancy to Old Age. By W. H MORTIMER, Surgeon [illegible]

"Mr. Mortimer's little work [illegible]

NEILL on CATARACT, 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [illegible]—A NEW WORK on CATARACT, including the [illegible] the most successful Operations for its Cure, by the Author of Practical Remarks on the best Modes of Operating for Cataract, this Disease. By ROBERT NEILL, M.D., Surgeon to the Liverpool Eye and Ear Infirmary. "As Mr. Neill has conferred no little benefit on the public by the mode of attracting the attention of the profession to the safe and certain expedient of depression, whereby innumerable cases will be saved a failure from the destruction occasioned by incision [illegible] In conclusion, we must add that Mr. Neill's book [illegible] with the [illegible] and [illegible] tables compiled, embracing power to give [illegible] Surgeon Journal, September 20, 1845. Liverpool: DAKIN and LAMB; Simpkin and Marshall, London JOHN CHURCHILL, And all booksellers

DR. YEOMAN ON CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA [illegible] Just published, Price 3s., by post, 3s. 6d.,

CONSUMPTION of the LUNGS, or DECLINE: its Causes, Symptoms, and Rational Treatment, with the Means of Prevention By T. H. YEOMAN, M.A. [illegible] Late Principal [illegible] Author of "Asthma, Bronchitis, Influenza, and Catarrh."

We have learned more from a perusal of these two excellent little works than from the many volumes we have previously read on the subjects." Bolton Chronicle

London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.; [illegible] apham Wilson, 11, [illegible]

MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE. A Popular Treatise, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE FRIESLAND DWARF.

(Continued from page 142.)

ground on the east side of the Queen's-road, opposite Windsor-terrace. The edifice is in the late Elizabethan style, exhibiting a new character of public building in the town, worthy of the object, and of the benevolence of the inhabitants and visitors of Brighton.

The architect is Herbert Williams, Esq., of Great Ormond-street, London; the contractors are Messrs. Cheeseman and Sons, of Brighton.

The first stone of the new building was laid on Thursday by the Earl of Chichester, the President of the Institution. A large platform was raised, covering the whole site, to which admission was obtained by tickets. The proceedings commenced by Thomas Attree, Esq., the Vice-President, taking the chair; and after a few introductory remarks from him, Somers Clarke, Esq., Honorary Secretary to the Institution, presented the Earl of Chichester with the silver trowel prepared for the occasion, and read the names of the trustees, the list being deposited in a bottle provided for the purpose.

Eardley Nicholas Hall, Esq., the treasurer, then deposited some coins of the present reign; the Rev. J.N. Goulby, deposited an engraved brass plate; and the bottle was then sealed by the architect, and placed in a cavity prepared for it.

The Rev. Vicar then offered prayer, and the stone was laid by the Earl Chichester, after which further prayer was offered, and the ceremony closed by three cheers, and the Band of the 7th Dragoon Guards playing the National Anthem.

NEW DISPENSARY AT BRIGHTON, FOUNDED ON THURSDAY.

The principal clergy, magistrates, and the high constable and parochial authorities of Brighton were present; and, considering the state of the weather, a very large attendance of the fashionable visitors and inhabitants.

THE FRIESLAND DWARF.

THIS miniature wonder had the honour of attending before her Majesty and the Court, at Buckingham Palace, on the evening of Wednesday week.

In the "descriptive sketch," sold at the Cosmorama Rooms, in Regent-street, where the Dwarf is exhibited, he is described as "Jan Hannema, the Friesland Dwarf, known in Holland as Admiral Van Tromp." He was born in 1839, at Franeker, in Friesland, in Holland. At the time of his birth, Jan presented the ordinary appearance of a healthy, well-proportioned child, and continued to progress in strength in the ordinary way, until he reached his sixth month, from which time to the present he has only increased four pounds in weight. At the time of his birth he weighed nine pounds: when six months old, he weighed twelve pounds, without his clothes, which weight he has not exceeded

He has not grown in height since he was five years old, and now measures only twenty-eight inches. He is remarkably active, quiet, very intelligent, fond of being employed, and frequently amuses himself by making dwarf furniture—chairs, tables, and other articles. He can write his name, converses upon general simple subjects, and has a retentive memory.

At eight years of age Jan was shown to the King of Holland, who granted him a pension, which he still enjoys. He has been exhibited in the chief towns of Holland, and has proved very attractive. The following is a translation of the certificate of his birth:—

"Middle Class or the town Franeker,
District Province,
No. 2682. Leeuwarden Friesland.

Extract of the Register for the notice of Births in the town of Franeker.

1839. On the twenty-third of the month April, eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, Jan, son of Pieter Philippus Hannema, and of Bankje Jans Hannema, married persons, was born at Franeker.

For the extract of the Confirmation.

The member of the Council, officer of the middle class of the town Franeker. Made the 14th June, 1847. J. MULDER."

THE BAND OF GENTLEMEN-AT-ARMS.

THE splendour of the uniform of this portion of the Body Guard of the Sovereign has just been increased by the addition of a new helmet of classical design: it is of burnished gold, highly embossed, and ornamented with the Royal arms, and a star of burnished silver in front; the whole surmounted by a white plume. This new helmet was worn, we believe, for the second time at the Investiture of the Order of the Bath, held at Buckingham Palace, on Saturday last. The other appointments of the uniform are gold sling-belts, heavy cavalry swords, and gauntlets, gold lace pouch-belts, and embroidered pouches, bullion epaulettes, and gold sashes and tassels; the uniform somewhat resembling the full-dress of the officers of the Heavy Dragoons.

NEW HELMET, WITH UNIFORM, OF HER MAJESTY'S GENTLEMEN-AT-ARMS.

The Band of Gentlemen-at-Arms (formerly styled Gentlemen Pensioners) was established by Henry VIII., as the body guard of the Sovereign, which it has ever remained to the present time. None but those holding the rank of gentlemen, and in no way connected with trade or business, can enter the corps. This regulation was ordered by his late Majesty, William IV.

In the event of a death vacancy, the patronage devolves upon the Commander-in-Chief; and by a regulation, made by William IV., no one under the rank of Captain can be appointed private in this corps. Since this regulation, three vacancies have occurred; and they were respectively filled up by Captain Kincaid, Major Blakiston, and Major Cooke.

The military character of the corps is still kept up. They are armed by the Government, regularly drilled by their officers, and are in the highest state of military discipline; and on the 10th of April, last year, when the peace of the metropolis was threatened, they were on duty, by command of her Majesty, in the Palace.

The duty of the Band now consists in attending every Levee and Drawing-room in the Presence Chamber, where they stand to their arms when any of the Royal Family pass. They keep the pass in the room where the Sovereign receives an address on the throne, and also in the interior approach to the House of Peers, when the Sovereign goes thither. On all such occasions they are covered, en militaire.

On the demise of the Crown, or on the death of a Queen-Consort, the Band of Gentlemen attend the funeral, and flank the canopy; and at Coronations, the Band have a prescriptive right to carry up the Royal dinner without exhibiting any claims. They have the further honour of carrying up the second course at St. George's Feast.

In reward for such services on Coronations, the Sovereign has of late years usually conferred the honour of Knighthood on some of the Officers, or Gentlemen of the Band, ordering the customary fees to be paid at the Treasury; and on Installations, the Sovereign often confers the same honour, but does not carry the compliment so far as to discharge the fees.

London: Printed and published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTER, 198, Strand aforesaid.—SATURDAY MARCH 3 1849.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 361.—Vol. XIV.] SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1849. [Sixpence. { WITH SUPPLEMENT GRATIS.

THE WAR IN THE PUNJAUB.

In this Journal of the 24th ult., after detailing the circumstances attendant upon the capture of Moultan, we expressed our opinion that Lord Gough, reinforced by General Whish, would speedily give a satisfactory account of Shere Singh. We described the position of the Sikh chieftain upon the bank of the Jhelum, flanked and covered by the stream and by a thick jungle. That jungle, as we are informed by the last India mail, has been the scene of important and deplorable events. Lord Gough has attacked Shere Singh, as was anticipated. In that attack, the British army, though not actually defeated, was not actually victorious. It is, happily, rare that a phraseology like this can express the operations of a British force. In our position in India a drawn battle is equivalent to a defeat. There has been great slaughter on both sides; and India and England ring with the expressions of regret, if not of anger, at the conduct of the brave, but indiscreet, commander, who has imperilled our power, tarnished our name, and sacrificed the flower of our army in a blind and fruitless battle with an enemy, whose position and strength he had not calculated.

Our contemporaries of the daily press speak of the circumstances that led to and accompanied the attack upon the position of Shere Singh as involved in too much confusion to permit of a clear comprehension of them. To us they seem simple enough. The official despatch of Lord Gough, although it paints the picture in fair colours, tells a story which, with the aid of the more discursive narratives of the Indian newspapers, and of the private correspondence that has found its way into the London journals, is quite intelligible. His Lordship was, in fact, betrayed into action. His personal daring, which would have been invaluable in a subordinate General, was displayed at a time when a cool and deliberate judgment would have been ten thousand times better than the animal courage of the most undaunted Paladin that ever breathed. Shere Singh has been too cunning for the open-hearted and strong-handed veteran that commanded the British army of the Punjaub; and while the public cannot but speak with respect of the dashing energy of Lord Gough, they cannot but regret that ill-fortune or ill-management, or both combined, should have entrusted the chief command to his strong hand, when a cool head was the one thing most especially requisite. Upon this point, however, it is now useless to dwell. The period of Lord Gough's command has already expired, and his successor has been appointed. The unanimous voice of the country designated the conqueror of Scinde—the most illustrious and successful soldier of the present generation—for the chief command in India. The appointment of Sir Charles James Napier was announced in the House of Commons on Tuesday evening by the Prime Minister, amid manifestations of joy, which will show Sir Charles the high respect that is felt for his genius and character, and the large hopes that are excited by his name. The Directors of the East India Company, forgetting, as in such an emergency they were bound to do, the personal disputes that had unhappily existed between them and Sir Charles, have confirmed the appointment of her Majesty; and the new commander will proceed to India on the 20th of the present month. The very announcement of his name, carried out by the India mail of Wednesday, will produce its effect upon the Sikhs—rebellious in fact, upon the Affghans—rebellious in intention, and upon the whole native population of India. Fear, respect, and admiration of that name are mingled in their minds. It is synonymous with courage, wisdom, and victory, in the estimation of Scinde. It will, doubtless, become synonymous with victory among the Sikhs of the Punjaub. Sir Charles will not be able to reach the scene of conflict until the end of April—too late, in ordinary circumstances, to continue field operations. The only months in which, according to Sir Charles's own statements, war ought to be made by Europeans in India, are December, January, February, March, and April. To attempt operations after that period is only excusable," he says, "when danger forces a General to the sad alternative." This was the case in Scinde, in 1843, when he was obliged to take the field in June, or risk the destruction of the army under his command—with what splendid results, all the world knows. It is possible that the present campaign will have been decided for good or for evil before his arrival in the country of the Five Rivers; but if any victory shall in the meantime have been achieved, he will be there to turn it to immediate and to future account; and if our arms have sustained a reverse, he will be there, let us hope, to remedy it and to turn it into a victory. A universal sentiment of confidence is felt by the people of Great Britain in this appointment. It will be strange indeed if that confidence be not justified by the result.

[COUNTRY EDITION, WITH FRIDAY'S LONDON MARKETS]

The main incidents of the battle of the jungle are soon told. The skirmish at the ford of the Chenab, where the lives of the brave General Cureton and his gallant companions were so needlessly sacrificed, was of evil omen. It was but the prelude to a more deplorable waste of our energy. Having received intelligence, on the 10th of January, of the fall of Attock, and the advance of Chuttur Singh from the country of the Hazareh to effect a junction with his son and ally, Shere Singh, upon the bank of the Jhelum, Lord Gough determined to attack the position of the latter. Major Mackeson, the political agent of the Governor-General, in notifying the fall of Attock, urged upon Lord Gough the importance of striking a blow at Shere Singh before the reinforcements of his father could reach him. Lord Gough coincided in this opinion, and moved his army, on the 12th, to Dingee, a village about twelve miles in advance of his previous encampment. On the 13th, early in the morning, he made another advance, an

LIEUT.-GEN. SIR CHARLES JAMES NAPIER, G.C.B., IN HIS COSTUME AS GOVERNOR OF SCINDE.

Lieutenant-General Sir Charles James Napier, G.C.B., who has just received the appointment of Commander-in-Chief in India, is in his 67th year, and is the eldest son of the Hon. George Napier (son of the fifth Lord Napier) by his second wife, Sarah, seventh daughter of the second Duke of Richmond. He is, therefore, brother to Major-General Sir George Napier, G.C.B., and to Major-General Sir William Napier, K.C.B., late Governor of Guernsey, and the Peninsular historian, and cousin to Rear-Admiral Sir Charles Napier, K.C.B., late M.P. for Marylebone. The subject of this notice was born in Whitehall-place, London, on the 10th of August, 1782. While yet an infant, his father, the Hon. Colonel George Napier before referred to, proceeded to Ireland, as Comptroller of Army Accounts, and occupied a country residence at Celbridge, county of Kildare, where followed the births of the military historian and other members of this numerous family. The early days of Sir Charles were, therefore, spent in Ireland. Before proceeding farther in the personal history of Sir Charles, it may be as well to add that the family deduce their descent directly from John Napier, of Merchistown, the renowned inventor of logarithms. He was son of Sir Alexander Napier, Master of the Mint in Scotland.

Sir Charles entered the army in 1794. His commissions are thus dated: Ensign, January 31st, 1794; Lieutenant, May 8th, 1794; Captain, December 22nd, 1802; Major, May 29, 1806; Lieutenant-Colonel, June 27th, 1811; Colonel, May 27th, 1825; Major-General, January 10th, 1837; Lieutenant-General, November 9th, 1846; and Colonel of the 22nd Foot, November 21st, 1843. The following is an official record of his services, from "Hart's Army List." "He served in the Irish Rebellion in 1798; and in the Insurrection of 1803. He commanded the 50th throughout the campaign terminating with the battle of Corunna, where he was made prisoner, after receiving five wounds; viz. leg broken by a musket shot, sabre cut on the head, wounded in the back by a bayonet, ribs broken by a cannon shot, and several severe contusions from the butt-end of a musket. He returned to the Peninsula in the latter part of 1809, where he remained until 1811; he was present at the action of the Coa, where he had two horses shot under him. He was also at the battle of Busaco, where he was shot through the face, and had his jaw broken and eye injured. He likewise took part in the battle of Fuentes d'Onor, the second siege of Badajos, and a great number of skirmishes. In 1813 he served in a floating expedition on the coast of the United States of North America, and landed a great number of times at Craney Island, and other places. His next services were in the campaign of 1815. He was present at the storming of Cambray. His next commanded the force employed in Scinde; and on the 17th of February, 1843, with only 2800 British troops, he attacked and defeated, after a desperate action of three hours' duration, 22,000 of the enemy, strongly posted at Meanee. On the 21st of February Hyderabad surrendered to him; and on the 24th of March, with 5000 men he attacked and signally defeated 20,000 of the enemy, posted in a very strong and difficult position at Dubba, near Hyderabad; thus completing the entire subjugation of Scinde. Early in 1845, with a force consisting of about five thousand men of all arms, he took the field against the mountain and desert tribes situated on the right bank of the Indus, to the north of Shikarpore; and after an arduous campaign he effected the total destruction of these robber tribes. Sir Charles holds a medal for Corunna, and a new war medal.

A number of circumstances in connexion with Sir Charles's dispute with the East India Directors might be adduced, but it is better that all disagreeable matters should now be buried in oblivion. That, however, Sir Charles enjoys, and has for some years enjoyed the unlimited approbation of the Duke of Wellington, is undeniable.

The office of Commander-in-Chief in India is worth about £5500 per annum; but a seat at the Supreme Board, which Sir Charles is almost sure to have, brings in an addition of £10,000 per annum. The office gives its holder the local rank of General, however inferior his rank in the army may be in point of gradation.

Sir Charles married, first, in 1827, the daughter of John Oakley, Esq., of Deal, Kent: she died in 1833. He married, secondly, in 1836, the daughter of William Phillips, Esq., of Court Henry, Carmarthenshire, and relict of Richard Alcock, Esq.

The accompanying Portrait is copied, by permission of the publishers (Paul and Dominic Colnaghi and Co., Pall-mall East), from a spirited lithograph just executed by Morton, from a drawing by Smart. It shows Sir Charles in the costume he wore during his campaign against the Hill Tribes on the frontier of Scinde. Upon the next page will be found the fac-simile of a pen-and-ink Sketch of Sir Charles, taken in 1843.

on the afternoon of that day came in sight of the encampment of the enemy. It seems to have been his Lord-ship's intention, and it was a wise one, not to have attacked the enemy so late in the day, but to have waited for the morning, and for further investigation of the ground, before taking a decisive step. It was not the policy of Shere Singh to allow this. The Sikh chief knew the ground; he had possession of the jungle, and he knew also the reckless bravery of his antagonist. It suited his purpose that the conflict should be immediate. He allowed a few of his advanced posts to be overpowered, that the enemy might be enticed on; and when Lord Gough was close enough, the Sikh batteries opened a fire upon him. Lord Gough, highly incensed, swore to exterminate the Sikhs from the face of the earth, and, in spite of remonstrance, gave orders for a general engagement. We need not detail the whole of the circumstances. The Sikh artillery, well placed and well plied, made fearful havoc. The Sikh fire, pointed against the jungle, could do no such damage as the artillery of the enemy. The Sikhs, under cover, fired at a mark. The British fired against the smoke of their opponents, as the only means they had of discovering their whereabouts. A loss of about 100 officers and nearly 2500 men on the part of the British was the result. "Although," says Lord Gough, "the enemy, who defended not only his guns but his position with desperation, was driven in confusion, and with heavy loss, from every part of it, and the greater part of his field artillery was actually captured, the march of brigades to their flanks to repel parties that had rallied, and the want of numbers and consequent support to our right flank, aided by the cover of the jungle, and the close of the day, enabled him, upon our further advance in pursuit, to return and carry off, unobserved, the greater portion of the guns we had thus gallantly carried at the point of the bayonet." Such was the battle of Chillianwallah; the undaunted heroism of the British troops and the British commander achieved a barren victory over a formidable enemy, who had all the advantage of position in his favour. Under such circumstances, to have escaped ignominious defeat is a matter of congratulation. Shere Singh himself has but little cause for rejoicing at the result. Never was courage under difficulty more splendidly displayed than by the British army on this occasion. Such an army needs but a clear head to guide it; and triumph over all obstacles, were the Sikhs thrice as powerful as they are, can not fail to be the result. Lord Gough states that the victory was complete as to the total overthrow of the enemy; and trusts that a sense of utter discomfiture and defeat will soon be made apparent on the part of Shere Singh, unless, indeed, "the rumours prevalent of his having been joined by Chuttur Singh prove correct." In this case, let us hope that Lord Gough, warned by the public opinion of India and of his own army, may have learned a lesson of coolness. Perhaps ere this, his Lordship has taken the sting out of all the disapprobation that has been expressed upon his conduct, and has met with and defeated in fair battle the combined forces of Chuttur and Shere Singh. Success is the test of genius. Such success would wipe out the past from the remembrance of his countrymen, and transform his questionable daring into very unquestionable heroism in the estimation of the world. Such a result is far from impossible; and for the sake of it, even the gallant Napier might be content to forego an additional laurel.

The future fate of the Punjaub is a question that already begins to occupy the public mind. Defeat the Sikhs we must and we will. There is no room for doubt on that point. But what are we to do with the Punjaub after we shall have conquered it? Our Indian empire is already unwieldy enough; but imperative necessity in this case will compel us to make it a little larger. In short, we must not only conquer, but we must annex the Punjaub. The new Commander-in-Chief, whose general sagacity and knowledge of India no one will presume to call in question, is clearly of this opinion. In a letter bearing his signature, published on the 26th ultimo—just a week before the occurrences of Chillianwallah were known—Sir Charles Napier states in the most emphatic manner that we have no choice on the subject. To retire behind the line of the Sutlej would, he truly says, be disgrace in the eyes of Asia; and disgrace to our arms is ruin to our power. To remain stationary on the Sutlej is, in his opinion, impossible—an opinion supported by cogent reasons. To advance, is the only Company's Power, must, in short, annex the Punjaub, and make the Indus our boundary. Such are the sentiments of Sir Charles Napier; and, sooner or later, the Government of this country will be called upon to decide the question. There will be no peace in India till the warlike and ambitious nation of the Sikhs shall be made to feel once for all that they have no chance against us. Nothing short of the annexation of the country of the Five Rivers will teach them the necessary lesson. Great Britain would have been better pleased had no such necessity arisen. She is, however, in such a position, that, however unwilling to extend her territory or increase her responsibility, she must do so; or, to use the words of Sir Charles Napier, "the surrounding nations will arise upon us, and our armies will be overthrown as was the host of Pharaoh amid the overwhelming waves of the Red Sea!"

SIR CHARLES NAPIER.—FAC SIMILE OF A PEN-AND-INK SKETCH TAKEN IN OCTOBER, 1848.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE CHIEF COMMAND IN INDIA.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors of the East India Company was held at the East India House, when the appointment of Lieutenant-General Sir Charles James Napier, G.C.B., as Commander-in-Chief of the Company's forces in India, was confirmed, and Sir Charles was nominated an Extraordinary Member of the Council of India.

It is understood that the Board received an intimation, that, at an interview which Sir Charles had with the Duke of Wellington on Monday, the terms on which he would accept the appointment were settled; one of the principal being that he would not be controlled by any political agent in directing the movements of his armies.

Recruiting parties have been ordered out by the military authorities to enlist men to replace the casualties in the regiments serving in India; it is also understood that volunteers will be received from regiments serving at home, and proceed immediately for service in India; as the men, already trained as soldiers, will, of course, be more efficient than recruits can be for some months after joining the service.

On Monday orders were despatched from the Horse Guards to the various district generals to suspend the recent orders for the discharge of men from the army. This is owing to the decisive nature of the last Indian news.

TROOPS FOR INDIA.—The two regiments of infantry selected for immediate service in the East Indies are the 78th and 97th. The 78th are now at Kinsale. It returned from various years' service at the Cape in 1843, and bears on its colours "India," "Seringapatam." The 97th, or Royal Irish Fusiliers, has Lord Gough for its colonel, the noble and gallant General having commanded the regiment at the battle of Talavera; at Barossa, where they captured the eagle of the French 8th Regiment; and at Vittoria, where they captured the Adieu of Marshal Jourdan; also at Nivelle; and subsequently, at the siege of Castle and Tarifa. The headquarters of the regiment are now at Weedon. They returned from twelve years' service at the Mauritius in 1843.

THE DOCKYARD, DEVONPORT.—After the contemplated reductions in this establishment are completed, the following will form the number of men employed in the yard:—Single station men, 13; leading men, 39; apprentices, 12; shipwrights, 676; ironall-workers, 5; car-maker, 1; caulkers, 70; patch-heater, 1; saiknan boys, 15; joiners, 120; burners, 2; wheelwrights, 2; coopers, 1; smiths, 166; millwrights (metal men), 43; brazier tinmen, 4; locksmiths, 3; plumbers, 6; engine-keepers, 8; stokers, 4; workmen at saw-mills, 21; bricklayers, 4; masons, painters, glaziers, and sawyers, 26; sawyers, 50; established labourers, 150; day labourers, 176; riggers' boats crew, 52; watch, yard service, 193; single station, 9; time labourers, 7; sailmaker, 9; 49; in-door, 11; spinners, 116; key-bearer, 1; house boys, 17; women, 14; storekeepers, 16; 17; messengers, 8; police, 73; learners, 9

THE TOTAL REPEAL MALT TAX ASSOCIATION.—On Wednesday morning a general meeting of the members of the association, and of persons inimical to the malt and hop duties generally, was held at the committee-rooms of the association, York Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, when several resolutions as to the course to be adopted to secure the repeal of those duties were agreed to.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

PRESENT STATE OF PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The past week has been one of unusual calm: events which, little more than a year ago, would have excited the greatest interest and the liveliest alarm, are passed by unheeded in these revolutionary days, when the strongest doses of excitement are necessary to stimulate the flagging attention of the public, accustomed to excess, and satiated with the extraordinary. We are like long-habituated dram-drinkers: a draught which, some time ago, would have brought water into the eyes, and set the whole body in a state of fever, is swallowed like a glass of turnip water: we are become like the Scotchman in the tale, with the glass full of aqua fortis; it needs a good racking burning poison draught to give the over-dosed political stomach a powerful sensation. Thus, were it not for the continued military demonstrations, and the great reviews which are held almost every day—sometimes by General Changarnier, sometimes by the President himself and for the marchings and countermarchings of the military in the streets, there would be scarcely any possibility of recognising "Revolutionary Paris." These reviews, held upon the Champ de Mars, on that great desert plain which only assumes a really imposing appearance when thus filled with long lines of uniforms, and thousands of bayonets sparkling in the sun, naturally, in the glorious weather with which Paris seems blessed, as with an augury of better days, attract immense crowds, who line the heights, and shout as the President rides by with all the pomp and glitter of a brilliant and quasi-regal staff. But the cry is still, not "Vive le Républicain!" but "Vive Napoleon!" The cry is still for a man, for a chief, for a head, or even for a name, and not for a form of government. The President acts his part well upon these occasions, salutes with grace but not without pride, and encourages the presentation of petitions, with which of course the pockets, breasts, saddle-pockets, and even holsters of his aides-de-camp are soon over-crammed. Cases are occasionally evidently sought after by the chief of the state. In order to keep up a popular presage, and captivate popular suffrages; that they serve to attach the army is equally evident; and, in spite of the declaration of the President not long ago, that he intended to give up the decoration of the Legion of Honour, opportunities are very chary with this decoration of the Legion of Honour, opportunities are taken during these reviews for the distribution of a profusion of crosses and ribbons to military aspirants. It is not only, however, on these occasions that the spectacle of military pomp and parade, and when alone, when there is all the spectacle of military pomp and parade, and when men's heads of the lower classes are easily turned by the imposing sight, the glitter, and the music, that crowds follow the President's horse with the shouts of "Vive Napoleon!" Every day the neighbourhood of the Elysée National is thronged during the greater part of the afternoon with curious crowds; and the avenue of the Champs Elysées, through which the President is expected to pass on his way out or home, is lined with thick rows of people. Never was the want of a unity to look up to, of an idol to worship, of a something stable, visible, and living to cling to, to the place of a set of abstraction which has no form to greet the eyes of the lower classes, expressed in a more lively and living manner.

What has greatly contributed to the spirit of calm, and almost of the easy sparkling lightness of other days, with which Paris has been imbued during the last weeks, has been the glorious spring weather, which has flooded it with a cheering flow of life and animation. The days are warm and clear: the bright sights, with their splendid growing moon, are balmy: were not the trees still leafless, we might fancy ourselves in May; and even they are already tinged with a pervading hue of green; and the bushes in the garden of the Tuileries are already a perfect bower of verdure. The Champs Elysées are crowded with pedestrian and equestrian throngs, and equipages, which begin to flaunt afresh upon the broad chaussée of the Champs Elysées, and which are soon to be painted out panels those coats of arms which the ignominious hand of the people has effaced a year ago: foreigners begin again to flock to the revolutionary capital, which does its best to smile again. Whole hordes of English are announced as on the point of arrival, not only of the good citizens of London, who are anxious to repay the compliment received last year from the Nations. Guards of Paris, but of the "fashionable tribe" of a London season. The hands look more proud, and grow more engaging. Spite of the supposed obligations of Lent, balls still succeed balls; and concerts invite amateurs; and old aristocratic salons have their "days" so thick upon one another, that répondez s'abonnables no longer know which way to go; and even poor trade begins to lift its head, and affect a more cheering smile. Yes! in spite of the clamours of the ultra journals against the "insensate mockery" of the "infamous anti-social Right," money and again reconnience to descend through its old channels to the workmen and the artisan; and the misery of the people, upon which the party speculates as its most powerful weapon, while it decries it as the instrument of the "people's vile passions," still, spite of all these efforts, find some alleviation. In fact, during the last week "Revolutionary Paris" has done its best to look like "Monarchic Paris" of yore, the infamous reactionary aristocrat! and were it not for the dirt of the streets, for which the "Reaction" has as yet done nothing, and the sad look of some of the shops, it might have wholly succeeded. If the weather continues its glorious course a little longer, the famous chesnut tree of the garden of the Tuileries, to which, somehow or other, a popular superstition with regard to the Bonaparte family is attached, will be in full leaf on its day of good augury, the 20th of March: and there is no knowing what omens the people may not choose to attach to the flourishing of this tree observed of all observers," or how far its good behaviour on that day may not influence the popularity and the fortunes of the Bonapartist President.

Meanwhile, the events alluded to in the commencement of this letter, which at a more peaceful time would have filled men's minds, are set out of sight and passed over, as they have been nearly set out of sight and forgotten in these lines. Among these may be reckoned the continual troubles in the departments, to which Paris, used to revolutionary movements, now scarce gives heed. France is almost daily worried by the news of more "Red" disturbance: like a man whose constitution has been undermined by repeated attacks of illness, it is constantly feeling fresh throes, which threaten a relapse; and yet the heart of Paris seems indifferent to them. The banquets, the promenades, with cups of liberty, and effigies of the guillotine, and tricoloured axes, evidently got up by the emissaries of the "Red" party to keep the provinces in a state of convulsion, excite constant collisions; and yet Paris says, "Ah! bah!" The fusion of the Montagnard, or old republican party, which studies Robespierre and Marat as its models, with the Socialist ultra-democrats, after a long and angry scheme, in a great banquet of reconciliation, has not been even excited its alarm while such an enormous conjunction would have occasioned a little while ago, and not even the fulminating speeches of Ledru-Rollin, as chief of the "Red" faction, or the more buried but no less enumerative ones of Pierre Leroux, as chief of the Socialist faction—not even the joint manifesto of the new combined journals of the parties, have created an emotion in Paris, determined to be gay if it can. Even the furious roaring of the Mountain in the constituante, on the occasion of the interruption of a banquet (called that of "the schools," but against which the students have protested en masse) by the police, has been disregarded, as a matter of too frequent occurrence to be allowed to interrupt any feeling of calm or satisfaction. And as to the envoys of the new Roman Republic, for whom the ultra journals demand a people's fraternising demonstrations, Paris is so perverse, that it will not grant them a thought, much less a fraternising accolade.

S.

FRANCE.

The various sections of political parties—Bonapartists, Orleanists, Legitimists, Republicans, &c.—have for some time past been busy in making arrangements relative to the approaching general election (for Legislative Assembly), with that excess of activity that is so often exhibited in political matters by our lively neighbours, who seem to think, when the fit is upon them, that they can never do too much. "Clever" generally is the less occasions generally overshoot the mark, as might be expected.

If the various bodies that have, by the fusion of fractions of different parties, constituted themselves into electoral committees, obtain one-tenth of the results which they so confidently and arrogantly aim at producing at the elections, the Assembly chosen will not be the fruit of universal suffrage exercised by the free will of the people, but the spawn of electioneering agents' trickery and intrigue; and, so far from satisfying the people by wise and careful legislation, suited to the wants of the nation and the period, it would, by its ignorance, its indifference to consequences, and its corruption, only serve to excite the contempt and disgust for perfectly free institutions in the minds of the great bulk of the French people, who have yet to learn the appreciation of the advantages of really constitutional government.

The most important of those election committees is that which has been formed of a fusion of the principal Legitimists and Orleanists, who for the present sink their differences to combine their efforts for the restoration of the monarchical form of Government. It is known as the election committee of the Cour de Rue de Poitiers, and its constitution has been at length definitively settled. It consists of seventy-five members, of whom thirty are members of the old Chamber of Deputies, seventeen among the Legitimists and Orleanists club, and the others have been chosen from among the Legitimists and Orleanists who are not members of the present Assembly, with the addition of a few Bonapartists recommended by the President of the Republic.

The negotiations attempted by M.M. Thiers and Molé to bring about a junction between the committee of the Rue de Poitiers and the committee of pure Bonapartists formed under the auspices of M. Napoleon Bonaparte having failed, the latter committee still goes on. The manifesto of each of those bodies is announced to appear shortly.

The trial of Blanqui, Barbès, and their associates has created more than ordinary interest at Paris, more on account of the position of the accused than of any light expected to be thrown on the famous invasion of the National Assembly on the 15th of May. The trial commenced on Thursday. The prisoners arrived at Bourges at twelve o'clock on Sunday, and were lodged in the apartments prepared for them. The members of the High Court of Justice arrived in the afternoon. The same day General Mesgret, Commander of the fifth division of the army of the Alps, reviewed the garrison of Bourges, together with the National Guard, who were reviewed at their own request.

M. Vidal, late President of the Society of the Rights of Man, surrendered on Monday to take his trial at Bourges with Barbès and his accomplices. Louis Blanc and Caussidière have published letters in the People, an evening that they have resolved not to appear to take their trial at Bourges. The former gives as an excuse for his non-appearance, that when in August he promised to appear, he did not suppose that the trial would take place before a tribunal not then created; the latter intimates that he will have a fair trial. The Presidente says that the representatives of the Montagne and several of their co-accused have recommended Louis Blanc and Caussidière not to give themselves up.

Amongst many changes required by the times, considerable reductions have been made in the department of the Prefecture of Police. Four hundred of the employés have been dismissed and their places suppressed. Most, if not all, of these have been appointed by Republican Prefects, and were appointed during the Provisional Government. Each man thus dismissed has received a sum of 900 francs, and a free passage to Algeria is offered to all who may wish to emigrate, as colonists. The whole of the gardens of Paris are, for the future, to appear in the uniform of the old Sergens de Ville.

The Mayors of the 10th and 11th arrondissements of Paris, accompanied by a number of officers of the National Guard, waited, on Sunday, on M. de Lamartine, to deposit in his hands the tricolour flag, which the citizens of those arrondissements had carried, on February 24, 1848, from the Chamber of Deputies to the Hôtel de Ville. It was the first emblem noticed at the moment of the proclamation of the Republic. The Mayor of the 10th arrondissement, addressing M. de Lamartine in the name of the two arrondissements, told him that the historical flag with which he presented him could not be better placed than in the museum of one of the citizens who had most honourably defended it. M. de Lamartine, in the National Guards, received the flag, and said that he considered it as one of the greatest honours of his life to receive it from the hands of the citizens who had most honourably defended it. M. de Lamartine expressed his gratitude. "That flag," he said, "will be dearly dear to me, for it was the first that covered the cradle of the Republic, and because it was the first also to impart to that Republic a character of nationality, moderation, humanity, and tradition with our most glorious recollections. If that Republic should ever be attacked, either by its imprudent votaries or by its enemies, you would rally round those colours. They would find in you the same citizens, and they would meet in me the same devoted and the same arm to defend them."

The police have completed the clearance of the bonnets rouges that still continue to disfigure the trees of liberty in the Basilica of Paris.

The President of the Republic on Tuesday reviewed eight or ten regiments of the garrison of Paris, in the Champ de Mars. He was accompanied by General Changarnier, General Rulhières, General Buhot, and the Minister of War. After the review he distributed eight Crosses of the Legion of Honour.

A considerable sensation has been created on the Paris Bourse, by the failure of one of the greatest speculators there. He was a loser to the amount of 1,800,000 francs, which represents a capital of 80 millions of francs. One agent de change is a loser to the amount of 2,500,000 francs.

In the National Assembly, the question with respect to the affair of the 29th of January was brought forward on Monday, and the Assembly, after a short discussion, in which none of the members of the Ministry spoke, decided by a majority of 364 to 327—(the numbers being 481 to 297—that the proposition demanding an inquiry into the conduct of the Ministry in calling out the troops on that day should not be taken into consideration. This exhibits indications of a revival of activity. Brilliant parties take place nightly in various quarters. On Sunday evening Madame Léon Faucher gave a soirée musicale, at which several of the notabilities in the political and diplomatic circles were present. The same evening Madame de Tracy gave a splendid party at the hôtel of the Minister of Marine. On Tuesday evening a magnificent musical party was given by the Prefect of the Seine, at the hôtel de Ville.

SPAIN

Cabrera has resumed his Carlist operations with activity.

PRUSSIA

Since the new Legislative Chambers met, nothing of interest has occurred in either.

A great portion of the Berlin electors for the Second Chamber have presented a petition to the Government, praying for the suspension of the state of siege, having been moved by their electors (the wreckers) to make that the subject of their deliberations. To this petition Count Brandenburg has thought proper to return a very haughty reply, commanding the electors to confine themselves strictly to those questions which, by the electoral decree of the 5th December, fall within their function.

AUSTRIA

There is nothing from the seat of war in Hungary this week to vary the official tale of marchings and counter-marchings of troops; debates and victories alternately on both sides; and constant accounts of cruelties and excesses committed alike by insurgents and Imperialists.

Much of the success of the Magyars is said to have been caused by the lukewarmness of the Croats and other natives under Jellachich in the Imperial cause, since they had received "damning evidence" of the hostility and severity of the Commander-in-Chief, Windischgrätz, towards the Sclavonic tribes. This may be a cruel one, but we regret to say that the Croats will do not mean to fight for the benefit of Austria, and much less for the purpose of bringing themselves under Austrian rule.

The Austrian Lloyd, and the Oesterreichische Austrian Gazette, of the 26th ult., announce the march of the Magyars on Pesth, under Gen. Dembinski. The former says they were at Hatvan, only seven miles off; the other, at Gyongyros, four miles distant. All the disposable troops, 10,000, had left Pesth.

ITALIAN STATES.

TUSCANY.—The Grand Duke has gone to the Pope at Gaëta, whence he has issued a protest against the conduct of the Provisional Government.

Accounts out Paris have reached us to the effect that a previous report of the armed intervention of Austria in the affairs of Tuscany, and the entrance of Austrian troops (to the number of six thousand) into the Duchy, has been confirmed.

It is added, from Turin, under date 3rd instant, that a body of Sardinian troops, including Piedmontese cavalry and artillery, entered Tuscany, at Sarzana, on the 28th of February. These statements require more authentic confirmation.

ROME.—The Roman Constituent Assembly have decreed that all church bells, not strictly necessary, shall be melted down for coining. Those of the cathedrals, parish churches, and such as are valuable in point of art, are excepted. The revenues of several churches are also declared confiscated.

UNITED STATES

Accounts received this week from the United States confirm the intelligence of the loss of the West India M ll steam-ship the Forth. The steamer, when on her passage to Vera Cruz, had lain three days at the is and of Perez, and at the moment of the disaster, it is stated, the look-out was not at his post. Fortunately, of the 160 passengers on board, none were lost

Great preparations were being made at Washington for the arrival of General Taylor, and his inauguration on the 5th instant. Mr. Polk had communicated his reply to the inquiry of the House of Representatives, concerning the protocol, accompanied by the instructions to Messrs. Sevier and Clifford, and other documents connected with the Mexican treaty. The message assumes that the protocol does not in any way affect the amendments of the Senate, and was merely explanatory of the character and effect of those modifications. He also contends that the protocol contains nothing more than was expressed by Mr. Buchanan in his despatch to the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs, and justifies the concealment of the document, on the ground that he could not regard it of sufficient importance to be promulgated with the treaty.

The proceedings in the Congress are unimportant.

The advices furnish us with copies of the commercial statistics annually laid before Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury. It appears from these documents, that the value of the imports and exports of the United States for the year ending the 30th of June, 1848, has been very much alike, the imports being 154,997,998 dollars, and the exports 154,036,430. As compared with the returns of 1847, there is an increase of 10,452,290 dollars in the imports, and a decrease of 4,619,186 in the exports. The decrease in the latter is accounted for by the diminished export of grain and flour to this country. The total value of the exports of domestic produce in 1848 was 131,904,191 dollars, against 150,587,464 dollars in 1847, which is a decrease of 17,733,343 dollars. The export of foreign goods was 21,132,315 dollars, making the total exports 154,036,436 dollars, as above stated.

The arrival of the Niagara, on Tuesday, brought later dates than the above, but the accounts add nothing of interest in political matters.

CALIFORNIA

By this week's arrival from the United States we have much later intell gence from California than any hitherto published. The tenor of these advices is not satisfactory. Pillage and plunder were the order of the day, and great numbers of murders had been committed. Large quantities of gold had been discovered in the neighbourhood of the North Fork, one man having gathered 12,000 dollars' worth in six days, and three others had obtained in a single day 36 lb. of pure metal. It was stated that the number of persons who had been to the mines was about 10,000, though not more than 2500 were digging at any one time. Cinnabar, from which quicksilver is distilled, had been found in California. The whole of the gold gathered in California is estimated at 3,000,000 dollars, two of which left there in various ways, and the remainder was on its way to the United States. Real estate was selling at a ruinous sacrifice. Provisions were scarce, for 10,000 dollars. Provisions were abundant at San Francisco. Board in San Francisco was 10 dollars a week. Large numbers of emigrants were going forward, and the late accounts had added to the excitement of the American people.

The rumours concerning Colonel Stevenson and Captain Masey are reported to be false.

The reported discoveries of gold in Oregon and elsewhere are, in most cases, fabulous.

MEXICO

The intelligence from Mexico is not important. Congress was still sitting, and it was expected that a moderate tariff bill would pass. The revolutionary movements reported in previous advices had been suppressed, and the gold fever was spreading among the Mexicans. All the foreigners not engaged in commerce were leaving for the placers.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.

The Court has left town for her Majesty's marine residence, Osborne, Isle of Wight.

On Sunday morning her Majesty and Prince Albert and the Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting, attended divine service in Whippingham Church. The Rev. Mr. Prince officiated.

On Wednesday evening Lady J. Russell gave a grand soirée at the official residence of Lord J. Russell, in Downing-street. Her Ladyship's evening parties on the two following Wednesdays (the 14th and 21st instant) will also be given in Downing-street.

The Queen and Prince Albert take their usual early walking exercise, in the grounds at Osborne, each morning. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal ride in the park, and the younger members walk every day in the shrubbery.

ARRIVAL OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN OF THE BELGIANS.—Her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians landed at Dover on Monday from Ostend. Her Majesty immediately ascended the Castle Hotel, where the Duke and Duchess de Nemours were waiting to accompany her Majesty to Claremont, and at half-past five the special trains started for town.

The Emperor of Austria has conferred the Order of the Belgians a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St. Stephen. Under Prince Metternich no Sovereign created by a revolution obtained such a distinction.

On Tuesday afternoon, Prince Ernest of Leiningen, attended by his preceptor, Mr. Sparr arrived at Osborne, on a visit to her Majesty and the Prince. There was no other addition to the Royal dinner party.

On Wednesday evening Sir Robert Peel gave a grand entertainment in Whitehall Gardens, to a numerous circle, including the Right Hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Right Hon. Henry Goulburn, the Right Hon. Sir George Clerk, &c.

Viscountess Palmerston commences her agreeable réunions on this day (Saturday), at the noble Viscount's mansion in Carlton-gardens.

The Right Hon. the Speaker gave his fourth Parliamentary entertainment this season, on Saturday last, at his official residence in Eaton-square.

THE CATCH CLUB.—The noblemen and gentlemen, members of this convivial club, dined together at the Thatched House Tavern, on Tuesday evening, when Sir Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge honoured the meeting by his presence. There was a very large attendance of professionals.

SIR ROBERT INGLIS.—The hon. Baronet is still confined to his house The unfortunate cause of his being laid up is a painful operation that he has had to submit to—the removal of a carbuncle, from which he has suffered severely. The operation was performed by Sir Benjamin Brodie, under whose skilful treatment Sir Robert is going on very well, though it is not expected that he will be able to resume his parliamentary duties until after the Easter recess.

The Ban Jellachich has received the Order of the Guelphs from the King of Hanover.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE.

The Professor of Moral Philosophy has given notice, that, for the remainder of his present course, he will lecture on Tuesdays and Thursdays, as well as Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, and at the same hour (one o'clock).

OXFORD.

The examination for the election of a scholar for the Lusby Scholarship will take place in Magdalen Hall, on Wednesday, March 21st. The Scholarship is tenable for three years, and is open to all candidates, without regard to place of birth and education; if members of the University, they must not have exceeded the eighth term since their matriculation.

ORDINATIONS.—On Sunday, March 4th, the Bishop of Oxford ordained eight deacons and one priest. On the same day the Bishop of Lincoln admitted five deacons and thirteen priests into holy orders. The Bishop of Salisbury, also, on the same day, ordained nine deacons and six priests; and the Bishop of Ely his one deacon and four priests.

BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.—The question of the intonation of the service, the discontinuance of which, by order of the Dean, has caused so much unpleasant feeling, has, at length, been finally settled by the Bishop in his capacity of visitor. The Bishop has enjoined the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral to uphold and maintain the celebration of the choral services in the Cathedral, according to the usages and practice observed before the order of the 22nd of December, 1848. The Bishop further enjoins that any material change in the usages and constitutions of the Cathedral shall be submitted to him for confirmation; and that, in future, some careful attention shall be paid to the provision of the statute in electing minor canons than appears to have been given to it at the last election. The practice of chanting has, therefore, been resumed.

THE PASSPORT SYSTEM IN FRANCE.—(From a Correspondent.)—For the especial benefit of those who visit Paris for only a few days, allow me to state two simple facts:—1. It is wholly unnecessary to take a 5s. passport from London, as, whether you do or not, you must get another at (say) Boulogne, and pay just the same for it in either case.—2. When in Paris, there is no necessity to trouble yourself about your passport at all. Bring it back just as you got it, and it is equally serviceable.—The public seem to be strangely unaware of these facts, and allow themselves to be deluded by guide-books.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Marriage (Scotland) Bill and the Registration of Births, &c. (Scotland) Bill were, on the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, read a third time and passed, after a protest from the Earl of ABERDEEN.

The Vice-Guardians of Unions (Ireland) Bill and the Overseers (Cities and Boroughs) Bill were, on the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, read a second time. The noble Marquis moved the second reading of the Relief of Distress (Ireland) Bill—the £50,000 grant Bill.

Lord BROUGHAM condemned the system of accustoming the Irish to rely on assistance doled out by Parliament. This sum was too little to do good, but it was too much to ask the people of England to grant more. However, considering the urgency of the existing distress, he felt it would be impossible for him to oppose the bill.

After a few observations from the Earl of WICKLOW, the bill was read a second time.

The Buckingham Summer Assizes Bill was likewise read a second time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Mr. HUME gave notice of his intention to move, as an amendment to Mr Disraeli's motion, that if the local taxation of the country pressed too heavily on the agricultural interests, of which assumed fact there was no evidence, it ought to be adjusted; but, with a view to the speedy relief of all classes, that there should be a reduction of the expenditure of the country, so as to allow of a reduction of taxes, especially of the Excise duties on hops and malt.—Mr EWART thereupon withdrew, in favour of Mr. Hume's resolution, the amendment which he had placed upon the paper.

To a question from Alderman THOMPSON, Lord PALMERSTON stated that no answer had been received from the Government of the United States of America to Mr. Crampton's letter of the 16th of January last, respecting the proposed relaxation of the British Navigation Laws.

THE LATE BATTLE IN INDIA.

Mr. HUME put a question to the Prime Minister respecting India, which excited the greatest attention. The hon. member said that the affairs of India were in a state that could not but cause the deepest interest of the people of Great Britain. Certain facts had been developed in the despatches and intelligence brought by the last and preceding mails, that justified him in inquiring whether the Government had taken measures to ensure at the head of the army in India a person in whom that army could have confidence, and who would employ those advantages which science and art afforded to those who knew how to avail themselves of them?

Lord J. RUSSELL said that the subject of India must certainly excite the greatest interest. He could only then say that, after considering the intelligence brought by the mail, the Government had offered to her Majesty such advice as they calculated would meet the emergencies that had arisen. He had not received her Majesty's answer; but as soon as he should, he would give the House information without delay.

To a question from Mr. USQUHART, Lord PALMERSTON promised to lay such papers on the table as would explain the reasons why Sir W. Parker's fleet had been present in the Bay of Naples

In answer to Mr Horsman, Sir G. GREY stated that an Ecclesiastical Courts Bill was in the hands of the Queen's Advocate for preparation

Mr. HERBERT inquired whether Lord Elgin had forwarded the address sent to him by the great meeting held at Hamilton, West Canada, against the repeal of the Navigation Laws, and, if so, why it had not been laid on the table? Mr. HAWES thought that all the papers respecting the Navigation Laws had been, or were about to be, laid on the table.

DISTRESS IN IRELAND. THE RATE IN AID.

The adjourned debate on the resolutions proposed by the Government for a rate in aid of the Irish Poor Laws was resumed by Mr. BERNAL OSBORNE. The hon. member said that it was evident the Poor Law had been a complete failure in the south and west of Ireland The proposal made by the Government was an acknowledgment of that fact; and the remedy they suggested was to ruin the north and east, without the al ghtest chance of materially benefiting the south and west, but with the certainty of bringing all to the same level of destitution. England was, it appeared, to advance the money on the security of this rate in aid; but he had little hope that the money would ever be repaid. Lessees he did not believe that more than three or four thousand pounds would be collected under the rate in aid. Some bold measures were necessary to restore Ireland to prosperity. The transfer of land stood the chief bar to that object. The locking up of good titles, and thus making the land an article of easy commerce By these means it would fall into the hands of those who had both capital and enterprise to cultivate it properly. The measure before the committee was but a temporary shift, and was wholly insufficient for its professed object; and therefore, if forced to a division, he should be compelled to vote against the resolutions.

Sir R. PEEL said that it was evident the proprietors had, in many parts of Ireland, made great efforts to meet the calamity that had fallen on the country, and in many instances, when the rates had not been paid, utter inability to pay was too often the reason of non-payment. Such being the case, he thought it would be most unfair to excite prejudices against the Irish landlords in the minds of the people of England. For his own part, he could not think of increasing the number of persons now reduced to the very brink of destitution to die without extending the hand of charity to save them. He had voted for the grant of £50,000; and, were there no other means of preventing the people from famishing, he would not refuse his assent to a vote of a similar description. He, therefore, was willing to vote for the resolutions proposed by the Government, and was prepared to contend that the rest of the United Kingdom had a right to call on Ireland to make great sacrifices in order to support her poor. In England the principle of vicinage was adopted, and the adjoining parish was called on to aid a parish in distress, but the Royal Ship of Vengeance could not at present be appealed to Ireland. A general rate in aid was the only rate of the sort that could be levied. The right hon. Baronet proceeded to give his opinions upon the mode of permanently changing the condition of Ireland. Having referred to the settlement of Ulster by James I, he said that he saw no hope for the improvement of the west of Ireland except from some comprehensive plan for transferring the land from its present to entire new proprietors, with new feelings and new spirits, who would have the capital, the ability, and the energy to cultivate the soil properly. This indispensable change of property should be effected by means of individual barter, but through the instrumentality of a commission, which might be appointed by the Government, who could get possession of the property, and then arrange the distribution of it; but that religious distinction, which was a part of the plot of James I. in the settlement of Ulster, should be avoided. Few, if any, transfers would take place under the present depressed state of property; but there were some such circumstances as that he suggested would be absolutely necessary. With respect to a property tax for Ireland, which had been advocated by some Irish members, he would have no objection to consider the propriety of such a tax—after the rate in aid should be paid; and he would not object to apply the proceeds of that property-tax to the extrication from its present difficulties. The right hon Baronet concluded his speech by quoting a ballad, written at the time of the Irish rebellion of 1798, which described Erin with and significantly reminded the House that the face of Ireland would still be continued to be turned to the west, though by pacific measures we might succeed in inducing her to turn her regards to the east.

Her back to Great Britain, her face to the west.

Major BLACKALL moved an amendment to the effect that a rate of sixpence in the pound be levied on all properties and incomes above £150 a year, as a military fund to meet the present distress. The hon. and gallant member contended that it was useless to look to a Poor-law without other measures, such as those for the encouragement of arterial drainage, of railways, and the like reproductive works. The proposal of the Government would throw the burden on particular parts of Ireland, and on those who had made the greatest exertions; whereas, by his amendment, he desired to have the rate in aid fairly laid on all parts and conditions of Ireland alike.

Sir Edward M'Naghten, Mr. Scully, Sir W. Verner, Mr. C. Clements, Mr. Roche, and Sir A. Brooke, spoke in opposition to the ministerial resolution; Mr. E. B. Roche supported it.

Sir G. GREY gathered, from the many speeches delivered during the debate, the general admission that the distress existing in some of the unions in the north and south of Ireland rendered some extraneous aid indispensable; and likewise the general admission that this time was come when repeated applications to the Imperial Parliament for assistance should cease. The question, then, was, would the rate in aid recommended by the Government answer the requirements of the case? He thought it would, and he was not able to see the objections urged against it. An income tax for local purposes had been proposed; but what, he asked, was that but a rate in aid? If Irish members were really anxious to have an income-tax imposed upon Ireland, and if their constituents agreed to it, he was not prepared, speaking on the part of the Government, to say that such a tax might not be levied. With respect to the suggestion made by Sir R. Peel, the Home Secretary said that he agreed with the right honourable baronet in thinking that the permanent remedy for Ireland was to be sought only in the transfer of the great bulk of the property from encumbered and helpless landlords to new and more energetic proprietors; but he could not go the length with him in condemning the Act of last year, or in thinking the appointment of a commission to purchase the land and re-distribute it as the best mode of operation.

Lord CASTLEREAGH moved that the Chairman report progress

Lord J. RUSSELL could not consent to a further adjournment after this preliminary resolution had been debated two nights.

The committee divided:—

For reporting progress	.. ..	104
Against it	.. ..	251
Majority against reporting progress	.. ..	—147

Lord CASTLEREAGH again moved an adjournment, to which Lord J. RUSSELL assented, giving notice that he would go on with the debate to-morrow evening, and that he would postpone the second reading of the Navigation-Law Bill to Friday

The CHAIRMAN reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again to-morrow.

The Spirits (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.

The Petty Sessions Bill, as amended in committee, was considered, and the amendments were agreed to.—Adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

SUPPLY OF ARMS BY ENGLAND TO THE SICILIANS.

Lord STANLEY asked whether a contractor who was in the habit of supplying arms to the British Government had been allowed to withdraw such arms from the Government stores for the purpose of supplying them to the insurgents in Sicily?

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE was glad of an opportunity of explaining the real state of the case. A gentleman who had been habitually a contractor for arms to the British Government did, in the course of last autumn, before the armistice in Sicily was concluded, or at any rate before it was known to be concluded in this country, make an application to the Board of Ordnance for permission to take back from the stores some guns which he had manufactured for her Majesty's service, and that, too, for the avowed purpose of fulfilling another contract, made with the Sicilian Government at that time, for whose use those guns were wanted. The Board of Ordnance refused their assent to that application, until an application was made in another quarter, namely, to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. That application was made; and then the Board of Ordnance received permission to give the contractor the facilities which he desired, and they consequently allowed him to take the arms out of store. This permission was afterwards regretted; and our Government was fully authorised, if called upon, to explain the matter, and to state that it had occurred through inadvertence, and that measures would be taken to prevent its recurrence in future.

After some further discussion respecting the proper policy to be pursued by England with regard to the Sicilian question, in which Lord Ellenborough, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Duke of Wellington, and the Earl of Minto took part, the matter dropped.

CRIMINAL RETURNS (IRELAND).—A motion of Lord MONTEAGLE for Irish criminal returns, and for returns showing the mortality during each of the last five years in the Irish prisons, was agreed to.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE COMMAND OF THE ARMY IN INDIA.

Lord J. RUSSELL announced that the advice which, as he intimated the preceding day, the Ministers had given to her Majesty, with reference to the conduct of military affairs in the Punjaub, was, that Sir Charles Napier should be appointed Commander-in-Chief in India; that her Majesty had been pleased fully to approve that appointment; that both the Duke of Wellington and he (Lord John) had seen Sir Charles Napier that day, and that he was ready to obey the commands of her Majesty, and to proceed to India.

POOR-LAWS (IRELAND)

The Poor-Laws (Ireland) Amendment Bill was then read a second time.

Mr. GROGAN, who, in opposing the resolutions, reiterated many of the arguments of preceding speakers—that the proposed rate in aid was based upon a moral and not just principle; that no case calling for it had been made out, but a bare plea or necessity had been put forward; that the system of the Irish Poor-Law was oppressive, and its management defective; that an advance must be made, in the first instance, by the Imperial Exchequer; and that the rate in aid would be a very fragile security. The outlay of capital upon reproductive labour in other parts of Ireland was checked by an apprehension that it would be swallowed up by the destitution in the west, and the operation of the Poor Law drained the country of the very class required at home. Mr Grogan then entered into the labyrinths of that vital part of the question—the state of taxation, and noticed the contributions made in the west of Ireland for religious objects as inconsistent with its asserted utter destitution.

Mr. CALLAGHAN supported the rate, not, as it appeared, from any particular liking for it, but because the Government were bound to preserve the people from starvation, and he could not suggest a better expedient.

Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL had come to the conclusion to support the amendment of Mr Blackall, upon the ground, that, if destitution in the west of Ireland should be relieved from other parts, it was fair that the contribution in aid should be laid upon property in general

The Earl of LINCOLN had greater difficulty than he ever felt in coming to a decision upon this question, not that he felt any doubt as to the principle of the measure, or the merits of the plan; but, in the relative circumstances of the two countries, it was difficult to say "ay" or "no" without knowing something of the changes to be made in the Poor-Law, and the measures in contemplation affecting the social condition of Ireland. The necessity of affording extraneous aid to certain unions being admitted, as well as that it must come from Ireland, there remained only two questions—whether it should come from a part or the whole of Ireland, and in what mode? He could not agree with Lord J. Russell in basing the proposition upon the principle of equivalent taxation, or that this was a temporary expedient to meet a temporary evil; it was a temporary remedy for an increasing evil. Then the amount was said to be small; if so, it might be insufficient, and the fear in Ireland was that a sixpenny rate would not be the maximum. The effect of the rate would be to unsettle the minds of landowners in Ireland, and to stimulate an unhealthy emigration, the result of fear. The plan of the Government, he thought, would fail by reason of the inequality of the valuation; and he might quote from the evidence of Mr Griffiths before the Poor Law Committee, showing that the Poor Law valuations could not be made the basis of a general rate, which required a tenement valuation. In conclusion, Lord Lincoln said that the amendment of Mr Blackall offered a far more efficient means of effecting the object in view, and less mischievous than the proposition of the Government. He should, therefore, vote with him; and if that amendment failed, he should support an increase of 7d. for Ireland, instead of a rate of 6d

Colonel CAVENDISH, in opposition to the resolutions, urged over again many of the points put forward by the preceding speakers.

Mr. MONTE thought that the proposition of the Government was a bad one; but as he considered that all poor-rates should be national rates, he should vote for the amendment, as a step in that direction.

Mr. MORE should vote with the proposition of the Government, not because it was a good measure, but because it was the only one proposed that would adequately meet the emergency.

Mr SIR. GEORGE opposed the proposition, and supported the amendment.

Lord J. RUSSELL, in reply, denied that he had proposed this rate in aid as an equivalent for taxation not now imposed upon Ireland, and answered the objection of Lord Lincoln as to the imperfection of the Poor-Law valuation. With reference to the plan suggested by Sir R. Peel, he said it deserved the strongest respect, though the circumstances of the present times were so different from those when the settlement of Ulster took place, that a similar policy might not now be ever

The Committee then divided, when Mr. BLACKALL's amendment was negatived by 237 to 164.

A second division took place upon a proposition of Mr. REYNOLDS to confine the rate to the salaries of Government officers, mortgagees, annuitants, and absentees, which was likewise negatived, by 212 to 51

A third division, upon the main question, affirmed the resolutions proposed by the Government by 232 to 34.

The resolutions were then reported, and the House adjourned at a quarter to two o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock.

TRANSFER OF REAL PROPERTY.

Mr. H DRUMMOND moved the second reading of the Real Property Transfer Bill, the principle of which he described to be to facilitate the transfer of estates by simplifying titles, and thus rendering them more marketable. The modus operandi proposed by his measure was the registration, not merely of the estates themselves, but of the incumbrances upon them, and the enactment that a thirty years' undisturbed possession subsequent to registration should establish an unquestionable title. It was also the intention of the bill to make transfers of real estates as short and simple as the transfer of stock.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL admitted that the object in view was most desirable to secure; but, after examining the clauses, he was in opinion that the bill would give rise to more litigation than any other that had ever been brought under the consideration of the Legislature.

After some discussion, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL said that he could not allow the bill to be read a second time; and therefore, to avoid all misconstruction, he moved, as an amendment, that it be read a second time that day six months.

The Lord Advocate supported the amendment.

After some remarks from Sir B. PRICE and Sir H. VERNEY, the House divided—

For the second reading	.. ..	89
Against it	.. ..	43
Majority against the Government	.. ..	—10

The bill was read a second time, and was ordered to be referred to a Select Committee

On the motion of Mr. P. Wood, the Affirmation Bill was read a second time without observation, and the committee fixed for the 26th inst.

The Life Policies of Assurance Bill was read a second time, on the motion of Mr FAGAN.

SICILY

Mr. BANKES moved for a return of the arms taken out of her Majesty's stores, by permission of the Government, for the purpose of being delivered to the insurgents in Sicily. The hon. member described the effect of Lord Minto's presence in Italy some time past as that of encouraging the subjects of our ally, the King of the Two Sicilies, in rebellion, and charged Lord Palmerston with transmitting a similar encouragement on all foreign occasions; he also complained the noble Lord for giving his sanction to the delivery of arms from the Royal Arsenal to a contractor for arms to the insurgents of Sicily. The terms of the hon. member's motion were—"An account of the ordnance stores returned from that department to any contractor, in the year 1848, for the purpose of being sent to the Sicilian insurgents in arms against her Majesty's ally, the King of the Two Sicilies, with the consent of her Majesty's Government."

Lord PALMERSTON was willing to assent to a return of the arms returned from the ordnance stores to any contractor, in the year 1848, for the purpose of being sent to Sicily," but he would not assent to the subsequent words of the motion. The noble Lord said that the hon. member had chosen a very fit time for himself to make his attack, because it was a time when he was utterly ignorant of the subject. The noble Lord denied that he ever made objection to the discussion of foreign affairs when the documents in explanation of them were possessed by the House; but it was the practice of those who wished to find fault with those transactions to make their attacks when the documents were not before them, and to avoid all question of them when full information was afforded. The noble Lord twitted the hon. member with being one of the old school of politicians, who believed that Kings ruled by "right divine;" and he, for himself, would not consent to stigmatise the Sicilians as rebels. Having insisted that the character of this country stood as high, and that its moral influence was as great, as ever, the Honourable Secretary said, the permission to deliver the arms to the contractor had been given through inadvertence, and that the Government had taken measures to explain the circumstances to the Court of Naples, and to give assurance that such inadvertence should not again occur. He admitted the practice of the Government of France in selling arms to whoever wished to purchase them, as a proof that what had been done here was not out of all precedent, as had been supposed.

After a few words from Sir J. WALSH,

Mr. J. O'CONNELL congratulated Lord Palmerston on his conversion to the principle, that a nation had a right to demand Secretary and refuge. He may say, "I have no ships; if you must have a rate, put it on our maritime towns—the cinque ports, if you please, but not on me." (Hear, hear, hear.) He might object to the inspection of factories; but he did not take any limited view, as, perhaps, your financial reformers did. (Hear, hear.) Year after year he has willingly and generously contributed to all these sources of expenditure. I will take another case. About six years ago the merchants of Liverpool, who were very much injured and oppressed in South America, besieged the Government with endless memorials and reclamations, calling upon them to vindicate their rights, and to give redress to their commercial transactions. The Minister who then presided in Downing-street, a very experienced, able, and, until that moment, cautious man, was induced, on the representations of these merchants; but he did not take any limited view, as, perhaps, your financial reformers did. (Hear, hear.) Year after year he has willingly and generously contributed to all these sources of expenditure. I will take another case. About six years ago the merchants of Liverpool, who were very much injured and oppressed in South America, besieged the Government with endless memorials and reclamations, calling upon them to vindicate their rights, and to give redress to their commercial transactions. The Minister who then presided in Downing-street, a very experienced, able, and, until that moment, cautious man, was induced, on the representations of these merchants, to interfere in the affairs of La Plata. What has been the result? A vast expense has been incurred; and now after six years have elapsed, the Midland county gentleman, who at first made a wry face on being paying for it, will very much object, because it is incurred for the sake of the commerce of his country, and that the same merchants of Liverpool are now actuating the Government for their extravagant armaments—extravagant armaments which they are keeping up to support the younger children of the landed aristocracy. (Hear, hear, hear.) I must say this is a clear case for striking a rate on Liverpool. (Hear, hear, hear.) It is a clear case of local taxation; and I must say we could readily bear this great burden of ten or twelve millions if the rest of the taxation of the country were apportioned in the same spirit. Look at the case of Manchester. Within six years ago, Manchester was of opinion that the Chinese empire, possessing upwards of three hundred millions of human beings, was one of the best fields which could be opened to their commerce. They said, "True, China and Europe would be nothing to the trade of such an empire. The restlessness and commercial intrigues of Manchester forced this country into a war with China. What would the Midland county gentleman say to this? He might say to this, "I have great doubts of this speculation. I know something of China. I have inherited from my father a magnificent library, and I have some books about China, and I have learnt that though China has more than three hundred millions of people, it is not likely that it will ever carry on any commensurate commerce with this country, as it really has nothing to give to our goods. What the country gentleman foresaw, happened. Therefore was the disappointment in Manchester greater in consequence of the failure of the anticipation created by the effects of the Chinese war. They said, "True, China does give us little; but it has one article, tea, which it can give us. We will reduce the duty on tea, and the consumption will be a great deal more." They said, "We shall consume fifty millions of tea more." The country gentleman may say, "I do not know whether such a consumption is good for the nerves of the people. (Laughter.) Take off the duty on malt, and let us return to the drink of our Saxon ancestors, who were so strong and so long-lived a race, as I hope to be. (Laughter.) Well, the Chinese war has ended, and why not levy a rate on Manchester on account of the Chinese war, and exempt the Midland county gentlemen? (Hear, hear, and laughter.) Now with regard to the county rates. The county rates are raised by direct taxation from the various counties; and for what purposes are the county rates expended? Why, they are devoted to defray the local and the expenses of the administration of justice. About the year 1835, however, the Government of the country undertook to relieve the land of part of the burden imposed upon it by this rate. It probably occurred to the Government, that, as the administration of justice was for the benefit of the country it was but right that a portion of the expenses attending the prosecution of criminals should be defrayed out of the Consolidated Fund. Now this took place without any particular attention having been drawn to the matter at the time, and I know that at that period the general impression among the public mind was that the landed interest had as usual succeeded in taking advantage of the Ministry, and had succeeded in transferring a burden which they ought to have paid for the consolidated Fund. Now, I will shew out of the county rates is expended, and I will particularly to call the attention of the House to this portion of the subject, because I know that a great degree of misconception exists in the public mind with regard to this matter. (Hear.) I will illustrate this part of the subject, refer to certain cases which occurred in 184 . I will take that period, because, in the year 1846, the right hon. Bart. the member for Tamworth introduced certain changes in the Criminal Law. Well then, I will refer to the year 1845; and as to illustrate the horrors of captivity, the most efficient method is to take the case of a single captive, so will I, to illustrate the injustice of the County Rate, refer to my own experience at the Buckinghamshire Assizes in that year, and I will shew how far the county was interested in the expenditure which took place on account of the county rate, and how far the country at large was interested in the expenditure which then took place. The case to which I refer occurred at Saltbill, a hamlet situated on the borders of Buckinghamshire and Berkshire. A stranger—a woman—came down to Saltbill and took a lodging there—a humble lodging: she was known to no one in the neighbourhood, and it did not appear that she was known by the inhabitants. Two days after her arrival she was visited by a man, a Quaker, with whom it afterwards appeared she had formerly been connected, and during that visit he murdered her. Immediately after the murder he leaves Saltbill. Now, there is a circumstance connected with his journey, and on the moment of his arrival in London he is arrested on the charge of murder. Now, observe, he was arrested in Middlesex, but the crime had been committed in Buckinghamshire and Berkshire. A stranger—a woman—came down to Saltbill and took a lodging there—a humble lodging: she was known to no one in the neighbourhood, and it did not appear that she was known by the inhabitants. Two days after her arrival she was visited by a man, a Quaker, with whom it afterwards appeared she had formerly been connected, and during that visit he murdered her. Immediately after the murder he leaves Saltbill. Now, there is a circumstance connected with his journey, and on the moment of his arrival in London he is arrested on the charge of murder. Now, observe, he was arrested in Middlesex, but the crime had been committed in Buckinghamshire and Berkshire. A hamlet situated on the borders of unjustly than when demagogues are denouncing them as an oligarchical usurpation. But, Sir, I think this may be a dangerous game, if you be outraging justice. It is true, you may trust to their proverbial loyalty. Trust to their loyalty, but do not abuse it. I dare say, it may be said of them, as it was said three thousand years ago, in the most precious legacy of political science that has descended to us, that the agricultural class is the last given to sedition. It is true, I doubt not, that the Englishman, in his plains and dales, is in this respect as the Greeks were in their islands and continents. You should also remember that the ancestry of those men were the founders of your liberty the men who fought and died for justice. You may rely upon it, that the spirit which refused to pay ship-money is not to be trifled with. Their conduct has exhibited no hostile feeling, notwithstanding the political changes that have occurred during late years, and the apparent diminution of their power. They have inscribed a homely enthusiasm in their manners; but mind, if I mistake not, which nourished no hear-, convinces the minds of Englishmen—"Live, and let live." You (addressing the Free-trade benches), you, the leading spirits of the manufacturing interests, have openly declared your opinion, that if there were not an acre of land cultivated in England its country would not be in a worse condition, and you have joined in open chorus in announcing that England would monopolise the trade of all countries, and become the workshop of the world. Your systems, then, and those of the agricultural body, are directly contrary. They invite union; they believe that national prosperity is only secured by the welfare of all. You would wish to achieve an isolated splendour; a solitary wealth; but, believe me when I say that, if you succeed in your wishes, you will be no exception in the history of mankind. You will be a departure from the principles which have hitherto governed society if you can maintain that prosperity which you desire without the promotion of that permanence & & stability which territorial influence can alone insure. (Cheers.) I see no reason, though you may for a moment flourish after their destruction, though our ports may be filled with your shipping, though your factories may smoke on every plain, though your forges may flame in every city, I see no reason why you should form an exception to that which history has recorded. I see no reason why you should not fade with the Tyrian and murder with the Venetian palaces. (Cheers.) Rely upon it, you will find in the landed interest the best and the surest foundation upon which to build enduring prosperity; you will find in that interest a consider in your troubles, a champion in your dangers, and a counsellor in your adversity. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) It is for the purpose of producing these results, that I beg, Sir, to place the resolution in your hands. I wish to see the agriculture, the commerce, and the manufactures, of England, not adversaries, but co-mates and partners, and rivals only in the ardour of their patriotism, and in the activity of their public spirit. The hon. gentleman sat down amidst loud and prolonged applause.

The terms of the hon. gentleman's motion are as follow:—"That the whole of the local taxation of the country for national purposes falls mainly if not exclusively, on real property, and bears with unfair severity on the occupiers of land, in a manner injurious to the agricultural interests of the country, and otherwise highly impolitic and unjust; that the hardship of this apportionment is greatly aggravated by the fact that more than one-third of the whole revenue derived from the Excise is levied upon agricultural produce, exposed, by the recent changes in the law, to direct competition with the untaxed produce of foreign countries; the home producer being thus subjected to a burden of taxation which, by greatly enhancing the price, limits the demand for British produce; and to restrictions which injuriously interfere with the conduct of his trade and industry. That this House will resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to take into its serious consideration such measures as may remove the grievances of which the owners and occupiers of real property thus justly complain, and hich may establish a more equitable apportionment of the public burdens."

Mr. HUME would not attempt to follow the eloquent speech of the hon. member, but was surprised at the remedy which he proposed. His speech was not in accordance with the resolution, for they had not heard a word about occupiers of land, but only about the landlords—the landlord interest. In fact, the scheme of the hon. gentleman was only intended to benefit the landlords. He was altogether opposed to the proposition. It was just that the land should pay that which it had paid time immemorial. The honourable gentleman asked why should highway rates, &c., be paid by the land? He would tell him. The land was first obtained up in condition of military service, which was commuted into other burdens. Every man who bought land bought it subject to those local taxes, which, in point of fact, formed a portion of the consideration for the land. The hon. gentleman asked with what justice they would call upon the lowest interest to pay rates and cess? He answered, with the justice that a man ought to pay what he owed. If a landed proprietor bought his property with ten per cent. taxation upon it, he could not fairly and honestly remonstrate if that taxation was raised to twenty, as nothing upon the rest of the community. For the little property he had bought he only paid for the net income, after the burdens with which his land was saddled. The speech of the honourable gentleman was, in short, all moonshine—mere moonsh ne. (A laugh). The honorable gentleman had spoken of the burden of highway rates; but it ought to be recollected that good roads materially enhanced the value of land, and the neighbourhood which they passed through; not one of the taxes which the honourable gentleman had enumerated, but were solely intended for the benefit of the parties upon which they were imposed. He would say, in a speech made at a meeting on the 6th of March, by the Duke of Richmond. The speakers said that taxation must be reduced in order to benefit the tenant-farmers. But this hon. gentleman (Mr. Disraeli) would add six millions to it. The hon. gentleman seemed to address the manufacturing interest, as if they alone ought to pay for those general objects which were for the nation at large, and from the taxes which the manufacturers alone who were benefited. What enhanced the value of the land, if England, he would ask, limit that very commerce and manufactures which he seemed at. The hon. member alluded to recent changes which had taken place, and asked if they were meant to support the aristocracy. But the truth was, that up to this hour the taxation of the people was in the hands of the aristocracy, who had taken good care to provide for their families. The whole project of the hon. member was a failure; and the burden of his song was to put more money into the pockets of the landlords, although the honourable gentleman would not propose the repeal of the malt-tax, for the benefit of the tenant-farmer, as (Mr. Hume) would. The hop-tax and the malt-tax were two of the most monstrous taxes that could be imposed, and he laid of the same opinion for a quarter of a century. He would state to the House what he proposed upon this subject. He wished to take off £10,000,000 of taxes. In 1821 he proposed to take off the taxes upon salt, leather, and candles. The former two were repealed; and the soap-tax would have been taken off also, if Lord Monteagle had not made a fool of himself. (Great laughter.) He had done his utmost to make the food of man cheaper. He would now endeavour to make the drink of man cheap. His was pleading for the agricultural interest. They had given them a cheap loaf: gave them now cheap beer; and the argument applied to the whole country, for however supplied, the worst paid man had the most need of a nutritious beverage. The fairest way to support the people was to do something definite for them, and not go into committee upon so feeble a resolution as was proposed. If the House would agree to take off ten millions of expenditure, he would at once sweep away the Excise, and thereby save one million in its collection, while there was advantage to the manufacturers subject to the taxes administered by the board would be equal to 10 per cent. The effect of the malt-tax had been to deteriorate the quality of beer, and when the deteriorion of it arose, which ruined both morals and health; and it was returns showed it all the increase in the consumption of malt was only 20 per cent in 50 years, while the population had increased 90 per cent, where as much would formerly have, and did use, 2 gallons, the high tax imposed on malt had reduced him to one quart. The hon. gentleman had only learned until that day—Agreed to.

Mr. AGLIONBY obtained leave to bring in a bill to effect the compulsory enfranchisement of lands held upon old and customary tenure, through the intervention of the crown and to amend under the powers of the 5th & 6th Victoria for the commutation of certain manorial rights in respect of lands of copyhold tenure, and in respect of other lands subject to such rights; and for facilitating the enfranchisement of such lands, and for the improvement of such tenure."

BRIBERY AT ELECTIONS.

Sir J. TAXINGTON th n proposed that Sir John Hanmer be nominated as a member to serve on the Se ect Committee on the B bery at Elections Bill.

Col. SIBTHORP opposed the m tion, because the hon. Bart. had taken so decided a part in the subject as to be unable to give the question an impartial consideration. He moved to substitute the name of Mr. Mc. Kenzie.

Sir J. PILKINGTON defended his nomination.

The motion was withdrawn, and the committee was appointed.

A number of returns were ordered. The Spirits (Ireland) Bill went through Committee, and the House adjourned at one o'Clock.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 11.—Third Sunday in Lent
MONDAY, 12.—St. Gregory.
TUESDAY, 13. Richard Cœur de Lion landed at Sandwich, 1194.
WEDNESDAY, 14. Admiral Byng shot, 1757.
THURSDAY, 15 Last Quarter 5 min. after 3 morning.
FRIDAY, 16.—Battle of Culloden
SATURDAY, 17.—St. Patrick

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 17, 1849

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. | A.	M. | A.	M. | A.	M. | A.	M. | A.	M. | A.	M. | A.
h. m. | h. m.	h. m. | h. m.	h. m. | h. m.	h. m. | h. m.	h. m. | h. m.	h. m. | h. m.	h. m. | h. m.
3 35 | 3 55	4 16 | 4 36	4 55 | 5 15	5 35 | 5 55	6 15 | 6 35	6 53 | 7 13	7 30 | 7 50

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A. B."—The Meteor at the British Museum, engraved in our Journal for January 6, is, we are disposed to think, a head of Neptune, from its likeness to the usual features of Jupiter

"A Correspondent."—The correct pronunciation of Punjaub is Punjaub

"Amicus."—Your communication is very kind.

"A Constant Reader," Ireland.—We do not remember any treatise on the culture of the hop

"W. S. P."—Torquay.—Murphy's "Tacitus," Valpy's "Classical Family Library."

"G. D.," Carlisle, had better consult a solicitor.

"T. J. L."—"The Cabinet-maker," in Knight's "Guide to Trade."

"H. B. P." Barnstaple, requests us to note that the account of a disturbance at this place, in our Journal for Jan. 27, was erroneous; and, he thinks, misprinted for Dunsleigh, where there has been a riot.

"An Old Subscriber."—Perplexed Persons are occasionally sat on Saturdays.

"S. J. G." Greenwich, is thanked, but we had not room to carry out his suggestion.

"C. J. G."is thanked; but we cannot avail ourselves of the Oregon sketch.

"J. C. D."—Perch, in Gutta Percha, is pronounced like the name of our fish. Wallabia is the title of the parasite of the Scandinavian mythology.

"S. D. C."—The Prussian Protestant establishment nearest to Hyde Park is in Little Dean-street, Soho. Inquire for the Swedish Grammar at Nutt's, foreign bookseller.

"Alpha Beta" The compass was known in Europe as a scientific curiosity early in the 12th century, though its practical worth was not tested by regular seamen until two centuries later, by Sannah navigators

"A. B. C." Sheffield.—The price is 1s. per Number beyond one month. It would be unfair to make a distinction under the circumstances

"H. F."—All the conditions would be dispensed with by special license.

"R. L.," Southampton, is thanked for his letter, which it would not be advisable to print

"A Subscriber."—A place license is requisite.

"An Inquirer." "Hephæstopsies in England" may be purchased of a dealer in second-hand books

"Kaleidoscope."—"Political Geography," published by the Useful Knowledge Society. The last-named edition of "Cosmos."

"C. J." Jersey, is thanked. We have copied the subject. The loan is impracticable

"B and Co." Cheltenham.—The Lithograph is left at our office for return.

"Louis."—The lady is not in widowhood.

"A. B. C." Newcastle.—The work in question may be had at No. 21, Springgardens

"Anonym," Barnsley. The numbers may be had at 2d. each.

"N. J. S. A." Shrewsbury.—We cannot precisely inform you.

"An Absentee"—Chambers" "Atlas for the People."

"Δεῖτε χειρ."—See the "Cyclopædia of Practical Receipts."

"Περιστερα."—It is not intended to continue the Exhibition of Poultry at the Regent's Park Zoological Gardens, since they have not been found to answer the end proposed.

"Rev. M. A." Younger sons are liable to pay duty for wearing their father's arms.

"A Constant Reader," Hope, Sig., Dogdeley, near Dorking, Surrey.

"Inquirer."—The President of the French Republic is unmarried.

"S. in the Far North." In England the right to supporters is confined to Peers of the Realm, Knights of the Garter, Knights Grand Crosses of the Bath, Knights Grand Crosses of Saint Michael and Saint George, and to those who may have obtained them by Royal grant. In ancient times many personages who held high offices in the state used supporters, as did various eminent, though unennobled, families. In Scotland the right to supporters is universally conceded to the chiefs of the several clans, and was granted to the Nova Scotia baronets by patents of creation. The wrongful or illegal usage of armorial ensigns does not now subject the bearer to any punishment or fine.

"S. G."—The use of arms in any form or place will render the wearer liable to the tax

"A. J. A."—The crest of the Andersons, of Broughton, county Lincoln, is "A water spaniel passant or."

"Inquirer," Glasgow.—The arms of the family of Bowen, of Glamorganshire, are,

"Asa" story can be told as short as the heel, and shivered on."

"Omega." The particular family of Ford must be designated, as various arms belong to the name

"W. E. S.," Aldreby, shall be answered next week.

"O. O. O." Salisbury.—O. can be prevented by the architect from publishing the designs in question

"W. B.," Perth.—The Spring Quarter begins on March 20

"M (" Edinburgh.—Miss Helen Faucit first appeared on the stage, at Covent-garden Theatre, in 1836.

"E. W." We must decline recommending you an attorney.

"G. S." Oxford.—Address, name, division of the army, and Ramsaggur, to be forwarded.

"G. C." should consult a picture dealer.

"Leighton."—The cottage range is made at Newark.

"Langua."—We cannot understand your kind recommendation.

"J. H." Isle of Man.—The charge in question is correct.

"A Constant Subscriber" A work on glass-painting has just been published by J. H. Parker.

"Q. Q." will find the particulars of Day's Charity for the Blind in No. 62 of our Journal. The Treasurer and Manager of the Fund is Mr. G. Simpson, 20, Saville-street, Piccadilly.

"S. K."—By aid of the Dunning Rod it was formerly believed that the situation of water, veins of metal, or seams of coal might be discovered under ground. The rod was a forked hazel branch, and its dipping or inclining was a sign of the discovery.—See Brand's "Popular Antiquities," Vol 3

"G B K." There seems to be no reason to doubt the validity of the Company.

"A Constant Reader and Subscriber." Torquay.—The Thatch question is a fit one for the Builder

"J. H. H."—"Short Whist," published by Longman and Co.

"O. S." Bristol. Lord Brougham has not written the Memoir in question.

"Lombard-street."—The present Earl of Dalhousie was born 22nd April, 1812; and married 21st January, 1836, Lady Susan Hay.

"Enquirer."—A Copy of the Will can be obtained at the Prerogative Office, Doctors' Commons. The charge depends on the length of the document.

"E. W. S."—Illegitimacy would, in no way, interfere with the return of a Member to Parliament.

"A Subscriber, R. S."—Sarope, 1st Duke of Bridgewater, left two daughters, his eventual co-heirs—Elizabeth, married first to Wriothesley, Duke of Bedford, and secondly to William, Earl of Jersey; and Louisa, wife of the first Marquis of Stafford, grandfather, by her, of the present Duke of Sutherland, and of the Earl of Ellesmere.

"Cancel and Mustard"—Unless a patent of precedency was obtained, the ladies would not be entitled to the courtesy designation of their hereditary rank

"A Constant Reader."—Sir William Betham is Ulster King of Arms, and to address

"C. T. W."—The arms of the family of Sir Thomas Wyatt, of the reign of King Henry VIII., were "a per fesse at and gu., a boar of barnacles arg., the ring or."

"Penderna"—The son of a man's third marriage would have no right whatever to the coat armour of his father's first and second wives. The son of a K.C.B. is not entitled to supporters, nor, indeed, to a K.C.B. himself. A Knight Grand Cross of the Bath (G.C.B.) is, but not his son. Clark's "Introduction to Heraldry" will afford all necessary information

"A. B." Hemel-Hempstead.—The law as to dogs at present will not permit it.

"S. C."—The quarterings in the Howard shield required by our Correspondent are as follows:—"On three lions passant guardant, as quale or an chief a label of three points arg." Warren. "Chequy or and az.," and Mowbray: "Gu. a lion rampant arg. armed and langued az."

"Sch-ol."—Lord Gough's name is pronounced as if written Goff.

"M. M."—Sir Augustus D'Este died, we believe, at Kensington.

"Pitsyddon."—The advantage gained by being called to the bar is the right of appearing as an advocate in court, and of following the profession of the law.

"F. H. A."—Lady Eleanor Caroline Graham, wife of Sandford Graham, Esq., and daughter of the Earl of Clarendon, died Nov. 17, 1848

"H. F."—An answer cannot be given through the trustee

"Annie."—We do not clearly understand the question.

"E. S. A. C."—The family referred to trace their pedigree to a remote period of Irish history

"A Constant Reader, but no King of Arms"—We think of adopting our Correspondent's suggestion.

"Gravesend, Limerick."—If you purchased at 75, and sell at the present price, the difference is clearly yours. The interest is receivable half-yearly, and the warrants await your or your agent's demand and signature The "broker's slip" is merely an account of the sum bought, and its cost.

"G. C.," Gravesend.—The Government must offer to pay you off at par, or cannot reduce the interest

"G. P. A."—Mrs A. Newton's name was Miss Ward, and she has been known as a concert singer for six or seven years.

"F. P.," Dublin.—Aberchlackyer

"H. B." Mirro is not "rare."

"G. H. N."—Meyerbeer's "Prophète" will be produced at the Royal Italian Opera the first week in July, at the latest. Apply to any music publisher in Regent-street or Bond-street

"Moloches Valsantes."—Strauss is in Vienna; Bonicia is in Paris; and Labitzky will soon be in London.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Burke's Dictionary of the Landed Gentry; supplementary volume.——The Science of Life.——Poetry, Past and Present.——Poems for Young Children.——Fox's Lectures.——Armand. By A. C. Mowatt.——Spoke's Instruction for the Violin MUSIC.—"I Hear it Now."—Oberon Polkas.——The Chamois Hunters.——"In Dreams Thou'rt with me Still.——The Castanet's Gay Sound.

ERRATUM.—In the Memoir of the late Mr Green, in our Journal of last week, It is stated that Mr Gunyhrn, the father of Mrs. Green, was the Coroner for East Middlesex; whereas he was the brother of the Coroner.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1849.

THE Protectionist party, and that party who, without binding themselves entirely to the Protectionist faith that it is necessary to re-establish the Corn-laws, think that agriculture in this country suffers, as compared with other interests, an undue amount of taxation, have been busy during the week both in and out of Parliament. Mr. Disraeli's motion for an inquiry into the whole subject of agricultural distress, and of the burdens that weigh upon the landed interest, has been since last week upon the papers of the House; and the ultra-Protectionist party, who have their headquarters in Old Bond-street, have been holding a field day, with the view, apparently, of supporting the motion. There does not, however, as far as we can judge, seem to be much identity of purpose between the two.

Mr. Disraeli's motion is vague in the extreme. It alleges hardships which remain to be proved; and, as a step towards a remedy for these unproved hardships, it urges the Legislature to resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to take into its serious consideration such measures as may remove the grievances complained of, and which may establish a more equitable adjustment of the public burdens. The Protectionists who met in Old Bond-street, under the presidency of the Duke of Richmond, are more explicit. They think the re-establishment of a protective duty on corn the first thing needful, and the repeal of the Malt-Tax the second. With these two measures they would be content. Between both parties there are thus three objects aimed at—protective duties on the importation of foreign grain, the repeal of the Malt-Tax, and a fairer adjustment of the existing burden of taxation.

As regards the first object, we may well doubt whether even those who clamour most loudly for it indulge in the hope that any agitation in its favour can be successful. With all authority against them; with all the theoretical, as well as all the practical statesmanship of the country on the other side; with their own leader, Mr. Disraeli, scrupulously careful not even to broach the subject in his resolutions; with almost the entire press of the country in opposition to their views; with a House of Commons hopelessly hostile to any disturbance of the recent settlement of the question; and with the certainty that all the trade, commerce, and manufacture of the country scout the mere idea as ludicrous insanity, what chance is there that such a proposition could obtain a respectful hearing? There is not a man in Parliament, except men whose appearance in the character of legislators is a subject of amusement or derision, who would deliberately venture to propose to either House of Parliament the re-enactment of the Corn-Laws. The attempt, at this time of day, would be scarcely less ludicrous than an attempt to re-establish the Stuarts or the Heptarchy. It is no more possible to do such a thing, than it is to drive Time back for a century. Even the farmers who spoke at the great meeting in Old Bond-street, hinted at a new arrangement between landlords and tenants, as a better remedy for the existing state of agriculture than any reliance upon Protection. On that matter, however important it may be to them, the Legislature cannot aid them. They must make the best bargain they can with their landlords. How far any such arrangement is likely to be effected, however, be a great point towards a better arrangement, if they would make up their minds to the fact that the Repeal of the Corn-Laws is final. If rents are too high under a system of Free Trade, rents must come down. If tenant-farmers, under a system of Free Trade, require the security of leases before they can be induced to expend their capital upon the soil to make it more productive, let them agitate for leases. They have the game in their own hands. They have only to be unanimous and peremptory, and in due time they will receive both leases and a fair reduction of rental.

As regards the repeal of the Malt-Tax, which is the second of the three objects that agriculturists aim at, they may be assured that no other interest in the state is desirous that the tax should be maintained. Abolish the tax by all means, is the universal cry. Let the agriculturists, if aggrieved or oppressed by it, be relieved from the infliction; but we must either establish a new and fairer tax in place of it, or reduce the expenditure to such a point that the nation may be none the worse for the sacrifice of so many millions of revenue. Those who agitate for a repeal of the Malt-Tax are bound to show the means by which it can be repealed without danger to the public credit. There are but two modes of doing it; and, as yet, the agricultural party have not come forward either to originate or to support any proposition in either sense. They do not propose a doubled Income-Tax as a substitute; neither do they support Mr. Cobden's motion for a reduction of expenditure. Under these circumstances, however sincere the country may sympathise with the agriculturists in the distress which they allege, the Malt-Tax must take the same chance as other taxes that oppress the industrious community. It must, perforce, remain until the country is either richer or more economical, or until some brighter genius than the Chancellor of the Exchequer shall discover some other mode of raising as much money as it amounts to. Mr. Hume's amendment to the motion of Mr. Disraeli puts the case very fairly. "If," says the amendment, "the local taxation of the country falls unequally on real property, or bears with undue severity upon the occupiers of land (of which there is no proof before this House), such inequalities and undue pressure ought to be removed; but, with the view of giving speedy relief to the agriculturists and other interests of the country, without detriment to the claims of the national creditor, the public expenditure, now excessive, ought to be forthwith reduced, so as to enable Parliament to repeal totally the duties on malt and hops; and to remove, as soon as practicable, other taxes which impede the progress of agriculture and of commercial industry." This is common sense. It is a practical mode of looking at the subject; and, as practical men, we trust the agriculturists generally will sooner or later be induced to take this view of it.

The third point, which is touched upon in Mr. Disraeli's motion is, perhaps, still more important. If, as Mr. Disraeli alleges, "the whole of the local taxation of the country for national purposes falls mainly, if not exclusively, upon real property, and bears with undue severity on the occupiers of land," there is clearly a sufficient reason for a more equitable adjustment of the public burthens. Let the injustice be but proved, and no party, in or out of the House, will oppose the fair apportionment which is demanded. This, however, must be said, that "local taxation for national purposes" cannot mean the Malt-Tax. It must mean Poor-Rates, Highway-Rates, &c. If real property pay unduly, and personal property do not pay its fair share towards these burthens, let the facts be stated. It must be remembered, however, that this is a new point. It opens up the whole question of taxation, both local and general. But even in this case there is no necessity to set class against class, or to debate the subject as if it were one in which the interests of landlords and occupiers were opposed to the interests of all who are not landlords and occupiers. Mr. Ewart's amendment, of which the object is to raise the question of the comparative justice, expediency, and productiveness of direct and indirect taxation, will afford ample opportunity for eliciting the truth upon this part of the case. The whole subject is of the utmost possible importance, and calls for the earnest study of all who wish well—as who does not—to the estimable and enterprising persons engaged in agriculture, as well as of those who desire once for all, that the expenditure of such a country as Great Britain should not exceed its means, and that the taxation raised for the necessary purposes of revenue should not press with unjust severity upon any class whatever.

Upon the debate itself we must reserve our remarks until a future occasion. With the view of devoting as much as possible of our space to it, we have presented four pages of illustrations in our Supplement, and reserved three of the pages of our ordinary issue to the Parliamentary debate on the introduction of the motion.

The "sixpenny" rebellion of Ulster and Leinster threatens, as far as speaking is concerned, to be as loud and violent as the rebellion of John Mitchell and Mr. Meagher of the "sword." The people of those hitherto loyal and contented provinces are willing to endure Window-Tax, Income-Tax, any tax rather than a rate in aid of sixpence in the pound in support of the pauperism of Munster and Connaught. Yet, though many of the speakers at recent meetings vent anger against Englishmen and English Legislation, for endeavouring to affix upon the prosperous districts of Ireland some liability for the support of the distressed districts, we are glad to see that they are turning their attention to the social measures which have not been allowed but fostered that fearful growth of pauperism which is the disgrace and danger of Ireland. So far there has been improvement. The more they study the subject, the better for Ireland and for themselves. It is a great point gained when the healthy half of Ireland has become pecuniarily interested in the prosperity of the sickly half. Notwithstanding all the present irritation that is excited, the best results may be expected to flow from the proposal of the Government. In Parliament the agitation upon the subject has been as keen as, or keener than, in Ireland. The various speakers who have favoured the House with their opinions—however much they may differ upon the policy recommended for the temporary relief of destitution, they agree in insisting upon the necessity of permanent measures for the rescue of the country from the slough of pauperism in which it is floundering. It is, however, much easier to declaim against the existing state of things, than to devise a speedy remedy. The mischief of ages is not to be healed in a day. A demoralised people and a ruined proprietary are not to be elevated and rendered wealthy at once, however liberal and wise the means that may be adopted for that purpose. The more severely the immediate pressure falls upon men who have it in their power to aid in the process of Irish regeneration, the greater likelihood will there be that some scheme for the permanent benefit of the distressed districts of the country will be devised and developed. Sir Robert Peel has, amongst others, been devoting the energies of his mind to this subject. Caution is always the characteristic of men in power. It is well, therefore, that great statesmen should sometimes be out of office, that the country may have the advantage of their genius untrammelled by that excess of prudence which hedges authority, as Divinity is said to hedge a King. The Right Hon. Baronet, whose extreme cautiousness is proverbial, has at last given the aid of his great name and authority to a plan for the permanent improvement of Ireland, upon principles similar to those long advocated by men of lesser note. He has recalled attention to the infusion of new blood into six counties of Ireland which took place in the time of James I., after the rebellion of Tyrone, and has advocated a similar influx of a solvent proprietary into Munster and Connaught. He believes that as large an area of land as was then forfeited, might now be obtained in the West of Ireland by purchase or arrangement with the proprietors; and that this land, after its purchase by the nation, might be divided into "plantations," as was done in the time of James I., and disposed of to men with capital and energy sufficient to make the location a profitable undertaking both to themselves and the people. Although he thinks it may be impossible to apply the principles of the arrangement to the same extent as was done in the seventeenth century, he is of opinion, that, unless some such a plan be applied, there will be no hope for the permanent improvement of Ireland. "If," said the Right Honourable Baronet, "after raising a rate in aid, you leave matters exactly as you found them; if you rely exclusively on grants of public money, there is no hope of permanent escape from the calamity which afflicts us. But if, without violating the rights of property, you place the land in possession of new proprietors, without distinction of religious profession, you will lay the foundation of the future prosperity of Ireland."

It is a sign that great progress has been made in a right direction when a man of the character and in the position of Sir Robert Peel is found to give expression to opinions like these. Great Britain cannot continue to throw her hard-won millions into the bottomless pit of Celtic pauperism; neither can it be expected that Lowland Ulster—which employ their own people and cultivate their own lands—will consent to apply a rate in aid to feed the unproductive swarms of the western districts. The enunciation by Sir Robert Peel even of the rudiments of a plan whereby the pauper sin of the west may be eradicated, or greatly diminished, is of itself, an event of importance. It will expedite the solution of the difficulty. Public opinion will be gradually ripened, and the way will be prepared for a social revolution, of which it is scarcely possible to overrate the urgency or the necessity.

Appointment of Harbour-Master of the Port of London.—On Wednesday, at a meeting of the Port of London and Navigation Committee of the Corporation, held in the Guildhall, it was resolved that the old harbour masters should rise in seniority, according to the established usage; and Mr. Rowland, of the Greenwich Station, was appointed principal and superintending harbour master, at a salary of £500 per annum; Lieut. Stone, R.N., of Limehouse, second, at a salary of £400; Mr. James, of Gravesend, third, £350; and Captain Caffin to enter, as his colleagues had formerly done, at a salary of £300. By the existing act of Parliament, all rules, orders, and directions given by the principal and superintending harbour-master are to be obeyed and followed by the other harbour-masters; and hence the necessity for appointing a gentleman accustomed to the duties.

The London Medical Society held its seventy-sixth anniversary meeting at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street, on Thursday evening. The President, Henry Hancock, Esq., having taken the chair, an excellent and appropriate oration was delivered by Dr. Willshire; after which, the President proceeded to present the Fothergillian Gold Medal to John Mellgan, Esq., of Keighley, Yorkshire, for his "Essay upon the Influence of Civilisation upon Health and Disease;" and his Silver Medal was awarded to Dr. Willshire, for his "Essay upon the Diseases of Children." The fellows, about fifty in number, then adjourned to partake of an excellent dinner, provided by the Messrs Staples.

Society of Antiquaries.—A very curious letter, from the celebrated Sir John Hawkins, to Sir Henry Mildmay, the then Treasurer of the Navy, bearing date Chatham, 1688, was read at the Thursday meeting of this Society. Sir John Hawkins, after giving a detailed account of the labour and trouble he had been at in investigating and reforming the abuses and extravagances of the navy department, assures Sir H. Mildmay that he shall be able to reduce the expenses £3000 per annum, and yet the naval service will be better rendered He complains that he has met with much opposition in making the alterations from many of the officers at Chatham, who were afraid their perquisites and emoluments would be materially decreased. The original letter, with Sir J. Hawkins' signature, was laid on the table.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Socialists of Paris have been shocked to learn that the President of the French Republic has given orders that the whole of the attendants and servants of the Palais Elysée shall regularly assist at divine service every Sunday, which is performed by the Abbé Grassi, a Corsican priest.

A democratic banquet took place at Lyons on the 1st instant, which was attended by above 3000 persons.

A second return on the valuation of Irish tenements has been laid before Parliament, on the motion of Sir William Somerville, M.P. It shows that at present (year 1849) the number of valued tenements in the Irish counties is as follows:—452 639 under £4; 78,636 under £3; 61,708 under £2; 31,789 under £7; 42,024 under £8; and 334,771 at or above £8. The number of valued tenements in the boroughs of Ireland is thus subdivided:—41,380 under £4; 7304 under £5; 7084 under £6; 4360 under £7; 3204 under £8; and 48,441 at and above £8.

Corporal Leonard, of the 91st Foot, was killed last week by throwing himself out of a third floor window of Cambridge Barracks, in Portsmouth garrison, during the night. It is believed the dreadful act was committed whilst the deceased was in a state of somnambulism.

The formation of the Rugby and Stamford Railroad between Paris and Epernay is to be opened to the public on the last of May next.

Madame Valabregue, the celebrated Madame Catalani of another period, has arrived at Lyons. She died from her illness in consequence of the late disturbances. Her son is a distinguished officer in the French service.

Mr. Moreton, an American printer, died lately in Paris. He has bequeathed £40,000 to be given as a premium to any body who shall succeed in constructing a machine capable of striking off 10,000 copies of a newspaper within an hour.

The completion of the new House of Commons may be expected early in the ensuing year.

The Mecklenburg Legislature has voted the sum of one million and a half of thalers for the construction of a railway in that duchy.

There will be four indictments at the present Norfolk assizes against Rush; viz. one for the murder of Mr. Isaac Jermy, one for the murder of Mr. Isaac Jermy, another for an attempt on the life of Mrs. Jermy, and another for the like offence on the life of Miss Chestney.

M. Bajocchi, orderly officer of the President of the French Republic, has left Paris for Vienna, it is said, charged with the mission of demanding the ashes of the son of the Emperor Napoleon from the Austrian Government, and of accompanying them to Paris.

Whilst Marshal Bugeaud was last week reviewing the troops at Saint Germains, a fireman in full uniform amongst the crowd had the audacity to exclaim loudly, "Vive la République démocratique et Sociale!" The Marshal rode up to him, and with perfect sang froid, addressed him in the following words:—"Pompier, you appear to me to have strangely deviated from the object of your institution. Your duty is to extinguish fires, and not to light them."

It is stated that Mr. Wyld, M.P., has nothing whatever to do with the project of paying a visit to Paris, in return for that paid some time since by a party of the National Guard to the British metropolis. The name of Mr. John Williams, M.P., has equally been used without his sanction.

The total number of paupers, of all classes, relieved in the 592 unions in England and Wales, during each of the quarters ended at Lady-day, 1847 and 1848, was: In 1847: in-door, 226,879: out-door, 1,244,864: total, 1,471,113. In 1848: in-door, 265,140; out-door, 1,361,061: total, 1,626,201. Increase in-door, 38,261; out-door, 116,077: total, 155,068. The population of the 592 unions, in 184., was 13,784,701.

The Supreme Court of the United States has decided against the validity of the Aliens Passport act.

Mr. F. M. Faulkener, who so efficiently discharged the duties of Vice-Consul of France at Pakesdine, has been appointed to a similar responsible office as a representative of the United States at the same port.

At Havannah the quarantine is still in force, but modified so as to operate more especially against vessels from London and Glasgow. Ships from other ports were at liberty to enter free.

Intelligence has been received at the Bank of England to the effect that her Majesty's surveying brig Pandora, Commander Wood, is coming home from the Pacific with a freight of "gold dignities" to the amount of nine tons—or to the value of £900,000 sterling. This will give the inch Commander about £11,000 for the freightage: the Admiral's share will be £...?; and Greenwich Hospital will benefit to a like amount.

In the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, the number of patients that have been relieved from the 13th of June, 1848, to the 24th of February, 1849, is 3109. Patients' attendance for the week ending February 17, 717; for the week ending February 24, 767.

At a Common Hall held last week, in the City of London, for the election of a Bridgemaster, in the room of Mr. Joseph Walton, deceased, Mr George Ledger, formerly a member of the Court of Common Council, was elected without opposition.

Six men were dismissed from the factory department of Woolwich Dockyard, last week, for idling at the time they should have been working, and one boy for having a tobacco-pipe in his pocket, the strictest injunctions having been previously issued against taking tobacco-pipes into the yard on any pretence whatever.

On Sunday morning, the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs attended divine service in the chapel of the Female Orphan Asylum, Lambeth; the sermon was preached to a crowded congregation by the Rev S. R. Cattley, chaplain to the Earl of Scarborough, to the Lord Mayor, and to the charity. The collection amounted to £76; and ten guineas were promised from a life guardsman.

William Henry Crook, a literary character and lecturer, aged 65, who, according to a paragraph in last week's papers, was reported to have been murdered, it has been proved, at a coroner's inquest, destroyed himself, by inflicting a wound in his neck.

His Excellency the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ellis, the British representative appointed to take part in the congress on Italian affairs at Brussels, has arrived in London from that capital.

Baron Picolet d'Hermillon, the new Minister from the King of Sardinia to the Court of Brazil, has left town for the Continent.

A gentleman in Liverpool has contrived a plan for opening and shutting gates by means of a spring, which can be acted upon by the pressure of a horse's foot, or the wheel of a carriage.

The Freeman's Journal states that the Duke of Bedford has a mortgage for £90,000 on an estate in the county of May.

Mr. Gavan Duffy has been removed from Newgate Prison to Richmond Bridewell (Dublin), where he was incarcerated with Mr. O'Connell. His health had suffered from the confined air of Newgate.

Mr. R. B. Crowder, Q.C., and M.P., has been appointed a Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Cornwall.

An agitation for a repeal of the Malt Tax is fast spreading among the farmers of the country. Meetings have been held for the purpose, during the past week, at Chesterfield, Lynn, and Colchester, &c.

The new fisheries this season in Scotland are rather productive. Both on the North and South Esk the take is abundant, whereas during this month last year the fishing turned out to be a complete failure. Appearances give indication of the season being a decidedly successful one. The fish are described to be of excellent quality.

The St. George left the London Docks on Friday (last week) full of goods, and with sixty passengers, for San Francisco, California, many of them persons of respectability. She was despatched by Messrs Cosens and Sankey, and is the first vessel which has sailed for San Francisco from London.

The writers of the American press take very odd notions at times. In Pennsylvania a writer at present undertakes to prove that Scotland obtained its gold for the temple from California—that this was the place called Ophir in the Book of Kings. He also thinks the Queen of Sheba came from that region.

The Earl of Rosse, as President of the Royal Society, has issued cards for soirées on the four Saturdays, April 21, May 5, May 25, and June 16. The soirées of the new President will be given in an extensive suite of rooms in Somerset House, placed at the disposal of the Royal Society, for the purpose, by the University of London.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and the Queen Dowager, have respectively contributed a donation of £25 to the fund for the relief of the widows and orphans, and the families of the sufferers by the late explosion at Darley Main colliery.

The Incorporated Society have voted £400, the Church Building Commissioners £350, and the Exeter Diocesan Church Building Society £200—making in all £950—towards the erection of the new church in the district of St. Paul's, Devonport. The proposed site for the church is being cleared, and the erection of the church will be forthwith commenced. It is intended that the building shall contain 750 sittings, all of which will be free for the use of the inhabitants of the district.

The Cork Constitution announces the appearance of the cholera in that city.

The Coroner for Middlesex, Mr. Wakley, M.P., is, we understand, confined to his residence at Harefield Park, in consequence of severe illness.

The Secretary at War has conferred the appointment of Chaplain to the Military Prison at Portsmouth (Southsea Castle), vacant by the demise of the Rev. J. Mitchell, upon the Rev. T. Dennys, minister of Trinity Church, Portsea.

He mails that for a length of time have been conveyed from Portsmouth to London by the South Western Railway are now forwarded by the London and Brighton & Portsmouth and Chichester line, so as to avoid the floating ferry between Portsmouth and Gosport, the conveyance of the mails over which costs on an average £6.00 per annum!

Two millions of dollars in gold dust are now on their way to the United States; about a million of dollars worth remains at San Francisco awaiting an opportunity to proceed in the same direction.

In the parish of Newlyn in Pydar, in Cornwall, a strawberry perfectly ripe, and a blackberry nearly so, were gathered a few days since on the grounds of Trevillian and Degembris.

An American paper has taken the trouble to ascertain the whole number of gold seekers that have left for California since the breaking out of the gold fever in the States, and the vessels which have sailed. The numbers are 178 vessels, and 11,166 passengers.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

REPEAL OF THE MALT-TAX.
AGGREGATE PROTECTIONIST MEETING.

On Tuesday an aggregate meeting of persons interested in agriculture was held at Will's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, having been specially convened by the Central Society for the Protection of Agriculture and British Industry, for the purpose of taking into consideration the grievance under which it is said the farmers are labouring, and for adopting the necessary measures for bringing a statement of those grievances under the notice of Parliament.

His Grace the Duke of Richmond, President of the Society for the Protection of Agriculture, was voted to the chair. He was supported by the Earl of Malmesbury, M.P., the Earl of Malmesbury, Sir John Tyrell, Bart., M.P., Mr. A. Stafford, M.P., Mr. W. Miles, M.P., &c. There were also present deputations from Huntingdonshire, Essex, Sussex, Warwickshire, Surrey, Hants, Herts, Wilts, Dorset, Cambridgeshire, &c., all of whom were members of the Central Society for the Protection of Agriculture and British Industry, or the several provincial associations in connexion with it.

The following resolutions were unanimously agreed to:—

"1. That, in the opinion of this meeting, the distress already experienced by, and still impending over, the farmers of the United Kingdom, is frankly with the most disastrous consequences, and has been mainly occasioned by recent legislative enactments, bringing them into unequal and unjust competition with the growers of foreign corn, and, unless speedily arrested, must overwhelm the whole agricultural community in ruin. And although this meeting repudiates the idea that any practicable reduction of taxation can be regarded as an equivalent for protection, still, in order to mitigate the evil as far as possible, they feel it to be incumbent upon them to impress on Parliament the necessity not only of the total repeal of the malt-tax, but also the immediate revision of all general and local taxation, which presses with unequal severity upon the cultivators of the soil.

"2. That this society has long recorded its opinion that the malt-tax presses with undue severity upon the skill and energy of the British farmer, and is alike injurious to the health, comforts, and morals of the entire labouring community, and that the repeal of the Corn Laws has rendered more oppressive and unjust. Entertaining this opinion, this meeting pledges itself to use its utmost exertions to obtain its immediate and total repeal.

"3. That the tenantry, and principally of tenant-farmers, assembled from various parts of the kingdom, express unabated loyalty to our most gracious Queen, and great attachment to the British constitution. They cannot, however, but express their regret with deep regret a seeming indifference in both Houses of Parliament to the interests of the tenantry by many of those who were considered the natural guardian of their rights and privileges.

"4. That the farmers of the United Kingdom are having been deprived, by the operation of Free Trade, of the means of paying taxes, are of opinion that in requesting an alleviation of burdens they are not bound to point out a substitute for the malt-tax. Nevertheless, while the United States of America and all other countries with which we have intercourse are protecting themselves by heavy Custom-house duties, it is the conviction of this meeting that a moderate import duty on all such foreign productions is infinitely more just than the system now adopted of taxing the productions of our native industry.

"5. That the committee of the central society be directed to communicate with the country societies, and to request them to take measures for calling country meetings under the authority of the high sheriffs, and to originate petitions to both Houses of Parliament, in accordance with the resolutions now passed."

The adoption of a petition to the House of Commons, embodying the resolutions, closed the proceedings.

Westminster Improvements.—The Westminster Improvements Commissioners have given notice to the authorities of St. Margaret's parish, Westminster, that within six months they shall require one wing of St. Margaret's workhouse, to carry out their plans in the formation of the new Victoria-street; and that they shall require the whole building to be cleared in two years. The subject, therefore, has led to an immediate consideration as to the site of a new workhouse, which it is estimated will cost £30,000, and must, of course, be ready before the expiration of the two years for the reception of the poor. The parish is managed by a select vestry; but an endeavour is about to be made by the rate-payers to get the whole work submitted to public competition, to ensure the best plans and the utmost economy in its construction.

Births and Deaths, &c.—The deaths registered in London during the week ending Saturday, March 3, were—males 502, females 576: total 1.38, being 31 below its average, and a decline on the previous week of 53. "The general Registrar-General," says the Registrar-General, "remarks, on the whole, a favourable account of the public health; but it will be observed that scarlatina, though it has declined, continues considerably above the amount of previous years, and scarlet fever ought to be become unusually fatal. The former disease carried off 67, whilst the average is 32; the latter 89, while the average is 42. The deaths from diarrhœa and dysentery, which seem to have been on the increase at this season during the last three or four years, were 38, the average being 14: those from cholera were 35, of which, with a case registered as 'diarrhœa and cholera,' 8 occurred in Warburton's Lunatic Asylum, Bethnal-green; 2 occurred in the Refuge for the Destitute, Hackney-road. The mortality from small pox and measles is unusually low; that from typhus has fallen to the average, and that from hooping-cough is 4 below the average. The deaths from bronchitis (96) are 5 above the average, while those from pneumonia (141) are 11 above the average. Two men died of intemperance, one man from exposure, and a child of 12 months was scorched to death. Two died of 'catarrhal cold and inflammation of the chest.' At Kensington, a girl of six years died of hydrocyanic acid, a case in which the coroner's jury considered that the deceased had not received proper medical attention, owing to the wilful neglect of some of her relatives. An infant of five days died in sixteen hours from the effects of Dover's powder, prescribed for the mother of once and, but given under a misunderstanding of the directions. From the medical testimony it appeared that the proper medicine not having inscribed on it the name of the person for whom it was intended (Verdict of coroner's jury.) In Hackney South, a girl of two years died, according to verdict, from the fatal vapours of a sewer, and in the same district, a grave-digger was suffocated by the earth falling in when engaged in his occupation. A girl of four years died of 'cynanche parotidæa,' a disease which is rarely fatal. The births for the week were—males, 798; females, 749; total, 1547.

Meteorological Observations.—The following are the means for the week ending March 3:—Barometer, 29.725; thermometer, highest day, 49.2; lowest, 28.1; mean, 42.4; dew point, 35.7; ghest in the sun, 60.8; lowest on the grass, 31.9: wind variable.

DREADFUL WRECK OF AN EMIGRANT SHIP.

NEARLY 200 LIVES LOST.

We have to record this week one of the most frightful catastrophes that probably, ever occurred on the English coast, viz. the total loss of a large emigrant ship, on the Long Sands, near Harwich, with nearly 200 souls on board, during the tempestuous and fearful weather on Wednesday (last week). The gale commenced in the early part of Wednesday morning, the wind blowing from the south-west; and, as the day advanced, the violence of the storm increased, and continued till between six and seven o'clock in the evening. A heavy sea-storm followed, and lasted till midnight.

During the prevalence of the storm on Thursday several vessels were wrecked on the Long Sands: amongst them was a Dutch Indiaman, named the Dale, Captain Laws, bound from Antwerp to Hava nah, the crew of which (with the exception of a poor fellow) were picked up by her Majesty's revenue cutter Scout, and landed at Harwich. A large schooner shared a similar fate on the same sands, but the loss of every soul of her crew. Seven or eight total losses are also reported as having happened on the adjacent shoals, but these differ from the extent of the disasters. Her Majesty's revenue-cutter, Petrel, has communicated the most melancholy intelligence of the appalling loss of an emigrant ship on the same sands, and that nearly 200 beings perished with her. Only four of the many on board survived, and these the Petrel rescued.

The vessel is the unchartered condition of the Florida, who had been exposed to the storm in the rigging for forty-eight hours, it was not till Saturday that the correct details could be elicited from them by Mr. Billingsley, the agent to the Customs at Harwich, and the assistant-agent, Mr. Oppenheim.

The ill-fated vessel was the bark *Florida*n, 500 tons burden, Mr. E. D. Whitmore, master, from Antwerp. She was the property of Mr. E. D. Hulbert, of New York, and had been chartered by a German company for the conveyance of emigrants to the United States. The number of emigrants that had taken a passage by her at Antwerp, and had gone on board before she weighed anchor, is stated to have been from 176 to 200. They comprised young, respectable German agricultural labourers, with their wives and families, and many mechanics. Amongst the number on board were from 50 to 60 women, and between 20 and 30 children. The ship was worked by a crew of nearly 20, part of whom were Englishmen, commanded by a Captain Whitmore; a surgeon being on board to attend the emigrants. It was late on Tuesday evening week when the Floridian put out to sea. The course taken after clearing the Flemish banks was westward for the Straits of Dover. The weather continued favourable up to 12 o'clock, when it changed for the worse, with hail and snow.

Daybreak on Wednesday brought fearful weather; the wind had sprung up very fearfully, with a great fall of snow, and a heavy rolling sea. The ship kept on her course, intending to run into the Downs, but at about half-past eight, but at three o'clock P.M. she struck with such terrific force, that her planks and false keel immediately rushed up alongside. A scene of horror instantly presented itself on deck—the emigrants rushing in a body on the fore part of the vessel. Within a few moments of the vessel striking, the sea broke into her hull, blowing up the hatchways, and sweeping many of the poor creatures overboard, while others were washed in their berths, being unable to rise from the effects of sea sickness. Captain Whitmore, perceiving the inevitable destruction of his ship, gave orders to his men to launch the boats. The first boat broke adrift the moment it was launched, and, it is said, capsized directly with two men who were in it. The moment the second boat was lowered, the captain jumped into it with Mrs. Whitmore (his wife). This led to a desperate rush towards the craft. Some 30 or 30 poor creatures, men and women, leaped from the quarter-deck of the foundering ship into the boat; the result was, that it was instantly capsized, and the whole party were precipitated overboard and lost. The crew took to the rigging, to which they lashed themselves, and upwards of 100 of the emigrants congregated on the quarter-deck. Here they had not been more than an hour before the ship broke in two, amidships. The mainmast fell over the side with a fearful crash, and a tremendous sea carried away the whole of the quarter-deck with the mass of human beings on it. A frightful shriek filled the air, and the next moment the unfortunate creatures were struggling in the deep. By great efforts eight or ten were rescued by the men who had secured themselves in the rigging. The moment the ship broke in two, her cargo, mostly merchandise, floated out and intermingled with the drowning sufferers. For some time men, women, and children were to be seen floating about on the packages. Ere night had set in, however, all had disappeared. The then survivors, about twelve in number, continued in the rigging of the foremast, which, with the fore part of the vessel, was all that remained of the wreck, the whole of the night enduring the greatest suffering. The sea kept breaking over them, and the cold being most intense rendered their condition most painful. When Thursday morning broke it was discovered that six had died in the course of the night; they had been frozen to death, and their bodies were dangling in the rigging. All that day the same fearful weather existed, and not the least aid could be rendered to those who still lived in the rigging. They could see vessels passing at a distance, but they were too far off for the crews to observe their situation. Thursday night and the greater portion of Friday passed away, yet no help came. Only four now remained, three sailors and one passenger, the other two were frozen to death in the course of the preceding day and night. About seven o'clock her Majesty's revenue cutter Petrel approached, and her crew, by direction of the commanding officer, lowered the boat and dashed off to the spot, the heavy surf beating round the wreck in such a manner as to render the running of the cutter alongside the wreck exceedingly dangerous. After considerable difficulty the poor fellows were got off, and taken on board the revenue cutter, where everything was done for their comfort. They were in a deplorable state of exhaustion and partly bereft of their senses. Their hands and feet were severely frost-bitten, and how they escaped with their lives appears most remarkable. The Petrel made for Harwich with all sail, and arrived about 11 o'clock at night. Mr Billingsley, Lloyd's agent and Vice-Consul for the Belgian Government, afforded the poor fellows every attention that was possible by placing them in comfortable quarters. The names of the seamen saved are Henry Hill, William Harry, and a Swede, name unknown. The fourth is one of the emigrants, apparently a mechanic. He has been deranged ever since he has been landed.

WRECK OF THE "FLORIDIAN," EMIGRANT SHIP, ON THE LONG SANDS, OFF HARWICH.

A Colchester vessel lost five hands in an attempt to rescue some of the sufferers. The noble fellows saw the quarter-deck carried away with the emigrants on it. They immediately pushed off in their boat with a view of saving some of them, but had scarcely got a few strokes when a heavy sea caught their craft, upset it, and the whole of them met with a watery grave.

The Long Sands form a very extensive shoal some distance outside the well-known channel known as the Swin. In length they are between nine and ten miles, and their breadth averages from half a mile to a mile and a half. They are about twenty miles from Harwich, and their other extremity about the same distance from the North Foreland.

Upwards of 200 vessels started on Saturday morning for the spot where the wreck lies, with a view of picking up what portion of her cargo might be floating about. Several revenue cutters also proceeded to the scene to protect it from the ravages of the wreckers.

Our Illustration shows the boat of the Petrel, and the crew, in their fortunate attempt to rescue the survivors of the wreck from their perilous situation upon the fore-top, by slipping down the yard into the boat. Our Artist derived the details for his sketch from one of the crew of the Petrel engaged in the praiseworthy act.

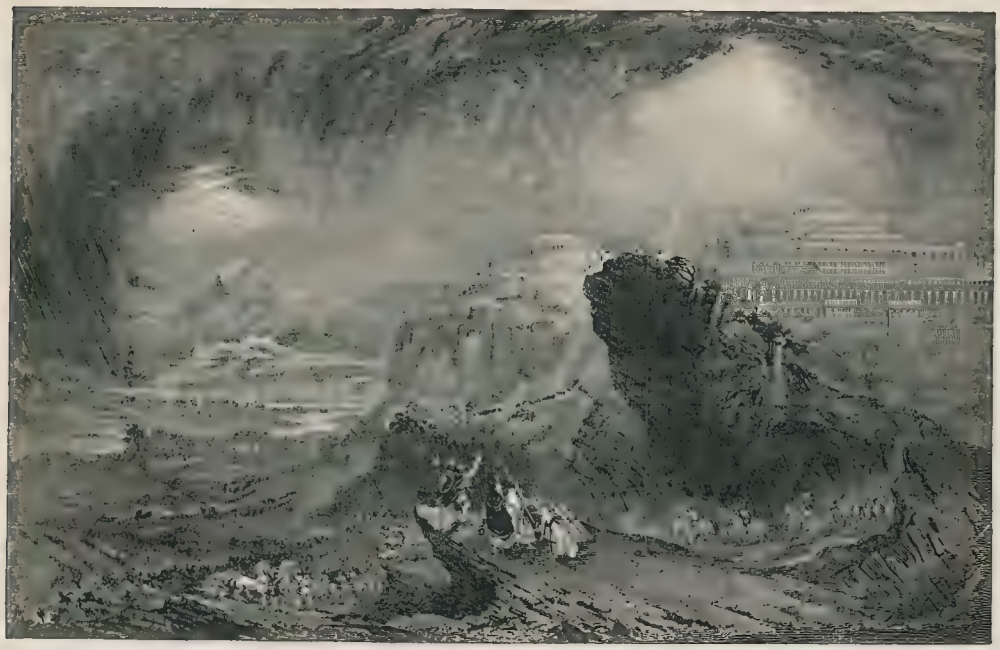
THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

(THIRD NOTICE.)

Mr. Foley, to whom we owe the marble group of "Ino and Bacchus," was first distinguished as a sculptor by his statue of "A youth at a stream." His "Ino and Bacchus," a commission from the Earl of Ellesmere, is much in Mr. Marshall's manner, and more classic in its spirit and conception than many of Canova's groups. Mr. Foley's "Ino" will form a distinguishing feature in Lord Ellesmere's new house in the Green-park, and is sure of being seen, from the thousands that the Bridgwater gallery will draw past where it is placed thanks to Lord Ellesmere's liberal determination of throwing open his Gallery to the public on certain days, and necessarily on certain conditions. Reduced copies can accomplish so little in extending the reputation of the sculptor or painter (of a sculptor more especially), that an artist's great object must always be to have his work well placed, and in a position where it is likely to be seen. It was Wilkie who said, that he would rather sell a picture to Sir George Beaumont for 50 guineas, than to an unknown and unknowing collector for 300. And he was right in what he said.

"INO AND THE INFANT BACCHUS," IN MARBLE, BY J. H. FOLEY

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.



"JOSHUA COMMANDING THE SUN TO STAND STILL."—PAINTED BY JOHN MARTIN.

His picture was seen in Beaumont's house; and the fact of its being purchased by so excellent a judge as Sir George Beaumont, brought other commissions and higher prices, that enabled him to become dainty in selecting his patrons.

We have taken our other illustrations for this week's paper from Mr. John Martin's large picture of "Joshua commanding the Sun to stand still," and from the two charming sacred subjects by Mr. O'Neil—"St. Catherine" and "St. Cecilia."

Mr. John Martin, the celebrated painter of "Joshua commanding the Sun to stand still," "Belshazzar's Feast," and other noble works, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in the year 1789. He was apprenticed to a coach-painter; but, disliking the toil of his master's business, redeemed, by the kindness of his friends and his own exertions, the remainder of his time, and, bidding farewell to his own family, set off for London in a Newcastle collier, with five shillings in his pocket. He soon found employment in this great metropolis of the world; for a lad with active hands and a determination to get on never can be long out of employment in a large city. He worked at first as a coach-painter, and afterwards as a glass-painter, at Collins's, in the Strand, near Temple-bar, and was living in Thanet-place (at the back of Collins's), when he sent his first work, "Landscape—a composition," to the Royal Academy Exhibition at Somerset House. In 1812 (he was then in his twenty-third year) he exhibited "Sadak in search of the Waters of Oblivion," the first work which brought him into notice. In 1813 he exhibited "Adam's first Sight of Eve;" in 1814 "Clytie," an illustration of

All day, all night, in trackless wilds alone,
She pined and taught the listning rocks her moan.

And in 1816, in the ante-room of the Royal Academy, his first sketch of "Joshua commanding the Sun to stand still." The 'Joshua' attracted, as it deserved to do, very great attention, from the new, and highly imaginative manner in which the sublime incident in Scripture was sought to be embodied. The Princess Charlotte immediately appointed him her "historical landscape painter," and the picture itself was bought (but before exhibition, we believe) by Mr. Collins, the dealer in glass, with whom Mr. Martin was still working when the picture was exhibited. The "Joshua" was followed by "The Bard" from Gray, and by a figure of "Revenge" from Collins's "Ode to the Passions"—neither very successful, and both, in some respects, very injurious to Mr. Martin's interests; as they gave occasion to portrait painters within the Academy, and disappointed historical painters without the walls of the Academy, to observe often and openly that the "Joshua" was more the result of an accident—a happy exception, like the celebrated one speech which gave the name of "Single-speech Hamilton" to a generally dull orator. Nor was it till "The Paphian Bower" appeared in 1822, and the "Belshazzar's Feast" in 1824, that this expression began to be less frequently advanced; and the many, who at last judge for themselves, could see extraordinary and original merit in the works of this great painter. Mr Martin has, in some matters, himself to blame for this false and temporary appreciation of his merits. He did not follow up what he had begun so well; and the architectural drawings which he exhibited at the Academy, of Sir Chas. Cockerell's house in Gloucestershire, were, though clever in themselves, infinitely less than the public expected, and almost demanded at his hands. Had the "Belshazzar," or "The Deluge," or any of those great works for which Mr. Martin has a wide and well-deserved reputation, been produced immediately after the "Joshua," the bitter sayings of envious artists had been unattended to by the public, and Mr. Martin must have been elected into the Royal Academy at the earliest vacancy; whereas, disgusted as he has been with the conduct of his brethren in art, he soon withdrew his name from the list of candidates, and was therefore, by the rules of the Academy, ineligible for election. Mr. Martin, therefore, never can be a member. Nor are we disposed to regret the want of that honorary appendage to his name, of R. A., or which the public hereafter will care so very little. The works of Hogarth, Romney, Blake, Morland, Harlow, Bonington, and Liversege, realise large prices at Christie's, in spite of their names not being graced with academic distinctions; while the appendage of R.A. can do nothing for Mr. Wheatley, R.A.; Mrs. Moser, R.A.; Mrs. Angelica Kauffman, R.A.; or even for Mr. Howard, R.A.

The passage in Scripture which Mr. Martin has sought to embody in so remarkable and imaginative a manner is as follows:—

And the Lord discomfited them before Israel, and slew them with a great slaughter at Gibeon, and chased them along the way that goeth up to Beth-boron, and smote them to Azekah, and unto Makkedah.

And it came to pass, as they fled before Israel, and were in the going down to Beth-boron, that the Lord cast down great stones from Heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died: they were more which died with hailstones than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword.

Then spake Joshua to the Lord, on the day when the Lord delivered up the Amorites before the children of Israel, and he said, in the sight of Israel, Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon; and thou Moon in the valley of Ajalon.

The grandeur of an incident like this has afforded Mr. Martin an ample opportunity for introducing those wonderful effects in nature, and almost, we may say, out of nature, for which he has been so long unrivalled. The scene he has realised is a very noble one—he brings the event as it were before us, and makes us a spectator of what is going on. The picture from which our Engraving is made has been painted within the last half-year for a well-known patron of art; and though it is, as we have observed in a former notice, somewhat too blue, as a whole it is better and more firmly painted than is usual with Mr. Martin's light and facile pencil.

Mr. O'Neil, the painter of "St. Cecilia" and "St. Catherine," is an artist distinguished for his careful drawing, and for his fine feeling of the Scriptural sen-tinent of his art. He seeks to catch, and often successfully, the inspiration of early German and Italian art, and to graft its character upon the careful drawing and grouping of a better and a later school. He is never without that earnest expression, which goes so far in constituting a good picture; and his "St. Cecilia" and his "St. Catherine" are two graceful evidences of the truth of what we state.

"ST. CECILIA."—PAINTED BY H. O'NEIL.

"ST. CATHERINE."—PAINTED BY H. O'NEIL.

"St. Catherine" and "St. Cecilia," the two subjects chosen by Mr. O'Neil (and engraved in our paper of to-day), have long been favourites with the greatest painters. There are two St. Catherines—St. Catherine of Sienna, and Catherine of Alexandria—the former distinguished by the emblems of her espousals, and the latter by her well-known wheel. St. Catherine of Sienna was an enthusiast, who, in a trance or vision, fancied herself miraculously espoused to the Saviour; and the Monarch of the Sabre is therefore represented as kneeling with our early painters. The second St. Catherine, was a noble virgin of Alexandria. Having been instructed in literature and the sciences, she was afterwards converted to Christianity, and by order of the Emperor Maximin she disputed with fifty heathen philosophers, who, being reduced to silence by her arguments and her eloquence, were all to a man converted, and suffered martyrdom in consequence. From this circumstance, and her great learning, she is considered in the Romish Church as the patron saint of philosophy, literature, and such ole. She was afterwards condemned to suffer death, and the Emperor ordered her to be extended between four wheels of iron armed with sharp blades; the wheels, however, were miraculously broken asunder, and, all other means of death being rendered abortive, she was beheaded in the year 310, at the age of eighteen. Of this saint (whose wheel has been commemorated by our firework-makers) the most exquisite realisation of her manner, piety and beauty is the "Altobrandini St. Catherine," an early work of Raffaelle, now in the National Gallery of Great Britain, at the cost of 5000 guineas.

St. Cecilia is known by her harp, and by the several odes written for St. Cecilia's Day, of which Dryden's "Alexander's Feast" is by far the noblest. She has been, and is still, as Mr. O'Neil evinces, a favourite saint with English painters. Sir Joshua Reynolds painted Mrs. Sheridan (the beautiful Maria Linley) as St. Cecilia, accompanying a choir of angels by her side. This equisite picture is now at Rowood, the seat of the Marquis of Lansdowne. A second St. Cecilia, by Sir Joshua, represented Mrs. Billington, the singer, delighting a choir of angels that hung over head in a species of angelic wonder. Mrs. Billington is not over-inspired in the picture; but some of the angels' faces are worthy of the pencil that drew the wreath of cherubs now in the National Gallery.

THE THEATRES.

OPENING OF HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

It was necessary that the company at Her Majesty's theatre should be more powerful this than in any previous year. The following list will prove that such has been the opinion of the management, and that it has fully acted upon this impression. However, we hear that more than one engagement which is to form an important feature in the season's entertainments is not, as yet, completed; and the publication of the programme, therefore, is delayed. It must be promised, that, as regards Mdlle. Lind, the public will be sure to get what is vital for it—that the will contribute to the entertainments of the season. In the meantime it is settled that the theatre will open on the 15th inst.; and the present engagements, numerous, varied, and relating to artists of the highest order of merit, are understood to be the following. Amongst the first must be mentioned Frezz zini, the first prima donna of Italy, whose career, particularly during the last three years, has been one of extraordinary success. Mdlle. Albertl's engagement demands no comment. Her success in England was infallible wherever she presented herself, whether at the theatre or at festivals and concerts. As will be seen in all the French journals, she has effected a still greater triumph in Paris. Mdlle Garzanliga is another great acquisition. She is the rising prima donna of the Grand Opera of Turin, as she has been of every great theatre of Italy. Her face and figure are dramatic, her voice powerful and extensive, her style impassioned and impressive.—Another prima donna engaged, Mdlle Parodi, is the pupil of Pasta. This pre-eminent lyrical actress took her under her own instruction when not her voice was formed, and, as a recreation and "labour of love," bestowed five years in educating her musically and dramatically for the stage.—Mdlle. Giuliar, the fourth prima donna, already known as a soprano, will appear in the voice of very extensive register, a good musician, an energetic actress as well as singer; whose success, particularly in Verdi's operas, has always commanded applause.—Casso-lini, every instance expected, is a young comedia who is to present a portrait at La Scala, and created a great sensation. She is young, and the tones of her voice are fresh, powerful, and full of feeling. Several efficient comprimarie are engaged, but amongst them we can only notice Mdlle. Fallonini.

As regards tenors, such engagements have been made as to ensure the greatest efficiency in the various and totally opposed styles of Cimarosa and Rossini, of Meyerbeer and Verdi. That general favourite, Gardoni, returns from St. Petersburgh with new laurels. Calzolari, one of the best Rossinian tenori of Italy, although still young, with the classical taste, the elegant phrasing, and refined taste of the ancient school of his country, is secured. For the more dramatic style of the more recent composers, M. Bordas has been secured. He has studied in the best schools of Italy, and supports with his voice the parts which he undertakes. Mdlle. Lablache, daughter of the celebrated basso, will be supported by several new and accomplished instrumentalists, so that the orchestra will be complete and numerous, and at the same time select.

The Chorus has been classified, and new and fresh voices added.

Mr. Lumley, who has given up so many other branches of his science to the important office of Musical Conductor, and who has acquired all that he could possibly add to his original talent in this direction, namely experience, will once more resume the bâton this year.

The choruses will be under the direction of Felix Ronconi, the brother of the celebrated baritone, and himself a well-known composer, a professor of the Italian Conservatoire. The public will learn with pleasure that the "Clemenza di Tito" of Mozart will be revived under most favorable circumstances. "Il Matrimonio Segreto" will be produced once more, by Cimarosa, for the pleasure of the &. Masaniello has been taken to put on the stage, with a totally new mise en scène, the sublime work of Mozart, "Don Giovanni." Donna Anna is the part in which Frezzolini displays the full range of her great Italian as well as vocal talents; and Zerlina will find a remarkable representative in Adonni. This great prima donna will likewise perform the new part which has recently matured the laurels of Mdlle. Grisi in Paris—Amelia in the "Gazza Ladra," an opera in which she will be supported by Lablache and the other great artistes of the troupe.

The choreographic department has not been neglected. Carlotta Grisi returns, and will begin the season. The popular favourite Rosati has likewise arrived; and Mdlle. Marie Taglioni, who has attained the summit of success on the Italian boards, is likewise about engaged in preparing for the season, with Paul Taglioni, Petit Stephan, Louis D'Or, and other dancers. Theresoni and Assandini have returned with Camporese and Julienne, two young ladies who have been, from infancy, thrown up into accomplished dancers. Amongst the other additions to the fair dancers of the season, there are two accomplished danseuses from Italy, their names Negri and Tommasini. The ensembles of several new ballets are being prepared—one is entitled the "Etoiles Animés;" another is on the subject of the "Vampire;" another is on the subject of the "Somnambula" from the ballet of notes; and the Metro del Ballet takes for his subject the celebrated and highly interesting opera in vogue in Paris. But another ballet of a still more interesting character is in preparation, which, by the aid of new inventions and new effects, it is hoped, will form a new era in the choreographic art.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The opening of this lyric establishment, announced for this evening (March 10), has been postponed until next Thursday (March 15). Although the salle en scène was ready, so as to be in a considerable time in preparation, of "Masaniello" was quite ready, so as to be in a condition to be acted in the week, that Mr. Costa, the musical director, did not deem it prudent to venture upon the first representation of such a complicated work, with the few rehearsals he was enabled to accomplish; and therefore deferred the performance.

The cast of "Masaniello" will be as follows:—Elvira, Madame Doras Gras, who succeeded Madame Damoreau in that part at the Académie Royale, Paris; Fenella (the dumb girl of Portici) will be sustained by the celebrated pantomimist and danseuse Mdlle Pauline Leroux, who for many years was its representative in Paris; [illegible] Taglioni, Perrot, Carlotta Grisi, and Duvernay; Duprez as Alfonso; Ronconi as Selva; Lablache as Pietro; and the minor parts in the opera. There are four basses—Pietro Massol; Borilla, Mr. Tommy, from the San Carlo, at Naples; Moreno, Signor Talamo; and Selva, Signor Belloche. The "Cavatina" (Mdlle. Leroux) "Del mio dolce," the three characteristic dances fu the opera, will be executed by Mdlle. Wautnier, Mdlle. Louise Taglioni, M. Alexandre, and a complete corps de ballet.

Rumour affirms that Grisi and Mario have prepared some beautiful scenery, particularly a sea shore view in the second act the market-place in Naples; and the last scene, depicting the eruption of Mount Vesuvius, quite a novelty in effect.

The alterations in the interior have been completed; the additional stalls on each side of the third tier, being a continuation of the line of private boxes, will be a great convenience; and the continuation of the line of private boxes on the second tier, instead of its being broken by box stalls, will add to the architectural beauty of the house, besides the advantage gained of increased circulation of air, by the passage round the upper refreshment saloon being thrown open. One important alteration will be certain to be welcomed by the ladies, and that is the lowering of the partitions of each of the boxes, thus affording to the occupants of the stalls and pit a better view of the fair occupants of the private boxes. In the curtains of the boxes, and in the decorative designs on their facades, some changes and improvements have been made. No expense seems to have been spared to make the ameliorations, under the superintendence of Mr. F. Gye, in the aspect of the house, and for the convenience of the subscribers and patrons, suggested by the experience of the two former seasons.

PRINCESS'.

Mr. George Linley's new opera of "Francesca Doria; or, The Bandit of the Abruzzi," contains some pretty music, which might have been wedded to a more interesting libretto than that supplied by his coadjutor, Mr. Val Morris, who, however, has only furnished the drama, Mr. Linley being the poet as well as the composer. The first title would indicate a drama of lofty pretensions; but the explanatory one indicates at once its true character—very melodramatic and very Surrey-ish. There is a bandit noble, a persecuted Count, a wandering ward (Francesca), a heroic peasantess, and a sentimental monk. There is a refuge in the mountains, and there is a besieged castle; the machinations of guilt are defeat-d, and virtue is rewarded, enabling the prima donna to warble her finale after she has acquired the hand of the tender lover, the ruthless basso bandit affording occasion by suicide to a concert's inquest in the Abruzzi.

We wish Mr. Linley had to treat a better story; he has a lyric, melodious vein of imagery, and has well adapted his airs to Miss Poole, Mr. Allen, Mr. Weiss, and Herr Meigis, as also to the dilettante, Miss Lanza, who was the heroine of the opera—a promising acquisition to our lyric theatres. She is the daughter of Lanza, a famed professor of singing, at the period of Miss Stephens (now the Dowager Countess of Essex) as his pupil. Miss Poole sang exquisitely her ballads "Far de I roam" and "I hope just like an owl"—which will be popular.

With the exception of the appearance of a very clever little boy at ASTLEY'S, named Hernandez, whose feats as a rider, executed without any failure or hesitation, will make his seniors beatir themselves, if not to beat, at all events to equal him, there has been no novelty in the theatrical world. This is accounted for by the number of new pieces produced last week, all of which may be considered, in a measure, successful. With the exception of the HAYMARKET, at which the performances of Messrs. Wallack and Charles Kean are still highly attractive, every theatre of note brought out some novelty in the course of the week—a circumstance which has not occurred for some time.

Meanwhile, activity still prevails behind the curtain. A drama by the author of the "Harvest Home" is in preparation at the ADELPHI. It is to be called "The Iron Pickers," and will embrace the entire strength of the company. A nautical drama is underlined at the SURREY; and some new faces are in rehearsal at the Lyceum and Haymarket.

Amongst the reports flying about in the dramatic circles, is one that Mrs. Nesbitt and Mr. Farren have left the Olympic, at the expiration of the present management. We merely give this as we hear it, without vouching for its authenticity, and placing no in confidence in it than in the various other rumours now running wild about the theatres. That M. Jullien would again beehive the lease of DRURY LANE that Mr. Kean was in partnership with Mr. Webster at the HAYMARKET—that Mr. Watts and the Keeleys were about to take the reins at the LYCEUM—and that the management of the SURREY was again going to change hands.

It is also said that Mr. Flexmore, the clever clown at the PRINCESS', is about to marry Mdlle. Astrid, who appeared lately in the ballet at that theatre some time ago, and is the daughter of the Aurlot at the Cirque Nationale. The present successful pantomime of "Bluff King Hal" is to be reproduced at Paris.

Mr. T. P. COOKE was the only survivor of the ship to which he belonged in the battle of St. Vincent, to claim the medal. He is enjoying excellent health at present, looking well, and ready to fight six land-lubbers, defend any number of impertinent females, or bowse his "tot'sail" to the maintop tarrail, at the shortest notice. May it be long before his timbers are shivered, or we see Blue Peter flying at the fore of his ill-boat; for we feel that with him the glory of the British seaman will depart

COLOSSEUM.—The Cyclorama continues very attractive. Among the numerous visitors this week were the following distinguished parties: the Earl Waldegrave, Lord Feversham, Lady Anne Stewart, Lady Bateman and party, Earl and Countess of Harrowby, Lady M'Alpine, Bishop of Madras, Lady Montagu, Lady Butler, Lady Vernon, Lady Croft, &c.

It is lamentable to see the state into which one of the finest sites in London fir a theatre, or exhibition—and the only one—has been suffered to fall. The place is a perfect swamp; the shrubs destroyed; and the idlers now amuse themselves, when nobody is looking, by breaking off and carrying away the iron railings. It is altogether shut and dreary sight, right in the centre of the metropolis, as could well be found.

MUSIC.

CHORAL HARMONISTS.—At the fifth meeting, on Monday, the selection comprised Hummel's Mass No. 3; Weber's cantata "Oh, Praise the Lord;" a madrigal by Donata (1568), "All ye who music love;" Professor Walmesley's Installation Ode, and gleanings from Spohr's "Faust" and MOZART'S "Clemenza di Tito."

MR. W. SLEBNDALE BENNETT.—The second performance of classical pianoforte music took place on Tuesday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The scheme opened with Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor (op. 66) for piano (Mr. W. S Bennett), violin (Sainton), and violoncello (M. Rousselot), very finely executed. The three remaining pieces were selected exclusively from the works of Mr. Bennett:—"The Lake," "The Millstream," and "The Fountain," delightfully; the latter was encored. The poetic fancy in these charming compositions was very remarkable. Beethoven's Sonata (op. 33), for piano and violin, was also played very closely played by Messrs. Bennet and Sainton; and the selection of the songs without words of Mendelssohn was finely played by Mr. Bennett. There was a very full attendance. This classical treat. Miss A. Williams sang Haydn's canzonet of "Recollection;" and, with her sister, Miss M. Williams, gave two sacred duets, composed by Mr. Bennett, one of which, from Ecclesiastes, chapter 12, v. 1, "Remember now thy Creator" was encored twice. The last concert will be on Tuesday, the 27th inst.

LONDON WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—The Sixteenth Concert at Exeter Hall was well attended; the vocalists were Mdlle. Nissen, Mrs A. Newton, Masses Lucombe, A. and M. Williams, Poe e, Annly Taylor, Mr. Stna Reeves, Mr. T. Williams, Mr. Binge, Mr. Land, and Mr. Lindenburg; and the instrumentalists Mr. Don Giovanni" fantasia, his study in A minor, and an Andante Cantabile.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—This morning will be the rehearsal for the first Philharmonic Concert, which will be given on Monday next at the Hanover square Rooms; the programme comprises Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, a violin concerto, by Sainton, an overture by Weber, and Mendelssohn's "Athalie." Mdlle. Lind sang on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday at concerts at Wakefield, Nottingham, and Sheffield; and on Monday night she will sing at Cambridge. Mr. Lucas will commence his Musical Evenings next Wednesday.—On Friday will be the third and last performance this season, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, of Handel's "Israel in Egypt," conducted by Costa; and on the same evening, the Amateur Musical Society will have their first concert.—On Thursday night will be the opening of the Royal Italian Opera.—The Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians, to be celebrated on the 22d, at the Freemasons' Hall, is expected to be very brilliant this year.—Mr. Hullah's popular lectures, &c. are to be followed by a new entertainment written by Albert Smith, in which he will not only sing as a basso comico, but will introd uce sentimental ballads.—Ernest, the celebrated violinist, is daily expected in town for the season.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.—Rossini's "Stabat Mater" has been performed at the Italian Opera, in Paris, by Madame Castellan, Madame Ronconi, Mdlle. Alboni, Signori Ronconi, Bartolini, and Morelli. Teresa Milanollo performed on the violin at the concert with the greatest success. Lablache reappeared last Saturday in Don Magnifico in the "Cenerentola," and was hea tily greeted. Mdlle. Merle, the contralto, has left Paris for Bordeaux, Marseilles and Nice, and a host of provincial towns. The Italian Opera season has terminated at St. Petersburgh; Gardoni and Coletti have left to join her Majesty's Theatre; Mdlle. Angri, Mdlle. Corbari, Lavia, Salvi, Tagliafico, and Lamberti have departed to join the Royal Italian Opera, in London.—A monument to the memory of Habeneck is to be erected by subscription.—Alexandre Dumas, the celebrated professor of chemistry, and essential oils, died at Brunswick on the 22nd of February.—A new opera, called "Les Derrières Armes de Richelieu," has been produced at Toulouse with success. M. Aymar de Lacroix d'Aquila is the name of the composer.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the month of February was unusually fine. The temperature was very high for the season, the means exceeded that of the average on almost every day, and at times to a large amount: the average of these excesses till the 11th day was 10½°; the greatest was 14½°, on the 10th, and the average for the month was 7°. The highest temperature was 57½°, on the 18th; the lowest was 22° on the 13th, and the mean for the month was 42°5. The reading of the barometer was above 30 inches till the 20th. The highest corrected reading, at the level of the sea, was 30·56 inches, on the 11th; and the lowest was 29·34 inches, on the 28th. These readings represent the true height of the column of mercury balanced by the atmosphere. The greatest range of reading in the 11th was greater than any reading since January, 1845; the reading at the apartments of the Royal Society at this time was 30·341 in. at the height of 8 feet above the mean level of the sea; and there is no other instance recorded in the "Philosophical Transactions" of a reading so high as 30·8 in., from the commencement of the series in 1774. The reading on Sunday, February 11, was, therefore, very unusual: the level of the sea was 30·46 in., and at Stonyhurst College, near Blackburn, the reading of the barometer was 30·455 in., as recorded by the Rev. A. Weld; the height of the cistern of the barometer is 381 feet above the level of the sea, and this value reduced to that level gives 30·90 in. nearly. From all parts of the country I find the readings when reduced to the sea level to show the same reading. As a difference of about 8 feet in elevation on this day caused a difference of reading of 0·1 in. in the barometer, if such is allowed according to the height of the place above the level of the sea, using 30·46 in. as the reading at that level, the numbers which should have been shown by a barometer at that place will be indicated; the difference between the deduced and the observed values will be the error of the instrument at that part of the scale.

The direction of the wind during the month was mostly S.W., from which quarter there was a very heavy gale on the last day.

The sky was mostly clear about the middle of the month, and cloudy at other times.

The temperature of evaporation was 41°; of the dew point was 38°: and rain fell to the depth of two inches.

Blackheath, March 4, 1849. JAMES GLAISHER.

COUNTRY NEWS.

A BURGLAR SHOT DEAD.—On Thursday morning (last week), the inhabitants of Littlebury, Chesterford, Saffron Walden, and the neighbourhood, in Essex, were excited to a remarkable degree, by a report that a desperate attempt at burglary had been made at a lone farm-house, about two miles from the Chesterford station, and that one of the burglars had been shot dead by the owner of the premises. This report upon investigation turned out to be strictly correct. The premises (Strethall Hall) upon which the burglary was committed constitute the residence of Mr. Nehemiah Perry, an eminent and respectable owner and occupier. They are situate in the parish o Strethall, the whole of which is occupied by Mr. Perry, part of it being his own property, and part that of the Archdeaconry of Durham. The house is an old-fashioned building upon a hill near the church, and at some distance from any other house or cottage, and the whole population of the village does not exceed twenty per ons. The only individuals in the house were Mr Perry himself (an old man above 60), his brother, Mr. Thomas Perry, and one female domestic. The inquest upon the body of the robber was held on Saturday morning at the Hall, when the evidence adduced showed that Mr N. Perry heard the robbers enter, they making a great noise by knocking down a plate-rack in front of the window, by which they got in, after forcing out an iron bar. They then forced the door of the room, thus gaining access to a short passage which led to the staircase, trending heavily and quick, apparently to impose upon the inmates as to their number. The following dreadful imprecations and horrible threats on hearing the Messrs. Perry take the alarm. There is a bed-room door on each side of the landing at the top of the staircase, right and left, in each of which rooms slept one of the brothers. Upon rob.n hearing Mr. N. Perry call his brother, and made their way to the stairs quickly, though cautious in their movements, and before Mr. T. Perry could get to his door for the purpose of firing, his brother had shot the robber. Messrs. Perry exclaimed loudly, "There's one of them all right." There is no doubt that the self-possession exhibited by these gentlemen, as well as the death of the leading scoundrel, quite terrified the band, and they made their retreat in the other quietly dragging the body to the back room into which they first effected an entrance. Messrs. Perry kept their positions from the commencement of the attack, about quarter to 4 A.M. till five, when several of their friends came to work. Two or three were called to the back door, when Mr. N. Perry descended, and found the body of the man in the hall, he shot the back door and the sash of the window broken away, by which the men had made their entrance and escape. The deceased, when found, had a piece of hop or nut sack over his face, fashioned into a mask. There were no marks under the window where the entry was made. Outside the window the track of four or five persons was visible in the snow, but they were not distinguishable from each other, as the feet had evidently been muffled. Superintendent Clark, of the Essex police, searched the dead robber, and found 13s. 6d. in money, a meerschaum pipe, a pair of pliers, and a pocket knife. He has seen the man frequently, and he saw him on to take the reins at the Princess'—and that the management of the SURREY was again going to change hands.

It is also said that Mr Flexmore, the clever clown at the PRINCESS', is about to marry Mdlle Astrid, who appeared lately in the ballet at that theatre some time ago, and is the daughter of the Aurlot at the Cirque Nationale. The present successful pantomime of "Bluff King Hal" is to be reproduced at Paris.

Mr. T. P. COOKE was the only survivor of the ship to which he belonged in the battle of St. Vincent, to claim the medal. He is enjoying excellent health at present, looking well, and ready to fight six land-lubbers, defend any number of impertinent females, or bowse his "tot'sail" to the maintop tarrail, at the shortest notice. May it be long before his timbers are shivered, or we see Blue Peter flying at the fore of his ill-boat; for we feel that with him the glory of the British seaman will depart

COLOSSEUM.—The Cyclorama continues very attractive. Among the numerous visitors this week were the following distinguished parties: the Earl Waldegrave, Lord Feversham, Lady Anne Stewart, Lady Bateman and party, Earl and Countess of Harrowby, Lady M'Alpine, Bishop of Madras, Lady Montagu, Lady Butler, Lady Vernon, Lady Croft, &c.

It is lamentable to see the state into which one of the finest sites in London for a theatre, or exhibition—and the only one—has been suffered to fall. The place is a perfect swamp; the shrubs destroyed; and the idlers now amuse themselves, when nobody is looking, by breaking off and carrying away the iron railings. It is altogether shut and dreary sight, right in the centre of the metropolis, as could well be found.

MUSIC.

CHORAL HARMONISTS.—At the fifth meeting, on Monday, the selection comprised Hummel's Mass No. 3; Weber's cantata "Oh, Praise the Lord;" a madrigal by Donata (1568), "All ye who music love;" Professor Walmesley's Installation Ode, and gleanings from Spohr's "Faust" and MOZART'S "Clemenza di Tito."

MR. W. SLEBNDALE BENNETT.—The second performance of classical pianoforte music took place on Tuesday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The scheme opened with Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor (op. 66) for piano (Mr. W. S Bennett), violin (Sainton), and violoncello (M. Rousselot), very finely executed. The three remaining pieces were selected exclusively from the works of Mr. Bennett:—"The Lake," "The Millstream," and "The Fountain," delightfully; the latter was encored. The poetic fancy in these charming compositions was very remarkable. Beethoven's Sonata (op. 33), for piano and violin, was also played very closely played by Messrs. Bennet and Sainton; and the selection of the songs without words of Mendelssohn was finely played by Mr. Bennett. There was a very full attendance. This classical treat. Miss A. Williams sang Haydn's canzonet of "Recollection;" and, with her sister, Miss M. Williams, gave two sacred duets, composed by Mr. Bennett, one of which, from Ecclesiastes, chapter 12, v. 1, "Remember now thy Creator" was encored twice. The last concert will be on Tuesday, the 27th inst.

LONDON WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—The Sixteenth Concert at Exeter Hall was well attended; the vocalists were Mdlle. Nissen, Mrs A. Newton, Masses Lucombe, A. and M. Williams, Poe e, Annly Taylor, Mr. Stna Reeves, Mr. T. Williams, Mr. Binge, Mr. Land, and Mr. Lindenburg; and the instrumentalists Mr. Don Giovanni" fantasia, his study in A minor, and an Andante Cantabile.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—This morning will be the rehearsal for the first Philharmonic Concert, which will be given on Monday next at the Hanover square Rooms; the programme comprises Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, a violin concerto, by Sainton, an overture by Weber, and Mendelssohn's "Athalie." Mdlle. Lind sang on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday at concerts at Wakefield, Nottingham, and Sheffield; and on Monday night she will sing at Cambridge. Mr. Lucas will commence his Musical Evenings next Wednesday.—On Friday will be the third and last performance this season, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, of Handel's "Israel in Egypt," conducted by Costa; and on the same evening, the Amateur Musical Society will have their first concert.—On Thursday night will be the opening of the Royal Italian Opera.—The Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians, to be celebrated on the 22d, at the Freemasons' Hall, is expected to be very brilliant this year.—Mr. Hullah's popular lectures, &c. are to be followed by a new entertainment written by Albert Smith, in which he will not only sing as a basso comico, but will introd uce sentimental ballads.—Ernest, the celebrated violinist, is daily expected in town for the season.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.—Rossini's "Stabat Mater" has been performed at the Italian Opera, in Paris, by Madame Castellan, Madame Ronconi, Mdlle. Alboni, Signori Ronconi, Bartolini, and Morelli. Teresa Milanollo performed on the violin at the concert with the greatest success. Lablache reappeared last Saturday in Don Magnifico in the "Cenerentola," and was hea tily greeted. Mdlle. Merle, the contralto, has left Paris for Bordeaux, Marseilles and Nice, and a host of provincial towns. The Italian Opera season has terminated at St. Petersburgh; Gardoni and Coletti have left to join her Majesty's Theatre; Mdlle. Angri, Mdlle. Corbari, Lavia, Salvi, Tagliafico, and Lamberti have departed to join the Royal Italian Opera, in London.—A monument to the memory of Habeneck is to be erected by subscription.—Alexandre Dumas, the celebrated professor of chemistry, and essential oils, died at Brunswick on the 22nd of February.—A new opera, called "Les Derrières Armes de Richelieu," has been produced at Toulouse with success. M. Aymar de Lacroix d'Aquila is the name of the composer.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the month of February was unusually fine. The temperature was very high for the season, the means exceeded that of the average on almost every day, and at times to a large amount: the average of these excesses till the 11th day was 10½°; the greatest was 14½°, on the 10th, and the average for the month was 7°. The highest temperature was 57½°, on the 18th; the lowest was 22° on the 13th, and the mean for the month was 42°5. The reading of the barometer was above 30 inches till the 20th. The highest corrected reading, at the level of the sea, was 30·56 inches, on the 11th; and the lowest was 29·34 inches, on the 28th. These readings represent the true height of the column of mercury balanced by the atmosphere. The greatest range of reading in the 11th was greater than any reading since January, 1845; the reading at the apartments of the Royal Society at this time was 30·341 in. at the height of 8 feet above the mean level of the sea; and there is no other instance recorded in the "Philosophical Transactions" of a reading so high as 30·8 in., from the commencement of the series in 1774. The reading on Sunday, February 11, was, therefore, very unusual: the level of the sea was 30·46 in., and at Stonyhurst College, near Blackburn, the reading of the barometer was 30·455 in., as recorded by the Rev. A. Weld; the height of the cistern of the barometer is 381 feet above the level of the sea, and this value reduced to that level gives 30·90 in. nearly. From all parts of the country I find the readings when reduced to the sea level to show the same reading. As a difference of about 8 feet in elevation on this day caused a difference of reading of 0·1 in. in the barometer, if such is allowed according to the height of the place above the level of the sea, using 30·46 in. as the reading at that level, the numbers which should have been shown by a barometer at that place will be indicated; the difference between the deduced and the observed values will be the error of the instrument at that part of the scale.

The direction of the wind during the month was mostly S.W., from which quarter there was a very heavy gale on the last day.

The sky was mostly clear about the middle of the month, and cloudy at other times.

The temperature of evaporation was 41°; of the dew point was 38°: and rain fell to the depth of two inches.

Blackheath, March 4, 1849. JAMES GLAISHER.

COUNTRY NEWS.

A BURGLAR SHOT DEAD.—On Thursday morning (last week), the inhabitants of Littlebury, Chesterford, Saffron Walden, and the neighbourhood, in Essex, were excited to a remarkable degree, by a report that a desperate attempt at burglary had been made at a lone farm-house, about two miles from the Chesterford station, and that one of the burglars had been shot dead by the owner of the premises. This report upon investigation turned out to be strictly correct. The premises (Strethall Hall) upon which the burglary was committed constitute the residence of Mr. Nehemiah Perry, an eminent and respectable owner and occupier. They are situate in the parish o Strethall, the whole of which is occupied by Mr. Perry, part of it being his own property, and part that of the Archdeaconry of Durham. The house is an old-fashioned building upon a hill near the church, and at some distance from any other house or cottage, and the whole population of the village does not exceed twenty per ons. The only individuals in the house were Mr Perry himself (an old man above 60), his brother, Mr. Thomas Perry, and one female domestic. The inquest upon the body of the robber was held on Saturday morning at the Hall, when the evidence adduced showed that Mr N. Perry heard the robbers enter, they making a great noise by knocking down a plate-rack in front of the window, by which they got in, after forcing out an iron bar. They then forced the door of the room, thus gaining access to a short passage which led to the staircase, trending heavily and quick, apparently to impose upon the inmates as to their number. The following dreadful imprecations and horrible threats on hearing the Messrs. Perry take the alarm. There is a bed-room door on each side of the landing at the top of the staircase, right and left, in each of which rooms slept one of the brothers. Upon rob.n hearing Mr. N. Perry call his brother, and made their way to the stairs quickly, though cautious in their movements, and before Mr. T. Perry could get to his door for the purpose of firing, his brother had shot the robber. Messrs. Perry exclaimed loudly, "There's one of them all right." There is no doubt that the self-possession exhibited by these gentlemen, as well as the death of the leading scoundrel, quite terrified the band, and they made their retreat in the other quietly dragging the body to the back room into which they first effected an entrance. Messrs. Perry kept their positions from the commencement of the attack, about quarter to 4 A.M. till five, when several of their friends came to work. Two or three were called to the back door, when Mr. N. Perry descended, and found the body of the man in the hall, he shot the back door and the sash of the window broken away, by which the men had made their entrance and escape. The deceased, when found, had a piece of hop or nut sack over his face, fashioned into a mask. There were no marks under the window where the entry was made. Outside the window the track of four or five persons was visible in the snow, but they were not distinguishable from each other, as the feet had evidently been muffled. Superintendent Clark, of the Essex police, searched the dead robber, and found 13s. 6d. in money, a meerschaum pipe, a pair of pliers, and a pocket knife. He has seen the man frequently, and he saw him on to take the reins at the Princess'—and that the management of the SURREY was again going to change hands.

It is also said that Mr Flexmore, the clever clown at the PRINCESS', is about to marry Mdlle Astrid, who appeared lately in the ballet at that theatre some time ago, and is the daughter of the Aurlot at the Cirque Nationale. The present successful pantomime of "Bluff King Hal" is to be reproduced at Paris.

Mr. T. P. COOKE was the only survivor of the ship to which he belonged in the battle of St. Vincent, to claim the medal. He is enjoying excellent health at present, looking well, and ready to fight six land-lubbers, defend any number of impertinent females, or bowse his "tot'sail" to the maintop tarrail, at the shortest notice. May it be long before his timbers are shivered, or we see Blue Peter flying at the fore of his ill-boat; for we feel that with him the glory of the British seaman will depart

COLOSSEUM.—The Cyclorama continues very attractive. Among the numerous visitors this week were the following distinguished parties: the Earl Waldegrave, Lord Feversham, Lady Anne Stewart, Lady Bateman and party, Earl and Countess of Harrowby, Lady M'Alpine, Bishop of Madras, Lady Montagu, Lady Butler, Lady Vernon, Lady Croft, &c.

It is lamentable to see the state into which one of the finest sites in London for a theatre, or exhibition—and the only one—has been suffered to fall. The place is a perfect swamp; the shrubs destroyed; and the idlers now amuse themselves, when nobody is looking, by breaking off and carrying away the iron railings. It is altogether shut and dreary sight, right in the centre of the metropolis, as could well be found.

MUSIC.

CHORAL HARMONISTS.—At the fifth meeting, on Monday, the selection comprised Hummel's Mass No. 3; Weber's cantata "Oh, Praise the Lord;" a madrigal by Donata (1568), "All ye who music love;" Professor Walmesley's Installation Ode, and gleanings from Spohr's "Faust" and MOZART'S "Clemenza di Tito."

MR. W. SLEBNDALE BENNETT.—The second performance of classical pianoforte music took place on Tuesday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The scheme opened with Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor (op. 66) for piano (Mr. W. S Bennett), violin (Sainton), and violoncello (M. Rousselot), very finely executed. The three remaining pieces were selected exclusively from the works of Mr. Bennett:—"The Lake," "The Millstream," and "The Fountain," delightfully; the latter was encored. The poetic fancy in these charming compositions was very remarkable. Beethoven's Sonata (op. 33), for piano and violin, was also played very closely played by Messrs. Bennet and Sainton; and the selection of the songs without words of Mendelssohn was finely played by Mr. Bennett. There was a very full attendance. This classical treat. Miss A. Williams sang Haydn's canzonet of "Recollection;" and, with her sister, Miss M. Williams, gave two sacred duets, composed by Mr. Bennett, one of which, from Ecclesiastes, chapter 12, v. 1, "Remember now thy Creator" was encored twice. The last concert will be on Tuesday, the 27th inst.

LONDON WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—The Sixteenth Concert at Exeter Hall was well attended; the vocalists were Mdlle. Nissen, Mrs A. Newton, Masses Lucombe, A. and M. Williams, Poe e, Annly Taylor, Mr. Stna Reeves, Mr. T. Williams, Mr. Binge, Mr. Land, and Mr. Lindenburg; and the instrumentalists Mr. Don Giovanni" fantasia, his study in A minor, and an Andante Cantabile.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—This morning will be the rehearsal for the first Philharmonic Concert, which will be given on Monday next at the Hanover square Rooms; the programme comprises Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, a violin concerto, by Sainton, an overture by Weber, and Mendelssohn's "Athalie." Mdlle. Lind sang on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday at concerts at Wakefield, Nottingham, and Sheffield; and on Monday night she will sing at Cambridge. Mr. Lucas will commence his Musical Evenings next Wednesday.—On Friday will be the third and last performance this season, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, of Handel's "Israel in Egypt," conducted by Costa; and on the same evening, the Amateur Musical Society will have their first concert.—On Thursday night will be the opening of the Royal Italian Opera.—The Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians, to be celebrated on the 22d, at the Freemasons' Hall, is expected to be very brilliant this year.—Mr. Hullah's popular lectures, &c. are to be followed by a new entertainment written by Albert Smith, in which he will not only sing as a basso comico, but will introd uce sentimental ballads.—Ernest, the celebrated violinist, is daily expected in town for the season.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.—Rossini's "Stabat Mater" has been performed at the Italian Opera, in Paris, by Madame Castellan, Madame Ronconi, Mdlle. Alboni, Signori Ronconi, Bartolini, and Morelli. Teresa Milanollo performed on the violin at the concert with the greatest success. Lablache reappeared last Saturday in Don Magnifico in the "Cenerentola," and was hea tily greeted. Mdlle. Merle, the contralto, has left Paris for Bordeaux, Marseilles and Nice, and a host of provincial towns. The Italian Opera season has terminated at St. Petersburgh; Gardoni and Coletti have left to join her Majesty's Theatre; Mdlle. Angri, Mdlle. Corbari, Lavia, Salvi, Tagliafico, and Lamberti have departed to join the Royal Italian Opera, in London.—A monument to the memory of Habeneck is to be erected by subscription.—Alexandre Dumas, the celebrated professor of chemistry, and essential oils, died at Brunswick on the 22nd of February.—A new opera, called "Les Derrières Armes de Richelieu," has been produced at Toulouse with success. M. Aymar de Lacroix d'Aquila is the name of the composer.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the month of February was unusually fine. The temperature was very high for the season, the means exceeded that of the average on almost every day, and at times to a large amount: the average of these excesses till the 11th day was 10½°; the greatest was 14½°, on the 10th, and the average for the month was 7°. The highest temperature was 57½°, on the 18th; the lowest was 22° on the 13th, and the mean for the month was 42°5. The reading of the barometer was above 30 inches till the 20th. The highest corrected reading, at the level of the sea, was 30·56 inches, on Justice Coleridge, were passengers in the mail train, having that afternoon finished the assizes at Durham, and were on their way to York. They alighted, and minutely examined the scene of the disaster.

AFFECTING FATAL ACCIDENT.—On the afternoon of Monday last a party of gentlemen, who had been staying at the Eglinton Arms Hotel in Ardrossan (Scotland), went in a boat to the Horse Island on a shooting excursion, and commenced firing at a wooden part of the Beacon Tower as a mark, having previously given strict injunctions to a few boys that accompanied them to keep at a distance; but unfortunately, one of them clandestinely clambered into the tower through a window (out of the view of the gentlemen), the door being locked, and a ball on each side of his head, through a two-inch piece of timber. The melancholy affair was not known until the whole company was about to embark, when the boy being missed, led to a search, which ended in the poor lad's being wounded in the lower. Notwithstanding prompt medical attendance being obtained, he survived only till one o'clock next morning. The deceased was named Robertson, aged 14 years, and son of Mr Robertson, grocer, Irvine.

A YACHT ASHORE.—The splendid brig-rigged yacht, Arienis, Captain Roberts, went on shore during the storm, on Wednesday morning week, on a reef of rocks almost under the Plymouth Citadel. She arrived on Sunday from Port Vendres, Spain. The violence of the gale laid her almost broad-side with the beach, the sea making a clear breach over her. The bulwarks of the port-side were entirely gone. Several articles of furniture were saved, amongst which was a valuable piano, wardrobe, &c. She was the property of Alfred B. Richards, Esq., of London, who is a member of the Royal-Western and Royal Thames Clubs. The yacht, and her fittings, &c., are said to have been worth £10,000

GOSHAWK SHOT.—A fine specimen of this genus of the falcon family was shot, on Monday last, in a rookery near Hyde House, the residence of James Yates, Esq., Stanton, Westmoreland, where it had created no small uproar and alarm among the peaceful clerical-looking tenants of the trees, and, as an incorrigible pauster—whom we threatened with exposure for the offence—remarked, not without cause. This bird, in its natural state, is now rare in England. It was anciently highly valued by falconers. The present specimen had probably been domesticated, as one of the wings had been clipped.

SINGULAR MODE OF TRYING A PISTOL.—A few days ago, a gentleman at Motherby, in Westmoreland, who had purchased a new pistol, proceeded to prove the same in the following extraordinary manner:—First he put into the barrel, which was eight inches long, a pipe head full of powder, then a little shot, then some wadding, then a couple of bullets, then a little more wadding, then some pieces of window lead, and thus, on the top of all, a thick piece of wadding. He then, for safety, covered himself over in the dry litter of a farmer's dunghill, which done, he put his hand through the superincumbent straw, or litter, pulled the trigger, and the pistol flew into a thousand pieces; though, strange to say, the man did not snatch the slightest injury.

FIVE HUNDRED POUNDS LOST.—On Monday night, Mr. Meadows, of Islington, a cattle-dealer, was returning from London, and went into the Cambridge refreshment room, and when he left there his money was safe; on his arrival at home, however, he missed it; but by what means he scarcely knew. In the same pocket with his money was a pocket-handkerchief, and it is supposed that when he drew this from his pocket the purse was drawn out and lost on some part of the line. Cambridge Advertiser.

IRELAND.

GENERAL MOVEMENT AGAINST THE RATE IN AID.

Leinster, as well as Ulster, is in full and vigorous movement, and the rate in aid is denounced as heartily throughout the eastern as in the northern counties. Numerous meetings have been held in both provinces, to protest and petition against the measure, and the grandest of the Saxon Dublin Union adopted, unanimously, the form of petition against the rate in aid which had been forwarded by the committee of Irish members to the Irish boards of guardians.

The Leinster and other grand juries in Leinster have adopted petitions against the threatened impost. The High Sheriff of Carlow has convened that county, upon a requisition signed by many of the gentry and rate-payers. In fact, Leinster is all alive in opposition against the rate; but still no substitute is suggested, unless an Imperial tax. In Ulster it is different, inasmuch as an income tax has been broached at some meetings, in preference to the rate in aid. At a meeting in Strabane, Lord Claud Hamilton, member for Tyrone, said:—"Though he might incur some odium for the enunciation of his views on this matter, he must say he was convinced that they should make a proposition recommending the levy of an income and property tax on Ireland."

The High Sheriff of Monaghan has also convened that county, on a requisition signed by Lord Rossmore, Right Hon. E. Lucas, formerly Under-Secretary for Ireland, and by many of the gentry.

The Banner of Ulster gives a terrible account of the state of excitement, amounting to "disaffection," caused by the Government schemes, in the northern province.

LIBERATION OF STATE PRISONERS.—The following letter has been addressed to the Governor of Kilmainham Prison, in reference to the admission to bail of the state prisoners in his custody:—"Dublin Castle, March 1, 1849.

Sir,—I am directed by the Lord-Lieutenant to request that you will intimate to Patrick O'Higgins, John Rea, Waddy D. Meany, Thomas Devin, Thomas T. Meyler, Joseph Brenan, and Maurice R. Leyne, or such of them as are in your custody, that his Excellency in council has this day made an order, allowing bail to their appearance to be taken by any one of our Sovereign Lady's Justices of the Court of Queen's Bench, or justice or justices of the peace.—I am, sir, your obedient servant, THOMAS N. REDINGTON. Governor of Kilmainham Gaol."—All the prisoners above named were confined in Kilmainham Gaol, with the exception of Mr. Leyne, who has been liberated from Clonmel Gaol. In noticing the fact of his liberation, the Clonmel Chronicle says—"He is bound in the sum of £100 to appear to answer any charge which her Majesty's Attorney-General may prefer against him at the next assizes. His sureties are bound in the sum of £50 each. Mr. Leyne is the last of our leading political prisoners, and has been confined in our gaol since September last."

DESTITUTION AND EMIGRATION.—There are further most deplorable accounts of distress and deaths from starvation in the west and south, and, upon the other hand, emigration is rapidly increasing as the spring advances—an emigration, however, like that of the past year, consisting almost exclusi ely of the better class of peasants, with a sprinkling of the small gentry." It is stated that there has been a further f ght of tenantry from his estate of the Earl of Glengall, in Tipperary, and that the lands unoccupied are considerably augmented. From Limerick a vessel is to sail for America towards the end of the month, with some families of the lesser gentry, and those who had been substantial farmers

THE CLEARANCE SYSTEM.—The Limerick and other southern journals contain heart-rending accounts of the progress of the clearance system. The Cork Reporter gives a letter from Dungarvon, with details of the eviction of 130 human beings, and the levelling of 34 houses. The neighbouring farmers refused shelter to the unhappy outcasts, who had to seek refuge within the mud walls of the ruined cabins. At the meeting of the Limerick Board of Guardians, on Saturday, Mr. Cooke declared that "a system was now going on in the country, of tearing down houses, and hunting down the inmates, which was a disgrace to humanity and civilisation, and was so hideous and revolting that the perpetrators could hardly expect to escape the vengeance of heaven for their vil any and hard-heartedness.

DEFENCE OF MR. DUFFY.—The committee of the fund for the defence of Mr Duffy, who is to be tried again at the commission on the 7th of April, have issued an address to the Irish people, calling on them to sustain against unparalleled persecution an Irishman who has rendered Ireland many and great services, and to enable him to prepare against coming difficulties.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

TRAFFIC ON THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN.—Amongst other indications of a revival of trade may be mentioned the fact, that the traffic of the London and North-Western for seven weeks, since the closing of the last half-yearly account, shows an increase of nearly £17,000 over the corresponding period of the previous twelve months, or an increase at the rate of £2400 per week. The receipts from January 7 to February 18 were £254,913; and for the corresponding period of 1848, £237,976. No new extensions have been opened.

LONDON, BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST.—On Tuesday, the Bricklayers' Arms branch station of this company was opened for the reception and conveyance of the goods traffic. There is a goods depot, accommodation for cattle, acres, and the increase of traffic expected to arise is likely to result in a saving to the company of something like £,000 per week in the allowance before made for extra cartage to New Cross, which, is suddenly thrown from his post, from town, and its want of extent for carrying on the traffic, was found inconvenient, and abandoned. It is expected that the present station at New Cross will be restored to its former position, the goods being at an inconvenient distance as regards the travelling population of Greenwich, Deptford, and the suburbs.

RAILWAY ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday afternoon, about three o'clock, a frightful accident, attended with loss of life, occurred on the Brighton and Portsmouth railway, to the driver of the passenger-train, which left the Brighton terminus for Portsmouth at ten minutes past two. When near the Arundel station, the driver, Jonathan Surtees, was suddenly thrown from his post, from some cause either studious-y concealed from inquirers or unknown. The guard and firemen instantly stopped the train and alighted, as did many of the passengers, and walked to the spot, some hundreds of yards from the station at Arundel where the body lay, when they found the lifeless trunk of the driver mutilated most horribly, one of his legs being cut off, his head cut and saw ten, his arms lacerated, and altogether presenting a most sickening appearance. The whole train had gone over him. The body was conveyed to the station at Arundel, and thence to the hotel adjacent to that station, where a Coroner's inquest will be held upon it.

The Directors of the London and North-Western Company have declined according to the memorial present ed from Birmingham and the neighbourhood, praying that through traffic between London and the north might be taken off the Trent Valley line (between Rugby and Stafford), and sent, as before, through Coventry, Birmingham, and Wolverhampton.

The Great Western Railway have made another retrenchment by taking off several trains; amongst which is the six o'clock morning train from Paddington. The London papers do not in consequence reach Gloucester, Bath, and Bristol until twelve o'clock, instead of ten, as formerly, thereby disarranging the day of many persons, to whom the news has become as "the air they breathe," and, of course, all the other towns under the sway of the Great Western are in a proportionate degree the hour behind time.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A. J. H."—1. The Indian Problem is printed every month on the wrapper of the Chess Magazine. 2. In the position sent mate can be effected in six moves, instead of seven. The Problem, besides, is valueless to us, from the conditions attached to the solution.

"Alpha."—You will find the whole of the moves up to move 20 of the London and Amsterdam game in our pages of Nov. 25. We will shortly publish the remaining moves and a diagram of the present position.

"G. T.," "Wrekin." "Hon. Sec."—The last intelligence of the highly interesting match between Messrs. Horwitz and Horrwitz gives to each party five games. The contest is expected to terminate on Saturday

"W. L."—The move that draws the game in Enigma No. 421 is not the one you suggest.

"F. W. H." They shall be examined. The diagrams are unexceptionable: "he who runs may read," they are to legible.

Solutions by "Deerstalker," "A. B. T." "Alpha," "Eliza," "S. T." "F. G. R.," "H. P." "Simon," "R. V. T.," "H. E." "Dimo.on," "Philos." "R. H. T.," "Leopold Aram." "R. F." Woolwich;" "C. F. L." "W. B." "W. J. Jun.," "M. E. H." are correct. Those by "D. G." and "P. H. P." are wrong.

 Very many communications are deferred, to make room for a portion of the Match Games this week

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 266.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. P to K 4	K takes P	4. Kt to Q 3d (ch)	K takes B
2. Q to K B 5th (ch)	K takes Q	5. K R P takes P	Anything
3. K B to K 4th (c.)	K to his 4th	6. P to K B 8th—Mate.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 267.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to K 4th	K interposes (best)	3. R takes Kt (ch)	Q P takes R
2. P to K Kt 7th	R to K Kt sq. (or *)	4. R takes K P (ch)	Q takes R
		5. Kt takes Q B P—Mate

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
* 3. Q K t takes P	Q P takes Q B P	5. K takes Q, or Kt takes P
3. Q Kt P takes P	R to K Kt sq (best)		Mate
4. R takes Kt (ch)	Q takes R

PROBLEM NO. 268.

By an Amateur.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White, playing first, mates in five moves.

CHESS MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUBS.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
	27 Kt to Q Kt 3d.

Amsterdam to play.

CONTINUATION OF THE MATCH BETWEEN MESSRS. HARRWITZ AND HORWITZ

GAME IV.—(FEB. 22.)

(Irregular Game.)

WHITE. (Mr. Horwitz.)	BLACK. (Mr. Harrwitz.)	WHITE. (Mr. Horwitz.)	BLACK (Mr. Harrwitz.)
1. P to Q B 4th (a)	P to K 4th	43. K to K 2d	K R takes R (ch)
2. Q Kt to B 3d	P to K B 4th	44. K takes R	Q to Q 4th (ch)
3. P to K 3d	P to Q B 4th	45. R to Q B 3d	Q to Q 8th
4. P to Q 3d	K Kt to B 3d	46. B takes Q B P	Q to Q B 8th (ch)
5. Q Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	47. K to Q Kt 4th	P to K B 4th
6. K B to K Kt 2d	P to Q 3d	48. K to Q R 5th	K takes P
7. K Kt to R 3d	K B to K Kt 2d	49. P to Q Kt 4th	Q to Q B 6th (ch)
8. P to K B 4th	Castles	50. P to Q Kt 4th	P to K B 4th
9. Castles	P to K R 3d	51. Q to Q R 2d	R to Q B 8th (ƒ)
10. P to Q Kt 3d	Q Kt to Q 2d	52. K t Q Kt 6th	Q to Q 6th
11. Q B to Q Kt 2d	K Kt to K Kt 5th	53. K takes Q R P	Q to Q 2d (ch)
12. Q to Q 2d	K B to K B 3d	54. K to Q R 6th	Q to Q B sq (ch)
13. Q Kt to Q 4th	K R to K sq	55. K to Q Kt 6th	Q to K 3d (ch.)
14. Q Kt takes B (ch)	P takes Kt	56. K to Q R 5th	Q to Q 4th
15. Q R to K sq	K to K R 2d	57. Q to K 8th	Q to Q R sq (ch)
16. B Kt to Q 3d	K R to K Kt sq	58. B to Q B 7th	R to Q 5th
17. Kt to K Kt sq	P to K R 4th	59. P to Q Kt 6th	Q to Q 4th (ch)
18. Kt to K B 3d	Q to K 2d	60. P to Q Kt 8th	Q to Q Kt 6th (g)
19. Q to K R 4th (b)	Q B to K B sq	61. Q takes Q	P takes Q
20. P to K 4th	P on K B 4th takes P	62. P to Q Kt 7th	Q to Q B 8th (ch)
21. Q P takes P	Q Kt to Q 5th	63. K to Q R 6th	Q takes K Kt P
22. P to K B 5.h	B to K sq	64. P Queens	Q takes Q
23. Q B to Q B sq	Q to K Kt 2d	65. B takes Q	P to Q 6th
24. K to K B 2d	P to Q Kt 3d	66. B to K B 4th	P to K 7th
25. P to K P 3d	Kt to K B 3d	67. P to Q 8th	P to K Kt 7th
26. K R to K Kt sq	B to K B 2d	68. P to Q Kt 7th	P Queens
27. K B to Q sq	P to Q Kt 4th (c)	69. P Queens	Q to K Kt 5th
28. P takes P	P to Q 4th	70. Q to her 6th (ch)	K to B 2d
29. P takes P	B takes P (ch)	71. P to R 8th	Q to h. 7th
30. K to f. 2d	B to K B 2d	72. K to R 7th	Q to K 2d 7th (ch)
31. K B to Q B 2d	Q R to Q sq	73. K to Kt 8th	Q to Q Kt 7th (ca)
32. Q to K 2d	Q to K B sq	74. Q to Q Kt 6th	Q to K R sq (ch)
33. K to K 3d	B takes Kt	75. K to R 7th	Q to Q B 8th
34. K to K Kt 6th	B takes Kt.	76. P to R 6th	P to Q 7th
35. P takes B (ch)	K to K t 2d	77. Q to Q 6th (A)	P Queens
36. K B to Q 3d	K to K R sq (d)	78. Q takes Q	Q to Q B 6th (ch)
37. K to K B 4th	K to K Kt 3th (ch)	79. K to K 7th	Q to Q Kt 3th (ch)
38. K to K B sq	P takes P (dis ch)	80. K to h 8th	Q to Q B 8th (ch)
39. K to K Kt 3d	Kt to K B 6th	81. K to Q 7th	Q to K 3d (ch)
40. K to R 5th	Kt takes Q R (ch)	82. K to Q 8th	Q to Q K 3d (ch)
41. B to K 3d	Q takes B	83. K to Q 7th	Q to K 3d (ch)
42. K to K B sq	Q to Q R sq (ch)	84. K to Q 7th	Q takes P
	K R to K sq (ch)	85. Q to Q 7th (ch)	K to B 3d
		86. Q to Q 8th (ch)	K to B 4d
		87. Q to Q 8th (ch.)	Q interposes

Drawn game.

(The duration of this fine Game exceeded 7 hours.)

(a) One of the safest and best opening known. See the "Hand book," p. 864, and the games in the celebrated match between Mr. E. Adams and Simmon, Chess-Players' Chronicle, Vol. 6.

(b) Tormenting that this game both players exert themselves to the utmost, and there is scarcely a move to be made without the most mature reflection, or risk of being defeated.

(c) An ingenious endeavour to bring his Bishop into critical request against the adverse King.

(d) Preparatory to a beautiful and brilliant manœuvre.

(e) How black forgot himself. By checking with the Q, instead of the Rook he might have won easily For ex. mple—

43. K to h 8 (ch)	K to K B sq	44. R to Q sq, or R to K B 7th, and wins.

White may say his 44th move, but in no way can he save the game.

(f) Threatening frequently to win the Bishop or to take the Q K P with his Rook, and, if the B took the R, to mate in two more moves.

(g) Q to Q B 5th would have been much better, for suppose—

60.		Q to Q B 5.h
61. Q takes R, or e		Q takes Q
And White cannot save the game.
* 61 P to Q Kt 7th		Q to her B 2d (ch)
62. B to Q Kt 6th (best)		Q to her B 8th, and then mates in two moves

(A) At this crisis White is guilty of an oversight, as remarkable as that of his opponent at move 60, for he had on y now to take the P with his Bishop to win the day but its supposition, for instance—

77. B takes Q P
78. K to Q Kt 5th—And Black cannot save the game.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

(Before Mr. Justice Patteson.)

THE QUEEN ON THE PROSECUTION OF THE GUARDIANS OF THE HOLBORN AND CHELSEA UNION v. DRIGHT.—THE TOOTING CASE. On Monday Mr. Justice Patteson gave a decision in this case, in which an order nisi had been obtain d by Mr. Ballantine, on the part of the defendant, to remove the indictment found thereto, the coroner's inquisitions, as also the depositions and all proceedings had thereon, by writ of certiorari, from the Central Criminal Court into the Queen's Bench, on the ground that an unfair prejudice had been created in the minds of the public by inflammatory and unjust newspaper articles and remarks, and also that from the state of the defendant's health, he labouring under a disease (inflammation of the heart and lungs), death might be produced from the excitement arising by being placed at the bar of the Old Bailey to take his trial; and further, that the depositions upon which he was indicted showed no case to go to a Jury; and a trial in the Court of Queen's Bench would be le s influenced by public prejudice than a trial at the Central Criminal Court. Mr. Petersdorff, with Mr. Duncombe, on the part of the Holborn Union, now showed cause against the order being made absolute for the issuing of the writ of certiorari. Mr. Bal ant having replied, Mr. Just ce Patte on said, in giving judgment, that he was of opinion there was no ground for the removal, and that the writ ought not to issue. The order must be refused.—Order discharged accordingly.

POLICE.

LAMBETH.

On Saturday last, Miss Harriet Martin, the governess of the Infant National School in Dorset-street, South Lambeth, appeared before Mr. Norton, to an swer to the very serious charge of having placed a boy of three years of age on a heated stove, by which harm his person is so frightful a manner that his life is at present in great danger. Mrs. Hughes, the mother of the child, was examined at considerable length. The witness denied, in the most solemn manner, that she had made any offer to compromise the matter, or that she had made use of any threat, that unless Miss Martin came forward and settled the matter, she would give her into the custody of a policeman. The witness further stated that her reason for not sending for a medical man sooner was that she hourly expected a visit from the Rev. Mr. Kemble, or some gentleman sent by him. Mr. Evans, of Trinity-street, Trinity-square, surgeon, described the injuries he found the poor child labouring under, and from the effects of which its life was still in danger. On examining the little fellow, his impression was that the injuries had been caused by his having been seated on a hot surface; and he was now convinced of the fact. Since he had seen the child, he (Mr Evans) had examined the stove at the infant-school, and he had no doubt whatever that the sufferer had received the injuries by being placed on it. Three children were called, two of whom were eight, and the third six years of age, and one of them, a particularly intelligent child, said he saw the governess on the day in question take up little Hughes and place him on the top of the stove. The child, he said, cried, and the governess (Miss Martin), after taking him off the stove, seated him on one of the forms and rolled the cloak of one of the teachers round him. Mr. Gamon applied for a remand to a future day. Mr. Humphreys said it was not his wish to make the slightest objection to a remand. Mr. Norton said he must call on Miss Martin to put in bail, herself in £100, and two sureties in £50 each, to appear on a future day. The required sureties were given, and Miss Martin was discharged for the present.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The betting this afternoon, taken as a whole, was flat, but it was rendered important by the advance of the Tartar to 5 to 1, and of Fernhill to 10 to 1, for the Northampton Handicap; and of the elevation of Joe o' Sot to the premiership for the Chester Cup, for which the Tartar was quite friendless.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE HANDICAP.

8 to 1 agst The Tartar (t)	12 to 1 agst Pyrrhus the First	12 to 1 agst Weston
8 to 1 — Long-spurn	(taken)	12 to 1 — War Eagle
10 to 1 — Fernhill (t)	13 to 1 — Velox	14 to 1 — Shelia (t)
		40 to 1 — Lunedale

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

7 to 1 agst Lugar (t)	14 to 1 agst Cannobie	20 to 1 agst Do-the-Boys (t)
10 to 1 — Calcsoul (t)	20 to 1 — Excelsior (t)	25 to 1 — Poop-o'-day Boy (t)
	20 to 1 agst Mogador (t)

NEWMARKET HANDICAP.

5 to 1 agst Cossack

CHESTER CUP.

18 to 1 agst Joe o' Sot	30 to 1 agst Gaspard	45 to 1 agst John Cosser (t)
25 to 1 — Halo	30 to 1 — Damask	50 to 1 — Rat-catcher (t)
25 to 1 — The Tartar	30 to 1 — Poop-o'-day Boy	66 to 1 — Miss Slipper o
28 to 1 — Rambleaway	40 to 1 — Rattlesnake

DERBY.

3 to 1 agst Flying Dutchman (taken)	7 to 1 agst Tadmor	50 to 1 agst Osterley (t)
	15 to 1 — Honeycomb (t)	66 to 1 — Garrick (t)
	PERRY, 1850
40 to 1 agst Pontifex (t)	45 to 1 agst Sir Tatton	50 to 1 agst Windbound (t)
	45 to 1 agst Skiles (t)

TUESDAY.—There was no improvement in the amount of business transacted this afternoon, and it is only noticeable for the further advance of the Tartar for the Northampton Stakes; of Lugar and Do the-Boys, for the Metropolitan Handicap, and of Urbi. Sinerley, and Saddle for the Derby. War Eagle was declared not to start at Northampton.

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

15 to 2 agst Lugar (t)	8 to 1 agst Cannon. | 100 to 6 agst Do-the-boys (t)

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE STAKES.

4 to 1 agst The Tartar	8 to 1 agst Long-spurn	15 to 1 agst Weston (t)
8 to 1 — Fernhill	11 to 1 — Velox

TWO THOUSAND GUINEA STAKES

4 to 1 agst Urbi	4 to 1 agst Honeycomb

CHESTER CUP.

16 to 1 agst Joe-o-Sot (t)	18 to 1 agst Halo	40 to 1 agst Lugar
	2000 to 80 agst Taffrail (t)

DERBY.

3 to 1 agst Flying Dutchman	18 to 1 agst Urbi	33 to 1 agst Escalade (t)
16 to 1 — Honeycomb (t)	18 to 1 — Gaspary	33 to 1 — Nunnykirk
	30 to 1 agst Chatterer

WATERLOO COURSING MEETING.

THE WATERLOO CUP.

Mr. Webb's Wicked Eye beat Mr. Green's Hotspur
Mr. Robinson's Smut beat Mr. Watts's nd. Barrister.
Lord Sefton's Syncope beat Mr. Atkinson's nd. War Eagle.
Mr. E. Taylor's Oliver beat Mr. Slater's nd. Crenoline.
Mr. Brewer's nd. Blank beat Mr. Ballard's Major.
Sir J. Boswell's Varna ns pewter Mr. Long's Cheshire.
Sir St. George Gore's Magician beat Mr Ridgway's Cicely.
Mr. Deakin's Drinkwought beat Mr O Grady's nd. Denunciation.
Mr. Dunlop's Kellerman beat Mr. J. Turner's Ringlet.
Mr. J. Turner's Tom Spring beat Mr Barnes's Well I Never.
Mr. J. Robinson's Merry Legs beat Mr Loder's Czar.
Mr. Beasley's War Eagle beat Mr. Bradley's nd. Scrap.
Mr Mackfield nd Merry Lad beat Mr. Stirrup's Stella.
Mr. Bake nd. Jamie Forest beat Mr. Setcliffe's nd. Blueskin.
Mr T Smith Landseer beat Mr Bligh's Czarina.
Mr. Temple's nd. Forward beat Mr A. Graham's Greenwich Time.

First Ties.

Wicked Eye beat Smut.	Kellerman beat Tom Spring.
Syncope beat Oliver.	War Eagle beat Merry-Legs.
Blank beat Venus.	Jamie Forest beat Merry-Lad.
Magician beat Drinkwought.	Forward beat Landseer.

Second Ties.

Syncope beat Wicked Eye	War Eagle beat Kellerman
Magician beat Blank	Forward beat Jamie Forest

Third Ties.

Magician beat Syncope	Forward beat War Eagle

Deciding Course.

Won by Magician; Forward ran up.

THE WATERLOO VASE.

Mr. Webb's Wrestler beat Mr. Watts's nd Spot.
Mr. Sutcliffe's Bang-up beat Mr. Temple's nd Figboldean.
Mr. Slater's nd Concert beat Mr. O'Grady's Operation.
Mr Ridgway's Deerstalker beat Mr. Deakin's Primus.
Mr. Baker's Gin beat Mr. Brewer's nd. Leoway.
Mr. A. Graham's Dupe beat Mr. R. B. Robinson's General Chase.
Sir St. George Gore's Queen Mab beat Lord Sefton's Syntax.
Mr. J. Robinson's Morocco beat Sir J. Boswell's Marianne.

First Ties.

Bang-up beat Wrestler	Deerstalker beat Concert | Dupe beat Gin

Third Ties.

Deerstalker beat Bang-up	Dupe beat Queen Mab

Deciding Course.

Won by Dupe; Deerstalker ran up.

ALTCAR STAKES.

Barrister beat Hotspur	Well I Never beat Ringlet
Crenoline beat War Eagle	Czar beat Issey
Cinerara beat Major	Blueskin beat Stella
Denunciation beat Cicely	Spy beat Greenwich Time

First Ties.

Crenoline beat Barrister	Czar beat Well I Never
Cinnaria beat Denunciation	Spy beat Blueskin

Second Ties.

Crenoline beat Cinerara	Czar beat Spy

Deciding Course.

Won by Crenoline; Czar ran up.

CAUTION TO CORN-CUTTERS.—Much regret has been expressed in the City at the demise of Mr. White, of Cheapside, under circumstances of a rather singular character. The deceased gentleman, it is understood, had for some years been in the habit of having his corns cut by a celebrated chiropodist, and, upon the latter returning from business, another party, we believe, performed the operation. A slight cut, unnoticed at the time, subsequently led to mortification, and the toe dropped off, while, from Mr. White being of a full habit of body, it was considered that not even amputation could save his life, and he speedily sank.

LIVERPOOL STEEPLE CHASE.—FALL OF "KILFANE," AT THE FOURTH FENCE.

LIVERPOOL GRAND NATIONAL STEEPLE CHASE.

In our Journal of last week we gave the result of the great Meeting of Wednesday. We now give two striking Scenes from the Race

Over the first small field or two, the horses were much spread abroad; but as soon as they got to the headland on the right, Peter Simple took a decided lead. At the fourth fence, a flight of rails placed on a bank, Kilfane was among the first of those which followed him, hot and impatient, and, throwing up his head, he struck the rails, and fell into the next field. Sparta followed in his track and fell over him; and either from the fall into the field, or from the concussion with Sparta, Kilfane's thigh was broken. Kilfane's race, of course, was over; and the Vicar of Wakefield, who now made his first appearance in steeple chasing, went no further. The other horses had now entered the large field of growing wheat leading to Becher's Brook, and, as usual, they followed each other in a string along the headland on the right. Peter increased his lead, Napoleon alone endeavouring to keep within any moderate distance of him, the rest following in a body, among the foremost of whom were Equinox and Proceed. Along the fields, between the two crossings of the brook, at the extremity of the course, Peter had a great lead, followed at a considerable interval by Napoleon, who was separated by an interval as great from the main body. After the second crossing of the brook, and in running along the side of the canal, Napoleon began to decline, and Equinox took his place. In running up the course, Peter's lead had declined, and he was now closely followed by Equinox. An artificial hedge, fortified by posts and rails, was placed about 100 yards before the brook, which all got over safely. Peter crossed the brook about a couple of lengths before Equinox: next came Chatham, followed successively by Ballybar, The Chandler, Proceed, and The Knight of Gwynne. Sir John and Tipperary Boy were among the last, these between them and the foremost ones lying pretty well together, and several following each other so closely that it would have been impossible to define the exact pace of all. Peter was first over the fence from the lane; but Proceed, as soon as he came to it, turned away, and nothing would induce him to go over it. Whip and spur were both sharply tried, but were equally unavailing. When all further effort was evidently useless, Captain Peel turned back. At the next fence but one, a small bank of earth, scarcely eighteen inches high, and with no kind of fence upon it, Equinox fell, and rolled into the next field with his back broken; after him came Ballybar, who fell over him; and Jerry, who had been reduced to follow Proceed's example at the lane, but was afterwards got over, coming up at the same moment, fell over Ballybar. Chatham and Coriander also fell at the same fence, and Wolverhampton either at this or the next. While this was going on, The Curate, who was in a forward place, had fallen at the next fence, a place of very little greater consequence than the last. He fell on his back; and while the horse was in that position, some other jumped upon him, and turned him over. Either from his own fall, or the other horse jumping upon him, his back was broken also. In the meantime, Peter Simple was going on with a strong lead, and at a great pace, so that among those which still stood on their legs there was no competitor near him. On getting to Becher's Brook, Khondooz gave up, and, as his jockey found him quite beaten, he wisely pulled him up; Napoleon had stopped some time before. The field, by various disasters, was now thinned to Peter, Mulligan, Prince George, The Victim, Alfred, Chandler, the British Yeoman, and the Arab Robber, who had passed unscathed through the dangers that had arrested the career of so many others. For a time Mulligan was among the foremost of those who followed in the wake of Peter, but he began to decline after passing Becher's Brook, and gave up the second place to Prince George, Alfred following next, The Victim next, and after them The Knight of Gwynne, Chandler, and the British Yeoman bringing up the rear.

The only chance of Peter's defeat was now in the possibility of a fall over the flight of hurdles placed near the distance post. He not only got over it safely, but jumped it well and freely; and from that time forward the issue of the race was nearly certain. He came up the course at a moderate gallop, and won easily by two or three lengths, Prince George an indifferent third; Alfred could have been fourth, but walked in with Mulligan and the Iron Duke, and after them walked in Chandler and the British Yeoman, who, seeing the race over, had stopped at the last hurdle. The race was run in 10 mtn. 56 sec., the shortest time, we believe, in which it has ever been run. Last year it was run in 11 mtn. 20 sec.

When the races were over, Equinox was found lying in a pool of his own blood. At the next fence, scarcely a hundred yards beyond, lay The Curate, in exactly the same situation, and at the next, Kilfane, the knife having put an end to the sufferings of each.

MANCHESTER GRAND STEEPLECHASE.—Thursday.

Match for £100, 10st. 10lb. each.

Mr. Cowell's ch f L. H., by the Doctor, 4 yrs 1
Mr. Howard's b or r f Miller's Maid, 4 yrs (late Lady Chas) 2

A Sweepstakes of 5 sovs. each, with 40 added, for horses of all ages.

Mr. Hall's br f Ada Mary, 3 yrs (5lb extra) 1
Mr. Jones' b g Hector, aged 2

MANCHESTER GRAND STEEPLE CHASE.

A Handicap Sweepstakes of 15 sovs. each, 10 ft., and only 5 if declared, &c., with 100 sovs. added

Mr. Robinson's gr m Fanny Gray, (h -b.) aged . .. 1
Earl of Chesterfield's b g Victim, aged 2

LIVERPOOL STEEPLE CHASE.—DEATH OF "EQUINOX."

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY PREACHING THE JUBILEE SERMON IN SAINT PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, ON THURSDAY.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

JUBILEE SERMON.

On the 8th of March, 1699, Francis Lord Guilford, Sir Humphry Mackworth, Mr Justice Hook, Colonel Maynard Colchester, and the Rev. Dr. Thomas Bray, met by appointment to take into consideration one of the most momentous subjects which could occupy the attention of man—the prevalence of vice and immorality, and its cure. It was on this occasion that the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge was established.

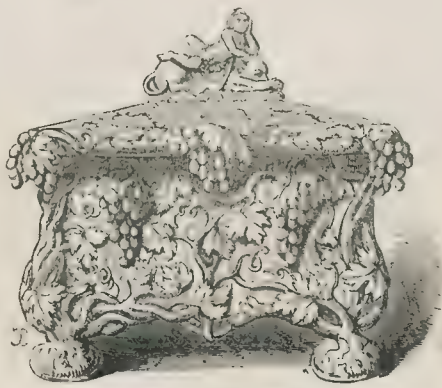
When we consider the vast importance of the object which these persons had in view; the almost countless difficulties which lay in their path; the smallness of their number—only five; we are lost in admiration at the courage which under such disadvantages, could enter upon so great a task. They saw with grief the wide prevalence of vice; they contemplated with anxiety those overflowings of ungodliness, which made them afraid; but they knew, how ever powerful wickedness and evil example might be, there was something yet more powerful; and, in reliance upon the efficacy of that, they persevered, and their perseverance was blessed with an almost unhoped-for success. Vice, and its attendant immorality, were the foes [illegible] was for ignorance. The first rew also of the original society was as follows:—

"Whereas the growth of vice and immorality is greatly owing to gross ignorance of the principles of Christian Religion, we, whose names are under written, do agree to meet together as often as we can conveniently, to consult (under the conduct of the Divine Providence and assistance) how we may be able by due and lawful methods to promote Christian Knowledge."

[Here follow the names.]

We have read in the course of our time almost countless resolutions, and upon almost all subjects, but never yet did our eyes rest upon one containing so simply stated, yet so strong a truth, or one which manifests more Christian humility, and more earnest devotedness to a cause, than this does; and surely never did five persons commence an undertaking with greater zeal, courage, and judgment, than those whose names we have recorded, and who ought to be had in ever-living remembrance by all who love and honour our holy religion, and would fain see its influences universally prevail

For eight successive meetings these five members—this small nucleus from which in after times so vast a body was to be formed—constituted the Society. Regardless of their number, they firmly and quietly prosecuted their design, with as full a certainty of ultimate success, as if they had been endowed with a prophetic view of what was to come. On the 19th of April next following, Mr John Chamberlayne, afterwards their Secretary, was elected a member. Two bishops and several dignitaries of the Church soon became associated in the work; these were joined by Robert Nelson, author of the "Feasts and Fasts," and many pious and excellent laymen, who wished to lend their aid in carrying out a scheme so fraught with good. It would be somewhat tedious, though not devoid of interest, to trace the progress of the Society from its small beginning to its present state, when its list contains seventeen thousand one hundred and fifty members, with her Majesty the Queen as its patron, and the Archbishop of Canterbury as its President.



CHEAPSIDE.—DESIGNED BY BELL.

The general designs of the Society may be comprised under three heads:—1. The Education of the Poor; 2. Aid in Behalf of the Colonies and Dependancies of the British Empire; 3. The Preparation and Circulation of Books and Tracts.

We will very briefly trace how it has carried out these several objects. Four days after the formation of the Society, Colonel Colchester undertook to endeavour to find out three persons who should begin an attempt to set up schools in three parishes. These humble endeavours were blessed with such success that in five years there were 54 schools in and about London alone, the number of children being 2131. (It was to this Society that the annual meeting of the charity schools in St. Paul's Cathedral owes its origin.) There are now at least 21,034 of these schools, and not fewer than 1,365,764 children taught in them. In 1811 the care of the schools became too heavy for the Society, and the business of them was transferred to the National Society.

The second object soon became so great, that the Society, in two years after its foundation, determined to establish a separate institution, to which King William III., in June, 1701, gave a charter of incorporation, under the name of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. Since 1850, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has granted £20,000 towards the diffusion of Christian knowledge in the East Indies, upwards of £13,000 in the West Indies; upwards of £2000, besides books, for China; £10,000 for Australia, New Zealand, and the Cape; besides other large sums for various colonial purposes.

To carry out the third object of the Society, we find that, on the 26th of March, 1699, the five members subscribed twelve pounds towards printing books for circulation among the poor. Contrast this small beginning with the fact that from April, 1847, to April, 1848, the money paid to the Society for the sale of books amounted to upwards of £16,062; and the total number of books and tracts issued during the same period amounted to 4,154,426. Of these, 129,242 were Bibles; 90,880 New Testaments; 287,177 Prayer-books; and 3,646,934 other books and tracts. The distribution of Bibles, Testaments, and Prayer-books, either gratuitously or at a reduced price, has, from the year 1705 to the present time, been one of the leading objects of the Society; while, from the year 1733, when the Society first began to report its annual issues of publications, to the present year, 1849, it has distributed upwards o ninety-four millions of books and tracts. We will mention only one statement more. In 1743, the annual subscriptions and benefactions amounted to £1300 9s. 6d.; in 1799, after an interval of fifty years, to £2136 5s. 6d.; in 1849, after another fifty years, the amount was £18,422 9s. 6d.

Thursday last was the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of this valuable Society, and it was resolved that it should be observed with peculiar solemnity. The Archbishop of Canterbury consented to preach the sermon on the occasion, at St. Paul's, and the metropolitan clergy were requested to attend in their robes to receive his Grace. Long before the hour appointed for the service, the vast body of the Cathedral was crowded with people. Exactly at the proper time the procession began to move from the western door. The boy choristers of St. Paul's and of the Chapel Royal walked first; these were followed by the other choristers. The Duke of Cambridge, the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of London, St. David's, St. Asaph, and Madras, attended upon the Archbishop of Canterbury, who walked by himself, and appeared in excellent health; and the dignitaries of the Cathedral followed in their surplices, and between one and two hundred of the clergy in their gowns closed the whole. The Lord Mayor of London intended to have been present, but was prevented by City business of importance. Owing to some bad management, the body of the chancel, which ought to have been appropriated to the clergymen, was so filled that nearly one-half were excluded, and the others were most inconveniently crowded. Some obtained places in the gallery, and between twenty and thirty found room within the rails of the space appointed for the communion table.

The choral service was most admirably conducted, Mr. Goss presiding at the organ. The Magnificat and the Nunc Dimittis were the composition of O. G bbons. Kent's beautiful anthem from the 1 Chron. xix. was sung after the third collect, and 2 Peter's from Job, xxvii., preceded the sermon.

The Archbishop selected for his text part of the 34th verse of the 31st chapter of Jeremiah. "And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord, for they shall all know me from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord." His Grace began by stating that the 29 rst of the Lord, speaking by the prophet Jeremiah, a state of things unlike any that had ever been yet seen, which the world had never witnessed on any extended scale, or had ever yet been realized in any state of society. The knowledge here spoken of was one of the highest kind. It was not the mere acknowledgment of the existence of a deity, not the belief in the attributes of God—it was even far more than the worship of the sanctuary. It was the belief of the heart: it was a perpetual consciousness of his presence. It was a knowledge like that possessed by Enoch, by Abraham, by Eli, and by the Royal Psalmist. These knew God, and set Him always before them.

To promote this knowledge, as far as human means, under the Divine blessing, can do, was the object of that venerable Society whose 150th anniversary was then being celebrated. The Archbishop set forth in forcible language that it was the duty of every one, as far as lay in his power, to contribute to the promotion of the knowledge of God. That the Society had put this knowledge within the reach of thousands, and though all might not have profited by it, yet God's blessing, he believed, had rested upon their labours. The seed sown would not produce the same harvest in all. True, there are many now who pass from infancy to boyhood, and from youth to manhood, without instruction which ought to be the foundation of all knowledge. Others had received it without possessing that which is seated in the heart—that which does not pass from the memory to the conscience. Some learn; and that which they acquire is like the footmark in the sand, soon washed away by the returning tide of evil, and obliterated by the inroads of the world. The time will come when Christian instruction shall be universal and successful. The good seed is now committed with tares; but a season will arrive when it shall not be so—when the young shall no longer meet to tempt and be tempted, but for good and holy purposes they shall no longer frequent places far from which God is banished, but will eagerly seek those sacred spots where He can be cultivated more and more. We do not say, said the Archbishop, we shall be living when God doeth this; but we must remember that we, in our time, have a work to do, each in his own household, each in his own neighbourhood, which is to promote the glorious object, the enlargement of Christ's kingdom. All, from the lowest to the greatest, can strive to effect this. And the Society well deserves our love because of its endeavours to hasten that blessed time, "when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

We have done but poor justice to the discourse of the Archbishop, which was preached with no great eloquence and animation, and was listened to with the most profound attention, by the largest congregation we have ever seen within the walls of the Cathedral.

At the conclusion of the sermon Handel's Hallelujah Chorus was sung, after which the Bishop of London pronounced the blessing; and a collection was made in aid of the funds of the Society, which, we trust, was worthy of the occasion.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE SIR GEORGE WARRENDER, BART.

THIS gentleman, whose decease occurred last week, was elder son of the late Sir Patrick Warrender, Bart., an officer of distinction at the famous Battle of Minden, who was grandson of Sir George Warrender, of Lochend, an eminent merchant of Edinburgh, Lord Provost and M.P. for that city, on whom the title of Baronet was conferred in requital of his zealous loyalty in 1715. The right honourable gentleman whose death causes these remarks was born 9th of December, 1782; and married, 10th of October, 1810, Anne, youngest daughter of Lord Evelyn, 3rd Viscount Falmouth, which lady died 8 Jan. 1841.

GEORGE SILVERTOP, ESQ., OF MINSTER ACRES, NORTHUMBERLAND.

The death of this gentleman, a leading member of the Catholic aristocracy, and a considerable landed proprietor in the north of England, is just announced. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Durham, and served as High Sheriff of Northumberland in 1841.

He was son and heir of John Silvertop, Esq., of Minster Acres, by Catharine, his wife, daughter of Sir Henry Lawson, Bart., of Brough Hall, Yorkshire, and grand-son of George Silvertop, Esq., of Minster Acres, by Bridget, his first wife, daughter of Henry Whittingham, Esq., of Whitingham Hall. This last-named Mr. Silvertop married a second wife, Mrs. Pearson, of whom it was related that this was the third time she went before the altar as a bride, her three husbands having been a Quaker, a Protestant, and a Catholic, each being twice her own age. At sixteen, she married a man of thirty-two; at thirty, one of sixty; and at forty-two, a gentleman of eighty-four

Mr. Silvertop, who is just deceased, was born 6th January, 1775, and succeeded his father in 1801.

ADMIRAL ROSS.

VICE-ADMIRAL ROSS, C.B., entered the navy the 1st of March, 1795, and rose through the various grades to the rank [illegible] 1837. Admiral Ross was [illegible] at the blockade of St. Domingo; and while captain of the Pique frigate, in 1804 and 1805, he captured one Spanish and three French vessels. It was he, also, commanding the Northumberland, conveyed Napoleon to St Helena. The last employment of Admiral Ross was that of Commander-in-Chief of the naval forces in the Pacific. The gallant Admiral died on the 2nd inst, at his residence in George-street.

PRINCE WALDEMAR.

The Prince Frederick William Waldemar of Prussia was the second son of Prince Frederick, uncle of his present Prussian Majesty. Prince Waldemar was born the 20 of August, 1817. He was a cavalry officer and a distinguished soldier in the service of his country. His reputation extended also to our army, in consequence of the gallant share he took in the victories of Moodkee and Ferozeshah, when he had joined the British forces with Lord Gough and Viscount Hardinge. He and his companions, Counts Greuban and Croll, were mentioned with high commendations in the despatches of the Commander-in-Chief at the time.

In 1847 the Prince visited this country, and met with most flattering reception both from the Court and the public: he was then made an honorary Knight Grand Cross of the Bath. The premature and lamentable death of this brave and exemplary scion of a royal house, was the result of an accidental fall from his horse while out hunting. He expired, after a lengthened illness, on the 17th ultimo, at Munich. He is deeply and deservedly mourned in Prussia and the fate of the distinguished and adventurous warrior, who so recently fought for our fame, cannot but be felt and remembered here.

CAPTAIN PATRICK GERARD.

CAPTAIN PATRICK GERARD was the last of three brothers, who spent their lives in the service of the East India Company, and were long known in the East by their zealous scientific researches, and as the first explorers of the natural wonders and beauties of the Himalayas. Several publications have appeared from the pens of the Gerards, besides numerous communications in the periodical press of India, especially to the Asiatic Researches, and The Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. The attachment and similarity of tastes of the brothers were remarkable, and led them frequently to make their travels together. They were the sons of Dr. Gilbert Gerard, author of "Elements of Political Criticism," and other works. Their grand father was Dr. Alexander Gerard, author of a standard "Essay on Taste," and many other writings. In recording the death of Captain Patr ck Gerard, "Sinn's Ob ever remarks, that "a warmer heart never beat in a human breast." The lamented event occurred on the 4th of last October. Captain Gerard was in his 58th year. His remains lie interred in the churchyard of Simla.

EDWARD MILLER MUNDY, ESQ. M.P., OF SHIPLEY HALL, COUNTY DERBY.

MR. MUNDY, one of the members for South Derbyshire, died at Bartadoes on the 29th January, aged 49. The honourable gentleman was eldest son and heir of the late Edward Miller Mundy, Esq., of Shipley, Knight of the Shire for forty years, and grandson of Edward Miller Mundy, Esq., of Shipley, by Frances, his first wife, daughter and co-heir of Godfrey Meynell, Esq. The Shipley family is a branch of the old and influential Derbyshire family of Mundy, of Markeston now represented by William Mundy, Esq., of that place.

The deceased gentleman was first returned for Derbyshire in 1841; he always acted with the Conservative party, and voted for agricultural protection in 1846

SOCIETY OF ARTS.

THIRD ANNUAL EXHIBITION.

On Wednesday evening, the rooms of the Society of Arts were opened for a full-dress promenade, for the inspection of the third annual assemblage of British manufactures. The large saloon, and adjoining rooms, were brilliantly lighted. The principal room had a most splendid appearance, from the great proportion of metal work, of a very superb and costly description. The specimens of glass likewise contributed greatly to the brilliancy of the scene.

The Exhibition is, in the number and character of the articles, a decided advance upon the collection of last year; and the policy of such displays is the best shown by the number of contributing members having been nearly [illegible] since the first Exhibition was projected. The manufactures in metals, in papier-hangings, and in woollens and cottons, are principally in this noble show of British works. Among the contributors are her most gracious Majesty the Queen, the Duke of Richmond, the Duke of Bedford, the Marquis of Exeter, the Earl of Chesterfield, the Earl of Ellesmarle, Count Barthiany, Sir M. Monteflore, Mr. Bouverie Mr. Cobden, M.P., Mr. Green, Mr. Horsfall (the Mayor of Liverpool), and Mr. H. T. Hope, M.P. Many of the works in the precious metals have been executed as prizes for racing-plate, and have been engraved in our pages. However, the most interesting, as well as novel, work of this class is a gilt Centre Piece, executed by command of her Majesty, from a design by H.R.H. Prince Albert (President of the Society), and lent for exhibition by her most gracious Majesty. This is a beautiful work in its lower compartment are portraits of the favourite Dogs belonging to her Majesty, cleverly modelled by E. Cotterell, and manufactured by Garrard and Co. The rectangular basins includes Doncaster, Ascot, and Goodwood cups, by Hunt and Roskill, and Garrard and Co.; and to the former firm has been awarded an Honorary Testimonial, for their "Masepa," as a specimen of its class. Here, too, is the artistic Testimonial presented to Mr. Rose Richardson, designed by Sir George Hayter. Among the Castings in Iron are some beautiful designs by Bell

The Pottery includes some statuettes and groups from Copeland and Flaxman and Bell. The specimens of glass are beautiful, and of improved form. There are about 80 works in British Marbles, mostly exhibited by Tennant; and sculptured specimens of Parian Marble, by Jeanens and Bell. Honourable mention has been awarded the Gold Isle Marble, and the pearl ornament on the top of their Papier Maché Table. Among a collection of Medals by William Wyo, R.A., are duplicates of the Army and Navy Medals, and the Two Sicilies Medal.

The Wood Carving comprises some fifty specimens, one of which we have engraved. This is a Cedare, designed by J. Bell, for Summerly's Art Manufactures, carved and exhibited by John Webb, to whom the Society's Silver Medal has been awarded. The design is classically characteristic. In this department are some interesting works of artisans not professional wood-carvers. Last year, at the exhibition of the Fine Arts, prizes were offered for these works, with a view to encouraging home employment, such as [illegible] labourer has contributed three specimens. Among the [illegible] is the plateau of Oriental Pierced China, selected from the collection of Mdlle. Jenny Lind, and engraved in our Journal for Feb. 17. Mrs. Isla d Marguerite Door, with Elizabethan frame, by H. Baths, is very superb, and has received the Silver Medal. In its execution only white drawings are used, and these, having been cut into the requisite device, are separated, and died the required tints, then replaced in their original position, and finished in the usual manner.

A new feature in the Exhibition is the silks, carpets, lace, and shawls, which, though not numerous, are of first-rate merit. The paper-hangings encourage a hope that we shall yet cease to have to borrow from the French a name for what [illegible] are full of fine originality; a paper made expressly to hang pictures on, designed by Redgrave, and exhibited by Simpson, is an artistic success. To Mr. Simpson, by the way, has been awarded a gold medal for his improvements in paper-hangings. There are, too, some tapestry and velvet carpets, by Lanworth, of beautiful design and manufacture. We should add, that the Exhibition will be open daily until April 29; last year the exhibition was visited by 70,000 persons, and this year's display deserves to be equally attractive.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN VOLTAIC ELECTRICITY.—Mr. Alfred Smee, F.R.S., and inventor of the battery which bears his name, has announced that, by a test, which he deems satisfactorily established, that the terminations of the sensor nerves become positive poles of a voltaic circuit, when acted upon by their proper stimulus, as the eye by light, the skin by heat, &c., whilst the muscular substance is negative to the sensory nerves, like electro-telegraphs, carry the sensation to the brain, and the motor nerves carry back the volition to the muscles. The brain he infers to consist of five distinct voltaic circuits, which, upon theoretical grounds, he believes to be sufficient to account for mental phenomena. Mr. Smee has succeeded in making artificial electric fish, and artificial muscular substance. The announcement is important if a discovery must put the whole medical world upon the alert, and should Mr. Smee's views be confirmed by other investigators, this will be a most important advance in the records of physiological science.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The decline in prices consequent upon the Indian news continues, although not to the full extent. Scarcely any business still check any upward tendency, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the party operating for the rise. The public are generally realising, considering that no trade improves a greater demand for money will cause sales of stock. Tranquillity in France will also tend to the same results, as the large sums invested for safety during the past year may be required to again animate commercial enterprise. The unsettled state of Italy, and the demands of Russia to pass the Dardanelles, form disturbing elements in the political world, rendering the present moment anything but favourable for buyers. On Monday, the Market opened with Consols marking 91¼ to ⅜, but sales on behalf of the public soon reduced the quotation to 91. The report that Lord Harding, or Sir Charles Napier would immediately set out for India proved, however, an improvement at the close of the day, the last prices being 91⅜. At these quotations Consols remained inactive the whole of Tuesday and opened on Wednesday. Soon after the market became languid, and fell one quarter per cent, closing at 91⅛. On Thursday, prices at the beginning of business were 91⅛ to ⅜ for Money, and 91⅜ for Account; towards the close of the day, however, a rally was made, and 91⅝ became the current quotation. India Stock receded on Tuesday to 276, and at it since partially rallied. India Bonds have also been a little flatter. [illegible] quer Bills remain nearly stationary. At the close of the week the latest was for [illegible] from which a decline followed prices:—Bank Stock, 194; Reduced, 91⅛ to ⅜; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, 92¼; Long Annuities, expire Jan. 1860, 18 3-16ths; Consols for Account, 91⅝; Bank Stock, 193 Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 42 pm; £500, June, 45 pm.

The Foreign Market opened on Monday without firmness, but rather improved in tone towards the close. Business was transacted to a fair extent on Wednesday, however, some activity prevailed both in Mexican and Peruvian, the former quoting 26¼ to 27¼, continuing firm at that price. Peruvian advanced from 82 to 83, and remain at that quotation. Spanish Three per Cents have advanced from Monday's price of 29¾ for Account to 29⅞ for Money. From Mexico the advices are favourable to a dividend, the agents having on hand £305,000 for that purpose at the close of the week. Foreign Bonds, 82; Equador Bonds, 3¾; Grenada Bonds, One per Cent., 17⅛; Mexican, Five per Cent., 1840, 27¼; Ditto, Account, 27; Peruvian Bonds, Six per Cents, 82; Portuguese, Four per Cents, 26; Spanish, Five per Cent., 1840, Account, 17⅛; Ditto, Three per Cent., 29¼; French Rentes, Five per Cent., 84f. 50c.; Exchange, 25f. 20c.; French, Three per Cent., 54f.; Exchange, 35f. 50c.; Dutch, Two-and-a-half per Cents, 49¾

Shares are rather heavy, the speculation for dividends having terminated when the result of the half-years accounts became known. The markets are dull, consequently, supported by the public, who continue purchases in the dividend paying lines. At the close of the week the rates were, for Aberdeen, Preference, 23⅞; Ditto, Ordinary, 23⅞; Birmingham and Gloucester, 92¾ x d; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 9 x d; Ditto, New £10, Preference, 11¼; Chester and Holyhead, 20⅜; Ditto, Preference, 13¾; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 5; East Anglia, £25 L. and B., and L. and Q., 2¾; Ditto, £25 No. 2, 1¾; Eastern Counties, 10¾; Ditto, New, Guaranteed 6 per Cents., 11⅛; Ditto, North and East, 42 x d; Ditto, New, 43¾; Eastern Union, Class A (late E. U. Shares), 13; Edinburgh and Glasgow, Half Shares, 17; Exeter, New, 10; Great Dorchester, 11; Great Western, 97 x d; Ditto, 8 Shs. ex. 8¾ x d; Ditto, 4 Shares 20¾ x d; Ditto, Fifths, 4¾ x d; Ditto, New £17, 18¾ x d; Hull and Selby, 91¾ x d; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 23¾; Lancaster and Carlisle, 65¾; Lancashire and Yorkshire, Fifths, 7⅛; Ditto, Thirds, 8¾; Leeds and Bradford, 103 x d; London and Blackwall, 5⅝ x d; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 35¾; Ditto, New £3 Guar., 6 per Cent., 6¾; London and North-Western, 133¾ x d; London and South-Western, 38¾ x d; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, 1⅞; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 41¼; Ditto, New and Half Shares, 10¾; Midland, 81¾ x d; Ditto, Ditto, 20 Shares, 17¾; Ditto, Birmingham and Derby, 55 x d; Newmarket, 1; North British, Quarters, 2⅜; Ditto Extension, 4¾; North Staffordshire, 14¾; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 20¾; Reading, Guilford, and Reigate, 18⅜; Royston and Hitchin, 33; Scottish Central, 25¾; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 5⅝; South-Eastern, 24; Ditto, No. 2, 16⅜; Ditto, Registered, No. 4, 7¾; Ditto, Scrip, No. 4, 1¾; South Yorkshire, Doncaster, and Gole [illegible] Waterford and Kilkenny, 5; Wilts, Somerset, [illegible] Newcastle and Berwick Extension, 19 x d.; Ditto G N R, [illegible] York and North Midland, Preference, 5⅜. Banligne and Amiens, 9½; Central of France (Orleans and Vierzon), 12½; Demerara, 8¾; Namur and Liege, 8; Northern of France, 11½; Paris and Rouen, 21½; Rouen and Havre, 12½; Tours and Nantes, 9¾.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Notwithstanding the quantity of English wheat received in our market, this week, during the present week, has been only 1490 quarters, and the receipts by land carriage equally small. The demand for that description of grain this morning was in a very dull state. In some instances the quotations were almost nominal; and where sales took place, 1s to 2s per quarter less money was accepted by the factors. At that re jection, the market closed heavily. Upwards of 30,000 quarters of foreign wheat have come to hand. The large supply produced great depression in the trade, and prices receded 1s to 2s per quarter. In floating cargoes, no sales. We had a very limited show of barley. Still, however, I was quite upset to the demand, which ruled heavy, at barely stationary prices The malt meet to nothing was doing, at late figures. The inquiry for oats, beans, peas, and flour was wholly nominal. Prices ruled unaltered.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 1490 quarters; barley, 1100; oats, 1980. Scotch: oats, 250. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 1950. Foreign: wheat, 30,980; barley, 410; oats, 1630; flour, 2 sacks; beans, 1 qr.; foreign, 2260 quarters; malt, 3340 quarters.

BRITISH.—Wheat: Kent, red, 40s to 44s; ditto, white, 44s to 48s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, —s to —s; ditto, white, 44s to 50s; rye, 30s to 32s; grinding barley, 24s to 26s; ditto, 27s to 28s; malting ditto, 29s to 32s Norfolk and Lincoln malts, 56s to 58s; brown ditto, 47s to 52s; Kingston and Ware, 58s to 60s; Chevalier, 58s to 60s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 21s; potato ditto, 23s to 25s, Youghal and Cork, blacks, 16s to 19s; ditto, white, 16s to 20s; ditto brown, new, 17s to 20s; ditto, old, —s to —s; grey peas, 32s to 34s; maple, 34s to 37s; white, 34s to 37s; boilers, 35s to 37s per quarter Town-made flour, 42s to 44s; Suffolk, 38s to 39s. Stockton and Yorkshire, 35s to 36s per 280 lbs. Foreign: Dantzig red wheat, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 32s to 37s per barrel. Baltic, —s to —s per barrel.

OATMEAL.—For all kinds of seeds the demand is in a very [illegible] state, at about last week's prices.

LINSEED, English, sowing, 50s to 54s; Baltic, [illegible] 40s to 44s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 46s; hempseed, 40s to 42s per quarter, coriander, 18s to 20s per cwt; brown mustard seed, 6s to 11s; white ditto, 8s to 12s 6d; tares, new, 5s to 6s 6d per bushel. English rapeseed, £27 to £30 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 5s to £11 5s; ditto, foreign, £8 £12 to £10 per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £4 to £4 5s per ton; canary, 50s to 52s per quarter.

LINSEED OIL, pale, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; refined, —s to —s; rape, pale, —s to —s; fine, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; straw.

Arrivals.—For the week: wheat, 1490 qrs.; barley, 1100; oats, 1980; beans, 1 qr.; flour, 2 sacks; foreign, 2260 qrs.; malt, 3340 qrs.

Prices.—Wheat, 44s 6d; barley, 29s 3d; oats, 17s 8½; rye, 32s 6d; beans, 1s 0d; peas, 1s 0d; flour, 42s 1d.

Average.—Wheat, 45s 10d; barley, 29s 3d; oats, 17s 8½; rye, 32s 6d; beans, 30s 2d; peas, 32s 1d.

Duties.—Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 1s; barley, 1s 6d; oats, 1s 0d; rye, 1s 0d; beans, 1s 0d; peas, 1s 0d.

The market is steady for most kinds of black tea, at full prices. Green qualities are a slow inquiry.

Sugar.—All descriptions of raw sugar have commanded a firm inquiry this week, at a further improvement in value of quite 6d per cwt. Refined goods are firm, and quite in per demand, and fully 6d per cwt. Grocery lots sell slowly at the late rates. Grocery 38s to 39s per cwt.

Coffee.—Very little business is doing in this article, the prices of which have a downward tendency. Good ordinary Ceylon, 39s per cwt.

Rice.—Bengal, 6d lower. All other kinds are lower to purchase.

Provisions.—Irish butter has been in moderate request, the demand for that article is firm, as fully is an improvement in value. Fine Fresland is selling at 114s to 116s; fine middle Kiel, 98s to 96s, and fine new Holland, 100s to 104s per cwt. The lowest grades of Irish butter sell at 80s to 84s per cwt; ditto, good to middling, 86s to 92s. Since last week's prices Carlow and Kilkenny, firsts, landed, 72s to 80s; Cork, 68s to 70s; Limerick, 56s to 64s; Waterford, 56s to 58s; Sligo, 48s to 52s; and Tralee, 54s to 56s per cwt. Foreign: Friesland, 104s to 108s per cwt. Small and good 100s to 104s per cwt. In Irish bacon very little is doing, [illegible] addered last are quoted as

Tallow.—The market is [illegible] lower than last week. P. Y. C. on the spot, [illegible] Town tallow, [illegible] for the last three months, [illegible] Tanfield

[illegible] small, are in request, at prices fully equal to last quoted. [illegible] ers. The weak [illegible] and inferior kinds have off sixpence to [illegible] ate rates. On [illegible] ers next to nothing doing. Mid and East Kent, 2l 15s to 3l 15s; Weald of Kent, ditto, 2l 10s to 3l 5s; Mid and East Kent, ditto, 3l 3s to 3l 6s.

[illegible] the favourable state of the weather for slaughtering, the beef trade is tolerably steady, and [illegible] a trifle more money was obtained for second-rate sheep. For a time [illegible] ation we were not affected. The numbers of sheep were reasonably good and of full average [illegible] Tanfield

[illegible] small, and [illegible] ers next to nothing doing. Mid and East Kent, ditto, 3l 3s to 3l 6s.

[illegible] the favourable state of the weather for slaughtering, the beef trade is tolerably steady, and [illegible] a trifle more money was obtained for second-rate sheep. For a time [illegible] ation we were not affected. The numbers of sheep were reasonably good and of full average [illegible] Tanfield

[illegible] small, are in request, at prices fully equal to last quoted. [illegible] ers. The weak [illegible] and inferior kinds have off sixpence to [illegible] ate rates. On

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT-GARDEN.—The Directors of the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA beg respectfully to inform the Nobility, the Public, and Subscribers, that the SEASON will COMMENCE on THURSDAY NEXT, MARCH 15th, with Auber's Grand Opera of MASANIELLO, which will be produced with entirely new Scenes, Costumes, and Appointments. On Tuesday, Ash Wednesday, and Good Friday, Grand Opera Concerts, in which will appear the Royal Italian Opera Company, Pandita, Mdlle. Poinsot, Lucchesi, Corbari, Gassier, Tamburini, Lablache, and Mario. On Thursday, March 22nd, the Opera of the Barber of Seville, with the Grand Ballet of Nina, or the Mad Girl, in which Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi will appear, and Signor Marzio. The Opera of Lucrezia Borgia

NEW BOOKS, &c.

BOOKS of TRAVELS, GEOGRAPHICAL WORKS, &c.

CAPTAIN LEOPOLD VON ORLICH'S TRAVELS in SCINDE and the PUNJAUB in 1843 and 1843. Translated by H. E. LLOYD. 2 vols, 8vo., with Wood Engravings. 32s.

MR. F. S. MARRYAT'S BORNEO and the EAST INDIAN ARCHIPELAGO. With many Plates and Wood Engravings of Costumes and Scenery. Imperial 8vo. 31s. 6d.

III.

LIEUT.-COLONEL SIR THOMAS L. MITCHELL'S NARRATIVE of his EXPEDITION into the INTERIOR of TROPICAL AUSTRALIA. With Charts, Plates, and Wood Engravings. 8vo. 21s.

IV.

Mr. P. E. DE STRZELECKI'S PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION of NEW SOUTH WALES and VAN DIEMEN'S LAND. With Map and Plates. 8vo. 24s.

V.

ADOLPH ERMAN'S TRAVELS through SIBERIA, from the River Obi to the Chinese Frontier. Translated by W. D. COOLEY, Esq. 2 vols. 8vo, with Map. 31s. 6d.

VI.

Dr. F. PARROT'S ASCENT of MOUNT ARARAT. Translated and Edited by W. D. COOLEY, Esq. With Map and Wood Engravings. 8vo. 14s.

VII.

CONSTANTINE FISCHENDORFF'S TRAVELS in the EAST. Translated from the German, by W. E. BUCKLEY. 18mo. 6s. 6d.

VIII

MAJOR SIR W. C. HARRIS'S HIGHLANDS of ÆTHIOPIA: including Eighteen Months' Residence of his Embassy at the Christian Court of Shoa. 2 vols 8vo, Map, &c. 42s.

IX.

Dr. JOHN COULTER'S ADVENTURES in the WESTERN COAST of SOUTH AMERICA, and in the INTERIOR of CALIFORNIA. Including Incidents at various Islands in the Pacific Ocean. 2 vols post 8vo, 18s.

X.

Dr. JOHN COULTER'S ADVENTURES in the PACIFIC: with the Manners, Customs, &c. of the Islanders. Remarks on the Missionaries, &c. Post 8vo, 7s 6d.

XI.

Mr. R. G. DUNLOP'S TRAVELS in CENTRAL AMERICA: with Journal of Three Years' Residence in the Country. Post 8vo, with Map, 10s 6d.

XII.

Captain DE LA RIVIERE'S SKETCHES of the CARAVAN WAR. Translated, with Notes, &c., by the Hon. Capt. PLUNKETT, R.N.; with Plan of Aetions. 2 vols post 8vo, 18s.

XIII.

THE PAST and FUTURE of the BRITISH NAVY. By Captain the Hon. E. PLUNKETT, R.N. New Edition, with Notes and fresh information. Post 8vo, 7s 6d.

XIV

Mr. DAWSON BORRER'S NARRATIVE of a CAMPAIGN against the KABAILES of ALGERIA, with M. Bechet's Mission to Abd-el-Kader. Post 8vo, 10s 6d.

XV.

Mr. M'CULLOCH'S GEOGRAPHICAL, STATISTICAL, and HISTORICAL DICTIONARY of the WORLD. New Edition. 4 vols 8vo, with Six large Maps, £4

XVI.

MURRAY'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA of GEOGRAPHY. With 82 Maps, and above 1000 other Wood Engravings. New Edition, 8vo, 50s.

XVII

SIDNEY HALL'S GENERAL LARGE LIBRARY ATLAS of 33 COLOURED MAPS. New Edition. Corrected throughout; with many of the maps re-engraved. Large 4to * To be completed in Fifteen Parts, price 5s. each, of which Fourteen are now ready

XVIII

ELIZA ACTON'S MODERN COOKERY-Book; in which all the Recipes have been strictly tested, and are given with minute exactness. New Edition. Revised throughout. With Plates and Wood Engravings. Fcap. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

Now ready, post 8vo, 12s,

OUTLINES of ENGLISH LITERATURE. By THOMAS B. SHAW, B.A.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street

Now ready (by authority of H. M. Government), 2 vols. 8vo, 30s.

THE ANCIENT PRACTICE of PAINTING in OIL and on GLASS, and other Arts described in several unpublished and Manuscript, dating from the twelfth to the eighteenth centuries. With introductions and Notes by MRS. MERRIFIELD.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street

Just published, in 4to, price 2s 6d boards,

THE MENDIP HILLS: a Descriptive Poem. By the Rev. R. B. BURROW, Curate of Chelwood, Somerset. Printed for the Author, and sold by Messrs. Rivington and Co., London. Simms, Godwin, Bath; Light and Muller, Bristol.

This day is published, price 6s.

THE SCIENCE of LIFE; or, How to Live, and What to Live For. With Rules for diet, regimen, and self-management; together with instructions for securing perfect health, longevity, and the steady gain of happiness. By a Physician through the judicious observance of a well-regulated course of life. By A. PHYSICIAN.

KENT and RICHARDS, 23, Paternoster-row, London.

AN ELEGANT PRESENT.

THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT. (AUTHORISED VERSION.)

Beautifully bound in leather, embossed and gilt sides, gilt edges, price Five Shillings. In paper cover, Half-a-Crown. With Sixty Splendid Engravings from Drawings executed by Eminent Artists, expressly for this Edition. Notes, Historical, Explanatory, and Descriptive; and embellished by a move. Panoramic Picture of the Holy Land, as a Frontispiece, presenting at one view the principal cities and places mentioned in the Old and New Testament, assisted by eighty-six references.

* * The ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT contains some fine bold and imaginative sketches. Much tact has been shown in the choice of subjects; and even those which have been, as it were, pictorially used up, are treated with original delicacy of conception."—Daily News

"A publication characterised by the spirit of the well-known projectors of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, and destined, we doubt not, to circulate far and wide. The illustrations are characterised by a daringness of style, and finished with a delicacy and beauty that make them immensely attractive."—Wesleyan

London: Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand; and sold by all Booksellers.

Just published,

THE FAMILY ECONOMIST for MARCH, 1849. Contents: Self-Improvement; in Three Lessons—Lesson I. Philosophers in Humble Life. Air and Ventilation Part I POETRY: The Boy. RECIPES: To Restore Ancient Wine-Wall; Clothing—Dear Soup—Vegetable Soup—Gloster Stobcall—Dumplings —To Boil Rice Dry—Baking Potatoes. The Four Clerks, a True Tale 4 lbs. 2 Early Marriages Induced by Unequal Prosperity GARDENING and FARM AFFAIRS: How to lay out Kitchen Gardens. Directions to Bee-keepers for March.

* * The monthly numbers of the FAMILY ECONOMIST is now 20,000 It is unrivalled for the interesting and useful character of its contents and for its general respectability and cheapness. Price a Penny a Month, a Shilling a Year.

A VOLUME FOR ALL.

THE FAMILY ECONOMIST for 1848, in paper wrapper, is 6d bound, 8s. Nearly the whole of the monthly sale, about 20,000 of the bound volumes have been sold. It is one of the cheapest, most useful, and entertaining volumes ever published.

A NEW SERIES of CHILDREN'S BOOKS, at 3d. each.

STORIES for SUMMER DAYS and WINTER NIGHTS. By the EDITORS of the FAMILY ECONOMIST The first of the Series, CARL THE WANDERER, was published on the 1st of February ALLY'S BIRTHDAY is also now ready Each book contains 48 pages, with Five engines, and other Engravings. These are the best and cheapest books of their class published. London: GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row.

NEW TALE BY G. W. M. REYNOLDS

An excellent opportunity now presents itself for new Subscribers to commence taking in

REYNOLDS'S MISCELLANY: Edited by G. W. M. REYNOLDS, Author of the First and Second Series of "The Mysteries of London," "Pauline," "Rose, Blanche, and Violet," "The Mysteries of the Court of London," &c

In No. 38, which is published this day, commences an entirely New and Original Romance, by George W. M. Reynolds, entitled THE BRONZE STATUE; or, The Virgin's Kiss.

"Reynolds's Miscellany" is the largest, best, cheapest, and most beautifully illustrated Penny Periodical ever published. Each Number contains an infinite variety of amusing, useful, and instructive matter: such as Tales, History, Science, Biography, Poetry, and the most copious and comprehensive Notices to Correspondents. Moreover, each Number contains at least three, and sometimes four or five, beautiful Wood Engravings, by the most eminent Artists of the day.

Try Number 38 of "Reynolds's Miscellany," only One Penny! Every newsman and vendor of cheap periodicals sells it London: Published at the Office, 7, Wellington-street North, Strand.

ONE HUNDRED STEEL ENGRAVINGS for 5s., or Two Hundred for 8s. 6d.—These plates consist of finely-executed Views, Portraits, &c., selected from the various Annuals. The impressions are perfect, all various, and admirably adapted for Scrap-books, Albums, Screens, and fancy purposes, and form an elegant present. Send free by post on receipt of post-office order.—JAMES REYNOLDS, Print Warehouse, 174, Strand.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "HARRY LORREQUER," &c. Publishing Monthly, price 1s

ROLAND ASHELL. By CHARLES LEVER. With Illustrations by "PHIZ." Nos. I. to XI. are Published.

II.

Just published, No. I., price 1s., to be continued Monthly, of THE JOURNAL OF DESIGN. Containing 10 specimens of Actual Fabrics, and 30 wood cuts, Engravings of Costumes and Scenery. Imperial 8vo. 2s. 6d.

III.

New Novel by the Author of "The Bachelor of the Albany" MY UNCLE, THE CURATE. 3 vols., post 8vo., cloth. To be had at all the Libraries.

IV.

THE LIFE OF ROBESPIERRE. With Extracts from his Unpublished Correspondence By G. H LEWES Author of "Ranthorpe," "Biographical History of Philosophy," &c. Post 8vo. cloth. 9s

V.

FAIRY TAILS FROM ALL NATIONS. By ANTHONY R MONTALBA. With Twenty-four Illustrations by RICHARD DOYLE In an elegant volume small 8vo., ornamental boards, 9s

VI.

MR. THACKERAY'S NEW WORK. DOCTOR BIRCH AND HIS YOUNG FRIENDS. By Mr. M. A. TITMARSH. Author of "Vanity Fair," Mrs. Perkins's Ball," &c. &c With 16 Illustrations drawn by the Author In small 4to., price 9s. plain; or 7s 6d. coloured

VII.

MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED VOLUME. THE HOLY GOSPELS. Embellished with a Series of beautiful Illustrations, by Ancient and Modern Artists, and each Page surrounded by an elaborate Decorative Border, illustrative of the text enclosed, the whole engraved in the highest style of the Art on Wood, under the superintendance of Mr. CHARLES HEATH. In a handsome small folio volume, elegantly bound in cloth gilt, price £1 11s. 6d.; or large paper, £2 12s.

VIII.

A BOOK FOR A CORNER; or Selections in Prose and Verse, from Authors the best suited to that mode of enjoyment. With comments on each, and a general introduction.

By LEIGH HUNT

With Eight Illustrations, from designs by F. W. HULME and J. FRANKLIN 2 vols., small fcap., cloth. London. CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

Second Edition, now ready, price 3s.

THE OUT-STATION; or, Jaunts in the Jungle: being a Sketch-book of the new, diverse, and tangents" of LIFE IN CEYLON. By JAMES W GRYLLS.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

"This amusing little book will most assuredly meet with a favourable reception."—New Monthly Magazine

A spirited tale, narrated in a lively, unaffected, and dashing style."—United Service Gazette

In the event before us we see a joyous, reckless young fellow, who is not content to run a steeplechase over hurdles, that it seems necessary for him to find a vent for it upon paper. He just writes about what he has seen, and does it as he writes well."—Douglas Jerrold's Newspaper.

London: CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand; and all Booksellers.

NOTICE.

MR. LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE FOR 1849, is corrected throughout from the Personal Communications of the Nobility, under the especial Patronage of her Majesty and Prince Albert,

IS NOW READY.

SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

TO COUNTRY LIBRARIANS, MECHANICS INSTITUTES, &c.

Now ready, Gratis, and Post-free.

A NEW and ECONOMICAL PLAN for the SUPPLY of COUNTRY CIRCULATING LIBRARIES with NEW PUBLICATIONS Sent gratis and post-free to order, addressed to Messrs. SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street

---

Just published, in One Volume, post 8vo, cloth,

THE ATTRIBUTES of the SOUL from the BODY; and the PHILOSOPHY of the LIVING MOTIVE, detecting the false basis or fundamental error of the schools as to developing the perfect education of man. By ROBERT CHAMBERS, Esq.

The soul is under the same immutable laws as the structure of the body and from the moment the metaphysician discovers its true science and attributes, the perfection of man will be attained. The Schoolmen were under the same error as the Physicians of old, as the ancients were in the movements of the heavenly bodies.

London: SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Conduit-street.

READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES,

Now ready, delivered Gratis,

A NEW PLAN for READING and BOOK SOCIETIES throughout the Kingdom. This plan provides an unlimited supply of Standard Works, at the New Books, and the right of Members to purchase any work desired, as soon as the first demand has subsided, at one-half the published price. Delivered Gratis, and post-free to Country Subscribers, on application addressed to Mr BULL, Librarian, 19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square

---

A PANORAMIC PICTURE of the HOLY LAND; exhibiting the Principal Localities mentioned in the Old and New Testament. With 85 References Size of the Plate, 28 inches by 18

Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, and sold by all Booksellers

---

Now ready, price Eighteen Shillings, VOLUME THIRTEEN of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, elegantly bound in cloth, gilt edges, rich in Illustrations of the Extraordinary Events of the last Six Months, forming a most complete and valuable ILLUSTRATED CHRONOLOGY; together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art Literature, and Science.—May be obtained, by order, of all Booksellers, &c., in the Kingdom, also all the previous Volumes

REDUCTION IN THE PRICE OF THE COVERS FOR BINDING THE VOLUMES.—In future, our Subscribers will be charged 2s. 6d. only for Covers for Binding the Volumes. The Cover for Vol. XIII. is now ready. The Trade supplied.

CAUTION.—An inferior Cover for Binding the Volumes of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, with an imitation of the new design, having been made by parties who seek to recommend their counterfeit as genuine, we caution our Subscribers that none are genuine but those which bear on the back the address of our office, "198, STRAND."

Now ready.

GEMS of WOOD-ENGRAVING, FROM THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS:

Containing UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED of the FINEST SPECIMENS of WOOD-ENGRAVING ever produced, carefully Printed on a warm-tinted Plate Paper. With a Critical and Descriptive List of the Subjects.

The Frontispiece is a Portrait of Albert Durer, the great Master of the Art of Wood-Engraving, and the Engravings are from Works of the greatest Masters, Ancient and Modern, viz:—

Michael Angelo	Greswick	Jacob Becker
Giulio	Elmore	C. Landells
Rembrandt	Topham	Mandel
Raffaelle	Hunt	F. Goodall
Vandyke	Leitch	F. Dasby
Murillo	Frith	Gerwazi
Sir Joshua Reynolds	Dodgson	Herring
Hogarth	Archer	Schreiber
Gainsborough	Schaffer	Wehnert
Westall	Harvey	Sir W. C. Ross
Gerard	Meadows	Parrott
Edwin Landseer	E. H. Ward	W. Harvey
Mulready	Jenkins	Hart
Creswick	Frost	Watts
Duncan	De la Rosbe	J. Gilbert
Frederick Taylor	Cope	&c., &c.

TOGETHER WITH

A HISTORY OF THE ART OF WOOD-ENGRAVING, ANCIENT AND MODERN. By WILLIAM A. CHATTO.

Elegantly Bound, price One Guinea. Forming one of the most superb Ornaments on Gift Books of the Season.

Those who have purchased the Four Parts of "The History of Wood-Engraving," may obtain the additional Engravings, Index, &c., with the elegant Cover for forming the "Gems of Wood-Engraving," for Ten Shillings.—London: W. LITTLER, 198, Strand.

Third Thousand, price Sixpence.

ACCIDENTS and EMERGENCIES; a Guide for their Treatment. By ALFRED SMEE, F.R.S., Surgeon to the Bank of England, and Lecturer on Surgery. This short, but useful book contains wood engravings, & hung up in the Bank of every station by order of the Commissioners of Police, and is already in use at most of the public offices in London. It forms an invaluable guide for the immediate treatment of accidents and emergencies, and it should be placed in a conspicuous situation at every

Published by Mr. CHURCHILL, medical bookseller, Princes-street.

NO MORE PILLS, NOR ANY OTHER MEDICINE

Price 6d, or 8d (in stamps) post free, the sixth edition of

DU BARRY'S POPULAR TREATISE on INDIGESTION and CONSTIPATION; the main Causes of Nervousness, Biliousness, Flatulency, Dyspepsia, Palpitation of the Heart, Torpidity of the Liver, General Debility, Asthma, Despondency, Spleen, &c., and their Radical Removal without Pills, Purgatives, or Medicines of any kind, adapted to the general reader. With numerous Cases, practically illustrating the Restoration of Health to the most feeble, delicate, or abstained constitution

DU BARRY and Co., 77, New Bond-street, London.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW NOVELS.

Now ready, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.,

THE NEW NOVEL, ROCKINGHAM; or, the Younger Brother.

II.

Also, now ready, in 3 vols.

THE NEW HISTORICAL ROMANCE, CONSTANCE.

By the author of "Whiteriars," "Cesar Borgia." &c.

"The best work the author has yet given us."—Literary Gazette

"A romance of much power and talent."—Literary Gazette

III.

ADVENTURES of CROMWELL DOOLAN; or, Life in the Army. By Sir RICHARD LEVINGE, Bart., Author of "Echoes from the Backwoods" 2 vols.

"One of the pleasantest and most spirited novels that have lately appeared The sketches of life in the army are full of point and character Morning Herald.

IRISH SKETCHES, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

ENTERTAINING and INSTRUCTIVE JUVENILE WORKS.

FACTS from the WORLD of NATURE; Animate and Inanimate. By Mrs. LOUDON. With numerous Illustrations. Fcap 8vo, 5s, gilt edges.

THE AFRICAN WANDERERS; or, the Adventures of Carlos and Antonio in the Western part of Africa. By Mrs. LEE (formerly Mrs. R. Lenox). Fcap 8vo, cloth.

THE WONDER-SEEKER; or, the History of Charles Douglas. By M F. TYTLER. Second Edition. Illustrated by Absolon. Fcap 8vo, 6s 6d, cloth.

THE CELESTIAL EMPIRE; or, Points and Pickings of Information about China and the Chinese. Fcap 8vo, with 20 Engravings, price 6s, cloth

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

Just published, with Frontispiece by Absolon, fcap. 8vo, 3s 6d cloth,

THE HISTORY of a FAMILY; or, Religion our best Support.

"A natural, and graceful written story of common life, prevaded by a tone of Scriptural piety, and well calculated to foster just views of life and duty. We hope it will find its way into many English homes."—Englishwoman a Magazine (March).

FANNY and her MAMMA; or, Lessons for Children in Words of One Syllable. By the Author of "Stories for Sunday Children," "Stories for Every Day," &c. Fcap 8vo, with Engravings, price 2s 6d, cloth.

RHODA; or, the Excellence of Charity. Second Edition. Price 2s cloth.

The YOUNG JEWESS and her CHRISTIAN SCHOOLFELLOWS. By the Author of "Rhoda." 1s 6d cloth.

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

ELEGANCE and UTILITY COMBINED

Now ready, the Second Edition, bound in a beautiful lace cover, price 1s, pcfree, gilt edges (2s. 6d. postage free),

THE LADY'S ALBUM of FANCY WORK. Containing Plain, Elegant, and Useful Instructions in Knitting, Crochet, and Embroidery; Printed in Colours. with Directions for Working the Patterns.

"It takes higher ground than the works hitherto published, both as regards the size, the elegance of its exterior, and the beauty and usefulness of its interior" Illustrated Lady's Magazine

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

This day is published, with numerous Illustrations on wood, price 10s. 6d.,

ELEMENTS of ELECTRO-BIOLOGY; or, the Voluntary Mechanism of Man; and ELECTRO-PSYCHOLOGY (secretary of the Nervous System; and of ELECTRO-THERAPEUTICS. By ALFRED SMEE, F.R.S., Surgeon to the Bank of England, to the Central London Ophthalmic Hospital, to the Royal General Dispensary, &c.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS. Paternoster-row; and SHERWOOD, GILBERT, and PIPER, 23, Paternoster-row.

DR. RICHARDSON'S ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY.

Just published, in One Thick Volume, 8vo., third Edition price 18s.

A NEW DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE, Combining in alphabetical Arrangement both Etymological explanation adapted to the Dictionary. Also,

DR. RICHARDSON'S LARGER DICTIONARY, with the Quotations Chronologically Arranged. Two Vols., 4to, reduced to £4 4s.—WILLIAM PICKERING, 177, Piccadilly

---

Just published, fcap. 8vo., price 5s. 6d.,

POEMS, PLAINTIVE and BALLADS. A Few Attempts, by JOHN HARDINGE, R.A., Oxon. London: WILLIAM PICKERING, 177, Piccadilly. Birmingham: H. C. LANGRIDGE

Just published, fcap. 8vo., price 5s.,

THE DIADEM, and other POEMS. By HENRY H BREEN, Author of the "History of St. Lucia." WILLIAM PICKERING, 177, Piccadilly

---

The Twenty-fifth Edition, 1s 6d.

HEALTH WITHOUT MEDICINE. WARTON'S ERVALENTA; or, HABINGTON'S CONCENTRATED FARINA of the ICELANDIC MOSS, and other Chronic Diseases CURED by a Natural, Simple, and Agreeable Means. Confirmed by numerous Testimonials from Gentlemen from eminent Physicians, Chemists, Clergymen, and others. To be had of WARTON and CO., 65, St. Martin's-lane, Charing-cross, London; and through all booksellers. By post, 14 stamps.

NEILL on CATARACT, 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

—A NEW WORK on CATARACT, including the views of the most recent Authorities, and illustrated with a Summary of Practical Remarks on the best Modes of Operating for the Cure of Cataract. By JAMES NEILL, Surgeon to the Liverpool Eye and Ear Infirmary. "And if Mr. Neill had conferred no further benefit on the public than that of attracting the attention of the profession to the safe and certain expedient of reclination, whereby innumerable eyes will be saved from the fearful and destructive consequences of inexperienced operators, he would have deserved the hiarest commendation. He deserves more than that and that he will receive from every practical information, and should be read by every surgeon."—Gendal, Liverpool: HEIGHTON and LAUGHTON (late Grapel, London: JOHN CHURCHILL. And all booksellers.

GOOD FEMALE SERVANTS are obtained at the CITY DOMESTICS BAZAAR, 33, Ludgate-hill, which is conducted by a Lady of the highest respectability. Servants with good characters will find it the best office to get a respectable situation. Open from 10 to 5. Ladies in want of Servants, come in to see.

LADIES are most respectfully invited to inspect the new and most delightful EASY CHAIR ever invented. "The Patentee of this Easy Chair has been promoted to be, by all odds, the most comfortable Chair in the Exhibition."—Punch. Also, the Portable Reclining Chair, Couches, Sofas, Ottomans, Portable Bedsteads, Cots, Cribs, Cradles, Perambulators, Invalid Carriages, &c., at the Manufactory of RICHARD A. C. LOADER, 24, Parliament, Finsbury, London.

CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES of a superior, elegant, compact, easy, and secure build. Now in use from the palace to the cottage. Numerous varied patterns, from 1l to 30 guineas.—INGRAM'S Invalid Wheel-Chair Manufactory, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square.—N.B Illustrated Catalogue gratis.

EVERY THING FOR THE TOILET at MECHI'S MANUFACTORY, 4, Leadenhall-street.—Superior razors, sharp as lightning, and warranted to shave the most obstinate beard; strops and shaving soaps: various and cool corn instruments; razor paste, razor oil, and pens, and shaving powder. Ladies and gentlemen's dressing cases, with or without fittings. In Russia leather, tortoiseshell, ivory, and Japan ware. Work-boxes, envelope and pocket-books, elegantly fitted; also knitting boxes, envelope cases, card cases, note and tablet cases, beautiful inkstands, and an infinity of recherche articles not to be equalled

---

NO MISTAKE.—ABSOLUTE RETIREMENT of her Majesty's Lessees, whose Stock is fast diminishing, but still exhibits a large and choice assortment of Rich Velvet, real Black Lace Veils; Bertlies, Capes, Fichus, Peterines, Habit-Shirts, and Collars, in Muslin and Lace; Jaconet Muslins, Cuffs, Sleeves, Ribbon Robes and Frocks, Caps and Frock-bodies, Valenciennes Lace, the Royal Brussels Lace for Court, Cambric Pocket-handkerchiefs all marked in plain figures, at such prices and of such reputable quality as must have convinced the most sceptical that this is a decided "selling Off" by DISON, at 227, Regent-street, London.—N.B. The Lease of the eligible and extensive Premises to be Sold.

DRAWING-ROOM CURTAINS, KING and SHEATH beg to announce that their New Stock of Magnificent Embroidered Muslin and Lace Curtains are now ready for inspection.

For the convenience of their numerous Customers in the Country, the following List of the Sizes and Prices will be found perfectly correct in every particular

2 yards long Embroidered Muslins, from .. 1l 1d to 2l 11d each 2½ " " .. 2s 9d to 3s 3d "
3 " " .. 3s 6d to 4s 6d "
4 " " .. 7s 6d to 8s 6d "
5 " " .. 9s 6d to 10s 6d "
Very beautiful Jacquard Lace .. 8s 6d to 12s 6d "
Very rich Lace .. 15s 6d to 20s 6d "

Also, New Patterns in Bordered and Plain Lenos and Book Muslins in great variety, commencing at 1s 6d per pair.

KING and SHEATH, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, Ludgate-hill, London.

EMIGRATION FACILITATED.—Those persons who expect their friends in AUSTRALIA to assist them in their OUTFIT might save 25 per cent. by remitting the money into the hands of S. W SILVER and CO. 5, AGENTS in Australia, or to their connexions in the country, who would be named on application to S. W. Silver and Co., in London. The agent's acknowledgment would be received by S W Silver and Co. as Cash at the exchange of the day for the Outfit. This proposal will be also communicated through the Colonial Journals. Emigrants' Fitting out Warehouse at No 4, Bishopsgate-street (opposite the London Tavern), where colonial information may be obtained, and small parcels received and forwarded to the colonies

N.B.—Cadets to India, and Cabin Passengers generally to all parts of the globe (with experienced Female Managers in the Department for Ladies), fitted out as heretofore at 66 and 67, Cornhill, by S. W. SILVER and Co., Outfitters, Clothiers for Home Use, and Contractors; and at St. George's-crescent, Liverpool.

NEW MUSIC.

THE CALIFORNIAN or GOLDEN POLKA, with Elegant Title. Composed by J. P HILDER, for the Pianoforte. Price 2s To be had of all Music-sellers

---

NEW SONG.—"THE SECRET." Price 2s. (sent postage free). This Song is by the Author and Composer of "Will You come to Me Then or Now?" and "Dearest, Then I'll Love You More." The words are unusually interesting, and belong adapted to a very beautiful melody, present a most charming composition.

London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

THE EMERALD POLKA, just published, for Piano, price 2s, by A. McCARROLL, author of "The Insula-killing" Polka. "It has had a Concert and Dancy Scala's Concertina Repository, 37, New Bond-street, and all music sellers

---

MDLLE. JENNY LIND'S TWO BALLADS, "The Lonely Rose," composed by M W. Balfe, and "Take this Lute," composed by J. Benedict, written by E. Fitzball. These are the only English ballads sung by Mdlle. Lind.—Also, New Duets sung by the Misses Williams—"The Myrtle Bower," composed by M W. Balfe; and "Love's Approach," composed by W. V Wallace.

Published by CRAMER, BEALE, and Co., 201, Regent-street

MESSRS. COCKS' NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS

WARREN'S CHANTER'S HAND-GUIDE, with Ten Chants, and the Morning and Evening Services pointed for Chanting. Price 1s., postage free, 6d; to which is appended a list of Organ and Ch

"We need to say to Clergymen of [illegible] Church recommend this book to have a copy forwarded to them. The price being limited, can scarcely be [illegible]."—Ecclesiast.

A VOICE FROM THE WAVES, for two Voices. Written by R. RYAN, Music by STEPHEN GLOVER 2s. 6d.

"The power to "Wreathe the Bowl with flowers and enjoying!" "There is a reverence about this duet that one cannot soon forget: its perfection is, that it cannot be sung by two bad singers, and cannot be sung badly, it is all so complete."—Vide Era

HOLMES'S DICTIONARY of TWO THOUSAND MUSICAL TERMS, to which is added, Five Hundred other Words, by JOHN HISHOP. Thirtieth Edition Price 1s. "There are many thousands of words in this Dictionary that I cannot find in others which cost me ten times more money; and, what is more to the purpose, they are words or terms which are daily used in the higher musical circles." Vide the Cheltenham Looker-on

HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, 18th edition, improved by Czerny. Price 4s., nearly 42 pages, containing 57 favourite lessons and preludes, 12 chants, 60 exercises, and a sacred song. It has undoubted facts that the late J. A. Hamilton never wrote any other instruction book for the pianoforte than these.

AMATEURS, TEACHERS of MUSIC, and MERCHANTS should hasten and procure a Catalogue of Messrs. COCKS and Co.'s Publications, gratis and Castelli Rondi. Vocal and Instrumental. To be had gratis, and postage free. It has been chiefly formed of varied publications, printed from 250,000 plates is the most complete and valuable collection, such as no other house in the world can boast of. Each application must state the instrument for which the Catalogue is required.

HOLMES'S CATHEDRAL MUSIC.—WARREN'S EDITION.—The musical world is respectfully informed that [illegible] edition of Cathedral Music (under the immediate patronage of her Royal Highness Prince Albert) will be ready in a few days. It contains, besides the whole of the original works, additional services and anthems, an Organ accompaniments, a Life and Portrait of Dr. Boyce, and Memoirs of the Composers. In three folio volumes 1100 pages. Price £5 5s.

"MUSIC AND HER SISTER SONG." Words by R. RYAN For Two Voices The Music by the Author of "What are the Wild Waves saying?" 2s 6d.—"As a composer of vocal duets for the drawing-room, we conceive Mr Stephen Glover stands unrivalled. The voice parts are so sweetly blended, and the effects are so well contrived and carried out, that singers and hearers are delighted with the result." Vide Illustrated Lady's Magazine One of Mr. G 's best, and must, from its intrinsic merits, become exceedingly popular."—Vide Vide of the Times, March 3

London R. COCKS and Co., 6, New Burlington-street, Publishers to her Majesty

---

DANCING TAUGHT in the most Fashionable Style by Mr. GEORGE BARNET, at WILLIS'S ROOMS, 41, Brewer-street, Piccadilly.—Quadrilles, Private Lessons in La Schottische, Polka, Valse a Deux Temps, &c., at all hours, to ladies and gentlemen of any age. An Evening Class on Monday and Friday. A Juvenile Class on Tuesday and Saturday.

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase good instruments is at H. TOLKIEN'S, 98, King William-street, London-bridge. H. T.'s splendid Sound Pianoforte, with 6½ Octaves, Metallic Plate, C G Fall, &c., only 25 guineas. An Immense Stock always on hand.

TOLKIEN'S, 98, King William-street, London-bridge.

CLERGY.—LESSONS can be had in this fashionable Watering Place, at 10s. 6d. each, from a LADY of respectability who will be happy to attend LADIES wishing for instruction in or near London. References given and required. M. M., Harmony Lodge, Old Brighton.

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE, 42s per Dozen; 25 Pints, 24s, from Epernay and Rheims. Gordon's Golden Sherry, 30s., superior Port, 30s., Hock and Sauterne, 30s. Old Port, from Guinea shippers, 30s, 36s, 42s, and 48s, according to age. Pure St. Julien Claret, 24s per Dozen. Observe the Address, 26, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, S.W., Regent-street.—N.B. Pale Old Cognac Brandy, 60s per Dozen.

"AS YOU LIKE IT."—Six Pounds of Sterling will be sent to any part of the country, carriage free to all parts of the Kingdom, for 60s. Five Pounds of a superior quality and strictly ordinary strength, is in this case, sent free, for 50s.—ALEXANDER HALLEN, Tea Dealer, 4, Cornhill, and 1, Birchin-lane, London.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE CORPORATION of the ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE give Notice, that the accounts of the several Departments of Expenditure in Profits adopted in December, 1841, they have declared a BONUS on the Sum Assured in the Policies of Assurance that year, for the whole term of life, wh ch were subsisting on the 31st December, 1848 and on which three or more annual Premiums had then been paid.

The following TABLE shows the several BONUS on British Policies for the Sum of £1000 each, which had been Seven Years in force on December 31, 1848

Age when Assured	Annual Premium	Amount Assured	Number of Premiums paid	Bonus by addition to the Sum Assured	Bonus by reduction of the Annual Premium FOR THE REST OF LIFE
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
30	26 12 6	1000	7	102	3 4 3
35	30 17 6	1000	7	102	3 8 9
40	34 9 0	1000	7	118	4 12 4
45	39 0 0	1000	7	131	4 7 3
50	45 7 6	1000	7	130	4 14 3
55	52 12 6	1000	7	149	5 7 4
60	63 12 6	1000	7	149	10 6 8
65	79 7 6	1000	7	149	10 6 8
70	79 7 6	1000	7	188	13 13

Assurances may be effected with the Corporation for any amount not exceeding £10,000 on one life.

The Governors and Directors feel persuaded that the Public will continue to manifest their confidence in this Corporation, which has maintained a high character for security and liberality during a SECURITY AND A QUARTER; affords unquestionable Security by its pecuniary power to "Wreathe the Bowl with flowers and enjoying!" "There is a reverence about this duet that one cannot soon forget: its perfection is, that it cannot be sung by two bad singers, and cannot be sung badly, it is all so complete."—Vide Era

HOLMES'S DICTIONARY of TWO THOUSAND MUSICAL TERMS, to which is added, Five Hundred other Words, by JOHN HISHOP. Thirtieth Edition Price 1s. "There are many thousands of words in this Dictionary that I cannot find in others which cost me ten times more money; and, what is more to the purpose, they are words or terms which are daily used in the higher musical circles." Vide the Cheltenham Looker-on

HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, 18th edition, improved by Czerny. Price 4s., nearly 42 pages, containing 57 favourite lessons and preludes, 12 chants, 60 exercises, and a sacred song. It has undoubted facts that the late J. A. Hamilton never wrote any other instruction book for the pianoforte than these.

AMATEURS, TEACHERS of MUSIC, and MERCHANTS should hasten and procure a Catalogue of Messrs. COCKS and Co.'s Publications, gratis and Castelli Rondi. Vocal and Instrumental. To be had gratis, and postage free. It has been chiefly formed of varied publications, printed from 250,000 plates is the most complete and valuable collection, such as no other house in the world can boast of. Each application must state the instrument for which the Catalogue is required.

HOLMES'S CATHEDRAL MUSIC.—WARREN'S EDITION.—The musical world is respectfully informed that [illegible] edition of Cathedral Music (under the immediate patronage of her Royal Highness Prince Albert) will be ready in a few days. It contains, besides the whole of the original works, additional services and anthems, an Organ accompaniments, a Life and Portrait of Dr. Boyce, and Memoirs of the Composers. In three folio volumes 1100 pages. Price £5 5s.

"MUSIC AND HER SISTER SONG." Words by R. RYAN For Two Voices The Music by the Author of "What are the Wild Waves saying?" 2s 6d.—"As a composer of vocal duets for the drawing

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

SUPPLEMENT.

SUPPLEMENT TO No. 361.] SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1849. [GRATIS.

THE WAR IN INDIA.

SANGUINARY ENGAGEMENT WITH THE SIKHS.

In a late Edition on Saturday last, we briefly noticed the important news which the despatches anticipatory of the Overland Mail, received in town on that day, convey. We now give the interesting details in full. The dates are, Bombay, Feb. 3, and Calcutta, Jan. 20.

The present intelligence from India is, probably, more important than any we have had to record since the time when all eyes used to be directed with such breathless anxiety towards Cabool—when the murder of a British resident, the massacre of a British army, and the terrible retribution inflicted by British Generals (then worthy of the name) on the warlike race that had tarnished the lustre of our arms, aroused public excitement to a degree quite unparalleled in the history of our connexion with India. Another of those murderous conflicts which have rendered our hostilities with the Sikhs so conspicuous has occurred (on the 13th of January) on the left bank of the river Jhelum, near, or, as some say, on the spot which two thousand years ago formed the battle-field of Alexander and Porus. That scene, rich in classic associations, has been the arena of a fierce and protracted struggle between the army of the Punjaub, under Lord Gough, and the Sikh forces, under Rajah Shere Singh—a struggle in which the British have had to deplore the loss of at least 93 officers and 2500 men killed and wounded, four guns captured, and four or five regimental colours taken by the enemy; a struggle which terminated in victory, but which was disgraced by the flight of a Bengal cavalry regiment, and the retreat—as yet scarce satisfactorily explained—of two British corps of dragoons; a struggle, finally, which left both the contending hosts so weak and shattered that it was doubtful which had sustained the greater injury from the conflict; and which had so few of the badges of triumph for the victors that their opponents took up a new position, and fired a salute in honour of its termination. Though masters of the field, our laurels are drenched with blood, and it is the universal opinion that two more such victories would be virtual ruin.

At the date of our last intelligence, Lord Gough, with his army, was encamped at Jamki, waiting in the expectation of hearing of the fall or surrender of Moultan, the receipt of which tidings, it was generally believed, would be the signal for an onward movement. The siege operations, however, proceeding more slowly than was anticipated, and circumstances appearing to render further delay inadvisable, the Commander-in-Chief seems to have altered his intention, and to have determined on attacking Shere Singh's position before obtaining news of the success of General Whish. It has been stated that the long inaction of his Lordship's army was beginning to exercise a prejudicial influence on the minds of the natives in the Jetch Joab, and also that it was expected Chutter Singh would shortly join his son with a strong force, so that it became important—if fighting was the resolve—to fight without delay. However this may be, the British troops moved from their position on the 9th of January, and took up new ground at a place called Lusooree, about five miles to the right, and two miles to the front, of their former camp. Having been joined on the 11th by Brigadier Penny, with the 6th Brigade of Infantry, and having, on the same day, undergone an inspection by the Commander-in-Chief, the whole force moved, on the morning of the 12th, from Lusooree to Dingee. Next morning orders were issued for a further advance, which, it was clear, must bring our troops in contact with the enemy, whose general disposition had been ascertained by a reconnoissance undertaken after the formation of the camp.

THE BATTLE.

The army marched, on the 13th of January (the day of the battle), at half-past seven o'clock, in order of battle, in the following order, from the right. The 2nd Brigade of Cavalry, with the 14th Light Dragoons temporarily attached; Lane's, Christie's, and Huish's troops of Horse Artillery; the 3rd Brigade of Infantry (except 45th Native Infantry); No. 17 Light Field Battery; the 4th Brigade of Infantry; the heavy guns, Shakspear's battery; the 5th Brigade of Infantry, with the 45th Native Infantry temporarily attached, in lieu of the 22nd Native Infantry, at Ramnuggur; No. 5 Light Field Battery; the 7th Brigade of Infantry; No. 10 Light Field Battery; Fordyce's, Duncan's, and Warner's troops of Horse Artillery; the 1st Brigade of Cavalry (except the

VIEW ON THE LEFT BANK OF THE RIVER JHELUM.

14th Dragoons). The troops were drawn up in columns of brigades, with intervals of 100 yards. The 6th Brigade of Infantry (except 20th Native Infantry) was in reserve, 200 yards in rear of the heavy guns. The corps of the right wing were drawn up left in front, those of the left wing right in front. Each corps supplied its own advanced guard, and all paraded as strong as possible, guards joining their regiments. The baggage moved in rear of brigades respectively, the artillery and engineer parks, the field hospital stores, &c., in the rear of the heavy guns. The rear-guard was composed of the 4th Brigade of Cavalry (3rd and 9th Irregulars) and the 2nd Brigade of Infantry, with three guns. In this order the army moved about three miles to the north-west across the country, which was pretty well furnished with scattered bushes, passing a village and Burra Umra to Chota Umra. Here a halt of an hour and a quarter took place, and the baggage was ordered to remain at this village for the present. From this spot could be seen part of the Sikh camp near Russoolpoor, about three or four miles in front, on a low wooded ridge. At a quarter to 10 o'clock the army advanced again, and moved for an hour, passing over about three miles of ground, taking a more westerly direction than before, and leaving the ridge just mentioned on the right hand. Shortly after 11 A.M. the force came upon one of the outposts of the enemy, and were fired upon from a slight eminence above the rest of the jungle, which, though there was a dense small patches, admitted of an easy passage between the masses. The heavy guns (ten in number), with three horse batteries, were ordered to the front to clear the ground, an operation that did not take more than five or ten minutes, the enemy retreating with their guns, but leaving their tents standing. The column again advanced, and marched over the ground on which the Sikh picquet had been posted; but instead of continuing the march in the direction of Russool, as originally intended and arranged, the Commander-in-Chief suddenly changed the plan of operations, brought up the rear, and deployed his infantry in front generally of the position at Moong, thus showing the Sikhs that their strong post at Russool was no longer threatened. No enemy being at the time in sight, though their camp was in full view, and distant only between two or three miles on a rising ground, with the jungle between, the order was given for the marking out of the British camp for the day, and the colour-men were actually engaged in this duty, when, about 2 P.M., a round shot or two from the enemy, which flew over the line of demarcation of the camp, fell close to the Commander-in-Chief, shewing that the place was by no means eligible for a halt. Observing this, Lord Gough determined at once on attacking, without, however, having taken the previous usual and necessary precaution of ascertaining by a reconnoissance in that direction where the strength of the enemy actually lay, and without making the smallest preliminary arrangements for the advance. After a cannonade, which is variously estimated to have lasted between one and two hours, the left or Brigadier-General Campbell's division were directed to make a flank movement, and in doing they got the order exposed their own flank to a dreadful cross fire from Sikh batteries on their left, which had not been observed; and on the 3rd and 4th brigades, the latter being considerably in advance on the occasion, ultimately reaching the guns, they were met by such a tremendous fire that they were obliged to retire with a loss, in her Majesty's 24th Foot, more severe than any it has ever fallen to the lot of a regiment in India to suffer in the field (we do not, of course, include the Cabool massacre). As soon as it was known that these two brigades were engaged, the 5th was sent against the centre of what was supposed to be the enemy's line, and advanced, under their gallant leader, Brigadier Mountain, in the most undaunted manner, through the jungle in the face of a fire (a storm), first of round shot, then grape, and lastly musketry, which mowed down the officers and men by dozens. Still they advanced, and on reaching the guns spiked every one in front, and two others on the left, which had subsequently opened a flank fire on them; but the Sikhs no sooner saw they were deprived of the use of their guns than they renewed such a fire with musketry, not only on the flank, but in the rear of the brigade, that common prudence dictated a retreat, and it was effected with the same determination that had distinguished the three brigades on the left throughout. The conduct of the European and native infantry, who were, it appears, not supported as they should have been by artillery or cavalry, for want of due and proper arrangements, was, to use the emphatic word of several correspondents, "magnificent." The loss of the several regiments engaged—Her Majesty's 24th, 29th, and 61st Foot; the 22nd, 30th, 46th, and 56 Regiments of Native Infantry, detailed at the close of this article—will show how they fought. In the meantime, Brigadier Godby, with Major-General Sir V. Gilbert as a leader, who was on the extreme right of the infantry line, moved forward, and after marching through some jungle for some minutes, came upon the enemy's infantry; the brigade opened their fire, but the enemy were in such numbers that they easily outflanked them. Two companies of the 2nd European Regiment were wheeled up, showed front, and the whole charged, but had not gone far when they found they were surrounded. They immediately faced right-about, kept up some file-firing, and charged, rear rank in front. At this juncture, Dawes' battery came to the rescue, and, having beaten off the enemy, their guns were taken. While the infantry were thus highly distinguishing themselves, and earning unperishable laurels, the cavalry on the extreme left, under Brigadier White, had made a dashing charge, and contributed much to the defeat of the enemy; while the cavalry on the extreme right, consisting of Brigadier Pope's force, with the 14th Light Dragoons temporarily attached, having been taken in advance of their Horse Artillery (Lane's, Christie's, and Huish's troops), were directed to charge a body of the enemy's cavalry, variously estimated at from 1000 to 5000. Instead of obeying the orders given them, they faced about, and, in spite of the energetic endeavours of their own and other officers, left the field (with the exception of a body of the 9th Lancers, who were rallied), and made direct for the artillery; on coming up to which, instead of pulling up, they dashed through Huish's troop, and, without inspecting a waggon and some horses, and directing their course to the field hospital. The enemy, seeing the advantage they had thus unaccountably ensured, followed our cavalry, got amongst the horse-artillery, cut down no less than 73 gunners, who had, by the flight of the cavalry through their ranks, been deprived of the means of defending themselves, and carried off six of the guns, two of which were subsequently recovered, and would have done much more harm had not Colonel Lane been fortunately enabled to clear his troop out of the melée, and pour in grape so energetically that the Goorcharras thought they had done enough, and fled. When the whole was over, the Commander-in-Chief rode in among the troops and was received with every demonstration of joy. The fight was certainly as severe a one as has ever been fought in India, not excepting Feroze-shah, the enemy having such great advantages in the jungle, which they were thoroughly acquainted with, and in their very superior numbers, notwithstanding which they were undoubtedly beaten from their positions at Moong, and would, had there been time to withdraw them from the jungle after the retreat of the enemy, have lost above one-half of their guns; night unfortunately supervened, and the Sikhs were enabled to recover many of their guns, from which it was subsequently ascertained they had been successful in exercising the spikes. The loss of the Sikhs must have been very great, as in one spot above 250 dead bodies were counted. In their night excursion to recover their guns the whelled many of our wounded, and stripped and plundered all the bodies within their reach.

SIKH GUNS, ELEPHANTS, &c.

It is stated that in the opening cannonade the Sikhs were so effectually concealed behind the thick jungle, that the only guide to the British Artillerymen in taking aim was the smoke of the enemy's guns. The dreadful slaughter in her Majesty's 24th Regiment is attributed in some measure to the exhausted state in which the men reached the battery against which they were sent. Almost as soon as they had got to the guns and commenced spiking them, a regiment of the enemy's infantry suddenly appeared in a volley on them. The 24th then, with [illegible] of the 5th Light Cavalry, and 14th Regt. Native Infantry, (forming Pope's brigade), [illegible] and made so much slaughter amongst them, the Brigadier falling along with many of his men. Thirteen officers of the 24th were killed and wounded, and some 500 men of the same regiment likewise bit the dust. An excuse has been put forth for the flight of the 14th Dragoons, it is said they mistook an order given to them to move to the right or left for an order to retire. The Horse Artillery have called for a Court of Inquiry, and it is to be hoped the painful question may be cleared up; at the same time, the precipitate and disastrous retreat of such a regiment cannot be looked upon otherwise than with feelings of the most profound regret. Brigadier Pope, who gave the order, is now no more. The conduct of the 5th Bengal Light Cavalry is scarcely likely to meet with an apology.

A writer with the force says:—

"Brigadier White protected the left of the infantry, Colonel Brind's gun being posted between White and Campbell's division. Bodies of Sikh cavalry made demonstrations on our left. General Thackwell directed a squadron of the 5th Dragoons and 5th Light Cavalry to charge them. The Dragoons willingly obeyed the order, and, under their gallant leader, Captain Unett, dashed through the Sikh wedge and cut their way back. The 5th Cavalry, in spite of their officers, came back in confusion, and intense was our anxiety about the fate of the 3rd squadron. At length they emerged, covered with glory! Two officers of this squadron were wounded, the gallant Unett and Stisted; and the loss among the men amounted to 46 killed and wounded. Such gallantry deserves to be handed down to distant posterity."

During the night of the 13th, the British force bivouacked a little in rear of the battle-field. Next morning their camp was formed. Rain now came on and lasted without intermission till the evening of the 15th, adding to the gloom of the scene, and exercising anything but a comforting influence on the spirits of our troops. During these two wet and dreary days the wounded were brought in and the dead interred; the latter is said to have been a peculiarly solemn and affecting ceremony. By the last accounts, Lord Gough continued to occupy the same position, in which it was an unfavourable place for troops, as well as in other respects. The enemy were seen encamped at Russool (they had abandoned Moong), on a low range of hills, on the right flank and to the front of the British force. The river was behind the hills, and the Sikhs had a bridge over it. The Commander-in-Chief had thrown up slight retrenchments to protect weak points. The force having been so terribly crippled by the action of the 13th, his Lordship had deemed it expedient to direct Brigadier Wheeler's force to join him, as well as to order up the 53rd Regiment from Lahore. It was not thought there would be any renewal of hostilities until reinforcements arrived for Lord Gough's army. A letter of the 19th contains the following:—

"I hasten to tell you that the great Sikh General of Artillery, Elahu Box, sent a messenger morning or evening to say that he wished to surrender himself to Lord Gough, and about half an hour ago the General himself came in. This is good, is it not?

"Two of the 9th Lancers who were taken prisoners by the Sikhs have to-day been sent back to us with a letter from the Shere to Lord Gough, saying that he was not the aggressor in the present war. Lord Gough returned a letter of thanks to the Shere for his kind treatment of the prisoners, and here the matter ends."

Lord Gough's generalship in attacking the Sikhs so late in the day, with such precipitation, and in a manner so disorderly, has been very severely censured by the press. An up-country correspondent gives the following brief but graphic description of the way in which the affair was brought about:—"As I have received no less than three letters from Lahore, all describing the attack of the 'Tipperary Boy,' I have taken up my pen to write a few lines to you, as you may not hear the particulars. The Commander-in-Chief had given an order to change ground, and it was not his intention to have attacked the Sikhs until the next day, but they seem to have enticed him on; they allowed their advanced posts to be driven in, and then opened a heavy fire, which put him into a passion, and he swore he would drive the Sahibs from the face of the earth! Several people advised him not to fight them until the next day, but he would listen to no one, and even said he would put any officer under arrest who presumed to suggest anything to him! So at it they went—every General and Brigadier his own way, receiving no orders—the same as you might suppose the Sikhs doing."

BANKS OF THE JHELUM.

The first Illustration upon the front page is from a sketch taken at about a mile and a half from the river Jhelum, and three marches from that part of the river Chenab where the late action was fought in which General Cureton was shot. The sketch was made by our Correspondent while on picquet in the vicinity of the village of Khaar, near the left, or eastern bank of the river. The mountains on the opposite side of the river are termed the Jamcheera Hills, or Salt Range; and, a few marches to the westward, beyond Pindee Dadun Khan, are the salt mines which supply all the north-western parts of India with that necessary of life. It is in this range, at the distance of one march from the town of Jhelum, that the hill fortress of Rotas is situated.

The Jhelum, Jelum, or Jelum, is the most western, and, probably, the principal, of the five great rivers, which intersect the Punjaub east of the Indus. It rises in Kashmir, the whole valley of which it drains, making its way to the Punjaub, through the Pass of Baramula, in the lofty range of the Pir Panjal. Ten Baighul, at the commencement of January, when the rivers of the Punjaub are lowest, crossed, at the town of Jhelum, on a bridge of twenty large boats, and estimated it to have a greater volume of water than the Indus at Attock. The river, on emerging from the mountains, is first navigable at Oin, about 110 miles above the town of Jhelum, and continues so to the Indus. It abounds in fish, and is infested by great numbers of crocodiles. After a course of about 490 miles, it joins the Chenab; and the channel of the united waters is a mile broad, and twelve feet deep.

DOST MAHOMED AND THE AFGHANS.

There has been no very recent intelligence regarding the movements of Dost Mahomed and the Afghans. All accounts, now very agree in stating that they are in close league with the Sikhs, in the design to overthrow the Feringhee power, and drive them out of the Punjaub. One of our last communications from the far north acquaints us with the rather important fact that Dost Mahomed Khan, of Cabool, has recently had the hands of a general assembly of Mahomedan Chiefs at Peshawur, the title of Ameer ul Momeen, signifying Chief of the Mahomedans, or Defender of the Mahomedan Faith. On this occasion, it is said, the Dost took a solemn oath that he would remain staunch to the cause with which he had linked his fortunes, namely, that of the Sikhs. If the statement now generally current be true, there will be little chance of the British coming to a friendly understanding, or negotiating a treaty of alliance with the wily old Ameer. It is added that the Pathan Chiefs are extremely averse to any nearer neighbourhood than at present with the English—the power they most dread—and that they are most anxious to prevent the downfall of the Sikh kingdom, which would at once place their possessions contiguous to ours.

We give the following letters from some Correspondents in the Punjaub. They supply a few interesting particulars not to be found in other accounts, and also afford a fair indication of the tone which pervades private communications in reference to the recent proceedings of the army in the Punjaub:—

"Jan 19, 1849.

"I have much pleasure in giving you the following latest information from the Commander-in-Chief's camp, dated 16th inst.; it indeed has been a sad business; and it is impossible to predict when our mishaps, and such fearful butchery and wanton sacrifice of life, will end or stop, under such a Commander-in-Chief. Unless the Governor-General recals Lord Gough to the provinces, the chances are he will not only lose the splendid army under his command, which he has already done his best to cripple and waste, but he will so compromise the Government that the most serious apprehension may be entertained as to the ultimate result of this contest.

"I told you Gholab Singh had an army of 10,000 men not far in advance of the Commander-in-Chief's camp, doing nothing, but alive and awake to take every advantage of the first serious mishap that might occur to our army under its present chief; in addition to which, Dost Mahomed has a force of 10,000 to 12,000 Afghans, at a short distance from Attock, ready to co-operate with Chuttur Singh. Chuttur Singh has 14 pieces of cannon with his 10,000 men, but he is not present in person; the wary chief is abiding his time in the hills; he has, however, deputed a Vakeel to offer his nuzzur at Lahore to our Resident; but deep craftiness and the most wily treachery are at the bottom of this proceeding. The Vakeel has been instructed to apprize his master of every single occurrence that takes place at Lahore, and to keep him well informed of all movements on our part. It is extremely strange our Government will not believe in the treacherous intentions of Gholab Singh.

"These are from 30,000 to 40,000 men in arms leagued against our power and supremacy north of the Jhelum, with a park of artillery, varying, according to reports, from 50 to 70 guns.

"In a letter from Lahore of yesterday's date, which reached me this morning, it is stated that the Commander-in-Chief has ordered Brigadier General Wheeler's force to join him, but of course, I suppose, not until after the General has taken Runjeet Singh. This proceeding has been rendered necessary and urgent in consequence of her Majesty's 24th, the 36th and 56th Regiments of Native Infantry having been rendered next to useless. Sir Dudley Hill's Reserve Force of 8500 men will have to be brought into active service yet, as troops are required not to proceed against and fight the aggressors of the enemy, but to act on the defensive, and hold our active, brave, and courageous foe in check until General Whish's force joins, to enable the whole army to advance to Peshawur.

"Our Government appear now to be so afraid of the issue of our contest with the Sikhs (as they have neither troops sufficient to conquer them and hold the country, nor money to pay the enormous expenses of this prolonged campaign), that I should not be at all surprised they will do their utmost to patch up a peace, which will, to say the least, be not only humiliating to our arms, but disgraceful to British feelings. I am perfectly certain, however, that the Sikhs will entertain no terms with us, except they are based on our quitting the Punjaub, and retiring across the Sutlej—this is our god non with them. The same letter from Lahore mentions, 'You have, no doubt, heard of the late awful butchery of human life. As usual, the troops advanced without order or any arrangement. The 14th Dragoons led the [illegible], and, on the enemy's guns advancing, the Brigade of Cavalry [illegible], retreated, afraid, apparently, of being led into another trap like the Ramnuggur one. The Cavalry Brigade overthrew the artillery, and, galloping right through them was the cause of our loss of six guns, two of which, however, were since retaken. Brigadier Pope was mortally wounded (since dead), and [illegible] were [illegible] by the Doolies at the General Hospital [illegible], one Captain, and seven subalterns, were killed; together with 400 men. The 24th, the 56th, and 36th Regiments behaved well, but lost so many officers killed and wounded, that they must be sent back, and some other corps sent to supply their place. There were 24 officers buried the day after the fight, and many more since. The Chief was strongly advised to defer the engagement until next day, but it was of no use. Two officers went from him, and he ordered an immediate attack, left his position, and joined the mêlée, and was not to be found anywhere to give directions. A more undisciplined attack, or less tactics was never heard of. He swears that the first officer who presumes to give advice he will run in close arrest! Poor Ekins was killed in endeavouring to rally the 14th Dragoons. The artillery have demanded a court of inquiry, but I suppose the business will be hushed up, as it was in the 62nd Foot."

A second letter, dated Lahore, the 18th, gives the following extract of a letter from Camp Chillianwallah, 16th January:—

"On the 12th we marched to Dingee, on the 13th we marched again, and at eleven A.M. came upon one of the enemy's outposts. The 3d Light Field Batteries and heavy guns were brought to the front to drive the enemy's cavalry right through. Christie's and Huish's troops of horse artillery, knocking over every one of Christie's waggons, horses and all! They were so crowded among the guns that the gunners could not unlimber. The result was [illegible] among our guns [illegible] they got right through the General Hospital in the rear, knocking over the Doolies and everything that came in their way. What caused this panic no one knows.

"Of the above 1900 killed and wounded, 950 are Europeans.

"Above thirty-six officers have been buried.

"Her Majesty's 24th Foot lost their regimental colour.

"The 25th Regiment Native Infantry lost a colour.

"The 30th Regiment Native Infantry lost a colour—some say two colours.

"The 56th Regiment Native Infantry lost the standard they took at Gwalior.

"Her Majesty's 24th Foot lost 13 officers killed, including every one in the line above the junior Captain! The enemy are now encamped at Russool, four miles only from the Commander-in-Chief's camp. A third letter I have just seen states that Major Loftie, of the 30th Native Infantry, was not killed, but only wounded, and that Major Boswell, commanding the 56th Regiment Native Infantry, was killed. One 2nd Europeans, which behaved nobly, one officer was severely wounded, Lieut. Nightingale.

A fourth letter, dated Camp, the 15th January, states:—"I dare say you will have heard of the battle fought by our army on the 13th inst. It commenced about 12 A.M. and lasted till dark. It was a devil of a battle (the writer is a doctor, and many hard knocks and wounds, as the casualty list will show. The Sikhs fought with the greatest gallantry, and, as for our men and infantry generally, they were quite heroes. The 2nd European Regiment displayed great bravery; they advanced to the charge and drove the Sikhs back at the point of the bayonet; and after this found another body of Sikhs, a regularly organised battalion, armed and dressed like our troops, in their rear. There were also some of the enemy on the right flank. This regiment had to right-about-face and charge to the rear, which they did, killing and wounding a great many of the Sikhs, and took and spiked four of their guns. Nightingale was wounded when about to do this, and Gayner, who did it, had a most narrow escape. The former is the only severely wounded officer in that regiment, but I trust not dangerously, the ball having passed out in coming round the head, but the bone is fractured. One or two officers had narrow escapes. The 2nd Europeans had but 30 men wounded and five killed; the rest of the former, some of them very severely, are mostly in the body and legs. There has been a fearful mortality in the 24th Foot, 13 officers killed and eight wounded, while the men said to be killed and wounded amount to 400. The 29th Foot also suffered much, and the artillery a good deal. All our wounded are doing well, I am glad to say. The doctors were at one time quite within range of the enemy's shot, and a bheestie of the 2nd European Regiment had his arm knocked off just behind where the surgeons of that corps were riding. A spent ball rolled under my feet. Lieutenant Wilson and Captain of the 36th Native Infantry, were wounded, but not severely. Brigadier Pennycuick and his son both killed. I believe we have gained a regular victory, though at first it was doubtful. I hear Pope's Brigade of Cavalry got a kind of panic at one time, and came to the rear, but afterwards behaved in good style: there was something wrong with the [illegible], for they drove us in from the rear and dispersed all the doctors, &c., at the field hospital, where I had just arrived to see if any assistance was required. There was an alarm of the Sikhs having in our rear, and then there was a regular bolt. Such a night we all passed! It was very [illegible] than pleasant. It was so very cold and rainy, with a high wind blowing, and [illegible] two. Several Doolies were captured by the enemy, and the band treasurers of the 2nd Europeans are missing.

"All letters agree in stating that a panic overtook the —— when ordered to charge. I hear on all sides that it would be a wise and prudent measure on the part of the Governor-General to recal Lord Gough from the Punjaub and restrain his ill [illegible] valour without [illegible] of prudence.

"His Lordship fancied himself at Dumpierlook Fair, and was in the thick of it, as the mêlée, and lost [illegible].

"P.S.—The 56th Regiment Native Infantry was brought out of action with 500 men, under the command of its junior Captain, a cadet of 1840!"

"Jan 20, 1849.

"A letter from Lord Gough's camp, received this morning, states that in the action of the 13th inst. we had some 70 or 80 officers killed and wounded, as well as 2400 men put hors de combat; while we only captured 12 of the enemy's guns, none larger than a 9-pounder, losing six of our own horse artillery guns; Brigadier Campbell was wounded, but not severely, in the right arm. Many of our officers had most narrow escapes. Bagshaw, of the 46th Native Infantry, lost an arm, while Connolly, the junior Ensign, had one ball, which grazed his trousers at the ancle; a second ball, aimed at his head, was diverted therefrom by a Sepoy's musket, which fortunately received the shot and turned it off, breaking the musket; and this same officer was nearly shot, for the third time, by a Sikh in a bush, who was supposed to be dead, but rose up and took aim at the officer as he passed with his men. The fellow was, however, bayoneted quickly. Ensign Godby, of the 36th Native Infantry, was cut down at the head of his company, I hear, by a Sikh horses . . . by rendering the jungle several feet deeper and European . . . ing easily the natives on foot in the enemy, who were lying . . . ver . . . under the bushes, and in most cases . . . to be sent. It was . . . ascertained that the enemy actually . . . ed to touch the Sepoys, . . . ers . . . not . . . ed them, but . . . the Lushkar . . . and Europeans . . . the Sepoys . . . respecting . . . Sepoys who would not . . . to the Punjaub . . . an hour were they not supported strongly . . . Europeans.

"In the . . . spoken . . . days ago, that Sir John Littler had obtained . . . a splendid victory . . . the Punjaub. If Sir John really . . . which I . . . not doubt, . . . was a rather . . . Witness Reuter . . . down the . . . Ravee on the 19th; again, Ram Singh . . . at Noorpore. Now . . . not indeed know at the re . . . ports . . . which . . . I am willing . . . I am confident I speak . . . Sepoys who would not . . . to the Punjaub . . . an hour were they not supported strongly . . . Europeans.

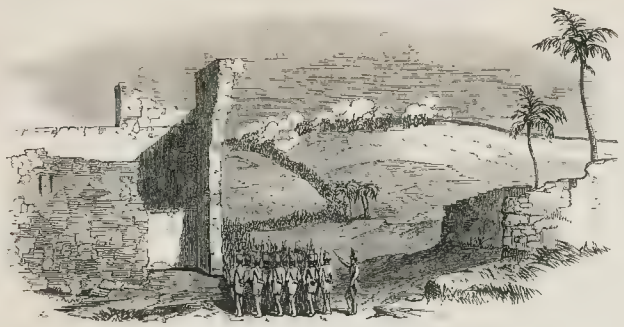
"I . . . that the Sepoys . . . a few days ago, that Sir John Littler had obtained . . . a splendid victory . . . the Punjaub. If Sir John really . . . which I . . . not doubt, . . . was a rather . . . Witness Reuter . . . down the . . . Ravee on the 19th; again, Ram Singh . . . at Noorpore. Now . . . not indeed know at the re . . . ports . . . which . . . I am willing . . . I am confident I speak . . . Sepoys who would not . . . to the Punjaub . . . an hour were they not supported strongly . . . Europeans.

"I . . . that Colonel Sir H. Lawrence was appointed Adjutant-General of the Queen's Regiment, the 98th regiment, probably with the view of . . . ing Sir H. Darroch and . . . the latter to resume his seat in Council. Sir H. Lawrence . . . much anxious for . . . the release of . . . after the . . . Sobraon, and . . . desirous to . . . Sikh chiefs . . . could make . . . over to the . . . Mahomed. Report . . . Sir Henry to . . . proceed to . . . at night with the Dost, if any . . . can . . . such . . . Sir . . . had . . . and assistance in putting . . . this . . . respectable . . . which our Government alone . . . have . . . their . . . to . . . suppress. I hear the Governor-General . . . of . . . the Punjaub . . . as far as Attock . . . and that he . . . would rather not leave Peshawur; and that if terms . . . to . . . with Dost Mahomed, and the latter . . . resist us . . . the . . . of . . . Sir . . . Sir . . . Posh-kur would be . . . over to the old Ameer to treat. Only then such an . . . would . . . To what a miserable shift is the Government reduced . . . coaxing Dost . . . to beg military assistance from the Dost . . . the . . . we . . . war in, I . . . we . . . a state . . . to . . . I . . . that . . . that the . . . will . . . Sir . . . rather . . . than . . . They . . . propose to . . . against . . . the Chief manner . . . rather than . . . the one . . . they . . . they . . . to . . . to . . . the . . . the . . . ones . . . that a native corps only requires a . . . and an Adjutant . . . .

"Here is an extract from a letter, dated Camp Ferozshah, 10th of January :—'On the morning of the 10th we were . . . in the enemy's position at . . . Ramnuggur. . . . Gough . . . on . . . to . . . the . . . right. Whitelaw . . . to . . . and . . . the . . . left. . . . Sir . . . with . . . of the . . . Sir . . . Gough . . . Mapeer . . . had . . . and . . . guns, and . . . shortly . . . that . . . Sir . . . Gough . . . the . . . guns . . . Sir . . . Gough . . . the . . . Sir . . . Gough . . . the . . . Sir . . . Gough . . . the people, amongst whom I was one. These Vakeels, whose names are Hakeem Rai and Dyaram, were received, contrary to expectation, by the General; who, together with Edwardes and Pollock, held a long consultation with them. What transpired 'under the canvas' I have no opportunity of knowing, but what we ascertained from the messengers themselves is, that 'Moolraj was ready to come at the General's bidding.' This is all we could get out of them; under what circumstances he is ready to come is to us an enigma. They came walking from the fort, having come out through the Dooboi Gate, a distance of three miles, but were provided, by desire of the General, with horses on their return thereto. This may imply the termination of some satisfactory arrangement. By to-morrow, or this evening, we shall probably know something tangible, but this procrastination of the Moultan business is really provoking, and we are heartily sick of it.

CAPTURE OF MOULTAN.

FROM SKETCHES BY AN OFFICER OF H.M. 32ND FOOT.



STORMING OF THE "MUNDEE AWA," OR GREAT MOUND, EAST SIDE OF THE CITY.—DEC. 27, 1848.

"During last night 150 Beloochees, under Salar Khan, made their escape from the fort, through the Deo Gate, and gave themselves up to the 11th Cavalry. This chief was sent this morning by the officer commanding the cavalry to the General, who, when he arrived, was engaged with the Vakeels. We took advantage of this, and in the course of conversation elicited from Salar Khan that Moolraj has only between 1000 and 1500 men in the fort; that he has 100 pieces of cannon of different calibres, but not gunners sufficient to man three; that, notwithstanding his conviction of the certainty of his inevitable downfall, he was firmly resolved not to give himself up to the British; that he has almost inexhaustible stores of provisions and ammunition, but, unfortunately for the poor fighting men, no fuel, nor any mill to grind corn with; that he has plenty of treasure (he, Salar Khan, having seen heaps of rupees and gold mohurs), and is particularly careful of it; that the whole of the garrison were utterly disgusted with Moolraj; his making them fight with 'empty stomachs,' sacrificing them without the least hope of success, being the palpable cause of discontent; and, finally, that he (Salar Khan) would pledge his life that, were the British only to make the attempt to enter the fort, the gates would be opened to them, and not the slightest effort made to resist their occupation of it. Such are the assertions of a Beelooch chief, who not long ago deserted Edwardes' force, leaving his brother and several other relations behind to fight, and who have since fought against him. He was wounded in several places at Ram Teerut, and he showed us his wounds this morning, which are not yet healed. He says he was in daily correspondence with his brother in Edwardes' camp, and that it was at his earnest request he had long since made up his mind, and only waited for an opportunity, to escape from Moolraj's clutches. This, he adds, he and his companions had done with considerable difficulty, having to fight their way out with certain Sikhs and Rohillas, who, not daining them in their escape, stoutly endeavoured to check it. Nothing more to add to this, save that Lieutenant Gillon, who has been suffering for some time from his wounds, died last evening at four o'clock. His body will be interred this evening.

"The routes to the several regiments in the Bombay camp have been furnished. Their journey is from this to the Commander-in-Chief's camp, whence we continue to hear very lamentable tidings."

HOWITZER AND MORTAR BATTERY, "MUNDEE AWA."—DEC. 28, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

We have been favoured with the Sketches of the accompanying Engravings of the operations at Moultan, in a letter from J. D., H. M. 32d Regiment whence the following details are extracted:—

"CAMP, MOULTAN, 14th Jan., 1849.

"About the 21st December we were joined by the Bombay force, commanded by Brigadier Dundas, and our army then numbered some 14,000 men, with a very respectable train of heavy artillery. On Christmas-day (and a very dull and dreary day it was), we changed our camp to the east side of the city and fort, where we now are, and on the 27th operations were commenced. Three columns moved to the attack, in order to take possession of the suburbs of the town. I was with the centre column; the enemy was routed from house to house, and finally driven within the walls of the town, in a most gallant manner; and in two hours we found ourselves in possession of the whole line of suburbs, including two large artificial mounds, on one of which, the "Mundee Awa," a strong battery was speedily erected. Our loss was considerable, but not so great as might have been expected. On the 28th, and up to the 2d of January, 1849, when the town was stormed, the town and fort were shelled, and the breaching batteries were erected to batter the town wall. On the 30th December, about 9 A.M., the magazine of the fort blew up, being ignited by a shell from our battery. I happened to be on my way to the battery at the time, about a mile from the city, and saw the explosion just at the proper distance; and it was certainly the most awfully-sublime, or, rather, sublimely-awful, sight I ever saw. The whole earth shook for miles around the fort, and the atmosphere was darkened for hours afterwards by the dense cloud which hung like a mantle above the city. We have no exact account of the damage done by the accident, but the native report is, that 600 lives were lost. I spent the last night of the old, and the morning of the new, year under the lee of a battery, nearly deafened by the constant roar of artillery, and shivering with cold, being unable to take exercise, as the balls fell thickly around us. As the hands of our watches pointed to the hour of 12, and as the distant gongs of the enemy in the town proclaimed that the new year was born, our eight large guns were fired off at once; then we shook each other by the hand, and, wrapping ourselves up in our cloaks, lay down on the ground and tried to sleep.

"After some delay, on the 2nd of January, the engineers having reported that the breaches in the city wall were practicable, a strong force of about 4000 infantry were ordered out to the attack. The whole of the 32nd, the 1st Bombay Fusiliers, and four native regiments, were formed into two columns, and to each was entrusted the storming of a breach. About 3 P.M. the word was given to advance, and silently our column filed through the narrow and deserted streets of the suburbs; while, as the head of the column emerged on the open space between the city wall and the suburbs, our Grenadier Company gave three cheers, and rushed up to the breach. But, alas! it was found impracticable—high walls, not before seen, prevented all ingress, and, amid a heavy fire from the enemy, our people were ordered to retire; but news having just arrived that the Bombay force had got in by their breach, our columns were led round to the "Kooni Boorj" breach (a picture of which I have sent you), and the whole force swept through the town, which in two hours was ours. I wish never again to see a sacked city, with its heaps of slain, and of wounded, and dying lying all around; and its crowds of poor old men, and women, and children, crowding together in fear in the corners of the streets. In two or three days, however, encouraged by our gentleness, the inhabitants began to return; now, in the principal streets and bazaars, the Sikh native shops are opened, and the busy hum of traffic sounds as it did before; and it is only when you stray into the more unfrequented streets and dark courts, and kick your boot against a dead body, that you are reminded of the scenes of the 2nd of January. The nights are bitterly cold, and felt the more as the day's sun is very hot."

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

EXTRAORDINARY GAZETTE.

On Saturday night, a Gazette extraordinary was published, containing the official despatches relative to the operations of the armies in India.

INDIA BOARD, MARCH 3.—Despatches, from which the following are extracts have been this day received at the East India House.

FROM THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA TO THE SECRET COMMITTEE OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

Dated Camp, Makkoo, Jan. 22, 1849. (Extract.)

The Commander-in-Chief being informed on the 10th inst. of the fall of Attock, and the advance of Sirdar Chuttur Singh to join the main body of the enemy under Shere Singh, determined to attack the latter, and, accordingly, moved with the British army from Loah Tibbah, at daylight of the 13th to BATTERY BREACHING THE DELHI GATE OF THE TOWN, MANNED BY EUROPEAN SAILORS OF THE INDIAN NAVY.—JAN. 1, 1849.

CAPTURE OF MOULTAN.

FROM SKETCHES BY AN OFFICER OF H.M. 32ND FOOT.

THE 1ST BOMBAY EUROPEAN FUSILIERS STORMING THE BREACH AT THE KOONI BOORJ, AT 3, P.M.—JAN. 2, 1849.

Dingee, a distance of about 12 miles; from Dingee he advanced, on the morning of the 13th, towards Chillianwallah. He approached this place about noon, having driven back the enemy's picquet, which was posted on a mound, and took up a position in the rear of the village; the enemy opened a fire from some horse artillery on the skirmishers in front of the village, and a general action ensued, which lasted till after nightfall, terminating in the defeat of Sheer Singh's force and the capture of 19 of his guns. For particulars of the action and of the loss sustained by the British troops, which I deeply regret to say has been very great, I refer you to the despatch of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, dated the 16th instant, and to its enclosed list. On intelligence of this victory reaching me, I ordered a salute of 21 guns to be fired at all the stations of the army.

NOTIFICATION. FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

Camp, Mukkoo, the 17th of Jan., 1849.

"1. The Governor-General has much satisfaction in intimating to the President in Council, and notifying for public information, that he has this day received a demi official letter from his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, in which his Excellency announces to the Governor-General that on the afternoon of the 13th inst. the troops under his command attacked and entirely defeated the Sikh army under Rajah Shere Singh, in its position near the river Jhelum.

2. The action was obstinately and severely contested. The enemy was in great force, and occupied very strong positions. They were driven back at every point with the loss of many of their guns, and had by the latest intelligence relinquished all the positions in which they had been entrenched.

3. The details of these operations have not yet reached the Governor-General: as soon as they are received they will be published for general information.

4. The Governor-General directs that a salute of 21 guns be fired at every principal station of the army as soon as this notification shall be received.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India. (Signed) H. M. ELLIOT, Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF TO THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA.

Camp, Chillianwallah, Jan. 16, 1849.

My Lord,—Major Mackeson, your Lordship's political agent with my camp, officially communicated to me on the 10th instant the fall of Attock, and the advance of Sirdar Chuttur Singh, in order to concentrate his force with the army in my front under Shere Singh, already amounting to from 30,000 to 40,000 men, with sixty-two guns, concluding his letter thus:—"I would urge, in the event of your Lordship's finding yourself strong enough, with the army under your command, to strike an effectual blow at the enemy in our front, that the blow should be struck with the least possible delay."

Concurring entirely with Major Mackeson, and feeling that I was perfectly competent effectually to overthrow Shere Singh's army, I moved from Loah Tibbah at daylight on the 13th to Dingee, about twelve miles. Having learnt from my spies, and from other sources of information, that Shere Singh still held with his right the villages of Lukhneewalla and Futteh Shah-Ka-Chuee, having the great body of his force at the village of Lollianwalla, with his left at Russool, on the Jhelum, strongly occupying the southern extremity of a low range of difficult hills, intersected by ravines, which extend nearly to that village, I made my arrangements accordingly that evening, and communicated them to the commanders of the several divisions; but to ensure correct information as to the nature of the country, which I believed to be excessively difficult and ill-adapted to the advance of a regular army, I determined upon moving on this village, with a view to reconnoitre.

On the morning of the 13th the force advanced. I made a considerable détour to my right, partly in order to distract the enemy's attention, but principally to get as clear as I could of the jungle, on which it would appear that the enemy mainly relied. We approached this village about twelve o'clock, and I found on a mound close to it a strong picquet of the enemy's cavalry and infantry, which we at once dispersed, obtaining from the mound a very extended view of the country before us, and the enemy drawn out in battle array, he having either during the night or that morning moved out of his several positions, and occupied the ground in our front, which, though not a dense, was still a difficult jungle, his right in advance of Futteh Shah Ka-Chuck, and his left on the furrowed hills before described.

The day being so far advanced, I decided upon taking up a position in the rear of the village, in order to reconnoitre my front, finding that I could not turn the enemy's flanks, which rested upon a dense jungle extending nearly to Italah, which I had previously occupied for some time, and the neighbourhood of which I knew, and upon the ravines hills near Russool, without detaching a force to a distance; this I considered both inexpedient and dangerous.

The engineer department had been ordered to examine the country before us, and the Quartermaster-General was in the act of taking up ground for the encampment, when the enemy advanced some horse artillery, and opened a fire on the skirmishers in front of the village. I immediately ordered them to be silenced by a few rounds from our heavy guns, which advanced to an open space in front of the village. Their fire was instantly returned by that of nearly the whole of the enemy's field artillery, thus exposing the position of his guns, which the jungle had hitherto concealed. It was now evident that the enemy intended to fight, and would probably advance his guns so as to reach the encampment during the night. I therefore drew up in order of battle—Sir Walter Gilbert's division on the right, flanked by Brigadier Pope's brigade of cavalry, which I strengthened by the 14th Light Dragoons, well aware that the enemy was strong in cavalry upon his left. To this was attached three troops of Horse Artillery, under Lieutenant-Colonel Grant. The heavy guns were in the centre. Brigadier-General Campbell's division formed the left, flanked by Brigadier White's brigade of Cavalry, and three troops of Horse Artillery, under Lieutenant-Colonel Brind. The field batteries were with the infantry divisions. Thus formed, the troops were ordered to lie down, whilst the heavy guns, under Major Horsford, ably seconded by Brevet-Majors Lindsay and Sir R. Shakespear, opened a well-directed and powerful fire upon the enemy's centre, where his guns appeared principally to be placed; and this fire was ably supported on the flanks by the field batteries of the infantry divisions. After about an hour's fire, that of the enemy appeared to be, if not silenced, sufficiently disabled to justify an advance upon his position and guns.

I then ordered my left division to advance, which had to move over a greater extent of ground, and in front of which the enemy seemed not to have many guns. Soon after, I directed Sir Walter Gilbert to advance, and sent orders to Brigadier Pope to protect the flank and support the movement. Brigadier Penny's brigade was held in reserve, while the Irregular Cavalry, under Brigadier Hearsey, with the 30th Native Infantry, was ordered to protect the enormous amount of provision and baggage that so hampers the movement of an Indian army.

Some time after the advance, I found that Brigadier Pennycuick's brigade had failed in maintaining the position it had carried, and immediately ordered Brigadier Penny's reserve to its support; but Brigadier-General Campbell, with that steady coolness and military decision for which he is so remarkable, having pushed on his left brigade and formed a line to his right, carried everything before him, and soon overthrew that portion of the enemy which had obtained a temporary advantage over his right brigade.

This last brigade, I am informed, mistook for the signal to movelin dent'e time the action of their brave leaders, Brigadier Pennycuick and Lieutenant Colonel Brookes (two officers not surpassed for sound judgment and military daring in this or any other army), who waved their swords over their heads as they cheered on their gallant comrades. This unhappy mistake led to the Europeans outstripping the native corps, which could not keep pace, and ar-

SKETCH, AFTER TAKING THE CITY OF MOULTAN, NEAR THE "CHUNDA CHOKE," OR GREAT BAZAAR.—JAN. 2, 1849

[illegible] stately shown at a belt of thicker jungle, where they got into some confusion. And Lieutenant-Colonel Brookes, leading the 24th, was killed between the enemy's guns. At this moment a large body of infantry, which supported their guns, opened upon them so destructive a fire that the brigade was forced to retire, having lost their gallant and esteemed leader, Brigadier Pennycuick, and the three other field officers of the 24th, and nearly half the regiment before it. Lieutenant-Colonel Brookes' native regiment, when it came up, also suffering severely. In justice to this brigade, I must be allowed to state that they behaved heroically, and but for their too hasty, and consequently, disorderly advance, would have emulated the conduct of their left brigade, which, as unsupported for a time, had to charge to their front as their right wherever an enemy appeared. The brigade of Horse Artillery on their left, under Lieutenant-Colonel Brind, judiciously and gallantly acting, maintained an effective fire.

Major-General Sir J. Thackwell, on the extreme left and rear, charged the enemy's cavalry wherever they showed themselves.

The right attack of infantry, under that able officer, Major-General Sir Walter Gilbert was most praiseworthy and successful. The left brigade, under Brigadier Dundas, advanced under a heavy fire upon the enemy's guns in a manner [illegible] to the brigadier and his gallant brigade, which came first [illegible] The right brigade, under Brigadier Godby, [illegible] supported the advance. This division nobly maintained the character of the Indian army, taking and spiking the whole of the enemy's guns in their front, and dispersing the Sikhs wherever they were seen. The Major-General reports most favorably of the fire of his field-battery.

The right brigade of cavalry, under Brigadier Pope, was not, I regret to say, so successful. Either by some error or misapprehension of an order, they got into much confusion, hampered the fine brigade of Horse Artillery, which, when getting into action against a body of the enemy's cavalry that was coming down upon them, had their horses separated from their guns by the false movements of our cavalry; and, notwithstanding the heroic conduct of the gunners, four of those guns were disabled to an extent which rendered their withdrawal at the moment impossible. The moment the artillery was extricated, and the cavalry reformed, a few rounds put to flight the enemy that had occasioned this confusion.

With this exception, the conduct of the troops generally was most exemplary. Some corps, both European and native, acted under most trying circumstances (from the temporary failure in our left centre and right, and the cover which the [illegible] afforded to the enemy's movements) with a gallantry worthy of the [illegible] assimilation.

Although the enemy, who defended not only his guns but his position with [illegible], was driven in much confusion, and with heavy loss, from every part of it, and the greater part of the field artillery was actually captured, the march of brigades to their flanks to repel parties that had rallied, and the want of numbers and consequent support to our right flank, aided by the cover of the jungle and the close of the day, enabled him, upon our further advance, to [illegible] and carry off, unobserved, the greater portion of the guns we had [illegible] carried at the point of the bayonet.

[illegible] General Campbell's division, which had been remodelled [illegible] twenty minutes' attack, until near 10 o'clock, in order to effect the bringing in of the captured artillery, and of the wounded, and I proceed to bring in the rear of the [illegible] which I am [illegible] justified in remaining longer out. The night was very dark. I knew not how far I had advanced. There were no wells nearer than the line of the village. The troops had been extremely employed all day, and there was every appearance of a wet night; rain did fall before morning.

I should have felt great satisfaction if I were enabled to state that my expectations in regard to the guns had been realised; but although a brigade of cavalry under Brigadier White, with a troop of Horse Artillery, were on the ground soon after daylight, we found that the enemy, assisted by the neighbouring villagers, had carried off their guns, excepting twelve which we had brought in the night before. Most of the captured waggons I had caused to be blown up before leaving the ground. Twenty-two were conveyed to the rear by order of the enemy; and his sense of utter discomfiture and defeat will, I trust, soon be made apparent, unless, indeed, the rumours prevalent this day of his having been joined by Chuter Singh prove correct.

I am informed that the loss of the Sikhs has been very great, and chiefly among their old and tried soldiers. In no action do I remember seeing so many of an enemy's slain upon the same space. Sometimes, only one or two.

I have now, my Lord, stated the general movements of this army, previous to and during the action of Chillianwallah; and as that action was characterised by peculiar features, which rendered it impossible for the Commander-in-Chief to witness all the operations of the force, I shall beg leave to bring prominently to your Lordship's notice the names of the several officers and corps particularly to mention it by the divisional commanders.

I have already stated the obligations I am under to Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell and Sir Walter Gilbert, and to Brigadier-General Campbell, for their most valuable services. I warmly concur with them in the thanks which they have expressed to the several brigadiers, and officers commanding corps, and to the troops generally. Sufficiently Thackwell names, with much satisfaction, Brigadier Pope's conduct of his brigade; Major Tevbury, commanding 3d Light Dragoons; the gallant charge of Captain Unett, in command of a squadron of that corps; Major Herbert, commanding the 5th; and Captain Mackay, commanding the 6th Light Cavalry; and the conduct of Captain Moore, of the 8th, with a squadron detached in support of the artillery. He further notices the assistance he derived from the good activity of Captain Pratt, Assistant Adjutant-General, and Lieutenant Tucker, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General of his division; of Captain Cautley, Major of Brigade; of his Aide-de-camp, Lieutenant Thackwell; and of Lieutenant Simpson, Sub-Assistant Commissary-General. Brigadier-General Campbell speaks in terms of admiration of the [illegible] 24th Foot, and by that distinguished officer, Brigadier Pennycuick, and particularly of the gallant exertions of her Majesty's 24th Foot, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Brookes, and the good and steady advance of the 2nd and 45th Native Infantry, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Percival and Major Williams. He particularises the undaunted example set to his brigade by Brigadier Hoggan, the continued steadiness and gallantry of her Majesty's 61st Regiment, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Reed, and the steady trying circumstances, the distinguished conduct of Major Hemyng and the officers of the 30th Native Infantry, and of the 46th Native Infantry, under Maj r Tudor, as also the able and zealous exertions of the Brigade-Major, Capt. Keller. The Brigadier-General also brings to notice his obligations to Major Tucker, Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Army, and to Capt. Goldie and Lieut. Irvin, of the Engineers, who were sent to his assistance, and the cordial and able support which he received from Major Pinsonby, his Assistant Adjutant-General; and he particularly mentions the conduct of Ensign Garden, his Deputy Assistant-Quartermaster-General, and of Captain Haythorne, his Aide-de-camp, further naming Lieut. Grant, of her Majesty's 24th Regiment, Lieut. Powys, of her Majesty's 61st, who acted as his orderly officers, and of Lieuts. and Ad'jutant Shadwell, of her Majesty's 98th, who was with him as a volunteer.

Sir Walter Gilbert speaks warmly of the charge led by Brigadier Mountain against a large battery of the enemy, and followed up on his right by Brigadier Godby, and of the subsequent conduct of these officers; as also of the conduct of Major Chester, Assistant Adjutant-General, and Lieutenant Galloway, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General of the division; Lieut. Colt, his Aide-de-camp, of Capt. Stierwil and Lieut. Macdonell, Majors of Brigade; and of Capt. Thomas and Lieut. W. E. Morton, of the Engineers.

The Major-General further mentions the undaunted bearing on this occasion of her Majesty's 98th Regiment, under Lieut.-Col Congreve; the distinguished conduct of the 2nd European Regiment, under Major Seed, and the manner in which Majors Smith and Way, of the 29th, and Major Talbot, of the 2nd European, seconded their able commanders. He also expresses his thanks to Lieut.-Col. Tod, commanding the 30th Native Infantry, and Lieut.-Col. Bunfield, commanding the 46th Native Infantry, who were severally wounded; Major Coffin, commanding the [illegible] Native Infantry; and Major Cleveland, commanding the 7th Native Infantry, for the manner in which they led their regiments to the charge. Likewise, Captain Stamkhard, of the 56th, who succeeded to the command of that [illegible] after the officer commanding the field battery of the division, and Captain [illegible] and Lieutenant Sewell, his Aide-de-camp.

[illegible] Native Infantry and eight companies of the [illegible] Native Infantry, who were [illegible] by Brigadier Pope, were highly spoken of by Lieut.-Colonel Smith and Mercer, commanding the corps. The Brigadier particularly mentions the steady conduct of the rifle company of the 60th, under Captain Semons, and acknowledges the services of Captain Macgregor, his Major of Brigade, and Captain Morris, of the 30th Native Infantry, who acted as [illegible] orderly officer.

Brigadier-General Tennant, commanding the artillery division, reports favorably of the conduct of the officers of his command, and particularly mentions Brigadier Brooke, who continued the whole day in charge of the Horse Artillery; Brigadier Huthwaite, commanding the Foot Artillery; Lieut.-Colonels C. Grant and F. Brind, Major R. Horsford, and Major Alcock—all of whom were in important charge of artillery. He further brings to notice Captain J. Abercrombie, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General; Lieut. Tombs, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, his Aide-de-camp; Lieut. Oliphant; Captain Hoggan, Commissary of Ordnance; and Lieut. De Teissier, who attended him as orderly officer.

I have, at the beginning of this despatch, noticed the services of Brevet-Major Sir Richmond Shakespear and Brevet-Major Ludlow, in command of the heavy batteries, under the general superintendence of Major Horsford; and it only remains for me to add that the conduct of Major Forsyth, Captain Stevenson and Duncan, Lieutenants Hall and Walker, commanding troops and field batteries, as well as the officers and men of the art llery generally, have been [illegible] in terms of praise by the divisional commanders.

Lieutenants G. V. Cox and E. Kaye, Brigade-Majors of this arm, have been also named by their respective Brigades.

From the engineer department, under Major Tremenheere, I received active and [illegible] aid by Captain Durand, Lieutenants R. Baird, Smith, and Goodwyn.

To the general staff I am greatly indebted. Lieut.-Col. Gough, C.B., Quartermaster-General, and Major Lugard, Acting Adjutant-General, and Captain C. Gater, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General of her Majesty's Forces; Lieut. Colonel C.B.; Adjutant-General of the Army; Major C. Elliot (killed), a valuable and much-regretted officer, Deputy Adjutant-General, and Major Tucker, Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army; Lieut.-Col. W. Gordon, C.B., Quartermaster-General of the Army; Lieut. W. F. Tyler, Assistant Quartermaster-General, and Lieut. Paton, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster General of the Army; Lieut.-Col. Birch, Judge Advocate-General, and Lieut. G. B. Johnson, Deputy Judge Advocate-General; Major G. Thomson, Assistant Commissary-General, Lieut.-Col. J. G. W. Curtis, Assistant Commissary-General; Capt. C. Campbell, Paymaster to the Army; Capt. J. Lang, Postmaster; and H. Franklin, Esq., Inspector-General of her Majesty's Hospitals.

To my personal staff I am also much indebted. Captain F. P. Haines, Military Secretary; Major H. Bates, Aide-de-camp; Lieutenant A. Bagot, Aide-de-camp; Lieutenant S. J. Hire, Aide-de-camp; Captain Gabbett, Aide-de-camp; Lieut. G. N. Hardinge, Aide-de-camp; and Lieut. W. G. Prendergast, Persian Interpreter.

The unwearied exertions of Dr. Ramsy, Superintending Surgeon, and of Dr. Mac Rae, the Field Surgeon, in the care of the wounded, have been beyond all praise.

Lieut. Colt has kindly accompanied me throughout the operations, and was most useful in conveying my orders to the several [illegible] and brigades. I had also the advantage throughout the day of the active services of Lieutenant-Colonel Sir H. M. Lawrence, Major Mackeson, Major Case, C.B., Captain Nicholson, and Lieut. Hamilton, as well as of Major Anderson, of the Madras Artillery, and Lieutenant H. D. Mayne, of the Madras Light Cavalry.

Captain Ramsay, Joint Deputy Commissary-General, with the several officers of that department, has been most indefatigable, and has hitherto kept the army well supplied.—I have, &c.,

GOUGH, General, Commander-in-Chief

LIST OF ORDNANCE AND ORDNANCE STORES CAPTURED FROM THE ENEMY IN ACTION OF 13TH JANUARY

Camp, Chillianwallah, Jan. 15, 1849.

No.	Calibre.	Nature.	Remarks.
1	3.54	7 pounder	Six of these guns have carriages and limbers, and six are without limbers; and of the pattern nearly in use with our field pieces.
2	3.80	7 "
3	3.72	7 "
4	3.40	7½ "
5	3.67	6 "
6	3.80	7 "
7	3.76	7 "
8	3.7	7 "
9	3.7	3 "
10	3.74	7½ "
11	3.74	6½ "
12	3.80	6 "

Two ammunition carriages (one partly destroyed by explosion), one platform cart, 144 cartridge boxes fixed to shot, 16 cartridges unfixed, and 18 port-fires have also been brought into Pasr.

J. TENNANT,
Brigadier-General commanding Artillery Division.

J. ABERCROMBIE,
Captain, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Artillery, Army of the Punjaub.

RETURN OF THE KILLED, WOUNDED, AND MISSING OF THE ARMY OF THE PUNJAUB, UNDER THE PERSONAL COMMAND OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD GOUGH, G.C.B., IN THE ACTION WITH THE SIKH FORCES, UNDER RAJAH SHEER SINGH, AT CHILLIANWALLAH, ON THE 13TH JANUARY, 1849.

General Staff—1 European officer, 1 horse, killed; 2 European officers wounded.

ARTILLERY DIVISION—HORSE ARTILLERY BRIGADE.

1st Troop 2d Brigade—5 rank and file, 1 lascar, killed; 1 rank and file, 4 lascars, 3 horses, wounded; 1 rank and file, 22 horses, missing.

2d Troop 2d Brigade—2 rank and file, 1 lascar, wounded; 2 horses, missing.

3d Troop 2d Brigade—1 sergeant, 1 rank and file, killed; 1 European officer, 2 rank and file, 3 lascars, 1 syce, wounded; 1 rank and file, 6 syces, 31 horses, missing.

4th Troop 2d Brigade—1 European officer, 1 syce, 6 horses, killed; 2 rank and file, 2 lascars, 1 syce, wounded; 11 horses, missing.

1st Troop 3d Brigade—1 rank and file, 4 horses, killed; 1 rank and file, 1 horse, wounded.

2d Troop 3d Brigade—1 rank and file, wounded.

FOOT ARTILLERY BRIGADE.

1st Company 1st Battalion, No 10 Battery—1 horse, killed.

3d Company 1st Battalion, No. 17 Battery—3 horses, killed; 2 European officers, 1 drummer, 2 rank and file, wounded; 1 horse, missing.

5th Company 1st Battalion—1 rank and file, killed; 7 rank and file, wounded.

7th Company 4th Battalion—1 rank and file, killed; 1 sergeant, 2 rank and file, wounded.

8th Company 4th Battalion—1 rank and file, wounded.

6th Company 7th Battalion, No. 5 Battery—1 horse, killed; 5 rank and file, 2 horses, wounded; 1 horse, missing.

Park Establishment—1 sergeant, killed.

Total—1 European officer, 2 sergeants, 14 rank and file, 1 lascar, 1 syce, 11 horses, killed; 2 European officers, 1 sergeant, 1 drummer, 28 rank and file, 8 lascars, 1 syce, 7 horses, wounded; 2 rank and file, 6 syces, 61 horses, missing.

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

6th Company of Pioneers—3 rank and file, killed.

CAVALRY DIVISION—FIRST BRIGADE.

Her Majesty's 3d Light Dragoons—1 sergeant, 23 rank and file, 26 horses, killed; 2 European officers, 14 rank and file, 14 horses, wounded.

Her Majesty's 14th Light Dragoons—1 European officer, 1 rank and file, 2 horses, killed; 4 European officers, 2 sergeants, 13 rank and file, 2 horses, wounded; 2 rank and file, 4 horses, missing.

5th Regiment of Light Cavalry—2 havildars, 1 trumpeter, 3 rank and file, 7 horses, killed; 2 European officers, 1 sergeant, 2 havildars, 11 rank and file, 7 horses, wounded.

8th Regiment of Light Cavalry—1 rank and file, killed; 2 rank and file, 1 horse, wounded; 2 horses, missing.

SECOND BRIGADE.

Brigade Staff—1 European officer, wounded.

Her Majesty's 9th Lancers—4 rank and file killed; 8 rank and file, 5 horses, wounded; 4 horses, missing.

1st Regiment of Light Cavalry—3 rank and file, 1 syce, 1 horse, killed; 1 European officer, 1 havildar, 2 rank and file, 1 syce, 7 horses, wounded; 3 horses, missing.

6th Regiment of Light Cavalry—1 European officer, 2 native officers, 4 rank and file, 2 horses, killed; 2 European officers, 1 warrant officer, 1 havildar, 6 rank and file, wounded; 6 horses, missing.

Total—2 European officers, 2 native officers, 3 sergeants or havildars, 1 trumpeter, 39 rank and file, 1 syce, 38 horses, killed; 5 European officers, 2 native officers, 1 warrant officer, 5 sergeants or havildars, 55 rank and file, 1 syce, 26 horses, wounded; 2 rank and file, 19 horses, missing.

SECOND INFANTRY DIVISION—THIRD BRIGADE.

2d European Regiment—6 rank and file, killed; 3 European officers, 5 sergeants, 54 rank and file, wounded.

3d Regiment of Native Infantry—1 havildar, 2 rank and file, killed; 1 European officer, 2 havildars, 12 rank and file, wounded.

45th Regiment of Native Infantry—4 havildars, 13 rank and file, killed; 1 European officers, 1 native officer, 1 havildar, 53 rank and file, wounded; 1 rank and file, missing.

70th Regiment of Native Infantry—2 native officers, 3 rank and file, killed; 20 rank and file, wounded.

FOURTH BRIGADE.

Her Majesty's 29th Foot—2 sergeants, 29 rank and file, killed; 4 European officers, 3 sergeants, 4 drummers, 194 rank and file, wounded; 3 rank and file, missing.

30th Regiment of Native Infantry—2 European officers, 1 native officer, 10 havildars, 1 drummer, 53 rank and file, killed; 6 European officers, 9 native officers, 4 havildars, 32 rank and file, wounded; 1 native officer, 1 havildar, 2 rank and file, missing.

56th Regiment of Native Infantry—2 European officers, 2 native officers, 7 havildars, 32 rank and file, killed; 6 European officers, 4 native officers, 7 havildars, 4 drummers, 200 rank and file, wounded; 2 havildars, 10 rank and file, missing.

Total—4 European officers, 7 native officers, 24 sergeants or havildars, 1 drummer, 138 rank and file, killed; 26 European officers, 16 native officers, 43 sergeants or havildars, 9 drummers, 725 rank and file, wounded; 2 havildars, 12 rank and file, missing.

THIRD INFANTRY DIVISION

Divisional Staff—1 European officer, wounded.

FIRST BRIGADE.

Brigade Staff—2 European officers, killed.

Her Majesty's 24th Foot—11 European officers, 4 sergeants, 1 drummer, 188 rank and file, killed; 10 European officers, 5 sergeants, 2 drummers, 303 rank and file, wounded; 38 rank and file, missing.

24th Regiment of Native Infantry—1 European officer, 6 native officers, 13 havildars, 2 drummers, 74 rank and file, killed; 2 European officers, 3 native officers, 3 havildars, 2 drummers, 82 rank and file, 1 horse, wounded; 2 havildars, 20 rank and file, missing.

SIXTH BRIGADE.

Brigade Staff—1 European officer, wounded.

15th Regiment of Native Infantry—2 havildars, 4 rank and file, killed; 3 European officers, 1 native officer, 7 havildars, 37 rank and file, wounded.

36th Regiment of Native Infantry—1 havildar, 3 rank and file, killed; 1 European officers, 5 havildars, 2 drummers, 81 rank and file, wounded.

SEVENTH BRIGADE.

Her Majesty's 61st Foot—11 rank and file, killed; 3 European officers, 7 sergeants, 93 rank and file, wounded.

36th Regiment of Native Infantry—1 native officer, 2 havildars, 25 rank and file killed; 6 European officers, 2 native officers, 3 havildars, 66 rank and file, wounded.

59th Regiment of Native Infantry—3 rank and file, killed; 3 native officers, 4 havildars, 1 drummer, 43 rank and file, wounded.

Total—14 European officers, 7 native officers 34 sergeants or havildars, 3 drummers, 312 rank and file, 2 horses, killed; 33 European officers, 9 native officers, 40 sergeants or havildars, 7 drummers, 1,228 rank and file, 1 horse, wounded; 2 havildars, 1 rank and file, missing.

Total of all arms 23 European officers, 16 native officers, 53 sergeants or havildars, 5 drummers, 803 rank and file, 1 lascar, 2 syces, 52 horses, killed; 67 European officers, 27 native officers, 1 warrant officer, 99 sergeants or havildars, 17 drummers, 1439 rank and file, 8 lascars, 2 syces, 44 horses, wounded; 4 havildars, 94 rank and file, 6 syces, 80 horses, missing.

Total—602 men, 52 horses, killed; 1651 men, 44 horses, wounded, 104 men, 80 horses, missing.

Grand Total 2337 men, 176 horse

NOMINAL ROLL OF EUROPEAN OFFICERS KILLED, WOUNDED, OR MISSING.

Adjutant-General's Office, Head-Quarters, Camp,
Chillianwallah, January 17.

General Staff—Brevet-Major C. Elkins, Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army, killed; Brevet Major H. T. Tucker, Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army, contusion; Lieutenant J. S. Pratt, Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster General, wounded severely.

1th Troop, 2nd Brigade, Horse Artillery—Lieutenant J. A. Masson, killed.

3rd Troop 2nd Brigade, Horse Artillery—Brevet-Major E. Christie, wounded very dangerously, since dead.

3rd Company 1st Battalion Artillery—Captain M. Dawes, wounded slightly; Fire Lieutenant C. S. Dundas, wounded severely.

Her Majesty's 3d Light Dragoons—Captain W. Unett, wounded severely; Lieutenant T. H. Stisted, wounded.

5th Regiment Light Cavalry—Lieutenant R. Christie, wounded dangerously; Lieutenant A. P. C. Elliot, wounded severely.

2nd Cavalry Brigade Staff—Brigadier A. Pope, C.B., wounded severely.

Her Majesty's 14th Light Dragoons—Lieutenant A. J. Carets a, killed; Major C Stenart, wounded.

6th Regiment Light Cavalry—Lieutenant A. M. Shepherd, killed; Captain W. E. Boys, wounded dangerously; Lieutenant H. E. Brindley, wounded.

2nd European Regiment—Lieutenant M. R. Nightingale, wounded very severely; Lieutenant J. Bleazmire, wounded slightly.

31st Regiment Native Infantry—Captain W. R. Dunmore, wounded slightly.

Her Majesty's 29th Foot—Major M. Smith, slight contusion; Lieutenant the Honourable H. M. Monckton, wounded severely; Lieutenant H. T. Metge, wounded severely; Ensign G. H. Nevill, wounded slightly.

30th Regiment of Native Infantry—Captain W. H. Ross, killed; Ensign A. C. de Morel, killed; Brevet-Major M. E. Lodge, wounded severely; Captain W. G. Campbell, wounded slightly; Captain K. S. Ewart, wounded slightly; Captain C. F. Fenwick, wounded very severely; Captain J. Morrieson, wounded slightly; Lieutenant H. Sutherland, wounded severely; Ensign T. Peirce, wounded slightly; Ensign J. C. Wood, wounded very severely; Ensign W. F. Leicester, wounded very severely.

24th Regiment of Native Infantry—Lieut. W. W. Wards, killed; Ensign F. W. Robinson, killed; Major D. Pennycuick, wounded very severely, since dead; Lieutenant W. C. Gott, wounded severely; Lieutenant L. B. Jones, wounded severely; Lieut. F. V. H. Jervis, wounded; Lieut. A. H. Jacob, wounded slightly; Lieut. J. W. Delamain, wounded severely, arm since amputated.

46th Regiment Native Infantry—Captain R. Haldane, wounded severely; Lieut. T. Pew, wounded severely; Lieut. A. Combe, wounded slightly; Ensign W. L. Trotter, wounded badly.

Staff—Brigadier-General C. Campbell, C.B., wounded [illegible] slightly.

Staff Artillery Brigade—Brigadier D. Pennycuick, C.B. and K.H., killed; Captain W. Lloyd, Major of Brigade, killed.

Her Majesty's 24th Foot—Lieut.-Col. R. Brookes, killed; Major H. W. Harris, killed; Captain O. Jago, killed; Captain J. S. Shore, killed; Captain R. W. Travers, killed; Lieut. G. Fordyce, killed; Lieut. A. B. Payne, killed; Lieut. J. A. Woodgate, killed; Lieut. W. Finches, killed; Ensign H. C. B. Collis, killed; Ensign A. Pennycuick, killed; Major H. Poynter, wounded dangerously; Captain W. G. Brown, wounded slightly; Lieut. H. Beazley, wounded severely; Lieut. G. E. L. Williams, wounded dangerously; Lieut. R. A. Croker, wounded severely; Lieut. G. F. Berry, wounded slightly; Lieut. J. B. Thelwall, wounded severely; Lieut. and Adjutant W. Harsh'on, wounded slightly; Lieut. A. J. Macpherson, wounded severely; Lieut. J. H. Archer, her Majesty's 98th Regt., wounded slightly.

56th Regiment N.I. Lieutenant A. M'Leod, killed; Lieutenant V. G. C. Sherland, wounded severely; Lieut. [illegible] A. Jones, wounded slightly.

Staff, 6th Infantry Brigade—Captain A. B. Morris, Officiating Brigade Major, wounded slightly.

59th Regiment, N.I.—Lieutenant and Adjutant G. G. Anderson, wounded severely; Lieutenant H. R. Shaw, wounded slightly; Lieutenant W. G. Elliee, wounded slightly.

59th Regiment, N.I.—Captain J. A. Jones, wounded severely, Lieutenant J. Abbott, wounded severely.

Her Majesty's 61st Foot—Captain J. Massey, wounded severely; Ensign J. Neale, wounded severely; Ensign J. H. H. Parks, wounded slightly.

56th Regiment, N.I.—Captain J. Fairless, wounded severely; Lieutenant Interpreter and Quartermaster A. N. Thompson, wounded, since dead; Lieutenant and Adjutant C. S. Wearne, wounded severely; Lieutenant J. D. Ragway, wounded severely; Ensign F. J. S. Ragsdale, wounded severely; Ensign C. J. G. Hay, wounded dangerously.

PAT GRANT, Lieutenant-Colonel and Assistant-General of the Army

---

FROM THE GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY, IN COUNCIL, TO THE SECRET COMMITTEE OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY, DATED BOMBAY, FEB. 3, 1849

(EXTRACT.)

We have the highest satisfaction in communicating to you the unconditional surrender of the fort and garrison of Moultan, on the morning of the 22nd ult.

We received this important intelligence late last evening, by express, in a letter from Mr. Henry Lawrence, Resident at the Court of Lahore, with the Governor-General's camp at the 20th ult., forwarding a copy of the following notification, which had on that day been issued by order of his Lordship.

NOTIFICATION

Camp, Mukkoo, Jan. 25, 1849.

The Governor-General has the highest satisfaction in intimating to the President in Council, and notifying for public information, that he has this day received intelligence that, on the morning of the 22nd inst., when, practicable breach having been effected, the troops were about to storm the citadel of Moultan, the Dewan Mooraj surrendered himself with his whole garrison unconditionally to the British Government.

The Governor-General directs a salute of 21 guns shall be fired at every principal station of the army, as soon as this notification shall be received.

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India,

H. M. LUSHINGTON,
Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General.

CONDITION OF THE FRENCH BEFORE THE LATE REVOLUTION.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

SIR,—There seems a lingering disposition amongst some of our people to imitate the French in endeavouring to promote social improvement by schemes for violently subverting what property. Will you allow me, therefore, through your well-circulated paper, to call public attention to the fact, that prior to the late Revolution there existed a very minute division of property in France, and that this was accompanied by a very desirable condition of the great mass of the people? I will not crowd your columns by quoting authorities; but every one of the following sentences can be verified if necessary.

I would hardly remind your readers that the first Revolution made one of its [illegible] an property which some people there think very desirable. It is a mistake, indeed, to suppose that small farms rank their highest in that period. Many existed before then, land, though owned in great masses in France as in Ireland, was occupied as in the latter in very small portions. That Revolution destroyed great properties. It made that minute [illegible] general which was before only partial. It distributed land on easy terms amongst the peasantry, and they were, for a while, as Michelet has remarked, [illegible] and happy.

The Revolution confirmed and promoted the old attachment to small holdings by its legislation. Between 1789 and 1847 it effected a great equal division of landed and other property amongst all the children. The consequence is, as M. T. Reays, that in France "not more than three million families are in decided [illegible]; that not one million can be said to approach to opulence; and that at most the really opulent people of France do not exceed three hundred." Acc rding to M. M'Culloch, the number of properties in 1815 was no less than 11,211,341. Of these, nearly seven-eighths, or less than 1,628,000 The separate properties of Great Britain are estimated at less than half the latter number. Two-thirds of the whole population of France are proprietors of land. Thus, property and particularly landed property, in France, is more minutely and more generally divided than in any other country of Europe. A compulsory division of property is as much an anachronism with it by the state in one direction as a law to prevent its being divided to interference in another; and that forced division in France has brought about and preserved a general equalisation of property which approximates to the much-desired Saint-Simon and Communism, and may be said, in some measure, to be a preparation for them. For some such division of property, persons here have a vehement hankering; and allow me, therefore, to state some of its consequences.

I pass over the universal addition of the people to agriculture, which prevents the growth of the national liberty, to landowning, and runs numerous arts which are found only where towns are numerous. I pass over the moral and political ignorance of it a great mass of the people, which makes them the victims of superstition and the dupes of political [illegible] and I pass over the misery it has created in frequent conspiracies, insurrections, and revolutions, and combine my remarks exclusively to their physical condition. "There are in France," says M. Thiers, making out a case of improvement, and therefore an unexceptionable witness, "24 millions of agriculturists (chiefly proprietors and their families), whose lives are passed in privation; and there are 9 or 6 millions of artisans and labourers whose lives, less exposed to hardship, interspersed now and then with passing prosperity, are liable to desolating interruptions of employment." "There exist," he also says, "two millions of families who have barely the necessaries of life, and are often seen deprived of them." Agreeing with M. Thiers, M. Pierre Leroux states some time ago in the National Assembly, and he was not contradicted, that there were 2,000,000 of families in France in a state of pauperism: in Paris alone, in the month of November last, there were 300,000 persons dependent on alms. the amount of their receipts on which they were obliged to live was 2½d per head daily: and though sums of these might have been reduced to poverty by the Revolution, it is notorious that the great number of such persons before it began was one of its exciting causes. The peasantry of France, being eight-tenths of the people, have been described by Michelet as working harder and faring worse than a Negro; as devoured by usury, and as made savage by toil and suffering; hating the rich, and most unsafe neighbours. M. Lafitte said of his countrymen, long before last February, "A considerable portion of them eat neither bread nor meat, but live on coarse vegetables, and are hardly covered by a few rags." "The agricultural population of France," says the author of "Analogies and Contrasts," "know not the taste of animal food. Out of 27 or 28 millions, 26 or 27 millions are drudges and fellahs." They are only better off than the Irish, the most poverty-stricken and miserable peasantry of Europe. It is estimated on good grounds—and such general estimates, the results of careful inquiries into many facts, are better proofs of the real condition of a people than isolated cases—that the income of one-half of the families engaged in agriculture, over and above their very miserable subsistence, does not exceed forty shillings a year! What an income for an independent family! On the average, the whole people, according to Mr. M'Culloch, consume daily each 10 ounces of bread, and 1½ ounces of meat. In England, the average consumption is 20 ounces of bread, and 6 of meat. Wherever people are not well fed, we may be sure that they will neither be well lodged nor well clothed. Such was the physical condition of the mass of the French, which, considering the state of their knowledge, and the state of their civilization, was morally more galling than the condition of the worst fed, worst lodged, worst clothed people of Europe.

It is so plain as scarcely to need remark, that the Irish would effect a revolution to-morrow, were they not kept in check by the superior power of England. Now as the French have no superior power, it may be concluded that their similar condition to that of the Irish, while they had a Government at once extravagant, interfering, and feeble, was the goading cause of their political revolution. It was one of the consequences of the general and philanthropic aspirations now so rife in the world, to improve the condition of the multitude, excited into great activity by the deplorable condition of the French under their late Government. At least, to improve their condition was the object avowed by all the Socialist and Communist leaders; and Revolution would have neither motive nor support unless the people were steeped in poverty and misery, and great social benefit were anticipated from changing the form and nature of the Government. For Louis Philippe and his Ministers I offer no kind of apology: they did not comprehend the condition of the people, and they aggravated its evils in more ways than I can describe, and to an incredible extent; but even such a Government as theirs was less disastrous in its effects on the condition of the people than the forcible division of property. Opinions on this subject are, I know, at variance; but nobody can contest the existence in France of great poverty, great ignorance, great social misery, and great comparative backwardness in civilization, in conjunction with a very minute and even fragmentary division of the land.

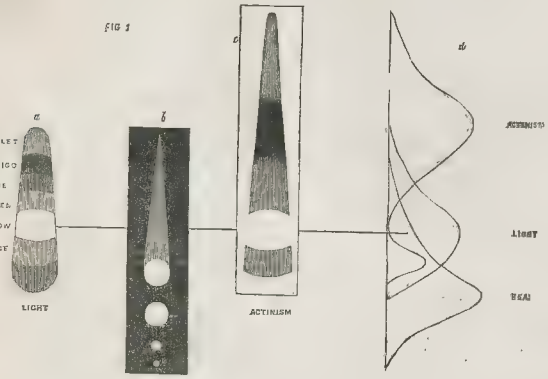
It is much easier to explain than defend the conduct of those leaders of the Socialists and Communists, who, in spite of the lessons of the first Revolution, promoted last February, and still endeavour to promote, a further interference with property, with a view still more to equalise it; but the subject with an examination of their projects, and the effects of their proceedings, I must defer to another opportunity, if you think the subject worthy of notice.

I remain, yours, obediently,

T. T. J.

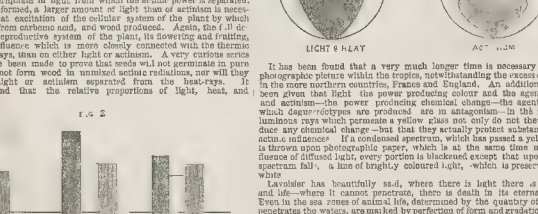
THE SOLAR RAYS.

THE phenomena which the investigations of modern science have shown to be connected with the solar radiations are so curious, and bear so importantly upon great natural phenomena, that we are induced to devote a column to their consideration. We have been hitherto led to regard the sun's rays as consisting essentially of light and heat; and these, indeed, were commonly considered as modifications of one power. Melloni has, however, shown that plates of obsidian and black mica, which do not admit of the permeation of light, are freely penetrated by heat; and, on the contrary, that a glass stained green by oxide of copper,* which offers scarcely any obstruction of light, will scarcely allow of the passage of any heat rays. In this way it is distinctly shown that the physical conditions of these forces are essentially different; and, in a similar manner, we may entirely obstruct the chemical agency by the use of a yellow glass, while a blue medium, which obstructs nearly all the light, admits of the free passage of the chemical radiations.



In this manner we are made acquainted with the existence of, certainly, three physical agents in the Solar Beams—Light, Heat, and Actinism, as the chemical power is called. Their existence may be shown in the following manner:—If we pass a sun-beam through a glass prism, we get a coloured luminous image (a, Fig. 1) consisting of seven circumstantial bands. If we throw the same image upon black paper washed with ether, an image rapidly dries in the forms shown in b, which represents the heat's rays, and proves the existence of calorific rays, which are entirely without light; and if we throw the same image on paper covered with the chloride of silver, it is blackened in the manner shown at c, in which the most decided chemical change is observed to take place beyond the violet ray, where there is neither light nor heat in the yellow ray, where the light is at its greatest intensity, no chemical change is produced. The curved lines (d) show the relative points of maximum influence in the solar spectrum for each power.

From all the phenomena which these solar powers exhibit, it is evident that they exist in a state of antagonism and one is sometimes in a state of superior activity compared to another. Seeds require an excess of actinism to germinate; and they will not germinate in light from which the actinic power is separated. After the leaves are formed, a larger amount of light than of actinism is necessary to produce that exudation of the cellular system of the plant by which carbon is separated from carbonic acid, and wood produced. Again, the full development of the reproductive system of the plant, its flowering and fruiting, depends upon an influence which is more closely connected with the thermic power of the sun's rays, than on either light or actinism. A very curious series of experiments have been made to prove that seeds will not germinate in pure light. Plants will not form wood in unmixed actinic radiations, nor will they flower in either light or actinism separated from the heat-rays. It has also been found that the relative proportions of light, heat, and actinism vary in the seasons of spring, summer, and autumn in the manner shown in the above woodcut, in exact accordance with the results obtained by experiment—the black band representing Actinism, the white one Light, and the shaded one Heat.



Thus beautifully has nature disposed of the constitution of the Solar Beams, that these antagonistic powers are balanced one against the other in exact accordance with the requirements of organic nature. It has been discovered that the proportions of these principles are different in various parts of the globe: light and heat being at a maximum at the equator, and diminishing towards the poles; whereas, actinism is at its minimum at the equator, and arrives at its maximum in the temperate zones. This fact explains the cause obviously of the gigantic vegetation of the tropics, and the gradual dwarfing of plants as we proceed towards the poles. The conditions are represented in the annexed diagram.

It has been found that a very much longer time is necessary to produce a photographic picture within the tropics, notwithstanding the excess of light, than in the more northern countries, France and England. An additional proof has been given that light is the power producing colour and the agent of vision—and actinism—the power producing chemical change—the agent, indeed, by which daguerreotypes are produced are in antagonism—in the fact that the luminous rays which permeate a yellow glass not only do not themselves produce any chemical change—but that they actually protect substances from the actinic influence. If a condensed spectrum, which has passed a yellow medium, is thrown upon photographic paper, which is at the same time under the influence of diffused light, every portion is blackened except that upon which the spectrum falls, a line of bright-yellow light, which is preserved perfectly white.

Lavoisier has beautifully said, where there is light there is organisation and life—where it cannot penetrate, there is death in its eternal blankness. Even in the sea zones of animal life, determined by the quantity of light which penetrates the waters, are marked by perfection of form and gradations of colour: the creatures living near the surface being of high organisation, and rich in colour, compared with those at greater depths. The lowest zone of an animal life which has been discovered is at a depth of 300 fathoms, and around our own shores all vegetable life ceases at about 60 fathoms from the surface. Such are the influences of the solar radiations; it being evident that light heat and actinism equally produce an effect upon the inorganic as on the organic world. Indeed, it may be proved by simple experiments that the solar rays cannot fall upon any body, whether it be of metal, of wood, of stone, or of glass, without producing a disturbance, either molecular or chemical in its surface; but that all bodies immediately have the power of restoring themselves during the hours of darkness to the state they were in previous to the solar disturbance. May we not hence, infer, that darkness is as necessary to the inorganic body, as night and sleep to living and breathing beings. These researches, which have arisen from the discovery of photography, have already led to the elucidation of many mysteries connected with the great phenomena of nature; and the discovery of the new principle, actinism promises to lead us rapidly forward in our examinations of the secret powers of creation.

* An application of this principle is shown in the new Palm House, Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR MARCH.

WHAT IS PATRAS WORTH?

It is a popular remark in the navy, that those who go to sea for pleasure would go to the residence of his satanic majesty for coolness. Without fully committing ourselves to the same assertion with regard to visitors to Patras, we may yet be understood to be of opinion, that it is not an agreeable place of residence. There is a very dreary tower, which represents the defiant past, and a very dirty town, which constitutes the discreditable present; there are churches of the Greek establishment, on the walls of which glare, dismally, paintings, at once watery and sooty. About the town, you may see occasionally parishioners of the church in top-boots. The inhabitants of Patras enjoy vote by ballot, and have not much to eat; tyranny and beef are almost unknown to that happy population. The general elections are distinguished by disturbances. There is a great deal of liberty, and very little comfort; the mob entire, and the respectable residents complain.—King Dobbs.

CALIFORNIA.

In dependently of its golden treasures, California possesses in itself all the elements of prosperity and beauty. Its wheat, maize, oats, hemp, flax, tobacco, and potatoes; its magnificent timber; its mines of quicksilver and iron; its luxuriant pastures; its cattle, sheep, horses, and mules; its splendid river carriage all these combine to render it peculiarly valuable in the settlers eyes; while the beauty of its scenery, its mountains, valleys, streams, and lakes—its rich botany and flora—invest it with attraction for the traveller. At present, however, it is not inhabited as it is—undeveloped as it is—its resources—a nameless multitude throngs its plains and mountains, toiling in search of gold. All else is forgotten; and the name of Alta California is never connected with any idea save that of the precious metal. Bentley's Magazine.

FLOWER MARKETS OF PARIS.

There are, or there were, three principal Marchés aux Fleurs in Paris—one on the Quay, one on the Boulevard St. Martin, and one on the Place de la Madeleine. These three flower-markets, like everything else in this world, have their own caste, their own fashion, and rank. Getting into railway phraseology as we are, we may designate them as first, second, and third classes. That on the Place de la Madeleine is the first-class, at least in point of price, and therefore it appertains more especially to first-class people; that on the Boulevard is the second-class flower-market, and that on the Quay a third-class, where you may find a flower to answer al. the purposes a flower was designed for, and pay a third-class price for it. Flowers are the sole luxury of the poor and hard-working; for young women who pass long summer days at ceaseless needlework, how sweet is it to repose their eyes a moment on a little verdure; to cast a glance now and then on an opening bud, or inhale the fragrance breathed forth from open petals, even on the noisome air of a city lodging! The pale mechanic places a pot of mignonette in his window, and sickly geraniums screen out the little air that can enter a London attic. A superficially wheh gives a momentary happiness should be allowed to pass for a necessity. But in France flowers are a necessity to the working people; the humblest housekeeper, when she carefully appropriates her purse to sundry necessaries, reserves a sou for the modest bouquet which is to be laid over her other purchases.—Fraser's Magazine.

BLUE AND WHITE JASPER.

We are glad to see an extensive revival of the beautiful blue and white jasper ornaments which Flaxman designed for Wedgewood. There is often a variation of a hundred per cent. in the value of precisely the same article. The public stars and understraw. It is simply that one article is compounded without retouching by hand, and that the other has been perfected by costly hand-labour.—Journal of Design.—No. 1.

A LOVE-SICK POPULATION

I suppose there is scarcely any man who reads this or any other novel but has been tantlized in love, some time or the other, by fate, and circumstances, by falsehood of women, or his own fault. Let that worthy friend recal his own sensations under the circumstances, and apply them as illustrative of Mr. Pen's anguish. Ah! what weary nights and sickening fevers! Ah! what mad desires dashing up against some rock of obstruction or indifference, and flung back again from the unimpressionable granite! If a list could be made this very night in London of the groans, thoughts, imprecations of tossing lovers, what a catalogue it would be! I wonder what a per centage of the male population of the metropolis will be lying awake at two or three o'clock to-morrow morning, counting the hours as they go by knelling dreary, and rolling from left to right, restless, yearning, and heart-sick? What a pang it is! I never knew a man die of love, certainly; but I have known a twelve-stone man go down to nine stone five under a disappointed passion, so that pretty nearly a quarter of him may be said to have perished—and that is no small portion. He has come back to his old size subsequently; perhaps, is bigger than ever: very likely, some new affection has closed round his heart and ribs, and made them comfortable—and young Pen is a man who will console himself, like the rest of us.—Pendennis.

THE AUTHOR OF 'LETTS'S DIARY'

His genius burst upon the world, full pruned (like Minerva), one Christmas, when the first issue of his immortal "Diary" took place, on Cornhill. And ever a year since has added to his well-earned popularity. In his pages, as the year closes, the venturous merchant, the recluse scholar, the persevering lover, the careful trader, and the wily lawyer, find a true register of their most secret wishes, their most cherished endeavours. There, too, they see what life is worth, and there they are taught by experiences that past to meditate upon the future. Mr. Letts has traced no line that does not tend to the elevation of our fellow either; and may Love's pure over his book equally obtain from blotting it. Extreme purity is the characteristic of Mr. Letts's pages, and we know no work which we can more safely put into the hands of a child, either at one and of the year or the other.—Man in the Moon

THE INTERIOR OF AUSTRALIA.

The interior of Australia, in spite of the numerous expeditions that have of late years been undertaken, yet remains a question to be discussed—all set at rest by future travellers. The centre of that vast island, which some suppose to have been formed by an archipelago, some to consist of a great belt of sand encircling an undiscovered sea, has given rise to more enquiry than perhaps any other geographical problem. The adventurous spirit of a Mungo Park might, perhaps, have unravelled the difficult question. We have no such travellers now. Few men would care to toil, a one and unprotected, through so savage a wilderness as that which the explorer must traverse in order to penetrate the remoteness of Australia. The danger of the enterprise deters men from it; and, perhaps, the character of the country is less propitious to the adventurer than are the wild solitudes of Africa. Scarcity of provisions and water, the risk of hostile collision with the natives, the inhospitable nature of the country—these are dangers and obstacles which induce the explorer to set forth attended by a numerous company, and furnished with cumbrous waggons and other means of conveyance. These obstruct the progress, while they increase the cost of the traveller, but are, perhaps, unavoidable evils, when we consider the character of the little-known districts of the Australian continent.—Paul's Rhinoceros adopts etc.

PATRONAGE OF THE GREAT.

Why do we hear such tirades about the ingratitude of men, who, being once assisted by others—their inferiors in everything save gold—soar above the low roosting of toadyism, and rise into personal independence? Let us remember that the contract was never a fair one, and that a whole life's degradation is a heavy sum to pay for a dinner with his Grace, or a cup of tea with her Highness. "My Lord," I am aware, thinks differently; and it is one of the very pleasant weaknesses of his high station to fancy that little folk are dependent upon him,—that the homage they obtain among their fellows by his patronage is public, or by his most careless nod in the street. But "My Lord" does not know that this is a paper currency, that represents no capital; that it is not convertible at will, and is never a legal tender; and, consequently, as a means of acting Lord sets services, is about as honest a payment as a flash note. Con Cregan, the Irish Gil Blas.

THE END OF A "MAN MADE OF MONEY."

The Man of Money sat alone in his garret. Evening closed in, and the moon rose, and lo! and reproachfully at its miser. The same moon that looked so tenderly upon millions; the same moon that shone upon the silvery sails of the Halcyon, flying like a sea-bird to its home. The Man of Money started in his chair "What, that?" The garret door opened. "You, Ivy! not?"—"I," answered the slave Fatima. "Well? Has it come?" cried the master.—"Here it is," answered the servant, and she laid a letter upon the table.—"Well, now for their contents!" so leaned the Man of Money. "Go, while I read it," and the servant obeyed. "Sly, dog; a light! I cannot read else. Do you hear? A light!" The fellow came not in; but his voice was heard without: "There is a candle on the table, and paper prepared to light it." Most precious paper! The heart's flesh and blood of the Man of Money. For the devilish serving-man had folded a note (how obtained, can it matter?) a note sealed from the breast of his master; a piece of money, a part of the damned Jericho, sympathising with him. The Man of Money took the paper—the devil, with his ear upturned, crept closer to the door—and thrust it amidst the dying coals. A moment, and the garret is rent as with a lightning flash. Yelling, and all on fire, the Man of Money falls prostrate, with hell in his face. Each sin appears, but not a sound of mercy. And the fire communicated by the sympathy of the living note the flesh of his flesh—like a snake of flame, glides up his limbs, devouring them. And so he is consumed. A minute, and the Man of Money is a thin, black paper ash. Now, the night wind stirs it; and now, a sudden breeze carries the viscous corpse away, fluttering in to dust impalpable. And at the moment, the possessions of Jericho—all he had bought with his gold and blood, and sorrow—all was blasted and shudder, consumed to ashes. The pictures crept in dust from the walls; the walls crumbled; the very gold the wretch had hoarded became as nought. Candlestick looked at his diamond ring—the gift of Jericho and it was a speck of charcoal. Bones and Pharaoh, drawing forth their golden snuff-boxes, found in their hands two lumps of soot. Mrs Jericho and her daughters were alike disenchanted. The very moment Jericho passed away in flame, they found themselves in garments of tinder. And thus were all things of the Man made of Money—things of dust and ashes.—A Man made of Money

GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS

At the meeting of the Association of American Geologists and Naturalists, held at Boston, in 1847, Professor S. S. Haldeman stated that an insect was sent to him from Rio, by Dr. J. C. Reinhardt, with information that lots or an allied species had been seen by him on board the United States' ship Constitution, in Coquimbo China, and subsequently in all the ports of the Pacific, the ship touching at the Sandwich Islands and Western Mexico, and passing round Cape Horn and Brazil—a wider geographical distribution than has heretofore been given to this genus. The insect proves to be an Ectobius; and its extensive distribution is attributable to the fact that this genus is parasitic on the Blatta (or cockroach), which is known to be extensively abundant upon ships between the tropics.—Sharpe's London Journal.

BILLS IN PARLIAMENT.

—A bill "to Facilitate the Transfer of Real Property" has just been introduced, and is to apply to England alone. It proposes that a registrar of deeds shall be appointed by the Crown, who shall receive documents for registration, and subsequently retain or re-deliver them, at the option of the parties by whom they are deposited. All persons executing any land or encumbrance are to deposit proper maps and specifications. Searches of the registry are to be made on the requisition of parties giving proof of interest in the estate, and paying the requisite fees. The fees for registration are to be graduated according to the extent and nature of the property; and any surplus, after payment of the salary of the registrar and the expenses of the office, is to be carried to the Consolidated Fund. Owners of lands, in registering such lands, must register all the incumbrances, &c., which may exist at the time. All subsequent transfers must be registered, or they will be inoperative as against any person claiming under a registered title. In cases where the owner, from accidental or other circumstances, is not in possession of the title deeds, he may register with such explanatory statements as the registrar shall approve of. Persons holding lease may register such liens in case the owner of the lands shall have omitted to do so. Any wilful misrepresentations, with the view of gaining a fictitious title, is to be felony. All transfers of and registered under the act are to be made either by a document, which shall be registered, or by the transferor signing in the books of the registry an acknowledgment of the transfer and of the consideration thereof. No new encumbrances are to be legal unless registered. Owners of land in undisturbed possession for thirty years may be registered as absolute owners, provided they shall have given due notice in the Gazette; and their title thenceforth is to be beyond question. Encumbrances under the act in the case of overdue claims are to have the power of entering into possession and of effecting sales. Lands registered under the act need not be registered under any other acts.

LIFE POLICIES.—A bill is now before Parliament "to make life policies of assurance assignable at law" in Great Britain and Ireland, in the same manner as they are assignable in Scotland. The bill provides that a memorandum from the party assigning the policy attested by one witness shall be sufficient notice to the assurance office and to all persons, and that a memorandum on the back of the policy duly stamped, and executed also in the presence of a witness, shall be a sufficient assignment of such policy, with or without a separate deed.

THE FORT OF ATTOCK.

FROM SKETCHES BY A CORRESPONDENT.

PART OF THE FORT OF ATTOCK, FROM THE LEFT BANK OF THE INDUS.

THE Fort of Attock (we learn by the recent Mail) has been surrendered to the Affghans, who, it is stated, pandered the town, and committed many atrocities. Lieutenant Herbert made an endeavour to escape down the Indus, but fell into the hands of Chuttur Singh. Captain Abbot is still at large, but there are no recent tidings of his whereabout. Major and Mrs. Lawrence and their children are in the power of the rebel chief. It is said Sir H. Lawrence is very anxious to prevent Dost Mahomed obtaining possession of his brother, as he has an "ancient grudge" against him, which he would not fail to "feed fat" were he to secure his person.

By aid of an obliging Correspondent, we are enabled to present our readers with the two annexed Views of this important point. Of the town and fortress of Attock, we find the following interesting details in Thornton's valuable "Gazetteer:"—

"Attock is a fort and small town in the Punjaub, on the left or east bank of the Indus, 942 miles from the sea, and close below the place where it receives the water of the Khabool river, and first becomes navigable. The name, signifying obstacle, is supposed to have been given to it under the presumption that no scrupulous Hindoo would proceed westward of it; but this strict principle, like many others of similar nature, is little acted on. Some state that the name was given by the Emperor Akbar, because he here found much difficulty in crossing the river. The river itself is at this place frequently by the natives called Attock. Here is a bridge, formed usually of from twenty to thirty boats across the stream, at a spot where it is 537 feet wide. In summer, when the melting of the snows in the lofty mountains to the north raises the stream so that the bridge becomes endangered, it is withdrawn, and the communication is then effected by means of a ferry. The banks of the river are very high, so that the enormous accession which the volume of water receives during inundation scarcely affects the breadth, but merely increases the depth. The rock forming the banks is of a dark-coloured slate, polished by the force of the stream, so as to shine like black marble. Between these, "one clear blue stream shot past." The depth of the Indus here is thirty feet in the lowest state, and between sixty and seventy in the highest, and runs at the rate of six miles an hour. There is a fort at some distance above the confluence of the river of Kabool; but the extreme coldness and rapidity of the water render it at all times very dangerous, and, on the slightest inundation, quite impracticable. The bridge is supported by an association of boatmen, who receive the revenue of a village allotted for this purpose by the Emperor Akbar, and secured to them by the Sikh government at present holding the place. They also receive a small daily pay as long as the bridge stands, and levy a toll on all passengers. On the right bank, opposite Attock, is Khyrabad, a fort, built, according to some, by the Emperor Akbar, according to others, by Nadir Shah. This locality is, in a military and commercial point of view, of much importance, as the Indus is here crossed by the great route which, proceeding from Kabool eastward through the Khyber Pass into the Punjaub, forms the main line of communication between Affghanistan and Northern India. The river was here repeatedly crossed by the British armies during the late military operations in Affghanistan; and here, according to the general opinion, Alexander, subsequently Timur, the Jagatayan conqueror, and, still later, Nadir Shah, crossed; but there is much uncertainty on these points. The fortress was erected by the Emperor Akbar, in 1581, to command the passage; but, though strongly built of stone on the high and steep bank of the river, it could offer no effectual resistance to a regular attack, being commanded by the neighbouring heights. Its form is that of a parallelogram: it is 800 yards long and 400 wide. The town, which is inclosed within the walls of the fort, was formerly considerable, but has now gone greatly to decay. The population is estimated by Burnes at 2000. Runjeet Singh obtained possession of Attock with his characteristic trickery, having by a bribe induced the Affghan commander to surrender it to him."

THE INDIAN ARMY.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR CHARLES JAMES NAPIER (who has just been appointed to the command of our Indian Army, a few days since published a striking letter on the Baggage Corps formed by him in Scinde, and urging its adoption throughout the army. The evils of the present system are thus shown:—

Suppose the army in march, and to consist of 10,000 fighting men, and that an enemy attacks the fighting men and camp-followers, amounting in the mass to 40,000 or 60,000 men, of which 30,000 or 50,000 are unorganised, unmanageable camp-followers; suppose them to be attacked suddenly, and that when so attacked, they all rush back upon the column of fighting men, as they always do, and always will do, until well organised! When you have painted this pretty picture in your mind—this picture of noise, confusion, danger, and slaughter—I will ask you how the column of 10,000 fighting men are to fight? borne down by multitudes—confused by noise—how are they to form in order of battle? If once, by the exertion of their officers, they do form, how are they to fire?—on their own followers! their own animals! What may happen, no one can tell; but human foresight says that the whole will stand a fair chance of being utterly defeated. It is said that this took place, and caused, in a great measure, the Cabul massacre. I can easily believe it.

The following passages are full of import and meaning:

"The Indian army, when well commanded, is indomitable: it is capable of subjugating all the countries between the Black and Yellow Seas. The population from which it is drawn is so numerous and warlike the land so wealthy that the noble Indian army may vie with any force existing, in numbers, courage, and equipment. Its discipline and intelligence are in proportion. The European officers are all English, Irish, and Scotch gentlemen; whose honour and courage have created in their troops such an intrepid spirit as to render India secure against every evil from which an army can protect a country."

Sir Charles refers to the Punjaub as "a large country full of rivers, mountains, climates, plains, deserts, supplies scarce, and a hostile, well-armed, brave people, apparently resolved to wage a partisan warfare." In concluding the letter, the gallant writer emphatically recurs to the army in India, as "in every way worthy of the vast empire that it won and holds - holds by discipline! Let not, then, the word become an empty boast. Let it not lose its reality. Let not victory lull our soldiers to sleep. Let every British officer recollect that powerful nations surround our Indian empire; that they are rapidly acquiring our military system, our tactics, our arms. Let him compare our earlier battles with our last: Plassy with Feroshahur and Sobraon, setting our losses in killed and wounded at each battle in juxta-position. Let us look to these matters, that we may not have to exclaim with Pyrrhus at Asculum 'Another such victory will undo us.'"

NORTHERN EXTREMITY OF THE FORT OF ATTOCK, FROM THE LEFT BANK OF THE INDUS.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1849.—SUPPLEMENT

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 362.—Vol. XIV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1849. [Sixpence.

LOCAL AND GENERAL TAXATION.

MR. DISRAELI'S motion, which was considered by the tenant-farmers of England as framed for their especial benefit and relief, has taken a shape which no one anticipated a few weeks ago. The champion of the agricultural interest neither proposes the re-imposition of the Corn Law, nor the abolition of the Malt Tax. He abstains from advocating the one, and dissuades his party from pressing the other. His plan for the relief of agriculture is the transference to the Consolidated Fund of one-half of the burdens at present borne by real property. He has opened up the important question of Local Taxation. He has endeavoured to persuade the tenant-farmers of England that they will be the gainers by the change; and he has sought to impress upon the country generally, that such a change, while it benefits agriculture more especially, will inflict no injustice upon the tax-paying community. The question is a wide one; it needs investigation.

The tenant-farmers have a notion, somehow or other, that agriculture is unfairly and unduly taxed. Perhaps it is the Malt Tax which is at the bottom of this idea; but, in considering Mr. Disraeli's plan, we need say nothing upon this point, as it does not enter into his calculations. The burdens alleged by Mr. Disraeli are burdens, not upon agriculture exclusively, but upon real as distinguished from personal estate. He is of opinion that if personal property were rated for the purposes of local taxation, relief would be afforded to all the owners and occupiers of real property, and, of course, to the great body of land owners and land occupiers. He refrains, however, from advocating a direct rating of personal property for the purpose—preferring to make it liable by the indirect method of relieving real estate at the expense of the Consolidated Fund. The local burdens of which he more especially complains, are poor rates, highway rates, county rates, church rates, and the land tax. The total amount of these various rates for the year terminating at Lady Day, 1848, was £12,000,000 sterling. His argument is, that all the objects for which these rates are levied are national rather than local; that the support of the poor is a national not a local duty; that the State is as much interested in good roads in every part of the country, as the various localities through which the roads may happen to pass; that the building and maintenance of prisons, and the expense of the administration of justices should not fall upon local districts, but upon the nation collectively; and that the ecclesiastical fabrics of the country should be maintained in the same manner. Every one of these assertions will be, and has been, challenged in a manner more or less emphatic. It is well, however, that Mr. Disraeli has made them, because the subject deserves enquiry, and because the truth cannot fail to be elicited by the discussion.

There can be no doubt that the support of the poor is a very grievous burden upon the real property of this country. The pauperism of last year amounted to upwards of one million eight hundred thousand souls. The chief and paramount duty of the State is to diminish that fearful amount of unproductive voracity. The interest of the nation is that pauperism should be extinguished; or, if such a happy result be not possible, that its amount should be reduced. It is to secure this all-important object, that the rates have been localised. A national system of taxation for the support of the poor would inevitably lead to the increase of pauperism. When local proprietors find that they must feed their own poor, either as productive labourers or as unproductive paupers, they choose the former alternative as a matter of course, wherever it is possible to do so. A national system would remove this spur from their sides, and the nation would speedily find itself overwhelmed with a flood of pauperism, as difficult to assuage as the pauperism of Munster and Connaught. A poor-law upon the present English principle of local responsibility would have been the salvation of the west of Ireland, if introduced a century ago. The bogs of those unhappy regions would by this time have been covered with smiling hamlets and waving corn-fields; and the landlords would not have been ruined by the inordinate increase of a potato-feeding, pauper-breeding peasantry. The people would have lived upon wages, and not upon the scanty produce of potato patches, and the whole nation would have been the better. It is local pressure and local liability that diminish pauperism, and that provide employment for the poor. Mr. Disraeli himself seems to be aware of the fact; for he does not propose to relieve the local proprietors and occupiers of the whole burden, but only of the half of it. Neither does he propose to assess personal property—or, as the Scotch call it, "means and substance" for the support of the poor. The difficulties in the way are too many and too serious, and he confesses them. We shall see hereafter what the agricultural body would gain by the change which he proposes.

NIGHT SCENE FROM THE CARNIVAL AT ROME.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

As regards the repair of the roads for which the highway rate is levied, it does not seem very clear that the nation should pay any portion of it. The toll upon turnpike-roads is a quite sufficient tax upon the public; and, unless the farmers of England are called upon to contribute to the paving of Oxford-street and Cornhill, which they are free to use whenever they come to town, we do not see upon what principle the tenant-farmer of Oxford-street or the merchants of Cornhill should be called upon to pay for the maintenance of roads that are necessary for the transport of agricultural produce, and without which, remunerative farming would be next to impossible. The real property of any neighbourhood or district is benefitted by a road, and ought to pay for it.

These observations apply more particularly to by-ways and district roads; for we are of opinion that the great highways of a nation should be national property. But as long as the inhabitants of towns and cities pay for the paving of their own streets, and do not come upon the national purse for any portion of the expense, we do not see upon what plea of equity the owners of real estate in the rural districts should be called upon to contribute out of their rents and revenues, all way the annual sum required for the maintenance of Regent-street, Manchester, or Glasgow streets, to support them. Similar remarks apply to canal tolls, though perhaps with less force. The purchasers and occupiers of land buy or occupy it with the previous knowledge that the burden of church rates is upon it. It is a portion of the bargain, and cannot fairly be considered a grievance. With regard to the burden of church rates upon houses and other real property, it enters into a very different question, which we are not called upon to discuss as part of any possible relief to agriculture. As for the county rate, we incline very strongly to the belief that the whole cost of the criminal judicature of the country should be borne by the nation collectively. So far we are inclined to agree with Mr. Disraeli. But, whether the argument apply or not in this particular instance, we do not see that any relief worthy of the name would be afforded to agriculture by the transference of the whole burden to the Consolidated Fund. Then again, as to the land tax, which is included by Mr. Disraeli in his twelve millions. It is, of course, a tax upon real property; but so is the Window Tax. If the one be a burden, so is the other; and if fifty per cent. of the one ought to be paid by the nation collectively, there can be no reason why fifty per cent. of the other should not be provided for in the same way. All such changes as these are a mere display of hocus pocus, and a robbing of Peter to pay Paul.

Let us calculate a little more closely how they would work. They would apparently relieve, to the amount of six millions per annum, the owners of real property, including not agriculturists only, but the owners of mills, mines, manufactories, railways, gas shares, water shares, and house property. But the relief would not in reality amount to more than half that sum, if even to so much. The national finances, unless our expenditure be reduced by six millions—of which there is no prospect—are not in a condition to bear the transfer. The present income tax produces something less than six millions per annum. The sole resource of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, supposing Mr. Disraeli's scheme to be carried, would be to double the income tax. Let the owners of real property calculate, therefore, how much they pay at present in the shape of this odious impost; and having multiplied it by 2, let them deduct it from the saving they would make, in being relieved of half the poor rate, half the highway rate, half the church rate, half the county rate, and half the land-tax. The balance would be their gain by the financial manœuvre of their friend Mr. Disraeli. Let the agricultural body calculate, moreover, how great a portion of the real property of the country is not agricultural; and we think they will come to our conclusion, that, however fair-sounding the proposal of Mr. Disraeli may be, the relief it would afford to agriculture would amount to very little. Accompanied by the inevitable income tax, it would scarcely relieve the owners and occupiers of land to the extent of a million sterling. If it be just that they should be relieved to this extent, let the thing be done; but do not let them imagine that the prosperity of agriculture is involved in the matter, and place their reliance upon a staff that will fail them.

The agriculturists have, in fact, been unlucky in their choice of a new leader. It is not easy to gather from Mr. Disraeli's speech whether he actually believes in the existence of any peculiar burdens upon agriculture. Assistant in introducing his motion for a statement entirely on behalf of the owners of real, as distinguished from the owners of personal property; and his proposed relief of agriculture amounts to a mere nothing. The tenant-farmers of England have looked to him as their oracle; the oracle has spoken; but the farmers must be marvellously sanguine if they can find in its dicta any promise or promise of the relief which they allege to be essential to the successful prosecution of their business. Let them trust no longer to such friends. What they really want is a fair understanding with their landlords—a reduction of rents, if high rents are incompatible with Free Trade prices—and the security of leases. If the landlords of England will sincerely make up their minds to Free Trade as a fact—if they will forego the political influence which some suppose is to be found in yearly tenants—and [illegible] leases of [illegible] years, [illegible] to support them. [illegible] apply to [illegible] tries belonging to our crown, and of the various races. 2nd, to establish a powerful Government, which, alike removed from a contracting system of centralisation and one of dissolving diffusedness, shall afford sufficient space for the noble powers of the country, and guarantee internal and external peace. 3rd, to create a budget which shall be economical, alleviative as much as possible of the burdens of the citizens, and having the guarantee of publicity. 4th, to effect the total liberation of landed property from feudal dues, through reasonable indemnification, and with the mediation of the state; and 5th, the securing of true liberty by upholding the laws.

People of Austria! In almost every part of Europe society has been shaken in its very foundations; almost everywhere has it been menaced with destruction by the restless efforts of a criminal party. But however great the dangers which America, which Incia, which we do not despair of a happy future for our Fatherland. We rely on the assistance of the Almighty God, who has never forsaken our imperial house; we confide in the loyalty of our people, the overpowering majority of whom form the well-disposed. We rely on the bravery and honour of our praiseworthy army!

"People of Austria! Gather around your Emperor; encompass him with your attachment, your active co-operation, and the constitution of the empire will be no dead letter. It will become the bulwark of your liberty, and the guarantee of the power, splendour, and unity of the monarchy. Great is the work, but it will succeed by 'united powers.'

"Given in our royal capital of Olmütz, the 4th of March, in the year of grace 1849, of our reign the 1st.

(L. S.) "FRANCIS JOSEPH.

"(Countersigned.) SCHWARZENBERG, STADION, KRAUS, BACH, CORDON, BRUCK, THINNFELD, KULMER."

The Ministerial Declaration presents no feature calling for extract.

The constitutional code guarantees civil and religious liberty, the freedom of the press, a representative Government, and all the rights and privileges, political and municipal, understood generally to be enjoyed by the subjects of a constitutional monarchy.

According to the first chapter of the new constitution, the empire of Austria consists of the following countries appertaining to the crown:—The archduchy of Austria, above and below the Ens; the duchy of Salzburg; the duchy of Styria; the kingdoms of Illyria (consisting of the duchy of Carinthia, the duchy of Krain); the principality county of Gorz and Gradiska; the margravate of Istria and the city of Trieste, with its territory; the principality county of Tyrol and Vorarberg; the kingdom of Bohemia; the margravate of Moravia, the duchy of Upper and Lower Silesia; the kingdoms of Gallicia and Lodomeria, with the duchies of Auschwitz and Zator and the grand duchy of Cracow; the duchy of Bukovina; the kingdoms of Dalmatia, Croatia, and Slavonia, with the Croatian coast-land; the city of Fiume, and the territory belonging to it; the kingdom of Hungary; the archprincipality of Transylvania; (Sebenburgen, including the (so-called) Saxon land and the re-incorporated districts (Gespannschaften) of Krasznа, Mittel-Szonl-nok, and Zarand; moreover, with Kovar and the town of Zilah (Zilthermarck), the territories of the military frontier, and the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. These countries form the free, independent, indivisible, and indissoluble constitutional Austrian hereditary monarchy. Vienna is the capital of the empire, and the seat of the imperial executive.

The chapter on the Diet provides that the general Austrian Diet shall consist of two houses the Upper House and the Lower House. It shall be convoked by the Emperor in the spring of each year. The Diet assembles in Vienna, but it may be convened by the Emperor in another place. The Upper House is formed of deputies chosen for each country belonging to the Crown, by the Diet of that country. The number of deputies for the Upper House amounts to the half of the constitutional number of the Lower House. The division of that number will be arranged in such a manner, by the electoral law, that every country appertaining to the Crown has to send two members of its Diet as deputies, and the remaining number will be divided amongst all the countries belonging to the Crown in proportion to the population. The two members of the provincial diets deputed to the Imperial Diet must be in the full enjoyment of civic and political rights, have been, during five years at least, a citizen of the Austrian State, and be at least 40 years old. The other members of the Upper House are to be chosen by the provincial Diets only, from amongst these citizens of the empire who possess the foregoing general personal qualifications, and who pay in the empire at least 500 florins (convention coin) in direct taxes. In those countries appertaining to the Crown, in which the number of such citizens who pay 500 florins (convention coin) in direct taxes is not in the proportion of one to every six thousand inhabitants, a number required shall be made up from amongst those citizens who pay the greatest amount of taxes. The Lower House is formed by direct popular election. Every Austrian citizen of the state is entitled to the exercise of that franchise who has attained his majority, is in full possession of his civic and political rights, and who either pays in direct taxes the annual sum fixed by the electoral law, or without payment of a direct tax, possesses the active franchise according to his personal character, in a commune of a country appertaining to the Crown of Austria. The elections for the Lower House are carried on in districts, the limits fixed by the electoral law, which also determines the number of deputies according to the population. This number is to be so arranged that there shall be at least one deputy for every hundred thousand inhabitants of the empire. The amount of direct taxes referred to in the preceding paragraph will be fixed by the electoral law in each country appertaining to the Crown, with due regard to its peculiar relations. As a basis, the electoral law will take for rural districts, and for towns of not more than 10,000 inhabitants, an annual amount of not less than five florins (convention coin); and for towns with a population above that number, not less than 10 florins (convention coin). In no case is the amount to be fixed higher than 20 florins (convention coin). In order to be eligible for the Lower House, candidates must be themselves entitled to the franchise, be in the enjoyment of their civic and political rights, have been Austrian citizens during at least five years, and be at least thirty years of age. Votes at the elections for both Houses are to be given orally and publicly. The members of the Upper Houses are chosen for ten successive years, and those of the Lower House for five. They may be re-elected. The members of the Upper House receive no payment; those of the Lower House receive a daily remuneration.

The chapter concerning the right of citizenship declares, there is no restraint on personal movements within the boundaries of the empire. The freedom of emigration is circumscribed by the state only with reference to the duty of taking military service. Every kind of personal bondage or feudal subjection is for ever abolished. Every slave who enters the Austrian territory or an Austrian ship is free. All Austrian citizens are equal before the law, and are amenable to the same personal courts of justice.

The well-disposed portion of the community are said to be highly satisfied with this constitution, which is certainly a liberal one.

The promulgation of the new Constitution had called forth a general illumination of Vienna by the inhabitants. The Diet had determined on the 15th of March, but been anxious for taking part in the insurrectionary movement at the close of last year.

It was stated as a fact that some of the late operations of Prince Windischgrätz were not approved in high quarters, and that he was to return from the command in chief. His legalisation of the circulation of the Hungarian bank notes issued by Kossuth was particularly condemned.

HUNGARY.

The Magyars still vigorously oppose the Imperial arms. The united corps of Field-Marshal Lieutenant Schlick and Field-Marshal Lieutenant Schulzig had, on the 10th and 12th ult., a most bloody encounter with the Magyars, and had taken three warden. The whole line of battle, from Debreczin to Grosswardein, was said to be covered with the corpses of the slain.

The Szekler nation, who got possession of the town of Hegs on the 12th ult., committed no excesses; but, after having mulcted the inhabitants to the amount of 15,000 florins, left the town in the direction of Ujvlaer.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Cape Town journals of the 10th of January have come to hand. The colony continued quiet, and, from its gradually increasing prosperity, it seems to be destined, at no distant day, to rank among the very first of our British settlements. These remarks receive a corroboration in the following extract from a leading article lately put from the South African Commercial Advertiser of January 3, which is devoted to a retrospect of the year 1848:—

"The year 1848 had been distinguished at the Cape by the extension of British authority to the River Kei in Kaffirland, including about 70,000 native, and the declaration of British sovereignty over the country between the Orange and the Vaal rivers, without encroaching, however, on the rights of the native chiefs in their respective districts. A plentiful harvest has crowned the year with gladness. There have been no visitations of epidemic diseases. Trade and commerce continue to flow in a steady current, with no disturbing influence to notice either from their magnitude or their peculiar character. The local institutions, too numerous to be noticed in detail, have enjoyed unmurmured prosperity. It is felt that capital is safe, and credit is unshaken."

WEST INDIES

By the arrival of the Avon at Southampton on Tuesday, we have the usual monthly advices. In consequence of the loss of the Forth, and the steamers down at Barbadoes not yet of the company's steamers at sea, more than the usual interest attaches at present to the position and progress of its vessels. The Avon left the Trent at St. Thomas. A malignant fever was then raging among the crew on board the Trent while she was at Chagres. A schooner was obliged to be hired to convey her passengers from that place to St. Thomas. Ten of the crew had died of the fever. One poor fellow is supposed to have jumped overboard in a fit of delirium. The sick persons were obliged to be put on shore. The Great Western sailed from St. Thomas for Jamaica on the 12th of February. The Great Western had brought down the mails from Barbadoes in consequence of the Reindeer requiring repairs, which she remained at that island to complete. The Conway left Barbadoes for Demerara on the 9th of February. The Severn was at New York, and the Clyde gone to the Spanish Main.

At Jamaica the Legislative Assembly, which met after a short adjournment on the 23rd of January, was busily engaged in passing measures of retrenchment in the expenditure of the various departments of the public service. Economy was the order of the day. The inhabitants were becoming fully alive to the prospect of their island becoming the great entrepôt of steam navigation to the Spanish Main, both from Liverpool and New York. The last steamer from Chagres brought to Jamaica, along with a million of dollars for London merchants, 12,000 which were forwarded to New York by the Severn. The settlement at Chagres, and the development of the resources of the countries on and in the Pacific, and on the Spanish Main, they feel convinced must open new markets for an island which is naturally the most eligible intermediate station both for the steamers of England and the United States. The other topics that were engaging attention in the island were the penal laws and disposal of convicts, and a new election law

Barbadoes was considered healthy at the time the mail was despatched. During the three months that the visitation of yellow fever lasted, the garrison had lost ten officers and eighty men. A slight reaction in commercial matters had taken place in the English Islands, owing to the favourable prospects of the crops, and the small rise in the price of sugars.

From the Danish islands we learn that there were complaints of a failure of the sugar crops in the French island of Guadaloupe. This is exceptional. In all the other northern islands the crops were remarkably fine, and a general feeling appeared to prevail that times were looking better. The failure at Guadaloupe arises from the fact that for three months after the emancipation of the slaves, at a time when the canes required unintermitting care and attention, no labour could be obtained. Since that time the blacks have returned to the cane grounds, and now do their work cheerfully. The average of wages for Negroes in Guadaloupe is sixpence a day. The prospects for next season are favourable. An insurrection broke out among the blacks in the Danish island of Santa Cruz on the 10th of February. They refused to work, assembled in crowds, and would not disperse when ordered. The troops fired upon them, and killed or wounded three or four. The authorities said that tranquillity was restored, but there was still a great deal of irritation. Everything was done under martial law; Government fixed the hours of labour and the rates of pay —the latter at a very low figure.

THE THEATRES.

[illegible]

life he owed still more to his enemies than to his [illegible] sense, it may not be truly be said that adversity [illegible]
Theatre, and never more than within the last few weeks. The storm [illegible]
the regret direction: it filled its sails, and it has since triumphantly reached the port. Relying entirely on Jenny Lind, and awaiting her choice, a month since, not one singer, except those few male vocalists whose engagements stood over from the previous season, was engaged; and on the eve of leaving Paris, the impresario of the Italiens and the Government combined to prevent the great prima donna who was to begin the season from leaving Paris.* It is only two days since that she escaped scourging, as will be seen by the French journals. The result is that greater interest has been excited as regards the performances, that the company is more powerful than in any other former season; and instead of beginning, like last year, with a second-rate prima donna and tenor in an opera of Verdi, on Thursday the season opened with one of the finest operas of Rossini. "Cenerentola" embraces every style, from the most pathetic strains of which music is susceptible, to that which is most lively and spirited; whilst the vocal and dramatic elements are most intimately and exquisitely combined. The part of Cenerentola, which has afforded so many triumphs to the greatest of past prima donnas, from Grassini to Malibran, has had, until lately, no adequate representative. To the peculiar powers of Alboni, who has revived it, it is admirably adapted. Those who first attend the performances of this great singer are only expecting those exhibitions of vocal volume, those coft di canone, which are within the attributes of the contralto voice, and which ordinary singers of this register of voice abuse in their search after applause. But, independently that Alboni is unrestrained in her vocal means—as her success in singing soprano parts for the first time this season in Paris has proved—her principal charm consists in the power of modulation in all its exquisite shades, and also in the rapid and spirited execution of those chromatic passages of embellishment which, in Rossini's opinion, were indispensable in every great performer. One of the most essential conditions to make the execution in this style of singing completely effective is, that there should be no effort—that the volume and resources of the voice should be held in reserve and husbanded, whilst the private of notes streams forth, bright, varied, and sparkling. Such being the case, it will be easily understood why Mdlle. Alboni appears to so much more advantage at Her Majesty's Theatre. The part of Don Ramiro does not require a tenor of so high a rank as Gardoni; but his appearance and vocal resources render it highly effective. To the old associators of Rossinian operas, the first singing of Lablache in the part of Dandini was a subject of interesting recognition. Belletti is one of the best of the recent acquisitions of the Anglo-Italian stage; he is a baritone of powerful and highly flexible voice, and of much dramatic power. Like Lablache, he will not be naturally serious and contemplative, he perceives and seizes with rapidity the ridiculous points of character—appropriates and performs them; and retaining always his personal dignity, his farce is mellow, never reaches gross merit or less low caricature, so that he is one of the best buffi toscani we have seen on the stage for many years. His performance was fully equal to expectation. His spirits were as natural and flowing as his notes. Belletti is of the old school: he phrases the live.y music allotted to Dandini, throughout, with the greatest ease in his most mercurial movements, every note reaching its due point, pure, round, and distinct. F. Lablache took the part of Il Magnifico, and suffered, as he has suffered before, and as we and himself, no doubt, wish he may suffer again, from being the shade and the substitute, and not by the living remembrance, of the other great Lablache. But F. Lablache, an excellent musician as well as a good actor, is always a sure card in the cast of an opera, and he contributed efficiently to the success of the first bars of Rossini's music for the first time in this country, on Thursday night. For the first representation for the first time in this country, on Thursday night. For the first representation of the part of the bewitching Angelina, likewise, none but the original, Carlotta Grisi, for whom it was composed, has been found thoroughly efficient. On Thursday night she was supported by that most intelligent singer, Tagliafico, and by another that great popular favourite, Carolina Rosati—probably destined, at no distant time, to occupy the throne of choreography as donna assoluta.

One of the grand features of Thursday night's performance was the perfection of the orchestra. Already possessed least year of some of the greatest professors of European celebrity as leaders of the different divisions, this year Mr. Balfe has added secondary instrumentalists of the highest efficiency; and by the above all be can of power as a leader—not displaying the orchestra at the expense of the vocal part. Lond applause followed the overture.

The success of Mdlle. Alboni was enthusiastic; the first stave of the old pathetic Italian romanza, "O'ara un Rè," was redemanded from every part of the house. The delight of the audience appeared to increase as the performance proceeded. When the curtain had fallen, and Mdlle Alboni had reappeared, a call from every part of the house demanded its being raised once more, and "Non più mesta" was repeated amidst the liveliest admiration expressed in every possible manner. The ballet that succeeded met, in its turn, with the warmest welcome; and, unto the conclusion, the house was crowded to every part.

We have only to add that "God save the Queen" was the finest ovation of the night.

Next week we shall engrave a scene from "Cenerentola," which could not possibly be accomplished for our present Number.

HAYMARKET.

Mr. Stirling Coyne is a most industrious, as well as a most successful playwright, and he is also a most daring one. Whilst we tremble for the reception of some dangerous experiment in the way of absurd unnatural by the audience, there comes an unexpected, y droll twist of the incidents which throws the house into a roar of laughter. He is the best contriver of safe extravaganzas to those who dislike dangerous ones. His last two productions and occasional pieces have proved; and his new piece, called "Separate Maintenance," produced at the Haymarket on Monday evening, will add to his reputation in this line. We like the play very much as a farce, though not quite so much as a comedy. It requires no ordinary tact to write a piece of this description. Construction, to be sure, is not made the great feature; and it can be readily seen, that anywhere else, apart from the Adelphi effects and peculiarities, it would not achieve any great success. But the exigences of both actors and audiences are well studied. There must be a [illegible] for Madame Celeste, in which some excuse for her dialect shall be apparent, and a character suited to Mr. O Smith, who, honourable gentleman and lover of the arts as he is in his private phase, would never be believed in as anything else but a villain of the first water on the stage. Mr. Wright and Mr. Paul Bedford must invariably find their destinies linked together in some ultra-comical web: and if quaint Mr. Maynard, truthful Mrs. Frank Matthews, attractive Miss Woolgar, and dramatic Mr. H Hughes can be brought in also, with a shadow of connexion with some general story, so much the better.

The plot of "The Hop Pickers" is not very novel, but the incidents are well piled on each other, and made available for the introduction of several telling effects, the hop-grounds, the burning barn, and the cross-roads being admirable places of scenic arrangement. Love and murder, wrongful accusation and circumstantial evidence, which nearly destroys the innocent parties, form the groundwork; whilst the unexpected appearance of the supposed-to-be-murdered lover, at the right time, clears up all the difficulties, although reminding very one, somewhat too forcibly, of the return of Walter Barnard in the "Wreck Ashore." The piece on the first night played much longer than the proper gentleman always are and acted to perfection. The scenery, by Messrs. Pitt and Johnson, was, as we have said, very elaborate and striking. The piece will, no doubt, have a very long run, but it must be considerably curtailed. At present it is only following [illegible]
California.

Mr. G. H. Lewes, a gentleman well known to the literary world as the author of several successful novels, including "Ranthorpe," "Rose, Blanche, and Violet," &c., has made a most successful début on the stage at Manchester, in the character of Shylock. His performance is spoken of as intense and thoughtful, evidencing a singular subtleness of conception. The Manchester Examiner says, "He has already, in many ways, shown himself to be a rarely gifted man. We welcome his appearance on the stage with gladness; he will do there what he has done elsewhere—make himself a name." Mr. Lewes was one of the company of amateurs, formed by Mr. Dickens, whose performances we from time to time noticed.

Mrs. Nesbitt and her sister are playing at Glasgow, and proceed thence to Edinburgh.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

EXTRAORDINARY SCENE AT A RAILWAY JUNCTION.

A most extraordinary and unprecedented scene occurred on Monday morning at Clifton Junction, about five miles from Manchester, and the point where the East Lancashire line, midway between Bury and Manchester, forms a junction with the Lancashire and Yorkshire Company's lines of rails from Manchester to Bolton, Preston, and Liverpool. The East Lancashire Company pass over the Lancashire and Yorkshire Company's rails between Clifton and Manchester, paying toll, and it appears that some misunderstanding has arisen between the two companies as to the means of ascertaining the proper amount of toll. The East Lancashire are in the habit of running several up-trains to Manchester, [illegible] junction, without stopping, and where such trains make a declaration to the Lancashire and Yorkshire Company of the number of passengers the trains contain, and for whom they will have to pay toll. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Company object to this plan, and demand that the trains shall stop at Clifton, so that the number of passengers can be counted, and give up their tickets. The East Lancashire Company say that, in addition to their declaration, the other parties have access to all their books and to the returns of their (the East Lancashire Company's) servants; and that the demand to take tickets, or to count, is only one of annoyance and detention, adopted sure the two companies have become competitors for the traffic to Bradford. Towards the close of last week, the dispute assumed a serious aspect, by one of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Company's agents at Manchester threatening that he would blockade or stop up the East Lancashire line, at the point of junction, with a large bale of timber. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Company's managers accordingly proceeded on Monday morning to carry the threat into execution, notwithstanding the presence of a large body of the county police from Bury, and a second body from the Pendleton county police station, near Manchester.

The East Lancashire early train of passengers left the Lancashire and Yorkshire line without obstruction, and run to Manchester; but at half-past ten, as the next East Lancashire train to Manchester was one which would not stop at Clifton, but attempt to pass on to Manchester, as it got to the slow East Lancashire and Yorkshire Company's servants to count the passengers, the latter began to take active measures to stop up the East Lancashire line, and met with no sufficient obstruction to the passage of trains to their own line. Their first step was to lay down, across the Lancashire and Yorkshire downline, and at right angles, an immense bale of timber—saying it close to the points of the East Lancashire Company's rails forming the junction, and opposite the Semaphore signal-house of the East Lancashire Company. Behind this bale of timber, at either side, were driven deep into the bed of the line two heavy, long, iron crow-bars, to hold it to its position. Then, again, behind this bale of timber, the Lancashire and Yorkshire Company brought up a train of ten carriages and a locomotive engine to Manchester and; set this train to [illegible] up to this time to have completed the blockading scheme. The train of empty carriages was understood to have been for the double purpose of blockading the line and of carrying back to Manchester any of the passengers from the East Lancashire train who might choose to leave it and go forward, over the bolton line, to Manchester.

The East Lancashire train was due to Manchester about 10h. 40m., but it was nearly that time before it came up to Clifton, and when it came in sight it was signalled to stop, of course, rather than allow the engineer to break his own and his passengers' necks by running into the obstruction. Immediately the East Lancashire train stopped, the Lancashire and Yorkshire Company's servants began to remove the tickets from the passengers. This demand, however, was fruitless, inasmuch as the East Lancashire parties had taken the tickets from the passengers at the previous station—Radley—a course which they are said to have now followed for some months past.

This was the signal for retaliatory measures by the East Lancashire party, who had till now walked in silence on either side of their own line, as the servants of the other company had done on their own property; the police, meantime, looking on at both, from the window of the railway station-house, situate in the cleft of the fork formed by the two railways branching off to Bury and Bolton. The first act of the East Lancashire Company's servants was to remove the bale of timber, and this they did without hindrance; and the next to run forward their train, and attempt to force before them the Lancashire and Yorkshire blockading train, which, however, the others appeared to have anticipated; and having put on their breaks and brought another engine up in front of their train, which [illegible] detached from an express train from Manchester that had come up while the previous proceedings were going on, they were able to maintain their ground. The East Lancashire Company by this time having brought up a heavy train laden with coals, and another with lime, contrived it to run forward and take up a position on the shunt across the Lancashire and Yorkshire up line to Manchester, exactly abreast of the blocking train on the other line of rails. Thus the Lancashire and Yorkshire Company's down line of rails was now completely blocked up—one line by their own train, and the other by the stone train of the East Lancashire Company. In this position matters remained till near 4 o'clock; and, in the meantime, the affair every moment assumed a more serious aspect. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Company's trains, either way, as they came up, kept accumulating the means of blockade; and, added to these were the trains coming to the spot belonging to the East Lancashire Company, and those belonging to the Blackburn and Darwen Company, which come upon the Lancashire and Yorkshire rails at Bolton. By a little before 4 o'clock there were about a dozen trains on the double lines of rails of the two companies, extending one by side for more than half a mile. Many of the passengers, in some alarm, got out of the trains to remonstrate with the company's servants: and one party are said to have sent to Pendleton for a [illegible] threatening an action for detention. At length, the Lancashire and Yorkshire blocking train having been left in the sole charge of Mr. Blackmore, at a little before twelve o'clock he withdrew the obstruction, and the various trains were allowed to pass onwards, fortunately without accident or injury to the passengers, though it must be confessed to Love been a dangerous experiment.

YORK, NEWCASTLE, AND BERWICK.—The Commissioners of the Admiralty have just reported on the projected extension of this company to Alnmouth and Newcastle Quay, and give their assent to the bill, subject to certain conditions affecting the interests of the Tyne and river Aln. The Commissioners intimate that as the high level bridge across the Tyne and Tweed have been built by this company without the plans having been submitted to the Admiralty, since the passing of their act in 1845, although the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act incorporated in their own act required them to do so, their Lordships will require a special clause to that effect to be inserted in their proposed bill.

LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN.—It is calculated that the reduction lately effected in the number of the passenger trains on this line will cause a saving in the expenditure of £400 per day, or at the rate of £36,000 a year.

NEW DISTANCE SIGNAL ON THE SOUTH-WESTERN.—A deputation of gentlemen connected with the North-Western, Great Western, and the Eastern Counties Railways were at the Kingston-on-Thames station, on Monday, to minutely inspect the new distance signal which has been fixed up there, said to be the invention of Cornelius Strong, Esq., general manager of traffic on the South-Western Railway. The signal-man went through the various changes of the apparatus, which appeared to be performed with great ease, and with by comparatively little trouble to those working the machine, although the engine turned his six hundred yards from the coloured signal. The transitions from white to green, and from green to red, were effected almost instantaneously, capable of announcing danger beyond the aforesaid distance at least three fourths of a mile. This signal has now been in constant use, when [illegible] the Kingston station for the last six months, and has never failed [illegible] gone severe. important alterations and improvements since its erection, under the observation of the inventor; so that at length it has been found to be so far complete, that the company have determined on fixing them at all their signals at all the stations on their line where such may be deemed necessary explained, as an action is said to be brought against the French Minister of the Interior by the impresario.

[illegible] gal claim on Mdlle [illegible]

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—EXHIBITION OF RECENT BRITISH MANUFACTURES.

We resume our Illustrated notices of the Third Annual Exhibition of British Manufactures, at the Society's House in the Adelphi. The number of visitors has already been very considerable.

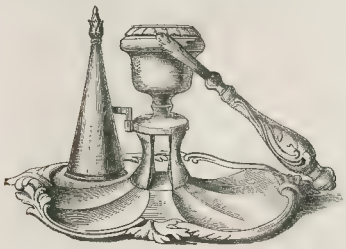
The first specimen we have engraved is a silver Equivehant Chamber Candlestick (No. 119), manufactured and exhibited by J. H. and R. Ferryman. It is termed equivehant, from its carrying itself even or upright in whatever position the candlestick may turn, thus ensuring additional safety in cases of accidental all.

Next is another variety of candlestick (No. 173), named, from the design, "A Climbing Boy." It is otherwise remarkable for its novel combination of statuary porcelain and metal; it has been designed, manufactured, and exhibited by W. Potts, of Birmingham.

The upper central illustration (No. 411) shows one of the interesting specimens of amateur carving, the exhibition of which was suggested by his Royal Highness Prince Albert. The subject is entitled "The Proposal," and is graceful and pleasing, as well as full of promise in the execution.

The group No. 50 has been modelled by E. Cotterell, and manufactured by Garrard and Co., who have received for it an honorary testimonial. The figures are "St. George and the Dragon;" the composition is very spirited, and the chasing admirable. It is intended for an inkstand.

The specimens of Glass beside the Bronze Group include some new forms of Wine-glasses—in which vessel, by the way, there is room for considerable artistical improvement. One of the two patterns (No. 213) is tastefully engraved, and has a Venetian stem: it is from Messrs. Richardsons' works, at Stourbridge.



119.

FERRYMAN'S SILVER EQUIVEHANT CHAMBER CANDLESTICK.

No. 262 is another specimen, in similar style, exhibited by Jonathan Phillips; No. 509 is a new glass, by Pellat;—the Water-Bottle and Glass—are other tasteful specimens in the Exhibition, but not included in the catalogue.

Next week we shall engrave the beautiful gilt Centre-piece, executed by command of her Majesty, from a design by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and lent for exhibition by the Queen.

We add an interesting extract from the address of the Council, relating to Students' and Artizans' Prizes:—

"Referring to the rewards and encouragement held out to Students by the Society, the Council have great satisfaction in observing that the modified views of the last two or three years, in respect to the list of subjects for premiums, and the class of artists invited to compete, are beginning to be responded to. The Exhibition convincingly proves that the alteration was made in perfect accordance with the changed wants of the age and the new class of students rapidly forming in all parts of the kingdom in the lately-established schools of design. These students, it should be remembered, belong mostly to a rank of society which renders peculiarly necessary the stimulus of such rewards. Art, as applied to manufactures, has made steady progress since the change; and several works which have this year been rewarded with premiums show a diligent study of nature, and at least an ambition in applying such study to ornamental decoration. A new class of works has at the same time been added; and the Society has endeavoured (with some success) to stimulate the artworkmen, whose excellence in his craft in many branches lies between and unites the designer's skill and the manufacturer's capital, and whose merits and excellence have for too long a time been neglected."

The following information respecting the Quinquennial National Exhibition is gratifying:—

"The Society is aware that these exhibitions, necessarily limited each year to certain classes of manufactures, are only parts of a series of exhibitions which it is proposed shall culminate every fifth year in a large National Exhibition, embracing ALL manufactures. The revolution of the first fifth year will arrive in 1851, and the Council feel that it will be necessary forthwith to mature those arrangements for giving due effect to this event, which have already been successfully instituted and carried to a certain point with the President of the Board of Trade, and the Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests. The Board of Trade has already promised co-operation, and the Chief Commissioner of Woods a suitable site for the building in which the exhibition may be made. It only remains for the Government to take the risk of providing a temporary building, of dimensions sufficiently ample for the purpose. The Society of Arts having practically demonstrated the means of establishing such exhibitions, and educated most successfully a numerous public of all classes of society to appreciate them, and crowd to see them—having induced able designers, eminent manufacturers, ingenious mechanics, skilled workmen, and men of science, all to assist in these exhibitions—having been aided by the active co-operation and goodwill of the most distinguished among the nobles and the commons of our country in lending specimens for exhibition—enjoying the benefit of the personal interest and advice of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, at the head of the Society, and having been honoured with the direct and practical assistance of our most gracious Sovereign, in promoting the success of these exhibitions, the Council feel that they shall be warranted in preferring a request to her Majesty's Government to do its part in this great object, and to provide once in every fifth year a suitable building, in which a national exhibition, duly representing the best productions in all branches of British manufactures, may be formed. The Society's first annual exhibition was visited by about 20,000 persons; the second attracted a concourse of more than 70,000 persons; and should the popularity of the present more interesting exhibition increase in a proportionate ratio, the Council will be prepared, on behalf of the Society, to present a petition to the House of Commons, and to wait on the Prime Minister, requesting that arrangements may be made to provide a proper building for the great National Exhibition in 1851."

"THE PROPOSAL," PANEL, CARVED BY G. GOOK.

WOOD-CARVING.—POTATO BOWLS.—When a good idea has been originated, generally it has many servile imitators; thus, Mr. Bell's well-known bread platter has been the parent of many others of various degrees of merit, which share the fate of all imitations, viz. that "those who follow must needs be behind." One good, however, which has resulted from this movement is an increased attention to wood-carving as applied to domestic implements, resulting in bowls for bringing the potato hot to our tables in a material whose non-conducting properties are so well known, as also that of absorbing the redundant moisture which injures this indispensable edible. We have seen bowls of three several designs, differing from the bread platters in having an independent originality. That of the Wood-Carving Company has a bold pierced rim, formed of the potato plant, the ornament standing rather in the way of utility. Mr. W. G. Rogers's bowl is free from this defect, the ornament being low in relief and conventional in character, and merely on the outer surface. In Mr. Bell's design, executed by Messrs. Philip and Wyman, the potato and its foliage form the handle. Wood-carving may be made auxiliary to other occupations. It is so with the Swiss goatherds; and hence the cheapness of Swiss wood-carving.—Journal of Design, No. 1.

GRAND SPECIMEN OF FOSSIL ORGANIC REMAINS.—Perhaps one of the finest specimens of fossil organic remains ever yet discovered is an immense fossil of the Plesiosaurus tribe, lately found in the cliffs, near Kettleness, on the estate of the Marquis of Normanby, in Yorkshire. It is supposed to be the Plesiosaurus macrocephalus, and measure twenty-one feet nine inches in length, and eleven feet ten inches across the paddles. The ribs are three feet in length, and quite perfect, and the spines of the neck, which are laid down, are also in beautiful order. The species differs from the Plesiosaurus Dolichoderus (a fine specimen of which was found near Whitby a few years ago, and sold to the museum at Cambridge for upwards of £230) principally in the head, which in the macrocephalus is very large, and in the present specimen most complete, showing the blow-holes, eye-sockets, and brain-pan in the greatest perfection. The jaws are armed with remarkably strong teeth. This wonderful specimen is now at Lyth, near Whitby, in the charge of the steward to the Marquis of Normanby, and is worthy the inspection of all naturalists.

173

POTTS' "CLIMBING BOY" CANDLESTICK.

FACT FOR NATURALISTS.—A few weeks ago, some faggots were sent into the Llanga coal pit, belonging to the Wingerworth Coal Company, for the purpose of filling up the chasm over the timber, where the roof had given way. A bough of hawthorn had then been carelessly thrown aside in an opening, and it is now in full leaf and blossom. A branch of it was brought out last Monday night; but the leaves, and blossoms also, began to flag in a few hours after it was exposed to the fresh air. There is still a part of the thorn in the pit, 500 yards from the bottom of the shaft, in a healthy growing state; all the difference observable between a thorn growing on the top of the ground, and the one above named, is that the leaf is quite white, and the blossom without smell.

GENERAL POST-OFFICE, MARCH, 1849.—A monthly packet communication having been established between Mauritius and Ceylon, by the Government of the former colony, all letters for Mauritius will, in future, be transmitted from this country by the Overland Mail made up at this office on the 24th of each month, unless specially addressed to be otherwise forwarded. The postage on letters so transmitted to Mauritius will be: Weighing under ½ oz., 1s. 10d.; weighing ½ and not exceeding ¼ oz., 2s. 3d.; exceeding ¼ oz. and under ½ oz., 4s. 1d.; weighing ½ and not exceeding 1 oz., 4s. 6d. Letters, if specially addressed "ed Southampton," may be forwarded to Mauritius on the 20th of each month, and will be chargeable as follows:—Not exceeding ½ oz., 1s.; above ½ oz. and not exceeding 1 oz., 2s.; and so on according to the scale for charging inland letters. Newspapers will be forwarded eid Southampton free of postage, but will be liable to the charge of 3d. each when sent eid Marseilles. The foregoing rates of postage, both on letters and newspapers, must be paid in advance.

GREAT RISE IN THE PRICE OF ENGLISH BARK.—Since the fall of oak trees last spring, English bark has risen at least 100 per cent. In price, holders refusing even to sell at that immense advance. A large holder residing in the vicinity of Guildford refused, within the last few days, £16 per ton for old bark, much of which, it is said, was bought in at from £7 to £9 per ton. It is expected that more oak trees will be cut down this year, in the county of Hants particularly, than has been known in any previous year since the termination o the last European war.

During the past week a splendid set of robes and a pair of silver candlesticks were presented to the Rev. T. B. Parkinson, of Wakefield, by a few of his admiring and approving friends.

BRONZE INKSTAND.—"SAINT GEORGE AND THE DRAGON," MODELLED BY E. COTTERELL.

213 508

213 VENETIAN WINE-GLASS, BY RICHARDSON. 262. WINE-GLASS, BY PHILLIPS—509 WINE-GLASS, BY PELLATT. WATER-BOTTLE AND GLASS, NOT IN CATALOGUE.

THE IMPERIAL ASSURANCE OFFICE.—J. GIBSON, ESQ., ARCHITECT.

IMPERIAL ASSURANCE OFFICE.

THAS been well remarked in the Civil Engineer and Architect's Journal that "What the club is to the street architecture of the West-end, the assurance office is to the City; and the edifices devoted to the more useful purposes of life, it is pleasing to see, are not inferior to those which are only the appendages of luxury. Indeed, the range of assurance offices in London constitutes in its architectural, as well as in its moral aspect, a characteristic of which England may be proud. The foreigner has hitherto envied us our charities, our parks, and our clubs; he will now have another feature in the physiognomy of London which suggests honourable associations in connexion with the private and domestic habits of the professional and middle classes, and testifies to the earnest and provident care for those to whose comfort their lives have been devoted."

Of the truth of these observations, the beautiful edifice just completed for the Imperial Assurance Company, and of which we give a faithful representation, is a striking proof. The most important building erected in the City since the Royal Exchange, it surpasses in elegance and convenience all similar structures; and indeed, of some civic buildings on which the most lavish expenditure has been incurred, cannot show so appropriate and pleasing an exterior, or well planned and convenient interior arrangements.

The building stands on the delta formed by the union of Threadneedle and Broad-streets, and therefore occupies a triangular piece of ground; and yet, not regularly-formed triangle, as one side (that in Broad-street) is considerably longer than the other; but the architect has shown infinite tact in making the best of the awkwardly-formed site of which he had to avail himself. The two fronts of the building are alike in general character—in the Italian Palazzo style—and are built of Portland stone.

The character of the exterior is, as may be seen from our illustration, exceedingly ornate; and all the details are worked out with the most careful attention to effect and finish, the string-courses and mouldings being of admirable design. Indeed, in nicety of finish in details this building takes high rank, as it is in such parts that architects now-a-days most usually fail. There is one feature in the exterior we must not omit to point out—the keystones to the lower story windows and doorway. They differ each from the other, and symbolise the City, viz., fire, water, &c., and are all of marked excellence; the one personifying the City we have engraved for our initial letter. These, and the bas-relief of the armorial device of the company, the arms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, with figures personifying Commerce and Plenty, are executed by Mr. J. Thomas, whose productions we have so often had to mention with high praise, and whose reputation these works fully sustain.

The doorway is in Broad-street; where, entering a small vestibule, the principal staircase is seen, and on either side are offices for the town and country departments of the Fire-office, and offices for the superintendents of those respective branches. The offices are extremely well fitted up and well arranged, and a fire-proof strong-room offers great facilities for the ready putting away of books on the occurrence to them. The staircase is extremely elegant, and at its foot is a stove of beautiful character, from the top of which rises a classically-formed candelabrum for a light. The offices for the life department are on the first floor, and are equally compact and well-arranged with those below; a strong room being on this floor also. The board-room is the most decorated of any of the apartments, and is elegant in its every decoration and appointment, the cypher of the company being introduced with good effect in the architectural enrichments of the ceiling.

The second floor comprises a foreign office, with its accompanying strong room, a suite of apartments for a resident manager, which has a private staircase leading to Threadneedle-street, and other rooms, all equally apposite in character and fittings-up to the other parts of the building. Indeed, in every portion the architect has evinced great skill in design and arrangement; and in one part, perhaps, more than in the facilities for the transaction of an immense business, and safe storing of the masses of important documents and books which are of so great moment in the transactions of a Fire and Life office. The basement contains strong rooms also, and apartments for the porter, and lavatories, &c. for the clerks, kitchen, &c.

The whole of the building and furnishing, also, has been completed under the contract for the building alone, a fact highly creditable to the architect, Mr. John Gibson, of Park-street, Westminster; and the highest praise is due to him for having erected so beautiful an addition to the public edifices of London. Messrs. Piper were the builders.

THE YARBOROUGH MONUMENT.

SHORTLY after the lamented decease of the Earl of Yarborough, which took place on board his yacht, the Kestrel, on the 5th of September, 1846, in the Bay of Vigo, a public subscription was opened for the purpose of erecting a monument to his memory; when in fitting taste it was resolved that the memorial should be of such a character as would prove a beacon to the mariner, at the same time that it recorded the great estimation in which the deceased nobleman was held by all classes.

An ample fund having been raised for the purpose, the committee ultimately decided upon the design of an obelisk, to be erected on Bembridge Down, at the east end of the Isle of Wight, upon a spot of ground kindly placed at the disposal of the committee by Admiral Sir Graham E. Hammond, K.C.B., of whose estate it forms a portion.

The erection of the obelisk was confided to Mr. Peter Rolt, architect and builder, and the constructor of the Steam Basin in her Majesty's Dockyard at Portsmouth. The monument is of grand and simple design, and built of grayish Penryn granite, from Mr. Gibson's quarries, in Cornwall. It is 76 feet in height, and measures 14 feet at the base, which rests upon five steps; the portion above the base consisting of 32 courses of rusticated work, each 18 inches. On the base are panels to receive iron castings, with appropriate inscriptions; and it will be inclosed with iron palisades. In order to protect the monument from lightning, a conductor passes through the centre of the obelisk.

The work has been for some months in course of construction; and the ceremony of raising and fixing the top, or capping stone, took place on the 26th ult., under the superintendence of the architect, Mr. Rolt; his two assistants; the granite merchant; and Mr. Corduroy, the surveyor; and in the presence of a great number of visitors. The capping block weighed five tons, and was raised and placed without any accident.

The obelisk will be a conspicuous object from every part of the Solent. Its marks and bearings have not yet been issued by the Trinity Corporation; but as the site has been judiciously selected for nautical purposes, it will no doubt point out the situation of several shoals and buoys in the vicinity; and, we believe, it is intended to be, with other cross bearings, a leading mark outside the Owers, when other marks are not visible.

Lord Yarborough was a truly noble specimen of English nautical character, never Forgetting Nelson, Duncan, Howe, and Jervis.

He was a general peace-maker, whether on the magisterial bench, or in the Royal Yacht Squadron, of which he was one of the earliest and most distinguished members. His Lordship was a true sailor, an enthusiast in yachting, ever anxious for the improvement of our naval architecture; and he did more to improve the build, rig, and accommodation of yachts, than any other civilian, having himself caused to be constructed some models of extreme beauty. His favourite yacht, Kestrel, has, since his Lordship's lamented decease, graced the Royal Navy list.

A Portrait of the Earl of Yarborough, from a recent picture, with a copious Memoir of his life, appeared in No. 230 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

POST-OFFICE NOTICE.—The contract for the conveyance of her Majesty's mails between the United Kingdom and Sydney, New South Wales, by packet, will terminate on the 28th instant: all letters and newspapers for New South Wales and New Zealand will, therefore, for the present, be forwarded by private ship. The postage will be the usual ship letter rate of eightpence the half-ounce on letters, and one penny each on newspapers, which postage must be paid in advance.

MONUMENT TO THE 14TH EARL OF YARBOROUGH ON BEMBRIDGE DOWN, ISLE OF WIGHT.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 18.—Fourth Sunday in Lent. Princess Louisa born, 1848.
MONDAY, 19.—Sun rises 6h 7m., sets 6h. 9m.
TUESDAY, 20.—Spring Quarter begins.
WEDNESDAY, 21.—St. Benedict. Duke D'Enghien shot, 1804.
THURSDAY, 22.—Goethe died, 1832.
FRIDAY, 23 Weber died, 1825.
SATURDAY, 24.—New Moon, 2h 6m. P.M.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 24

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
8 0	8 43	9 24	9 58	10 42	11 35	Vide	noon	0 30	0 55	1 16	1 39	1 55	2 15

OPERA COMIQUE.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—On MONDAY NEXT, MARCH 19, will be performed Auber's New Opera Comique of AUTEUR, which was so favourably received on Monday last, in which M. Coudere and Mdlle. Charton will appear, in addition to the amazing opera of LA DOUBLE ECHELLE. And, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, MARCH 21, will be performed Auber's popular and the Last Night but Four of her Engagement, will be performed from the original Score of Opera of LES DIAMANS DE LA COURONNE, performed from the original Score of the Composer, with entirely New Costumes, Scenery, &c. La Catarina, Mdlle Charton; Don Henrique, M. Coudere (performed by him upon the production of the Opera in Paris) Doors and Stalls at Mr. MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and at the Box-Office of the Theatre.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY-LANE.—CIRQUE NATIONAL DE PARIS. LAST WEEK BUT ONE.—EXTRAORDINARY FEATS OF HORSEMANSHIP, by [illegible], talented Artistes, in addition to other accomplished Performers. Every Evening M. D'Orsay will exhibit his Highly-trained Horses—General Feats of Horsemanship by Mdlles. Caroline, Clarke, Machido. Antonio, Player; Amato, Dacre, &c. &c.; MM. Louvet, Antonio Tomas, Lucas, Candler, Welsh, &c. &c.—The Entertainments will be accompanied by the Eccentricities of Messrs. Auriol, Leduit, Young Auriol, and Mohamet.—Commence at Eight o'Clock. GRAND MORNING PERFORMANCES every WEDNESDAY and FRIDAY.—Commence at Two o'Clock

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—The greatest triumph ever witnessed within the walls of the Amphitheatre has been achieved by YOUNG HERNANDEZ, the celebrated American Equestrian who has just arrived in this country, where unparalleled Feats, executed by an eloquent of motion and entire absence of all effort (hitherto unattainable), nightly call forth from the most brilliant assemblages of rank and fashion expressions of the most prolonged approbation, unanimous testimonials of admiration. His success being as unprecedented as gratifying he will announce his positive farewell Performance for which he has been universally pronounced in America the Metropolis, and by that powerful auxiliary, the public press. "The First Rider in the World." On MONDAY, MARCH 19, the Performances will commence at quarter to 7, with Pizzaro, a magnificent Spectacle of CORASCO; or, The Wreath of Wild Flowers. After which, BATTY'S SCENES of the ARENA, in which Mr. Hernandez will appear. To conclude with a Favourite MELODRAMA.—Box-office open from Ten till Four.—Stage Manager, Mr. W. Towse.

EXETER HALL.—WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—The EIGHTEENTH CONCERT will be held on the EVENING of WEDNESDAY NEXT, March 21st, 1849, at which Mr. SIMS REEVES, Mr. THALBERG, and other distinguished artistes will appear. Tickets, 1s and 2s; Reserved Seats, 4s. Stalls, 7s; may be had of Mr. STANMERS, 4, Exeter hall; and of all Musicsellers. For Programmes see the "Times" of Monday, March 19th GIGANTIC MOVING PANORAMA. — On MONDAY NEXT will be Exhibited at the GRAND AMERICAN HALL 1-second-square Gate Mile (Cumberland Gallery), a VIEW of the Mighty Father of the Waters, the MISSISSIPPI, from the Falls of St. Anthony to its termination at the Gulf of Mexico, painted by Daniel Brand, American artist, J. R. Smith. The history of all does not present a parallel to the gigantic panorama that has newly arrived from America, under the superintendence of Professor Risley. Its feature is the left undisputed of the whole, and to be had at the Door, price 2s. It is conceived when it is announced that this prodigious panorama occupies an extent of four miles of canvas.

NOTICE.—VISITORS to the CYCLORAMA will be admitted to the Colosseum at Hanover-square, REGENT CYCLORAMA, A.M. to 10 P.M.—Open daily, with a colossal Moving Cyclorama, representing LISBON, and DESTRUCTION of the CITY by EARTHQUAKE in 1755. Designed and produced under direction of Mr. Wm. Heaviside. Painted by Messrs. Danson. Illustrated by appropriate Music, on the New Grand Apollonicon. Morning Performances at half-past 1; second ditto at 4. Evening First ditto at 7; second ditto at half-past 7; second ditto at 9.—Admission, 2s.; reserved seats, 3s. Children and schools, Half-price. Family Tickets for four or more, to be Reserved Seats, 2s 6d each person, may be had at the music warehouses and libraries.

LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS at CROSBY HALL.—In consequence of the exceedingly crowded houses, Mr. LOVE will continue his LENTEN ENTERTAINMENTS at CROSBY HALL, on FRIDAY NEXT, March 23, and on FRIDAY, March 30, being the Last Two Fridays in Lent, except Good Friday, on which evening no performance will take place. He will present his Entertainment entitled LOVE IN ALL SHAPES, or, The Girl up to Portraits. To be followed by his Novelistical Sketch, entitled LOVE'S LABOUR LOST; in which Mr. Love will assume a variety of Eight d'Heros Persons. With other Entertainments. On Tuesday, March 19, Mr. Love will give an Entertainment at the Town Hall, Andover; on Tuesday, March 20, at Salisbury; on Thursday, March 22, at Bury; on Wednesday, March 21, at the Town Hall, Devizes; on Thursday, March 22, at the Institution, Aldersgate-street; on Monday, March 26, at the Town Hall, Luton.—Doors at 8 o'clock. First Class Seats, 3s.; Second Class, 1s. Double to be had at the Doors, price 2s6

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—LECTURES EXPLAINING the ART of MAGIC, by Mr Shaw, with Illustrations, changed every week, daily, at a Quarter to Four, and every Evening at Nine. LECTURE on CHEMISTRY, daily, at a Quarter to Three o'clock. Dr. Bachhoffner's ILLUSTRATIONS on ASTRONOMY, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at One o'clock. LECTURES on the VENTILATING of MINES, &c., by Mr. Ashcroft. A NEW PANORAMIC VIEW in the DISTRICT of CALIFORNIA is added to the NEW DISSOLVING VIEWS. NEW CHROMATROPE: MACHINERY and MODELS explained, &c. The Music is directed by Dr. Wallis. Admission, 1s, Schools, half-price The New Catalogue, 1s

ARCHITECTURAL EXHIBITION.—The EXHIBITION of DRAWINGS, MODELS, &c., in connexion with Architecture, is NOW OPEN to the Public from 9 till dusk, at the GALLERY of the NEW SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS, 53, Pall Mall.—Admission free.—Catalogue, 1d.
ROBERT C. DUNBAR, } Hon. Secs
WM W. DEANE, }

ART UNION of LONDON.—Incorporated by Royal Charter.—The Subscription List will close the 31st inst.—Each Prizeholder at the ANNUAL Distribution will be entitled to select FOR HIMSELF a work of Art as heretofore. Every subscriber will receive for each Guinea an impression of a Line Engraving, by F. Lightfoot, after W. E. Frost, A.R.A., SABRINA, proof of which may now be seen at the office, and, in addition to this, an engraving after a design in his relief, of "Christ entering Jerusalem," for which a premium of £100 has been awarded to Mr. J. Hancock.
GEORGE GODWIN} Honorary
LEWIS POCOCK } Secretaries.
444, West Strand, March, 1849.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Novice."—Natal has the climates of the tropics, of the south of France and Italy, and of England or Scotland, according to the elevation of the district. Isaacs's "Travels in Eastern Africa," and the Parliamentary papers recently published, will give the information required.

"L. D. J."—Apply at the Norwich Union Reversionary Interest Society, Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

"W. S. B." Rochborough.—Apply to C. Cox, publisher, King William-street, Strand.

"G. F. Z. is thanked; but we have not room for the Sketches.

"E. J. D." is unspoken as to the drawing.

"W. I." Bath.—Address, Leather and Co., and to the College.

"A Subscriber." Chancery-lane.—Taylor's Short-hand, improved by Harding.

"A True Admirer."—We regret that we have not room for the lines.

"Anti-Sleep."—The account of the proceedings during the illness of the principal "sinners"

"Euphienus" is thanked for the Sketches; but the subjects have been too often engraved for us to repeat.

"F. P." Worcester.—We are not in possession of the address.

"Genius." We cannot spare room for your long note.

"F. T. W." Ross.—We cannot afford room for more than the published accounts.

"A. C. A." may obtain a book of instructions at any "Archery" warehouse. The tools may be bought at Fenn's, Newgate-street.

"Harry." —Duff.

"J. S."—See the treatise on "Short Whist," published by Longman and Co.

"X. Z." Rochford.—Apply to the Society. The eggs of the ashcrown may be purchased in Covent-garden market.

"Algæ."—Apply to Mr. Van Voorst, 1, Paternoster-row.

"Mercator," Manchester.—See Advertisements.

"X. N." Send your communications to the House of Commons: or Vacher's Sheep List.

"Parliamentary Guide" will give you the addresses.

"J. H. H." should apply to an engraver or wramonger.

"C. B."—We had rather not advise you.

"D. B. R." Calne.—There is in London a society which possesses a fund for "aid in the building of churches."

"M." Deptford.—Address the Secretary, &c., Manchester.

"A Constant Subscriber," Chipping Compden.—Apply to the Secretary of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Great George-street, Westminster.

"Yorks."—There are families of the name of Thompson, of Yorkshire, whose arms is, gules on the Heraldic Office. We may instance Thompson of Escrick, Thompson of Cottingham Castle, &c.; but we have not space to furnish the various arms.

"H. P. P."—Irish Peers created before the Union take precedence of Peers of the United Kingdom of the same grade.

"D. E. V."—The Duke of Wellington is an Irishman by birth and parentage.

"S. K." Belfast.—We are not aware of any relationship between the Chat. Napier and Mr. Joseph Napier, M.P. for the University of Dublin.

"J. S."—The resumption of the old mode of spelling the family name will be quite legal and correct.

"A Plebeian."—"His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch, K.G., Whitehall." The proper address is "My Lord Duke."

"A Tutor" or "A Parent."—It is open to any member of the University of Cambridge under the degree or standing of Master of Arts. The essay is to be sent to the Vice-Chancellor, or to the Masters of Trinity and St. John's, who are the Trustees. 2 Candidates for the Seatonian Prize must be Masters of Arts of the University of Cambridge, and the Poem must be sent to the Vice-Chancellor on or before Sept. 29.

"F. P." Dublin.—Apply to Cocks and Co., for the new book of "Czerny on the Theory of Music."

"Sans Souci."—"Did we discourse," to be found as one of Shakspeare's sonnets, was composed by Bishop for the "Twelfth Night," for Miss Stephens.

"X. Y. Z."—We cannot recommend any particular flute-maker.

"A Subscriber."—Music must be sent in a sealed packet.

"A Lover of Music."—It must be the next note receding; thus: A, double flat, on the pianoforte, would be G natural. Mdlle. Lind is not yet married; she has left the stage.

"A Constant Reader." "Pyne's "Treatise on Perspective," published by Wale.

"A Reader ab Initio."—Show the medal at No. 17, Great Russell-street, Covent-garden.

"Gladiator," Ripon.—Roland's "Treatise on Fencing," price 9s. The price of the Grammar is 2s. 6d.

"A Constant Subscriber," Paddington, is mistaken. It was the Earl of Buckinghamshire who died lately: see our Journal for Feb. 10.

"W. R. R."—We cannot insert the paragraph.

"Florence."—We regret that we cannot find room for the lines.

"Benedictus" can remit to our office at any period.

"W." Birmingham.—The circumference of London and its suburbs is about thirty miles. See the King to the large View in Vol. 5 of our Journal.

"S. O." Luton. Main on "Kitchen Gardening."

"A Subscriber." Hants.—We have not room to quote the act, the provisions of which should be given in late books on angling.

"W. W." St. Leonard's.—Prior's "Life of Burke" is published by Murray, Albemarle-street.

"Carnationist" is thanked, but we have not room for his suggestion. Reports of remarkable sales of landed property appear in the newspapers occasionally

"G. B." Received.

"Orion"—Apply to a dealer in coins: say at 17, Great Russell-street, Covent-garden

"P. L."—Received.

"F. H." Canterbury.—A work on glass-painting has just been published by J. H. Parker, Strand. Apply to a dealer in coins

"Quis."—Hetherington. What was passed in 1829.

"T. A." Norwich, is thanked; but the sketch and memoir have no immediate interest.

"D. M. P." Edinburgh.—See any History of Scotland.

"J. O." near Malton.—The address of the United States' Minister is 1, Upper Belgrave-street.

"J. P." should consult a Solicitor as to the property in Chancery.

"A Subscriber" should appeal to the Income Tax Commissioners.

"A Subscriber," Worthing.—Richardson's "English Dictionary."

"J. M. S." near Tewkesbury.—See the remarks upon the weather in February, in the present Number

"M. P." Bampton.—We believe, correct in his surmise

"M. D." is thanked; but the natal house of the poet-politician is not, at this moment, of sufficient interest for engraving

"W. J. H."—The new "History of Surrey" is published by Hogue, Fleet-street.

"A Lover of Music."—Her Majesty's Theatre was opened for the season on Thursday.

"Othello."—We cannot tell.

"O. P. P. V."—Vol. 8. of our Journal may be had in Paris.

"W. H."—The lines will not suit.

"Bermuda."—Lady Boothby.

"J. P." Dorchester.—Sir John Franklin sailed for the Arctic Regions on May 19, 1845. See No. 160 of our Journal, for Views of the Erebus and Terror, the vessels of the Expedition, and a Portrait and Memoir of Sir John. We must decline giving the address of Mdlle. Lind.

"A Careful Reader."—A Portfolio for preserving the Numbers of our Journal may be had of Mr. Lee, Fleet-street.

"Omega."—By application to the secretary of either of the establishments in question, descriptive reports may be obtained.

"A. A." Hyde Park.—It is illegal either to buy or sell Playing Cards the duty on which has been evaded. We cannot spare room to reply to the remaining four (!) questions

"A Subscriber."—The cottage range is made at Newark, Notts.

"Augusta."—Walker's "Rhyming Dictionary."

"The Sister of a Subscriber."—"The Fight for the Beacon" is a composition. Mr. Coudert's is said to be the author of "The Perfect Parson."

"W. H." who inquires for a work on the Currency, is referred to Tooke's "History of Prices"

"P. G. H."—The work is an accredited one.

"A Correspondent."—Nutt's Bestiare is sold by Neighbour, High Holborn.

"P. B. K." Aldringham.—Received.

"A Poor Artist," Lincolnshire.—A copy in Autograph would be illegal.

"Mr. Lacy"—All in good time

"A. G. C." Hatton.—A work on "Parrots" is published by Orr and Co., Strand.

"P. A. C." Belfast.—Received.

"D. B." Ramsgate.—Mr. Charles Kemble is brother of the late John Kemble and Mrs. Siddons.

"W. H." Daventry, will, perhaps, repeat the question

"O. P. Q." St. Austell.—The obstruction would subject the party causing it to an action.

"F. W." Peterborough.—We cannot undertake inquiries as to solvency.

"J. E. F." The admission is gratuitous.

"J. M. H."—An enquiry, addressed to the Secretary of the Orphan Asylum, at Bridge-road, Lambeth, at Clapham Rise, or Clapton, would, doubtless, answer our Correspondent's purpose.

"A." Chalmer.—Jamaica, G. Henderson, Kingston.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Next week we shall Engrave a Scene from the very successful performance of "Costaccia" on Thursday night.

ENFIELD AND EDMONTON RAILWAY.—Mr. Thomas Compton has written to state that the line organised with him, and that he furnished the preliminary survey and levels.

NOTICE.—Any of our Agricultural Subscribers can have the edition which leaves London on Friday evening, with the Corn-Market of the same day, by ordering this edition of their news-agents.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1849.

THE Austrian Deputies, removed from busy Vienna and the unsafe protection of its populace, to the retirement of Kremsier and the same protection of the soldiery of the Emperor, have been debating ever since the siege and reduction of the capital by Prince Windischgrätz, upon a new Constitution for the various States of the Empire. They have, however, spent so much time in squabbling, and theorising upon the rights of man, as to have made but small progress in the great work entrusted to them by the people. Constitution-making is but a slow process, when so many minds as those which compose a deliberative assembly are employed upon it. An Abbé Sieyes could draw up a Constitution as easily and as rapidly as an attorney could draw up a brief; but, no sooner does a Constituent Assembly try its hand at such a task, than difficulties without number suggest themselves; and the theorisers, powerless to advance, are found most effective to impede the business. The Austrian Deputies, like those of Prussia, have made themselves ridiculous in Constitution-mongering. They have been allowed to amuse themselves, unmolested, until the Monarch and his advisers were ready to get rid of them; when, like their predecessors of Brandenbourg, they have been summarily dismissed. Count Stadion, on behalf of the Emperor, has drawn up and promulgated a Constitution for Austria, and the Assembly has been dissolved, just in the same manner as the King of Prussia, having given a Constitution of his own making to his "beloved Prussians," turned the Constituent Assembly out of doors. The new Austrian Constitution seems a document of much liberality. Whatever may be its reception in Austria, it cannot fail to impress all political observers and friends of rational freedom in Europe with high respect for the talents and principles of its authors. It does not go to the democratic extreme of universal suffrage, but it affirms and consecrates every other liberty hitherto enjoyed in countries that have been blessed with a steady representative Government. The document secures civil and religious freedom and equality to all the nations that compose the heterogeneous Empire of Austria. Equality to all religious professions; the independence of every church and sect in the management of its own affairs; and the extension of the system of national education alike to Germans, Lombards, Sclavonians, and Hungarians, are secured. The press is to be free, subject to the same restrictions against libel or sedition that exist in other countries. The right of meeting and association, and that of personal freedom, are guaranteed, subject of course to suspension on cause shown, or in case of war and insurrection. The Imperial Diet is to consist of two Assemblies, an Upper and a Lower, both elective, but with a difference of qualification. The Upper House is to be elected from the Provincial Diet; and the Lower to be chosen by the people, in the proportion of one member to every 100,000 souls; the qualification of a voter being a payment in direct taxation of from 30 to 40 shillings, English money. The Ministers are responsible, and the person of the Emperor is inviolable. Such are the main points of the great Austrian Charter; and, dating from its promulgation, Austria, no longer absolutionist, is a strictly constitutional and free State. The constituent nationalities of the Austrian Empire are to be governed in their local affairs by local Diets chosen by themselves—a necessary arrangement, as long as the complete fusion of these separate races shall not be attainable. Upon the whole, this document is of the highest importance, and will, it is to be hoped, lay a sure foundation for the future prosperity and internal peace of Austria. A few months ago that Empire seemed to be falling to pieces in irretrievable ruin. It now seems as if about to start afresh in a brilliant career of advancing civilization.

THERE is some hope, it appears, that two out of the many civil wars that arose in Europe out of the great upheaving of February, 1848, will speedily be brought to a close by the returning goodsense of the parties involved in them. We allude to the war between Prussia and Denmark, on the quæstio vexata of the Schleswig-Holstein succession; and the more obstinate war between the King of Naples and his revolted subjects in Sicily. The Danish Government has given notice of a termination of the existing armistice on the 26th of the present month; but we learn from Lord Palmerston's reply to a question put to him on Tuesday, that the Danish Government has declared officially to all parties interested, that it is not its intention to recommence hostilities, but that the object is to make a different arrangement with respect to the provisional Government of the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein. Lord Palmerston is of opinion that the spirit of conciliation which animates both parties will lead them to a reasonable understanding, and a final arrangement of the question in dispute.

The question between Naples and Sicily appears to be still nearer to a satisfactory solution. The French and English admirals, whose sympathy with the Sicilians caused the struggle to be more protracted than it would otherwise have been, have acted, in some respect, as the negotiators between the King of Naples and the Sicilians; and the proposal which the King has offered for the acceptance of Sicily has their concurrence and support. The King has published a proclamation containing the new Constitution of his kingdom, in fact, the Constitution of 1812, which the Sicilians themselves have never ceased to demand, the modifications being too slight to justify its being considered as a new or a different document. Though a general amnesty has not been published, the King pledges himself in the preamble of the constitution to "forget, and to consider as if they had never happened, the faults and political offences of the past year." The Sicilians held out against the presence in Sicily of any other than a Sicilian army, but it appears that the British and French admirals have undertaken to get over this difficulty, by persuading the Provisional Government to consent to the presence of Neapolitan troops in the capital of a province, and—but not until the irritation of the contest shall have died away. The King, it appears, if this arrangement be carried into effect, is to withdraw all his troops, though willing to grant an amnesty, or a quasi-amnesty, insists that thirty-two individuals, whom he names as most seriously implicated in the rebellion, should absent themselves from Sicily for a year; and there is some reason to fear, that these individuals may yet have sufficient influence with the Sicilians to cause the compromise to be rejected. Perhaps, however, when they find once for all that they are to have no more support from the naval forces of Great Britain or France, they will reflect more coolly upon their prospects of a successful resistance, and accept the terms which have been offered. It is possible, also, that the King of Naples, on receiving a satisfactory guarantee for the future loyalty of the thirty-two individuals named, will not press the point. The latest accounts represent the British and French admirals as having proceeded to Gaeta, to confer with his Majesty upon it. The war has been a very sanguinary and a very disgraceful one to both of the belligerents. It is to be hoped that no circumstances on either side will lead to its renewal. The Sicilians have received a fair offer. If they reject it, they will have to bear the whole shock of renewed hostilities, without any support from the Governments of Great Britain or France. The knowledge of this fact will, in all probability, be decisive of their submission.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE.

BURNEY PRIZE.—The Vice-Chancellor gives notice that the subject for the present year is "The Divine Attributes of Mercy, as deduced from the Old Testament." The candidates for the prize must be Bachelors of Arts, in their first year of standing; and the essays are to be sent to the Vice-Chancellor on or before the 12th of November, 1849, with the names of the respective authors sealed up.

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE.—The Very Rev. the Master and Fellows of this College have appointed William Whewell, Thomas Molesworth, and William Hardy Cooke to the three vacant Bacon Scholarships.

THE ADAMS PRIZE.—The University having accepted a fund raised by several members of St. John's College, for the purpose of founding a prize, to be called the Adams Prize, for the best essay on some subject of pure mathematics, astronomy, or other branch of natural philosophy, the prize to be given once in two years, and to be open to all persons who have at any time been admitted to a degree in this University, the examiners have issued notice that the subject for the first prize is "The Theory of the long inequality of Uranus and Neptune, determined upon the near commensurability of their periodic motions." The candidates are required to carry the investigation to (at least) terms of the second order with respect to the eccentricities, and to exterminate from the results all terms depending upon the first powers of the inclinations. The theory is to be compared with observation, the numerical values of the co-efficients in the expressions for the variations of the elements of the orbits. The problem will be considered to be solved in the most complete manner by those accounts of the terms of the third order of eccentricities, and calculating the effect of the more important terms involving the squares of the disturbing forces. Great importance will be attached by the examiners to an elucidation, drawn from dynamical considerations, of any steps of the analytical process; and more especially, to a clear exposition, apart from the symbolic reasoning, of the mode in which the forces produce the results arrived at. The reasoning, of the mode in which the forces produce the results arrived at. The essay must be prefaced by a statement of the course of the investigation, and of the principal heads under which the subject is treated, with a summary of the results. The essays must be sent in before the 1st of July, 1850, privately; each candidate is at liberty to send in his essay printed or lithographed. The successful candidate will receive about £130. He is required to print the essay and to present a copy to the University Library, to the library of St. John's College, and to each of the four examiners.

CRAVEN SCHOLARSHIP.—F. H. Whymper, of Trinity College, was last evening declared by the Adams Prize Committee the successful candidate for the vacant Craven Scholarship. The electors expressed an opinion that W. Owen, of St. John's College, acquitted himself in such a manner as to be deserving of special commendation.

ORDINATIONS.—The Bishop of York intends to hold his next ordination in York Minster, on Trinity Sunday, the 3d June next.—The following Bishops will hold ordinations on Trinity Sunday:—The Bishop of Bath and Wells, in the Cathedral Church of Wells; the Bishop of Ely, in the Cathedral Church of Ely; the Bishop of Lincoln, in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln; the Bishop of Manchester, in the Parish Church of Preston; the Bishop of Oxford, in the Cathedral Church of Oxford; the Bishop of Salisbury, in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury; the Bishop of Chester, in the Cathedral Church of Chester, on Sunday, the 13th of May next; the Bishop of Rochester, on Sunday, the 10th of June next; the Bishop of Winchester, in the Cathedral Church of Winchester, on Sunday, the 8th of July next; the Bishop of Worcester, in the Cathedral Church of Worcester, on Sunday, the 23d of September next.

SONS OF THE CLERGY.—The festival of the Sons of the Clergy will be held on Thursday, the 10th of May. The sermon in St. Paul's Cathedral will be preached by the Rev. E. M. Goulburn, M.A., Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Oxford.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.

On Sunday the Queen and Prince, and the ladies and gentlemen of the Royal household, attended divine service at Whippingham Church.

Prince Ernest of Saxe-Leuingen took leave of her Majesty and Prince Albert, and returned to Frogmore House, on the preceding day.

Her Majesty and the Prince take their customary early walk every morning (weather permitting) in the grounds at Osborne; and the younger branches of the Royal Family take their usual ride in the Park.

On Monday morning her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, accompanied by Prince Ernest of Leiningen, arrived in town at half-past eleven o'clock, from her residence, Frogmore House, near Windsor. Her Royal Highness was attended by Lady Fanny Howard, Baroness de Speth, and Sir George Couper; Prince Ernest was attended by Mr. Sparr. The Royal party were visited in the course of the day by her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians, and the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, and a so by the Prince of Hohenlohe-Waldenbourg, in the afternoon, who partook of a déjeûner with her Royal Highness at her residence, Clarence House, St. James's. The Duchess of Kent left town at half past three o'clock, on her return to Frogmore House.

On Wednesday evening Lady John Russell gave her second soirée this season, at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury, in Downing-street. The company began to set down before ten o'clock, and an uninterrupted succession of arrivals followed until nearly midnight. His Royal Highness the Prince of Parma honoured her Ladyship with his presence on the occasion.

The Right Hon. the Speaker had his customary Parliamentary entertainment on Saturday evening, at the right hon. gentleman's official residence in Eaton-square.

Mr. W. C. Ross, R.A., had the honour of taking the last sitting, on Tuesday, for a likeness of Prince Ernest of Leiningen, by command of the Queen.

A Levee will be held by her Majesty at St. James's Palace on Wednesday next, at two o'clock.

A Drawing-room will also be held at St. James's Palace on the next day (Thursday), at two o'clock.

Mr. W. Downing, of the Hon. East India Company's Botanical Office, has had the honour of presenting to her Majesty one ram and three ewes of the pure Thibetian breed, brought over by the Dalhousie, from Calcutta, being the gift of the Hon. East India Company.

APPROACHING MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—We have great pleasure in announcing that the two marriages have been arranged for the marriage of Lord Foley with the Lady Mary Fitzallan Howard, eldest daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk. The marriage, it is said, will take place early in May.

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Knatchbull, Bart., has for some time past been confined to h s room through indisposition.

DEPUTATIONS

THE LANDED INTEREST OF IRELAND.—On Saturday a deputation of members of Parliament, representing the landed interest of Ireland, had an interview with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for the purpose of calling upon the Government to introduce a measure, empowering the Bank of Ireland to make large advances to the landed proprietors of that country on the security of mortgages, following the example of the directors of the Bank of England in the year 1825, prior to which the utmost inconvenience was experienced by the English landed interest, from the difficulty, amounting almost to an impossibility, of obtaining loans on mortgage, however ample might be the security.

The deputation consisted of Lord Castlemaine, Sir Lucius O'Brien, Mr. F. French, Mr. Grace, Sir Edmond Hayes, Colonel Dunne, Mr. J. H. Hamilton, and Mr. St. George, Mr. G. A. Hamilton, and Mr. Callaghan, and they were most contemously received by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. French stated that what the deputation simply required was, that the Government should legally pass a short act legalising the advance of money by the Bank of Ireland on the security of mortgages, and that they should call on the directors to consider the subject of affording accommodation to the landed proprietors of Ireland on public and not on purely personal grounds. He wished, also, to direct the Chancellor of the Exchequer's attention to the fact, that the circulation of bank notes in Ireland had considerably diminished during the last six months. The Chancellor of the Exchequer admitted that the subject brought under his consideration was one of very great importance, and certainly the deputation had stated the case on which they relied very forcibly. He was not prepared at that moment to give an answer to the request made by the gentlemen who represented the landed interest of Ireland. He would take time to consider the matter and to consult with those most conversant with topics of the kind, and having made up his mind he would communicate the course which he should recommend her Majesty's Government to pursue. Sir L. O'Brien advocated the necessity for such a measure as the deputation asked the Government to introduce, and as an illustration of the great benefit that had accrued from the introduction of a measure having the facility of raising capital, he mentioned that recently 1000 acres of land had been unexpectedly thrown on his hands, and were it not for the kindness of some relatives in enabling him to advance all the money, those acres would now have formed an addition to the waste lands of Ireland. Several other members of the deputation urged the Chancellor of the Exchequer to bring a measure forward at once. The Chancellor of the Exchequer could not pledge himself at once to meet the wishes of the deputation; but he would consider the subject with care proportionate to its great importance. The deputation then withdrew.

IRISH RAILWAYS.—A deputation of noblemen and gentlemen interested in the railways in Ireland had an interview with Lord John Russell and the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Saturday last, for the purpose of inducing the Government to consent to the appointment of a select committee of the House of Commons, with the view of enquiring into the present position of Irish railways, and reporting upon the best means of securing the completion of such lines as would be serviceable to the country in the development of her resources. In the course of the discussion Lord John Russell having inquired what effect the loan of £500,000 had upon the traffic of the Great Southern and Western Railway, Mr. Reynolds observed that the loan to the Southern and Western, commonly called the Cashel Railway, had been attended with the most beneficial results. Lord John Russell having made a number of inquiries with reference to the value of the shares of several of the railways, asked how it happened that the companies were unable to exercise their borrowing powers in the numerous cases in which half their capital had been paid up? The deputationists replied that the condition of the country generally prevented capitalists from advancing loans on Irish security. If the Government would grant this guarantee, and thus manifest an interest in the undertakings, the confidence of the public would be restored, and abundance of money might be raised. After some further discussion, Lord John Russell stated that the application made by the deputation for the appointment of a select committee had somewhat taken him by surprise. He was not, therefore, prepared to state what course the Government might be disposed to adopt with references to a subject which he admitted was of great importance; but he assured the deputation that the proposition would receive the fullest consideration of her Majesty's Government. The deputation then withdrew.

IRELAND.

THE RATE-IN-AID AGITATION.—The meetings of the counties of Armagh and Down have been the most important that the anti-rate-in-aid agitation has produced. Colonel Blacker, a great favourite of the northern people, delivered a stirring speech at the former meeting, which was received with great applause. At the Down meeting, the Marquis of Downshire denounced it as "this most partial, impolitic, and rascally measure;" declaring his intention of opposing the rate "as an individual;" and expressed his hereditary dislike to being called a rebel. Lord Roden also made a strong speech at the same meeting, and said it was the worst measure ever inflicted upon Ulster. It is worthy of remark that men of all parties are to be found in the ranks of the anti-rate-in-aid agitation. The meeting began to set down before ten o'clock, and an uninterrupted succession of arrivals followed until nearly midnight. His Royal Highness the Prince of Parma honoured her Ladyship with his presence on the occasion.

The Right Hon. the Speaker had his customary Parliamentary entertainment on Saturday evening, at the right hon. gentleman's official residence in Eaton-square.

Mr. W. C. Ross, R.A., had the honour of taking the last sitting, on Tuesday, for a likeness of Prince Ernest of Leiningen, by command of the Queen.

A Levee will be held by her Majesty at St. James's Palace on Wednesday next, at two o'clock.

A Drawing-room will also be held at St. James's Palace on the next day (Thursday), at two o'clock.

Mr. W. Downing, of the Hon. East India Company's Botanical Office, has had the honour of presenting to her Majesty one ram and three ewes of the pure Thibetian breed, brought over by the Dalhousie, from Calcutta, being the gift of the Hon. East India Company.

APPROACHING MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—We have great pleasure in announcing that the two marriages have been arranged for the marriage of Lord Foley with the Lady Mary Fitzallan Howard, eldest daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk. The marriage, it is said, will take place early in May.

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Knatchbull, Bart., has for some time past been confined to h s room through indisposition.

DEPUTATIONS

THE LANDED INTEREST OF IRELAND.—On Saturday a deputation of members of Parliament, representing the landed interest of Ireland, had an interview with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for the purpose of calling upon the Government to introduce a measure, empowering the Bank of Ireland to make large advances to the landed proprietors of that country on the security of mortgages, following the example of the directors of the Bank of England in the year 1825, prior to which the utmost inconvenience was experienced by the English landed interest, from the difficulty, amounting almost to an impossibility, of obtaining loans on mortgage, however ample might be the security.

The deputation consisted of Lord Castlemaine, Sir Lucius O'Brien, Mr. F. French, Mr. Grace, Sir Edmond Hayes, Colonel Dunne, Mr. J. H. Hamilton, and Mr. St. George, Mr. G. A. Hamilton, and Mr. Callaghan, and they were most contemously received by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. French stated that what the deputation simply required was, that the Government should legally pass a short act legalising the advance of money by the Bank of Ireland on the security of mortgages, and that they should call on the directors to consider the subject of affording accommodation to the landed proprietors of Ireland on public and not on purely personal grounds. He wished, also, to direct the Chancellor of the Exchequer's attention to the fact, that the circulation of bank notes in Ireland had considerably diminished during the last six months. The Chancellor of the Exchequer admitted that the subject brought under his consideration was one of very great importance, and certainly the deputation had stated the case on which they relied very forcibly. He was not prepared at that moment to give an answer to the request made by the gentlemen who represented the landed interest of Ireland. He would take time to consider the matter and to consult with those most conversant with topics of the kind, and having made up his mind he would communicate the course which he should recommend her Majesty's Government to pursue. Sir L. O'Brien advocated the necessity for such a measure as the deputation asked the Government to introduce, and as an illustration of the great benefit that had accrued from the introduction of a measure having the facility of raising capital, he mentioned that recently 1000 acres of land had been unexpectedly thrown on his hands, and were it not for the kindness of some relatives in enabling him to advance all the money, those acres would now have formed an addition to the waste lands of Ireland. Several other members of the deputation urged the Chancellor of the Exchequer to bring a measure forward at once. The Chancellor of the Exchequer could not pledge himself at once to meet the wishes of the deputation; but he would consider the subject with care proportionate to its great importance. The deputation then withdrew.

IRISH RAILWAYS.—A deputation of noblemen and gentlemen interested in the railways in Ireland had an interview with Lord John Russell and the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Saturday last, for the purpose of inducing the Government to consent to the appointment of a select committee of the House of Commons, with the view of enquiring into the present position of Irish railways, and reporting upon the best means of securing the completion of such lines as would be serviceable to the country in the development of her resources. In the course of the discussion Lord John Russell having inquired what effect the loan of £500,000 had upon the traffic of the Great Southern and Western Railway, Mr. Reynolds observed that the loan to the Southern and Western, commonly called the Cashel Railway, had been attended with the most beneficial results. Lord John Russell having made a number of inquiries with reference to the value of the shares of several of the railways, asked how it happened that the companies were unable to exercise their borrowing powers in the numerous cases in which half their capital had been paid up? The deputationists replied that the condition of the country generally prevented capitalists from advancing loans on Irish security. If the Government would grant this guarantee, and thus manifest an interest in the undertakings, the confidence of the public would be restored, and abundance of money might be raised. After some further discussion, Lord John Russell stated that the application made by the deputation for the appointment of a select committee had somewhat taken him by surprise. He was not, therefore, prepared to state what course the Government might be disposed to adopt with references to a subject which he admitted was of great importance; but he assured the deputation that the proposition would receive the fullest consideration of her Majesty's Government. The deputation then withdrew.

IRELAND.

THE RATE-IN-AID AGITATION.—The meetings of the counties of Armagh and Down have been the most important that the anti-rate-in-aid agitation has produced. Colonel Blacker, a great favourite of the northern people, delivered a stirring speech at the former meeting, which was received with great applause. At the Down meeting, the Marquis of Downshire denounced it as "this most partial, impolitic, and rascally measure;" declaring his intention of opposing the rate "as an individual;" and expressed his hereditary dislike to being called a rebel. Lord Roden also made a strong speech at the same meeting, and said it was the worst measure ever inflicted upon Ulster. It is worthy of remark that men of all parties are to be found in the ranks of the anti-rate-in-aid agitation. The meetings were the Marquis of Downshire and Mr. Sharman Crawford, Lord Bangor and Mr. Maxwell, Mr. Ross of Rostrevor and Lord Roden.

POOR-LAW UNIONS.—The state of things in the Ennis union, county of Clare, is desperate indeed. There are not less than 25,000 persons receiving relief. The weekly expenditure is £900; and on the 26th of March the union will owe £10,000 sterling. The inspector, Mr. Lynch, reports that the guardians do not exercise any control over the relieving officers, and that on board days there are seldom more than three or four guardians present. In the meanwhile the commissioners for the present refrain from handing over the union to paid guardians—a step to which they finally must come.

One of the most noticeable signs of the social revolution now going on in Ireland, is the enormous quantity of second-hand plate offered for sale at a very low figure by the chief jewellers of Dublin. Never before was so much plate to be sold, and the price is extremely low. For furniture and equipages of every kind, the price at auctions is also very small. At a recent sale at the various effects, a handsome state carriage, little used, was knocked down for £38.

The vacancy in the Collectorship of Customs in the port of Dublin (first class), while leading to the promotion of many of the more active and deserving officers throughout the different ranks of the Customs department, will be filled up by all promotions are to be transmitted as being accepted, subject to the reductions and changes that may be deemed necessary, in accordance with the recommendations of the Commissioners of Inquiry.

The vast estates of Mr. Martin, son of the famous "Dick Martin"—in the county of Galway, alluded to in the debate of last week by Sir Robert Peel, is just been sold to a London assurance company. A recent traveller gives an idea of the extent of this estate by saying that the entrance to the private domain about a day's journey from the mansion hou

The Marquis of Donegal, K.P., late Commodore of the Royal Yacht Squadron, has been elected Commodore of the Royal Irish Yacht Club. The members have recently built, at Kingstown Pier, near Dublin, one of the most magnificent marine villas in Ireland, a handsome club-house, of great neatness beauty of style. It is situate a few yards from the St. George's Club-house, which the Marquis of Conyngham is the Commodore.

"THE ICARIAN REPUBLIC.—A letter from New Orleans, in the Gazette de France, says:—"M. Cabet, the leader of the Communists, is here overwhelmed with reproaches and invectives by those misguided unfortunates who, rance, called him their father. The desertion from the Communist camp is derable—barely fifty individuals remain at head-quarters."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—A general meeting of the proprietors of Bank stock was held on Thursday, to consider of a dividend. Mr. Morris, the Governor, occupied the chair. The attendance of proprietors was very large. A dividend of 7½ per cent was proposed, and unanimously acceded to by the proprietors; and a ballot will be taken on Tuesday next, for the purpose of confirming this decision.

INDIA HOUSE.—A Court of directors was held on Wednesday, at the East India-house, when Alexander Bell, Esq., was appointed a provisional member of council at Bombay.

SOCIETY [illegible]

[illegible] in aid of the funds of this excellent charity took place on Tuesday, at the London Coffee-house, Ludgate-hill. The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, who was supported by the sheriffs of the city of London, president, and upwards of 70 gentlemen honoured the institution with their presence on this occasion. His Lordship, in giving the toast of the evening, "Prosperity and perpetuity to the City Dispensary," stated that the institution was founded in the year 1789, and that since its opening nearly 300,000 patients have been cured or relieved by its agency, 26,000 visited at their own houses, and many persons who have met with accidents admitted and carefully attended to without letters of recommendation. During the year 1848 the total number of patients admitted was 9683, and of these 8891 were cured and relieved 8891; 21 died, 36 were discharged for irregularity, and 935 remained under treatment on the 31st December. His Lordship stated also, that notwithstanding the large amount of subscriptions contributed by the society in ministering to the necessities of the poor, but a very small sum was required for carrying out its objects, and expressed regret that the contributions received during 1848 past year had fallen short of the sum. He referred to the considerable absence of fatal cases in the city district during the prevalence of the late epidemic, and attributed the escape of that locality from the visitation to the sanatory influence of institutions like the City Dispensary.

CITY OF LONDON HOSPITAL FOR DISEASES OF THE CHEST.—On Saturday, the first anniversary festival of this excellent charity was celebrated at the London Tavern; the Earl of Carlisle in the chair. About 200 gentlemen sat down to an excellent dinner, and among the guests were Samuel H. E. and Samuel (junior) Gurney, Esqrs., Aldermen Sidney, Fancourt, and Finnis; J. Allcard, J. Dilke, H. Ford Barclay, Thomas Howell, R. W. Jones, A. Caldecott, C. Enderby, J. Masterman, junior, E. Bunsen, Esq. After the customary loyal and constitutional toasts had been drunk, that of the "Army and Navy," and the mention of Sir C. J. Napier having been received with marked cheers, the right hon. Chairman proposed "Prosperity to the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest," and, in an address full of eloquent pathos, drew an affecting picture of the sufferings of the metropolitan population from disease of the chest, adding that the hospital accommodation of the metropolis comprised but three thousand five hundred beds, of which but a small fraction is devoted to the above class of disease. It was, therefore, proposed to erect for the use of the east-end of the metropolis an hospital in which diseases of the chest might meet that separate and exclusive treatment pronounced by modern science to be the most successful. (Hear, hear.) It was also proposed to have in connexion with the hospital a sanatorium, in which persons of moderate incomes might obtain the best medical assistance and accommodation, and to continue the public dispensary, in which, in the small space of six months, 3160 persons had already been relieved. (Hear, hear.) The toast having been warmly responded to, the Secretary read the report which was duly adopted; and before the company separated, a collection was made, which, including donations, amounted to £171 5s. The necessity for this institution is urged by the number of hospital patients weekly, already amounting to 600; and the cases in the metropolitan districts last year reaching 18,664, or nearly one-third of the whole number of deaths.

STAMP AND EXCISE BOARDS.—The Treasury minute, bearing date the 15th of December, 1848, for the consolidation of the Board of Stamps with the Board of Excise, has just been printed by order of the House of Commons. The Lords of the Treasury observe:—"That the present Board of Excise consists of seven commissioners, and that the Board of Stamps and Taxes consists of five commissioners; and they are of opinion that the duties of the consolidated board may be ultimately effectually performed by a Board of Commissioners not exceeding seven, provided proper attention be given to the selection of persons to serve, not only by the chairman and deputy-chairman, but also by the junior members. They are of opinion, however, that, considering the large amount of revenue which will be under the management of the new Board, and the great amount of business which this must necessarily entail upon them, and which can only be materially diminished on the completion of the arrangements for consolidating the various subordinate departments of the Excise, and of the Stamps and Taxes, it will be advantageous, in the first instance, to retain for the time one more commissioner beyond the number of which they propose that the Board should ultimately consist." The eventual saving expected to be realised by the consolidation of these establishments will be £8100 a year. The following gentlemen have been appointed Joint Commissioners of the Board of Excise and of Stamps and Taxes: Mr. John Wood, chairman; Mr. John Thornton, deputy chairman; Mr. Hart Davis, Mr. Charles Fowlett Rushworth, Mr. Thomas Harrison, Mr. H. F. Stevenson, Mr. Charles J. Herries, Mr. Alfred Montgomery, Mr. Chas. Pressly. The junior Commissioners are to receive £1200 a year.

SUPPOSED DISCOVERY OF THE REMAINS OF MARTYRS IN SMITHFIELD.—On Wednesday, during the progress of excavations in Smithfield, opposite the entrance to the church of Bartholomew the Great, for the formation of a sewer, when about three feet from the surface, the workmen came upon a heap of unhewn stones, blackened as if by fire, and covered with bone and human bones, charred and partially consumed. The remains thus discovered are supposed to be those of Martyrs burnt at the stake. Many bones were carried away as relics.

THE REV. MR. SHORE AND THE BISHOP OF EXETER.—[illegible] might a densely crowded meeting of the inhabitants of Stoke Newington, at the Stockwell Educational Institute, Russell-green, for the purpose of considering the propriety of adopting a petition to Parliament, praying for an alteration in the law by which the Rev. Mr. Shore has been annexed in costs, and liable to imprisonment for life, for contempt, at the suit instituted against him by the Bishop of Exeter, for preaching the gospel since his secession from the Church of England, and in respect of which he is now a prisoner in St. Thomas's, Exeter. Mr. Carlisle, of Acre-lane, was called to the chair. Several resolutions in accordance with the objects of the meeting having been carried, the proceedings terminated.

EXTENSIVE ROBBERY.—On Wednesday information was received by the metropolitan police that Mr. Robert Buckell, actuary of the Brighton Savings Bank, had gone off with £870, the property of the depositors.

SAD CATASTROPHE.—On Tuesday Mr. W. Baker held an inquest at the Robin Hood public-house, High-hill, Hackney, respecting the deaths of J. J. R Robertson, aged 21, and T. W. C. Hairby, aged 24, medical students, who were drowned in the River Lea. Margaret Murray stated that on Saturday last she accompanied Hairby to the Jolly Anglers, adjoining the River Lea, Upper Clapton, where he hired a small boat which was only sufficient to hold two persons, and shortly after she had embarked with Hairby, Robertson came up and requested to be taken in. The boat was put back, and Robertson jumped in and sat down by the side of witness. Some persons who were standing on the bank advised Hairby and Robertson not to proceed in the boat, as it was too small to hold three persons, and that it was dangerous to remain in her. Hairby took charge of the sculls, and Robertson held one of the steering strings while witness the other. The boat had not proceeded far when Hairby said he was tired of rowing, and requested Robertson to take the sculls. They both stood upright, and Hairby attempted to pass Robertson, and in doing so they both leant on one side, which caused the boat to turn over and it began to fill. They became much alarmed, and the deceased immediately caught hold of witness, and the boat instantly capsized and turned bottom upwards. W. Wade, a bargeman, said his attention was attracted by hearing violent screaming for assistance, and he saw three persons in the water. Witness was in a barge, and as quickly reached the spot, and succeeded in rescuing Murray. The deceased, after swimming a short time, sank, and their bodies were not recovered until half an hour afterwards.—Verdict, "Accidental death."

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—By the Registrar-General's report, we learn that a decided improvement in the public health occurred during the week ending March 10. The deaths registered in London, which in the three previous weeks were 1425, 1451, and 1525, have declined to 1329, being 193 less than the winter average. A remarkable improvement has occurred in the mortality from epidemics; for, whereas this class of diseases was fatal in the three previous weeks to 233, 316, and 340 persons respectively, in the last week the deaths were only 243, which is little above the average. Small-pox does not prevail much at present; measles is unusually low. Scarlatina and hooping-cough show a decrease on the previous week; and now the mortality from the former does not much exceed the average: the deaths from hooping-cough were 69, which is more than the average by 27. Typhus has fallen to the average, being 42 deaths. Fatal cases of diarrhœa and dysentery were 21 being more than the average; of cholera, only 15, though in the three preceding weeks they were 49, 46, and 35: of the 15, 2 occurred in Warburton's Lunatic Asylum, Bethnal-green; 5 in the workhouse of St George's-in-the-East. The mortality from diseases of the organs of circulation is also unusually low. Three men died of delirium tremens; a man and a woman of intemperance (both cases attended with epilepsy); also a woman from falling in the street when drunk. A woman died in Mile End, "eight days after child-birth, of typhoid fever, from previous poor living." A man of 24 years of age died of "intestinal disease—obstruction of colon through its whole length" (post mort.): the obstruction had continued 24 days, but was removed by medical aid before death: the patient had taken opium medicinally for the last nine years, and took 2 ounces of three and sometimes four half-drachms daily. The number of births during the week was 1044.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean height of the barometer was above 30 in. daily, except on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the highest, which was on Tuesday, was 30.385. The thermometer was highest on Sunday, when it was 60°; the highest of each day fell almost continuously to 42° on Friday. The mean temperature of the week was 43°. The mean temperature of each day continued above that of the same day on an average of seven years, till Friday. The wind was for the most part in the south-west till Thursday, when it veered to north and north-west.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Sir Charles Napier having expressed a wish to visit Italy previous to his going to India, the Lords of the Admiralty have given orders for one of her Majesty's steamers to be at Leghorn on the 26th of the present month, to convey the general from Leghorn to Alexandria, to meet the Marseilles mail there. The mail is to be detained at Alexandria until the arrival of Sir Charles.

Two small elephants were shipped for Calais on Thursday last. It is at Folkestone, said to be the property of Sir Charles Napier, the new Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in India.

In the report of the Municipal Commissioners on the City of London, it is stated, "The Lord Mayor's chaplain and conchman receive each a freedom annually."

Hardy, a private in the 4th Regiment of the Line, was sentenced to death by a court-martial in Paris on Monday, for having struck a sergeant of his company.

The Great Britain, steam ship, has been sold for £25,000. The late owners have compromised with the insurers to save law expenses, and are to receive £10,111 16s., or about 55 per cent. on the sum insured.

The Acadia and Britannia, which were recently purchased from the North American Mail Company by the Central German Government for war steamers, left the Mersey, the former on Friday week and the latter on Sunday last for Antwerp, where they will receive their armaments. Besides these vessels, the same Government have purchased the American steamer, United States, also to be fitted as a war vessel.

M. Delescluze, the editor of Le Révolution Démocratie et Sociale, was tried and convicted in Paris on Monday last, for articles calculated to excite hatred against General Cavaignac and the National Assembly. He was sentenced to imprisonment for one year, and to pay a fine of 1000f.

On Saturday last there was exhibited, in the Liverpool Underwriters' Rooms, a curiosity from California, in the shape of a newspaper. It was entitled the Californian, and was about the size of the New York Sun, and printed equally as well as that paper. The news appears very scanty, as the main portion of the paper is devoted to advertisements.

A son of the late lamented artist, Mr. Haydon, whose untimely fate excited so much interest in public sympathy, has been appointed Lord John Russell to a junior clerkship on the first vacancy that has been filled up by the Treasury for some months past, in consequence of the reductions in the several departments.

At the recent annual election of Lord Rector for the University of St. Andrew's, the Rev. Thomas T. Jackson, Professor of Biblical Criticism, was unanimously elected.

The Epoca, of Rome, states that 4000 Greeks, now in Epirus, ready armed and disciplined, have offered their services to the Roman Republic.

Louis Blanc has published a pamphlet called "Appel aux honnêtes Gens." In this little brochure, which is adversely written, Louis Blanc accuses the High Court of Justice of being composed of a set of Ministerial mymidons and mouchards, and says that they are backed by a packed jury, and that, for these cogent reasons, he declines to appear before the Bar of Prayes who has been perched up into the House of Justice.

On Sunday morning his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury preached at Trinity Church, Trinity-square, Borough, before the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and Under-Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, the High Bailiff of Southwark, and a crowded congregation, in aid of the funds of the Trinity District Visiting Society.

The precision and quickness with which the French army manœuvre are proverbial; and recently Marshal Bugeaud, at the head of the garrison of Lyons, has been displaying instances of their power in this respect by executing some brilliant military manœuvres. In the course of three-quarters of an hour, on one occasion, the troops (the 7th inst.), a bridge was thrown across the Rhone, over which the entire army passed.

The Polish Count Lamoyski has left Paris for Turin, with 42 of the most experienced officers of the old Polish army.

M. Marbrart, a Member of the Hungarian Diet, has arrived in Paris. He is said to be charged with a special mission from Kossuth and the Chiefs of the Magyar party. He is to proceed from Paris to England.

Some of the French journals state that the fortress of Moultan was defended by a Frenchman, named d'Outtreuals, Gen. of Artillery in the Sikh service. At the storming of the breach he was killed by our troops; and then Moolraj, finding himself deprived of the services of an officer on whom he mainly relied, surrendered to General Whish.

The society which was recently formed for the protection of the salmon fishing in the river Dee, has been successful in the great object of their exertions. The river is full of fish, and promises to afford excellent sport for the season.

The Banks Assize Bill having passed the House of Lords, the summer assizes will be held for the future at Aylesbury. There is a new gaol at Aylesbury, which has been recently built, and the magistrates have decided upon immediately commencing building lodgings for the accommodation of the Judges, which will be ready to be occupied in March, 1850.

The Council of the Royal College of Surgeons have determined that the examinations for the fellowship shall take place on Monday the 2nd, and Wednesday the 4th of April next.

During the past week a quantity of wreck was washed ashore on the Lancashire coast near Rossall, and other portions were seen floating in Morecambe Bay. A portion of the paintwork of the vessel has been secured, indicates it to belong to a vessel of about 100 tons burden, but nothing has been found by which the name of the unfortunate vessel can be identified.

The Rev. Charles Anthony Swainson, B.D., fellow and tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge, to be one of her Majesty's preachers at Whitehall.

The Rev. William Cook, M.A., incumbent of the church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Pancras, has been appointed Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Chester, in the room of the Rev. James Cartmell, B.D., elected Master of Christ's College, Cambridge.

Mr. Geo. Woodhouse has been appointed assistant deputy-housekeeper of the House of Commons, in the room of the late Mr. R. Bellamy.

Last week, a beautiful and powerful steam-frigate, named the Magicienne, was launched in her Majesty's Royal dockyard, Pembroke.

It is in contemplation to have a station for reserve steam-vessels at Greenhithe. They will be admirably situated for the protection of the river, and will be ready to proceed to sea at a moment's notice when their services are required.

Mr. Low, Cass, son of General Cass, one of the candidates for the Presidency of the United States at the late contest, has arrived in this country en route to Rome, where he is to reside as Consul for the United States.

The Recordership of Wokingham, rendered vacant by the death of J. Jeremy, Esq., has been conferred on George Clive, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of Lincoln's-inn, and Judge of the Southwark County Court.

A return moved for by the Earl of Lincoln, M.P., shows that the total amount of the monies raised and at present chargeable on the security of the land revenues of the Crown, is £805,000, borrowed from the Equitable Assurance Society, the Bank of England, Lady Elcho's trustees, Messrs. Coutts and Co., and Mr. G. W. Aylmer. The amount of interest hitherto paid is £160,291.

Messrs. Hunt and Roskell (late Storr and Mortimer), New Bond-street, we understand, have nearly perfected a Miniature War Medal, which will bear comparison in every respect with those issued by the Government.

The Rev. James Shore, at the suit of the Bishop of Exeter, was arrested last week for contempt of Court, for the non-payment of costs, after preaching in Spitalfields Chapel. Sir Culling Eardley has contributed £20 towards the fund for taking up Mr. Shore's case; and the Rev. Thomas Thompson, vicar of the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, has given £10 for the same purpose.

The calendar of the prisoners for trial at the Wiltshire assizes states that "a young man, named William [illegible], aged with embezzling a penny, the property of her Majesty."

A correspondent in the lake district (Cumberland) informs us that a young man, named William [illegible], has unexpectedly endowed St. Mary's Church, Birthwaite, with £1000. Such an act of real and useful charity needs no comment.

The Lord High Chancellor has been pleased to appoint Hubert Smith, Esq., of Saint Leonard's, Bridgnorth, a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

American papers announce the discovery of a lead mine in Nelson, near the Albemarle line, eight miles from the St. Ives River Gold, in Virginia. The ore is said to be only four feet below the surface, and the vein to be four-and-a-half feet wide, yielding the enormous quantity of 30 per cent. of pure lead, and 2 per cent. of silver.

The band-master of the Queen's Hussars was fired at by one of the band boys, on returning from [illegible], in Dublin, after parade. The shot providentially only grazed the officer. The culprit is in custody awaiting a court-martial.

The Installation of Mr. Macaulay as Lord Rector of Glasgow College is to take place on Wednesday next. At the Town Council, last week, the Lord Provost was authorised to intimate that the freedom of the city be presented to Mr. Macaulay.

At a public meeting of the parishioners of Liverpool, held on Tuesday in St. Nicholas's Church, the Rev. Rector Raines in the chair, it was resolved to proceed vigorously in agitating for a measure to subject the docks and corporate property to the payment of parochial and other local rates.

The Fortune, arrived at Liverpool from Macasthm, has brought a quantity of quicksilver ore which had been shipped from California. Two specimens are exhibited in the Liverpool Mango-nuts-room on Tuesday.

[illegible] church, Preston, has again received a munificent gift from its zealous minister, the Rev. T. Lowndes, Esq. During the past week a very handsome carved oak pulpit and reading-desk have been placed in the church, new tablets, &c., have also been presented by the same gentleman.

The Emperor of Russia has issued an ukase to all the official departments, informing them that in the year 1849 they are not to presentany petitions whatever for an increase of salary or pecuniary assistance of any kind whatever, because the country will require extraordinary pecuniary resources for the consolidation of the whole army.

Sir James Ramsay is to succeed to the vacant Lord-Lieutenancy of Kincardineshire.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

FOURTH NOTICE.

OF Mr. Lance's great and almost unequalled excellence as a painter of fruit and splendid gold plate, we have often spoken. His picture, which we now present to our readers, is one of a pair—"Summer" and "Winter:" the former is a beautiful group of fruit, and, in its sunny effects forms a good contrast to the cold tone of the game, which is equally characteristic of the oppo season, "Winter."

This picture has been painted for Mr. Vernon; it will not form part of the National collection, but is to be placed in Mr. Vernon's private gallery; it is, certainly, equal to either of the painter's finest works.

Since Mr. Lance has been in the profession, he has painted three hundred pictures, which have found their way into the galleries of distinguished patrons of British art.

Mr. Danby, who contributes the clever picture also engraved in our present number, of "A Mountain Chieftain's Funeral in the Olden Time," became an exhibitor at the Royal Academy for the first time in 1821. His first picture was "Disappointed Love;" and his second (in the Exhibition of the following year) was called "Clearing up after a Shower," and is said to have evinced that early love and attentive observation of nature which of late years has become so peculiarly pleasing in his works. His third contribution to the Academy was not much dissimilar in subject from his present performance in the British Institution, "Landscape, with Warriors of Olden Times in England retired to the shade of a mountain glen, to hear the Song of the Minstrel." This was followed, in 1824, by "Sunset at Sea after a Storm;" and, in 1825, by his large picture of "The Delivery of Israel out of Egypt," bought by Lord Stafford at the Exhibition for five hundred guineas; Lord Liverpool having offered the same sum for the picture. The Academy having lost Mr. Martin was induced at the next election for Associates to introduce Mr. Danby into their body.

Everything belonging to the Highlands of Scotland has of late become peculiarly interesting. It is not much above a century since it was otherwise. Swift, in his "Journal to Stella," mentions having dined in company with two gentlemen from the Highlands of Scotland, and expresses his surprise at finding them persons of ordinary decorum and civility. The rebellions of 1715 and 1745 raised a deep-rooted feeling in the House of Hanover against the inhabitants of the Highlands. How different is it now! Her present Majesty, the great-granddaughter of the King against whom the rebellion in 1745 was raised, in 1845 takes up her summer residence in the Highlands; and is so pleased with her reception, with the country, and with the people, that she returns to the ever-lovely Highlands for a second summer visit. The genius of Sir Walter Scott has done much for the character of the Highlanders; and the pencil of Edwin Landseer almost as much for their manners and customs, sports, and even the scenery of their wild and noble country. Nor will Mr. Danby's picture diminish the interest that is felt. Mr. Danby might have chosen the motto for his picture from Scott's "Glenfinlas, or Lord Ronald's Coronach:"—

"O hone a rie!" "O hone a rie!"
The pride of Albin's line is o'er,
And fall'n Glenartney's stateliest tree;
We ne'er shall see Lord Ronald more.

O sprung from great Macgillianor,
The chief that never feared a foe,
How matchless was thy broad claymore,
How deadly thine unerring bow.

The picture is a very impressive spectacle. The hero is slain, and his clan, with vows of vengeance, or stifled moans of despair, bear his remains to the grave, at the solemn hour of midnight. The procession winds through the wild and rugged passes of a mountain glen, through the smoke of a hundred torches, or, at a turn of the mountain's gorge, the moon shines pale and cold upon the sable freight. The remains, borne by the chieftain's nearest kin, are followed by his family, his bard, his pages, his faithful dog. Beside the hearse strides a brother, whose bright sword gleams in the moonlight, as he raises the blade aloft in vow of vengeance; and with it is the holy cross. Before the procession lies the winding vale, with its misty perspective of precipice, and below is the still lake, emblems of the eternal rest sought for the Chief. On each projecting rocky point glares the watchfire; where, at morning's dawn a thousand spears will bristle, and fiercely rush again to war.

WINTER."—PAINTED BY G. LANCE.

MR. JOHN MARTIN.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

Lindsey House, Chelsea, March 14, 1849.

SIR,—YOUR Journal is so distinguished for the accuracy of its statements, a rarely to present occasion for question; but the article concerning me in your last Number was so unfortunate a tissue of errors from beginning to end, that it can only have the effect of misleading your readers; and I must, therefore, request your insertion of the following particulars, which, however brief, may at least be relied on, and thus supersede the unauthorised sketches of my life which have hitherto appeared.

I was born at a house called the East-land Ends, Haydon Bridge, near Hexham, 19th July, 1789, and received the rudiments of my education at the well-known free-school of that place. Having, from my earliest years, attempted to draw, and expressed a determination to "be a painter," the question arose "how to turn my desires to profitable account;" and it was ultimately decided to make me a herald painter—in consequence of which, upon the removal of my family to Newcastle, I was, when 14, apprenticed to Wilson, the coach-builder, of that town. I worked with him for a year, in no small degree disgusted at the drudgery which, as junior apprentice, I had to endure, and at not being allowed to practice the higher mysteries of the art; when, just previously to the expiration of the year (from which period was to have received an increase of pay), one of the senior apprentices told me that my employer would evade the payment of the first quarter, on the grounds that "I went on trial," and that "it was not in the indentures." As it had been foretold, so it turned out. Upon claiming the increase, I was referred to my articles, and the original sum was tendered. This I indignantly rejected, saying, "That! you're soon beginning then, and mean to serve me the same as you did such an one? but I won't submit;" and, turning on my heel, I hastened home. My father highly approved of my conduct—declared that I should not go back—and immediately furnished me with proper drawing materials, the most satisfactory reward I could receive. I worked away to my heart's content for some days; when, at length, while so employed, the townsergeant came to take me off to the Guildhall to answer charges brought against me by my master. I was dreadfully frightened, the more so as none of my family were within call to accompany me: and, on entering the court, my heart sank at sight of the aldermen, and my master, with lowering face, and his witnesses. I was charged on oath with insolence—having run away—rebellious conduct—and threatening to do a private injury. In reply, I simply stated the facts as they occurred. The witness produced against me proved the correctness of my statement in every particular; and the consequence was a decision in my favour. Turning, then, to my master, I said, "You have stated your dissatisfaction with me, and apprehensions of my doing you a private injury: under these circumstances, you can have no objection to returning my indentures." Mr. Wilson was not prepared for this, but the Alderman immediately said, "Yes, Mr. Wilson, you must give the boy his indentures." They were accordingly handed over to me; and I was so overjoyed, that, without waiting longer, I bowed and thanked the Court, and running off to the coach-factory, flourished the indentures over my head, crying, "I've got my indentures, and your master has taken a false oath; and I don't know whether he is not in the pillory by this time!" My family were delighted with the spirit I had displayed, and at my emancipation from an occupation they saw was uncongenial, and my father at once took measures to place me under an Italian master of great merit, and some reputation in Newcastle, named Boniface Musso, the father of the celebrated enamel painter, Charles Muss. I remained under his instructions about a year, when Mr. C. Muss, who was settled in London, wished his father to come and reside with him, and M. Musso urged upon my parents the advantage of my accompanying him. After much cogitation, many misgivings on my mother's part, and solemn charges to our friend, it was ultimately agreed that should join him in London within a few months. I accordingly arrived in London at the beginning of September, 1806; but, unluckily for the lovers of romance, I was not cast upon the wide world in quite such a forlorn and destitute condition as your contributor states; for I had a good outfit—small, though sufficient funds for immediate purposes, notwithstanding my having been robbed of all my loose cash by a poor passenger in the ship—and most important of all, I was placed under the protection of kind and excellent friends. The treatment I experienced from Mr. C. Muss soon satisfied me that he conceived my means to be far more extended than they were; I therefore took an early opportunity of informing him that I had resolved never more to receive pecuniary assistance from my parents, who had already done enough in providing means for establishing me in London; that, as my present resources were not equal to a due recompense for his liberality, I thought it only right to tell him my position. He was pleased with my honourable candour, and saying that he would do all in his power to promote my laudable intentions, immediately undertook to employ me in his glass and china painting establishment in a department where my facility in designing and painting landscape scenes would be very useful; and from this time I supported myself solely by my own exertions, and with advantage to my employers.

After a few months, feeling uncomfortable, owing to some little indifferences with a member of Mr. M's. family, I removed from his house in Wynyatt-street, New River-Head, to Adam-street West, Cumberland-place, continuing to work for Mr. Muss' firm during the day, and sitting up at night till two and three o'clock acquiring that knowledge of perspective and architecture which has since been so valuable to me. Here I remained till 1809, when I married, and removed to Northumberland-street, Marylebone, thence to High-street; thence, in 1818, to 30, Allsop-terrace, New-road; and thence, after thirty years' residence, to my present abode: and these are the only places in London I have ever lived in. Shortly before my marriage, Mr. Muss's establishment broke up, and those employed in it had the option of seeking independent employment, or following the fortunes of the different members of the firm. I, of course, accompanied my friend, and was subsequently engaged with him in the glass painting, carried on by Mr. Collins, in the Strand, occupying my evenings upon water-colour drawings, and contriving, in odd hours, to paint in oil my first picture ever exhibited ("A Clytie"), which was sent to the Academy in 1810, and rejected for want of room, though not condemned, as I afterwards learnt through Mr. Tresham. I therefore sent it again in 1811, when it was hung in a good situation in the Great Room! At the beginning of the following year, having now lost my employment at Collins's, it became indeed necessary to work hard, and, as I was ambitious of fame, I determined on painting a large picture, "Sadak," which was executed in a month. You may easily guess my feelings when I overheard the men who were placing it in the frame disputing as to which was the top of the picture! The work, however, though hung in the ante-room of the Royal Academy, received, to my inexpressible delight, a notice in the newspapers, and was eventually sold, under interesting circumstances, to the late Mr. Manning, for 50 guineas. The following year, 1813, I sent "The Expulsion" to the British Institution, and "Adam's first sight of Eve" to the Royal Academy," and was again given a place in the Great Room! My next painting "Clytie," though a picture which has stood the test of criticism during many years, was in 1814 placed in the ante-room of the Royal Academy. The following year I sent the "Joshua," which was again hidden in the ante-room; the next year, 1817, I sent it to the British Institution, where it attracted great attention, and I was rewarded with the chief premium of the year, £100; but the picture was not sold till some years afterwards, when it went as a companion to the "Belshazzar."

Down to this period I had supported myself and family by pursuing almost every branch of my profession—teaching—painting small oil pictures, glass enamel paintings, water-colour drawings; in fact, the usual tale of a struggling artist's life. I had been also successful with my sepia drawings, that the Bishop of Salisbury, the tutor to the Princess Charlotte, advised me not to risk my reputation by attempting the large picture of "Joshua." As is generally the case in such matters, these well-meant recommendations had no effect; but, at all events, the confidence I had in my powers was justified, for the success of my "Joshua" opened a new era to me.

In 1818 I removed to a superior house, and had to devote my time mainly to executing some immediately profitable works; but, in 1819, I produced the "Fall of Babylon," which was second only to the "Belshazzar" in the attention it excited. The following year came "Macbeth," one of my most successful landscapes. Then, in 1821, "Belshazzar's Feast," an elaborate picture, which occupied a year in executing, and which received the premium of £300 from the British Institution. In the next year, 1822, appeared the "Destruction of Herculaneum," another elaborate work. In 1823, the "Seventh Plague," and "Paphian Bower." In 1824 the "Creation," in 1826 the "Deluge," and in 1838 the "Fall of Nineveh." In addition to the above were many smaller pictures, duplicates of some of the above subjects, sketches, and drawings; but the most important of all was my acquiring the art of engraving, and producing the "Illustrations of Milton," designed on the plates (and for which I received 2000 guineas); the "Belshazzar's Feast," the first large steel plate ever engraved in mezzotinto; the "Joshua," and the "Deluge," between the years 1833 and 1838. Thus it will be seen that all my greatest works which have gained me a reputation both at home and abroad, were produced within the eleven years immediately succeeding the first fair exhibition of my "Joshua," and that "the bitter sayings of envious artists" arose from no inertness on my part, while the rapid and substantial success which attended my efforts certainly warranted no supposition of any "false and temporary appreciation of my merits." On the contrary, the inferences are all the other way, if we may judge from the fact that, of all my numerous works, I have but one oil-painting in my own possession, the earlier works having been purchased by the late Mr. Henry Philip Hope, the Duke of Buckingham, Lord de Tabley, Earl of Durham, Earl Grey, and others; the more recent ones, by the Duke of Sutherland, Prince Albert, and Mr. Scarisbrick: to whose cultivated taste I am as much indebted as to his liberal patronage. The notice and honours I have received from foreign courts arose chiefly from the circulation of my engravings, as only two of my pictures have ever been seen abroad—the "Fall of Nineveh" at Brussels, and the "Deluge" in Paris: the first procured me the large medal of the Exhibition, the Order of Leopold, and my election as a member of the Academy of Antwerp; the second, the gold medal, and a magnificent present of Sèvres from the King of the French. These facts show that if I had enemies amongst the artists, their aspersions did not retard my progress. However, I myself much doubt the existence of such ill-feeling in the outset, though there can be little question that eventually my success, by my own independent means, raised a sufficient number of detractors. As regards the Royal Academy, I, doubtless, had reason to complain; for as I progressed in art and reputation my places on its walls retrograded—my first works being placed in the Great Room, whereas, all the subsequent, and with every show of probability, superior, productions were placed in a dark hole called the Anti-room. This led to my ceasing to enter my name upon its books, to my considering its laws, and to my subsequent opposition on public grounds, my quarrel being, not with individual members, but with the association itself; for I was satisfied that a body so constituted, a close and narrow monopoly, with the privileges of a Royal charter and power of a public institution, could not but produce a mischievous effect on art itself. I have expressed these convictions in evidence before the House of Commons, and yet hope to see a thorough reform, and all such monopolies thrown open.

I have already encroached so much upon your space, that I have scarcely room to account for the last twenty years of my life: suffice it, that some portion of it was devoted to engraving, which I was eventually obliged to abandon, owing to the imperfect laws of copyright, my property being so constantly and variously infringed, that it became ruinous to contend with those who robbed me; and I was, therefore, driven from the market by inferior copies of my own works, to the manifest injury of my credit and pecuniary resources, while I may, without vanity, affirm, that even art itself suffers by the non-circulation of the engravings, for, of course, neither my own plates nor the pirated copies will sell without the impulse of novelty.

In consequence of the strong interest I had always felt in the improvement of the condition of the people, and the sanitary state of the country, I turned my attention to engineering subjects; and two-thirds of my time, and a very large portion of my pecuniary means, have, since 1827, been devoted to the object I had at heart, though even here I have been obstructed and injured by the same objection of the inefficiency of the patent laws, and, indeed, total absence of real protection for original designs in engineering and mechanics. Your limits will not admit of the particulars of injuries I have sustained on this head, and I will therefore merely enumerate the plans I have put forth. My attention was first occupied in endeavouring to procure an improved supply of pure water to London, diverting the sewage from the river, and rendering it available as manure; and in 1827 and 1828 I published plans for the purpose. In 1829 I published further plans for accomplishing the same objects by different means, namely, a weir across the Thames, and for draining the marshy lands, &c. In 1832, 1834, 1836, 1838, 1842, 1843, 1845, and 1847, I published and republished additional particulars—being so bent upon my object that I was determined never to abandon it; and though I have reaped no other advantage, I have, at least, the satisfaction of knowing that the agitation thus kept up, constantly, solely by myself, has resulted in a vast alteration in the quantity and quality of water supplied by the companies, and in the establishment of a Board of Health, which will, in all probability, eventually carry out most of the objects I have been so long urging. Amongst the other proposals which I have advanced is my railway connecting the river and docks with all the railways that diverge from London, and apparently approved by the Railway Permit Commissioners, as the line they intimate coincides with that submitted by me, and published in their report—the principle of rail adopted by the Great Western line—the lighthouse for the sands appropriated by Mr. Walker in his Maplin sand lighthouse—the flat anchor and wire cable—mode of ventilating coal-mines—floating harbour and pier—iron ship, and various other inventions of comparatively minor importance, but all conducing to the great ends of improving the health of the country, increasing the produce of the land, and furnishing employment for the people in remunerative works.

With every apology for the length of my communication, which must satisfy you that I have never been an idle man, I remain, sir, your obedient servant,
JOHN MARTIN.

[We have great pleasure in inserting this curious and interesting autobiography; but Mr. Martin should be made aware, that we had no intention of sketching the events of his life beyond the appearance of his "Joshua." Whatever our errors may have been (and, by Mr. Martin's own showing, they are neither numerous nor important), we are still very glad that the errors we made in a brief biography of a living artist, should have called forth an account of the artist's own life from his own pen.—ED.]

FINE ARTS.

LORD GEORGE BENTINCK. Engraved by S. W. REYNOLDS; from a Picture by SAMUEL LANE.—Paul and Dominic Colnaghi.

This exquisite print of the lamented Lord George Bentinck is engraved from the picture which hangs in the Town-hall of Lynn, for which borough the late nobleman sat in Parliament. The figure is half-length; the attitude is dignified and graceful, and the expression of the features are full of eloquent spirit. The engraving is in Mr. Reynolds's best manner; and we cannot award higher commendation.

FIELD-MARSHAL THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON, K.G. Painted by Sir T. LAWRENCE, P.R.A. Engraved by SAMUEL COUSENS.—Paul and Dominic Colnaghi.

The original of this magnificent print is in the collection of Sir Robert Peel, to whom the plate is dedicated. The Duke is standing upon the field of Waterloo, over which a storm is fitfully sweeping. His Grace is in military undress, and wears his characteristic short cloak; his arms are folded, and his right hand grasps a telescope. The print is a fine memorial of Britain's greatest hero; and its artistic execution is in every way worthy of the fame of the picture whence it has been engraved.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The season commenced on Monday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The subscription for the series of eight concerts is full, and the attendance therefore was very great. The first part opened with Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, which was splendidly played. The stately grandeur, infinity of ideas, and intense pathos in this work were developed by Costa, with his forces, with irresistible truth and vigour. Miss M. Williams gave an effective aria from an opera entitled "Mirame," composed by F. Romel, in 1686, in good style. Sainton followed in Spohr's ninth Violin Concerto in D Minor, which he executed with remarkable skill and force, the slow movement being expressively done. As in all Spohr's compositions, reiteration and monotony were the besetting sins of this concerto. Meyerbeer's pretty terzetto from the "Crociato," "Giovinetto Cavalier," with its picturesque accompaniment, was sung by Miss A. Williams, Mrs. Noble, and Miss M. Williams. Weber's chivalrous "Oberon" overture terminated the first part, and was carried through with the greatest impetuosity, the rush of the violins at the close, with the subject of Reiza's scena, being wonderfully imposing.

The second part of the scheme was taken up with Mendelssohn's music to Racine's 'y Athalie," performed for the first time in public in this country. This work was composed by order of the King of Prussia, and was consequent on the success of Mendelssohn in the "Œdipus and Antigone," and also in the "Midsummer Night's Dream." It was executed at the Palace in Berlin in 1846, the play being performed with scenic accessories. The music consisted of an overture and seven pieces of incidental music, interspersed with solo parts for three female voices, a march and accompanied dialogue. On New Year's Day, in 1847, "Athalie" was performed at the Palace before the Queen and Prince Albert, Professor Brasseur reading the poem. Mr. Mitchell intended to have produced it at the French Plays, with Rachel to recite the poem, but the Lord Chamberlain's license was withheld, on the ground of the subject being taken from the Bible. The action, in fact, occurs in a vestibule of the Temple of Jerusalem, the events being recorded in the 2nd B ok of Chronicles, chapters 22 and 23.

In Racine's tragedy, the music for which has been composed by Gossio and other French composers, the choruses are sung by virgins of the tribe of Levi and Salometh; Mendelssohn has added male voices.

On Monday, notwithstanding the efficiency of the principals—the Misses Williams and Mrs. Noble, band and chorus—the performance of "Athalie" was a complete failure as to effect. The composition was heard with an apathy rarely witnessed at a Philharmonic concert. It is not right to attack the feelings of the amateurs for this frigidity; it was provoked by the incongruous character of the work itself, when heard in a concert-room, without scenic adjuncts, and without the aid of a narrative or descriptive poem. The want of continuity—the unintelligibility of the story—and the pieces passing rapidly without any relation of keys, were obvious evils, which even the genius of Mendelssohnian inspiration could not overcome.

The Sacred Harmonic Society proposes to perform the work on the 30th, and until that period we must defer our analysis, as with their choral power in such a vast space as Exeter Hall, the beauties of "Athalie" will be more palpable. But there are gems which can be indicated at once, such as the overture, one of the first instrumental specimens of Mendelssohn's orchestral powers; the "March," a duo for two soprani, and a trio for three soprani, and these will always be heard with delight in the concert-room; but the work in its entirety, according to our present impressions, ought not to be removed from the stage, for which it was destined. The Philharmonic directors, however, deserve every praise for their experiment.

The next concert, on the 26th inst., will be honoured by the presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert.

MR. JOHN PARRY'S ENTERTAINMENT.

On Thursday evening the above popular gentleman essayed, or the first time in public, at Highgate, an entertainment of a very remarkable kind, in which, alone and unassisted, he amused his audience for two hours with a succession of those singular and inimitable effects, both of piano and voice, which have procured for him such wide renown. It has been for some time known in the musical world that Mr. John Parry was about to secede from the concert-room and appear on his own account; and a few rehearsals, before parties of his professional friends, excited much curiosity on the subject. He has, however, determined upon not presenting it to the London public until it is quite perfect, and, for this reason, is giving it in the various suburbs, such as Highgate, Wandsworth, Edmonton, &c.

It is called "Lights and Shadows of Social Life," and is not altogether a comic performance; on the contrary, two parts of it are exceedingly pathetic. One of these is a most touching ballad—the song of a governess—the words of which we subjoin:

OH! SEND ME NOT AWAY FROM HOME

Oh! send me not away from home—dear mother—let me stay,
Don't break my heart to leave you thus, and go so far away.
I will be all you wish me, I will ever be a nurse—
Do but let me remain with you through hope and fear.
To [illegible] and [illegible] are free
Then, mother dear, [illegible] from all I loved and prized,
To dwell in some strange family, heart-broken and despised!

I know, too, I must give them up—that we must meet no more,
That all our dreams of future life and happiness are o'er.
I would not have him fetter'd in his life's aspiring morn,
To struggle on through poverty, and ill-gain, and bitter scorn.
Besides, I shall be left alone, and mine be all the power,
To comfort and console you, in the sad and dreary hour.

Then send me not away from home—dear mother—let me stay!
'Twill break my heart to leave you thus, and so so far away.

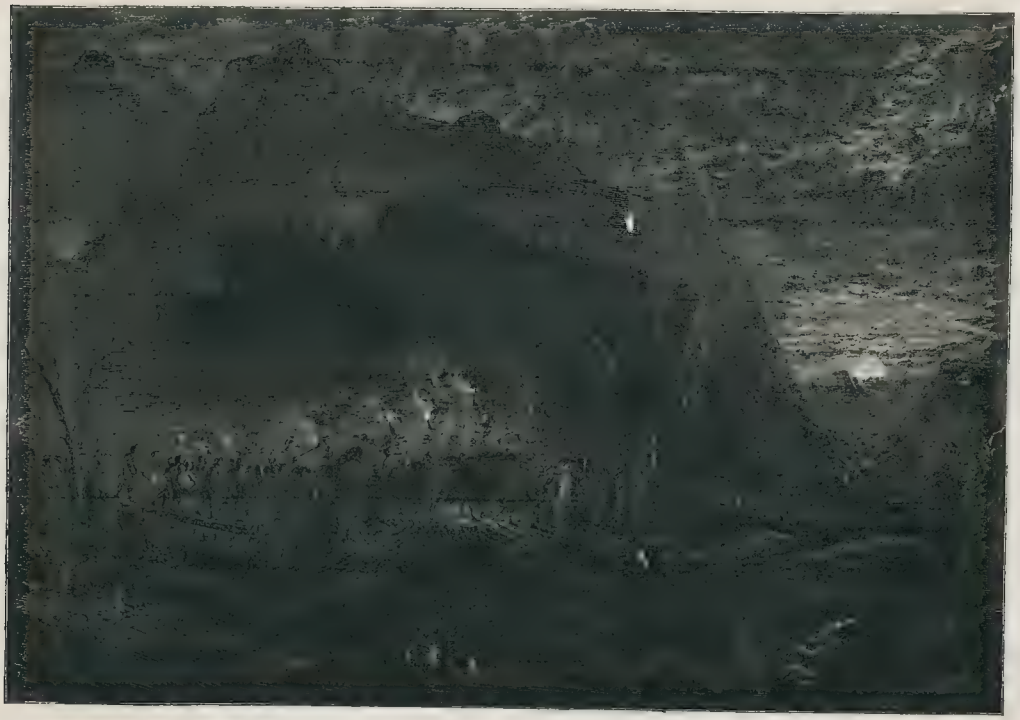
The other serious piece is a Swiss story, in which, as he simply narrates it, Mr Parry produces on the piano a series of marvellous effects, portraying a Fête on the lake of Lucerne, reminiscences of William Tell," the "Ranz des Vaches," an Alpine storm, with thunder and avalanches, and the convent bell ringing out the danger through its violence, in a manner entirely and unapproachably his own.

The general entertainment hurries us on through all sorts of droll phases of life—the drawing-room, the country-house, the public dinner, the pic nic, the diligence even, and, above all, the theatre of a small Italian town, in which the soprano, tenor, and bass, and baritone, are obliged, in the absence of the band and conductor, to accompany themselves occasionally on the piano as they sing. The changes of voice and costume in this scene were received with the loudest laughter and applause.

The entertainment concludes with a wonderful exhibition of vocal power, in which Mr. Parry not only sings a duet, but performs an obbligato to his piano—the only instrument used, in addition, being a cone of twisted paper. We must conclude by expressing our belief that the entertainment will create a great sensation, not only from the entire novelty of its style, but the remarkable manner in which Mr. John Parry has exhibited the whole of his curious accomplishments in its course.

MUSICAL EVENTS.

—At the Seventeenth Concert, at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, Thalberg and Lavigne played solos on the piano and oboe. The vocal performers were Mrs. A. Newton, the Misses A. and M. Williams, the Misses Fyne, Misses Lucombe, Nelson, Poole, A. Taylor; Messrs. Sims Reeves, Travers T. Williams, Binge, Lawler, Whitworth, and Master Simms.——Handel's "Israel in Egypt" was given for the third time at Exeter Hall on Friday, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by M. Costa.—Mr Lucas commenced his Musical Evenings on Wednesday; Sainton, Blagrove, Hill, and Lucas being the quartet.——The Royal Academy of Music will give its first concert this morning (Saturday).——The second concert of the Amateur Society will be given next Wednesday.——On Thursday next will be celebrated the 111th anniversary of the Royal Society of Musicians: Thalberg, Braham, Reeves, Miss Dolby, and a host of talent will give their aid.——The first concert given by Mdlle. Lind at Exeter Hall will take place in Passion Week, Tuesday, April 3, when she will sing in Haydn's "Creation:" her second concert will be on Friday, the 20th of April. She sang at a concert at Cambridge on Monday last, Benedict being the conductor; and on the 26th of April she will sing at Manchester, in the "Creation."—The Round, Catch and Canon Club had their last meeting for the season.



"A MOUNTAIN CHIEF'S FUNERAL IN OLDEN TIMES."—PAINTED BY FRANCIS DANBY, A.R.A.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Larceny Acts Amendment Bill was read a third time and passed.
The Distraining for Rates Bill and the Petty Sessions Bill were, on the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, read a second time.

BRITISH SUBJECTS IN SPAIN

Lord BEAUMONT, after detailing the circumstances under which Mr. Cotter had been arrested at Madrid, in September last, and subsequently transported by the Spanish authorities to Manilla, begged to ask whether Government had taken any steps to ascertain if Mr. Cotter was a British subject, and, if so, whether any means had been taken to obtain satisfaction for the injury which had been done him?

Lord EDDISBURY, in reply, stated that Mr. Cotter had been first arrested in March, 1848, charged with being concerned in a conspiracy, and subsequently a second time, on suspicion of having been concerned in a conspiracy against Narvaez. It appeared that Mr. Cotter had certainly served in the British Legion, then he came a captain in the regular Spanish army, and was appointed aide-de-camp to General Concha, and was afterwards appointed comptroller of customs in a Spanish port. Mr. Cotter was not, therefore, entitled to any special intervention of the Queen of England, nor had he claimed to be so either on his first or second imprisonment.

Lord BEAUMONT expressed himself satisfied with the explanation, and after a few words from Lords BROUGHAM and CAMPBELL, the subject dropped.

THE CONVICT MITCHEL.

In reply to a question from Earl WALDEGRAVE,
The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said he had no objection to produce the instructions issued to the captain of the Scourge, as to the treatment of the convict Mitchel on his passage to Bermuda. At the same time, it was but fair to state that the instructions did not reach the captain of the Scourge in time; and he had, therefore, to use his own discretion to a certain extent. It should also be stated that he had received an intimation from a member of the Irish Government, that, in consequence of Mitchel's state of health, he was to be treated with such indulgence as might be necessary. (Hear, hear.)

Earl WALDEGRAVE moved an address to her Majesty, praying that there be laid before the House a copy of the instructions given to the captain of the Scourge as to the treatment of Mitchel on his voyage to Bermuda.—Ordered. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY

Mr. S. WORTLEY postponed the second reading of the Marriages Bill to the 19th of April.

NAVIGATION LAWS.—ADJOURNED DEBATE.

The adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading of the Navigation Bill, and Mr. HERRIES' amendment thereto, was resumed by

Mr. GLADSTONE, who said he had no hesitation in arriving at a conclusion on the question before the House. The time had arrived when it was necessary for Parliament to consider the propriety of altering the Navigation Laws, and therefore he was prepared to vote for the second reading of the Bill. After a careful examination of the arguments used by those who were opposed to any alteration of those laws, he thought that he could condemn them out of their own mouths. If he believed that the greatness of our navy, or the power of our navy, would be injured by an alteration, he would reject the proposition at once; but [illegible] forced to the conclusion that [illegible] tion was, how the relaxation which he had shown to have been beneficial was to be accomplished? He agreed with Mr. Huskisson that every relaxation should be made on the principle of reciprocity; and so far he was opposed to the bill on the table, inasmuch as it proposed to extend the relaxation unconditionally to all countries. He was not favourable to reciprocity treaties, but he thought that the object in view might be conveniently attained by means of a conditional legislation, which would leave it in the power of all nations to have free trade with us, if they chose to grant it to us in return. In the case of America, we could not obtain a share of her coasting trade unless we gave her a share of our colonial trade; but if we gave our colonist trade unconditionally we might never receive a share of the American coasting trade. But the amendments he proposed could be made in committee on the bill. The right hon. gentleman, in conclusion, condemned the conduct of the Government on this question, in allowing Mr. Baines to vote against a measure recommended in the Speech from the Throne, and upon a subject of vital interest to the country. Although some precedents might be cited in support of such a division in the opinions of the servants of the Crown, he thought the practice most reprehensible.

Mr. ROBINSON severely censured the unfair means resorted to by the Government to overthrow the Navigation Laws. Having embarked on their fatal Free Trade policy, they were resolved to carry it out at any cost. He very much regretted that the disaster, and it was nothing short of insanity to persist. Two things should, above all others, occupy the attention of the head of the Government—the condition of the labouring and agricultural classes, and the state of the national finances. If the shipping interests and the artizans and workpeople involved in them were to be materially depressed, who would pay the taxes? The abolition of the Navigation Laws, following our Free Trade measures would amount to an absolute abandonment of our colonies, and would give encouragement to the shipping of foreign countries, of America especially, at the expense of Great Britain. He honourable member concluded by moving an amendment.

Mr. CLAY agreed with what he could understand of Mr. Gladstone's arguments, but he could not agree with that right honourable gentleman in voting for the second reading of the bill. Although he would not say that the existing laws were perfect, he could not allow them to be abrogated in the manner proposed.

Mr. HORSMAN said he had been a supporter of free trade in corn, on the appeal made by Sir R. Peel on that occasion, and he would be found to act in a fully into operation, if possible; but he desired to have time to see the effects of what had already been done before going further. He could not imagine what benefit this country could derive from opening the trade in foreign vessels coasting, at all events, it would be prudent to wait till foreign countries came and stated what they would give in return for our concessions. Without reciprocity it would be folly to throw open our trade to all the world, and thereby imperil the safety and glory of England against some theory of political economy or some paltry reduction in freights.

Mr. MITCHELL supported the bill.

Mr. WAWN opposed it, and promised it his most decided opposition. The hon. member having expressed his regret at the injury done to the agricultural interests by the repeal of the Corn Laws, announced his willingness to vote for a fixed duty on corn, should such a proposition be made to the House

Mr. C. BROOKE took upon himself to say, on the part of the agricultural interests, that they repudiated the idea of reducing the protection to the material interests of the country to a condition similar to their own. He was decidedly hostile to the imposition on British shipowners of the burdens of the final policy which had so beset the shoulders of the British farmers. The hon. member thought Mr. Gladstone's proposition of reciprocity was preferable to the unconditional surrender, accompanied with the risk of retaliation, proposed by the Government. But he considered it would be prudent to allow the fate of the agricultural interests to be ascertained before involving the shipping interests in the same ruin.

Mr. WILLCOX and Mr. RICARDO spoke in favour of the bill.

Mr. HUTTARD and Admiral BOWLES opposed it.

Mr. DARGOMORE remarked that whenever the principle of all former British statesmen was to keep capital in the country to give employment to British labour, the principle of the statesmen of these times was to keep capital in the country for the employment of foreign labour. There was what was called a "Satanic school" of poetry, and if there was such a thing as a Satanic school of politics, the statesmen of the present day belonged to it. He could not speak of the principle of the bill, because there was no principle in it. The preamble set out by declaring that it was expedient to "amend," but the first clause proceeded at once to "abrogate." The honourable member concluded that Mr. Gladstone, when he attached the Government for their divided opinions, did not exhibit in himself a compact individual, for his speech went one way and his vote the reverse way.

Mr. LABOUCHERE could not ask any gentleman to vote for the second reading of the bill who was not ready to affirm the principle that it was necessary to abrogate the restrictions on the establishment of the Navigation Laws. The details were, doubtless, most important, but he was not so wedded to them as to reject such suggestions as might be made in order to attain the object in view more conveniently. The right honourable gentleman then proceeded to question that Canada was anxious to have the Navigation Laws repealed; but he admitted that Australia, New Zealand, and our other colonies in the eastern hemisphere had not given any strong opinion on the question. With respect to Mr. Gladstone's suggestion, he trusted that the House would not adopt it, because it would be most unwise to leave to foreign countries the power of practically legislating for England. Our example would have a much greater effect upon other nations, if we threw open our shipping trade unconditionally, thereby [illegible] ing that we had no fear of competition with all the world.

Mr. MORETZ said there were two distinct questions for consideration whether the Navigation Laws were justifiable as they stood? and whether the repeal would benefit the country? He could not say who would gain by the repeal. Two would take from the British shipowner and give to other parties, just as they had taken from the British agricultural producer and given to the foreign producer. But the principle generally was that Free Trade had not had a fair trial. Well, he would let them get rid of the Navigation Laws, and then they would have no excuse, and their Free Trade would have a fair trial. The hon. member, he demonstrated, the effect of foreign competition on his own trade, declared that, after having obtained almost a monopoly, he found foreign competition pressed so heavily on him, that his trade was not worth following, and he was going to give it up. The hon. member in its uncultivated, and our trade ruined, and our exchequer bankrupt, then they would find that something else was wanted besides Free Trade

Mr. SCHOLEFIELD supported the bill.

The House then divided:—

For the second reading	[illegible]
Against it	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]

The [illegible] was declared by the [illegible] of the House with [illegible]
The [illegible]
Adjourned at a quarter to one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The business before their Lordships' House was limited to the presentation of some petitions, after which an adjournment took place.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

DUBLIN IMPROVEMENT BILL.—The question of the second reading of the Dublin Consolidation Improvement Waterworks and Sewers Bill led to a noisy and somewhat acrimonious debate, Mr. REYNOLDS persevering in an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day six months; Sir J. YARDE BUTLER opposing that the second reading be postponed for a fortnight. On a division the latter proposition was carried by a majority of 10, the numbers 110 to 100. The Dublin Corporation Waterworks Bill and the Dublin Improvement Bill—which are intimately connected with the preceding—were also postponed for the same period

EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.—On the question that the Eastern Union and Eastern Counties Railway, &c. Bill be read a second time, Mr. AGLIONBY moved that it be read a second time that day six months. Mr. OSBORNE supported the Bill. Mr. BROTHERTON suggested postponement for a fortnight. Mr. HUME moved that the Bill be read a second time that day month, thinking it unfair suddenly to throw it out altogether. Mr. AGLIONBY withdrew his amendment in favour of the original motion. The House divided, the second reading being carried by a majority of 59, the numbers 113 to 54.

QUESTIONS.

Mr. HAWES (in reply to Mr. Adderley), as to whether communications had lately been received from the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, intimating that the announcement of sending convicts to that settlement had excited very general dissatisfaction among the colonists) said no such information had been officially received; all that was known on the subject was what had appeared in the local papers.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—Lord PALMERSTON (in answer to Mr. G. Sandars) stated, with reference to the affairs of Schleswig-Holstein, that it was true the Danish Government had given notice of the fact of the termination of the armistice on the 26th inst., but, in so doing, had officially announced that it was not done with the intention of recommencing hostilities, but with a view to some provisional arrangement. No effort would be wanting on the part of the British Government to bring the two parties to an understanding, looking to the vast magnitude of the interests concerned, with a view to a final arrangement for a permanent peace.

Mr. H. HERBERT asked the Home Secretary whether a deputation had waited on him representing that 12,000 Irish paupers had been landed at Belfast from this country, and whether the Government contemplated an alteration of the law in this respect?—Sir G. GREY replied that such a statement had been made to him. He thought, however, the number exaggerated; but, whatever the number really was, they were paupers removing from Glasgow, having no legal claim for relief [illegible], but in Ireland. The deputation had been told that the Government would be happy to hear any propose for altering the law, but none had been made to which they could give their support, and then a deputation from Scotland had arrived, and represented that there was a society in Belfast supported by voluntary contributions, by whose instrumentality paupers who had been legally removed to Ireland were illegally removed back again to Scotland, their fares being paid with that object; and (in reply to Mr J. O'Connell) the right hon. Baronet stated that he had certainly heard complaints of improper removals

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated (in reply to Mr. Osborne) that merchants were still bound to make a return of their purchases of foreign corn, for the purpose of registering the drawback.

Lord J. RUSSELL intimated that he should proceed with the second reading of the Rate in Aid Bill on Monday, the 26th.

ABOLITION OF CHURCH-RATES.

Mr. TRELAWNEY, in bringing forward his motion for the abolition of church-rates, disavowed any motive of hostility towards the Established Church, of which he was a member, but considered that the only chance of settling the question was by consenting to a determination that rates should be altogether done away with. The hon. member detailed the various motions submitted to the House since 1834, in reference to the subject; and, having referred to various proceedings had in the courts of law for the recovery of the rates, concluded by quoting statistics from the "Congregational Magazine," in order to show what the various bodies of dissenters did for the support of their own churches

Mr. W. P. WOOD followed, and entered into a statement of the law as it stood, and how it was and might be evaded at parochial meetings called for the purpose of levying a rate, proceeding to contend that as it was but fair that those who availed themselves of the privileges of the church should pay a proper quota towards its support, he could not agree to the present motion, as the proposition that church rates should be abolished altogether. He had embodied his views in the shape of an amendment, which was to the following effect

"That it is the opinion of this House that all ecclesiastical rates shall be taken for discharging persons dissenting from the church as by law established from contributing to church-rates, and from taking any part in the levying, assessing, or administering of the same."

Mr. HEADLAM seconded the amendment.

Mr. RICE warmly supported the amendment, suggesting the expediency of a general rate for the maintenance of the church edifice, the proceeds to be applied to those churches for which the contributions were made

Mr. AGLIONBY complained of the difficulty in which he found himself placed by the amendment, which, while professing that it would be a premium for dissent; and without going the length of saying that persons would become dissenters in order to evade the rates, when the rate was on the land, the landassured persons would avail themselves of the amendment to get rid of the rate to which they were now liable. What he would propose would be the enfranchisement of all copyhold and leasehold, which would give a fund for the maintenance of religious edifices

Sir G. GREY could not consent to the abstract resolution before the House, that church-rates ought to be abolished, but rather could he consent to the amendment, which was in effect neither more nor less than the proposition which was brought forward in the shape of a bill, eight or nine years ago, by Mr. T. Duncombe, barring for the object of dissenters from paying the payment of church-rates. If any means could be devised for raising funds for the repair of churches which would not leave them dependent on voluntary contributions, he for one should be happy to render assistance in supplying such a remedy, but he had no sanguine hope of being able to devise one on behalf of the Government

Colonel THOMPSON had received instructions which he felt bound to obey, and should therefore support the original motion.

Mr. HUME thought Mr. Wood's proposition perfectly satisfactory, inasmuch as it would provide sufficient for the maintenance of the fabric of the church. He wished it would relieve dissenters from the painful situation in which they were at present placed.

Lord D. STUART suggested the withdrawal of the amendment, when he should be prepared to vote for a resolution declaring that church-rates should be abolished, and some substitute for them provided.

Mr. C. N. MARSH cited the case of Newport, where the members of the Established Church, rather than see the church of their parish fall about their ears, had raised a voluntary subscription for its restoration. Unless this principle were carried out elsewhere, some substitute for church-rates must be found.

Sir W. CLAY protested against the continuance of a tax which created an amount of hostility to the Church which more than counterbalanced the importance of the amount of the rate raised.

Mr. GOULBURN contended that before any step was taken towards abolishing church-rates justice must be done to the public as against those who, having property charged with the rate, claimed that that property should be freed and exempted. He should vote both against the original resolution and the amendment

Mr. BRIGHT congratulated the House on the tone and temper in which the subject had been discussed, and contended that it was desirable that the question should be settled with the least possible delay; at the same time there were infinite difficulties surrounding the matter, which would not be assisted by the adoption of the amendment, which would have the effect of separating the population of the parish into dissenters and non-dissenters. The hon. member proceeded to say that the result at which he had arrived, after the best consideration he could give the subject, was, that either the fabric of the Church must be maintained, as at present, by an assessment on property and assessment of the rental of Church property made, or the question must remain as it was, the source of constant agitation and heartburnings, until the members of the Church, for their own sakes, consented to support their own churches, or, at all events, to allow the rate for that purpose to be a voluntary one After referring to the cases of Manchester and Rochdale as examples of the ill-feeling excited in consequence of the existing system, the hon. member concluded by expressing his intention to vote for the original resolution, considering it of the last importance that the House should express an unequivocal opinion on the subject.

Sir R. PEEL entreated the House to remove the matter for more [illegible] Lord. Osborne called upon the House to decide the question at once.

Mr. GLADSTONE concurred with Sir R. Peel in hoping that the House would not come to a precipitate decision on this abstract resolution. If the question had been brought forward in the shape of a bill, he should have been willing to encourage an onward step to the settlement of the question which he deems it essential to attain.

Lord J. RUSSELL could not give his assent to either of the propositions before the House, contending that the Church establishment was not for the exclusive benefit of Church of England men, and that the [illegible] church-rates rested on the fact that the rate was a great relief to the land as compared to [illegible]. If, however, a substitute were proposed, he would give it his best consideration.

Mr. G. THOMPSON told the noble Lord, after the discouraging speech which he had delivered, that the dissenters would bide their time when they had the opportunity which the Government could not or would not make for relieving the Church of England from the reproach of perpetuating so great a scandal, as exacting rates from persons who disapproved entirely of that establishment.

Mr. HENLEY thanked the noble Lord for his noble speech, and said that the simple of conscience as to the payment of church-rates was more an allegation than a reality.

Mr. COBDEN said, all the dissenters wanted was that they should not be compelled to pay church-rates. The great difficulty in the matter had been to find a substitute for this impost, but that problem had been solved by the hon. member for Oxford, whose plan was not only consistent, but just. The noble Lord had said if a substitute were proposed, he would give it his consideration; but that had already been done, because the hon. member for Oxford proposed to exempt dissenters from the payment of church-rates, leaving their payment to members of the Church. After repudiating the charge that persons would pass themselves off as dissenters in order to escape the payment of church-rates, the hon. gentleman concluded by expressing his intention as a churchman, anxious to show his desire to prevent dissenters paying the rates of the Church to which he belonged, of giving his cordial support to the amendment.

The House then divided on the amendment, which was negatived by a majority of 163—the numbers being 99 to 163. The original division followed on the original motion, which was also negatived by a majority of 35—the numbers being 34 to 119

[illegible] (IRELAND).—On the motion of Mr. W. FAGAN, leave was given to bring in a bill to prevent actions in the superior courts in Ireland, where the claim did not exceed £20, and to improve the measures for the recovery of debts.

A conversation ensued between Mr. BOUVERIE and the SPEAKER as to closing the doors of the House between two divisions when taking place close upon each other; after which

Mr. ANSTEY rose to submit a motion on the state of Van Diemen's Land, when the House was counted out.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock.

LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Mr. VERNEY moved the second reading of the Landlord and Tenant Bill, the object of which was to prevent purchasers, in certain cases, for life, beneficed clergymen, and persons having limited interest, to grant leases

Colonel SIBTHORP objected altogether to the measure, and moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.

Sir H. VERNEY seconded the amendment.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER was opposed to all interference whatever in the arrangements between landlord and tenant, which should be allowed to regulate themselves unfettered. Therefore, though he admitted this bill was an improvement on the former bills framed by the hon. member, he could not assent to the second reading.

Mr. R. PALMER was ready to support the second reading, though he thought the clauses would require much consideration.

Mr. PLOWDEN and Mr. HENRY also spoke in favour of the bill

Mr. Newdegate, the Attorney-General, Mr. Herbert, and Mr. Bass supported the bill.

Mr. MULLINGS opposed it.

On a division, there were—For the second reading of the bill, 147; against it, 11. Ms. 136.

The bill was read a second time

On the motion of Mr. HEADLAM, the Real and Personal Property Conveyance Bill was read a second time

CLERGY RELIEF BILL.—On the motion of Mr BOUVERIE for the second reading of the Clergy Relief Bill, the principle of which was to exonerate persons in holy orders who leave the Church from ecclesiastical penalties, Mr. LACY moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months. The bill would, in his opinion, act as an inducement to clergymen who desired to get rid of their vows to declare themselves to be Dissenters whether they were or not—After a short discussion the amendment was withdrawn, and the bill was read a second time.

BURDENS ON LAND. ADJOURNED DEBATE.

The adjourned debate on Mr. DISRAELI's motion to go into a committee of the whole House, to consider the question of local taxation, and Mr. HUME's amendment thereto, was resumed by

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER. The right hon. gentleman disposed first of the amendment, reminding the House that it was based entirely on the assumption that a reduction in the expenditure of the country to the extent of ten millions could be effected, but as the House has already decided that such a reduction could not be made, the amendment had no ground to rest on, and therefore he thought that the House had only one course to pursue—to meet it with a direct negative. The right hon. gentleman then proceeded to consider the original motion. He agreed in much that had fallen from Mr. Disraeli, adored the calm tone in which he had argued the question, and assented to the [illegible] by him to the landed gentry and farmers for their hereditary [illegible]. He also admitted that the local taxation referred to by Mr. Disraeli was a burden that pressed especially on real property. The amount of that taxation he would not dispute, and would take it at twelve millions per annum; but the question of that burden did not rest on one-fourth, but two-fifths of the rateable property of the kingdom. On a reference to recent returns, he found that the result of the proposition before the House would be to give no permanent benefit to agriculture, but to give a boon to owners, one-half or more of whom had not the slightest pretence for claiming exemption from taxation at the expense of other portions of the community. The proportion paid by rateable property was hardly calculating; for he found that whereas, in 1826, that proportion was sixty-nine per cent, it was now only forty-six per cent. As to highway-rates, church rates, &c., they peculiarly benefited the landed interest, and they were properly fell mainly on those interests. But though there were special burdens on the land, it was impossible to separate the burdens connected with the legacy and probate duties, the duties on insurance of farming stock, and on shepherds' dogs, besides, since 1815, there had been a reduction of Excise duties on articles in which agriculture was interested to the amount of £5,835,000. As the abolition of the malt tax, he did not believe that it would benefit the farmers generally; but, at all events, it could not be thought of unless the House was prepared to keep away all military establishments, and to be independent of direct taxation. In proof that the landed interests had not been neglected of late years, he adduced the fact that £348,0.0 had lately been transferred from the county rates to the Consolidated Fund, and he contended that the landed interests of Great Britain paid a less proportion of the national taxation than any other country in Europe—that in France, Prussia, Sweden, Denmark, and the Netherlands, the land paid a larger proportion of taxation than the land in England. The right honourable gentleman proceeded to consider what would be the effect of transferring the half the twelve millions local taxation to the Consolidated Fund, as proposed by Mr. Disraeli, and assumed that it would be [illegible] of the income tax. If so, there would be thrown £3,333,000 on schedules A and B, £600,000 on schedule D; and the latter addition would impose so much on the shoulders of the tenant-farmers, from which they were now practically exempt. But supposing that schedules A and B should not be added with their proportion of the increased income-tax, then the whole additional six millions would fall on schedules C, D, and E, which would be manifestly unfair. In conclusion, the right honourable gentleman admitted that some of the southern counties were suffering under distress; but he denied that there was good ground for the exaggerated alarm that was propagated amongst the farmers. The low price of corn was what might have been expected after the late disturbances in the market; but the price of wheat was much higher than it was in 1844. He deprecated the alarm spread by farmers as to the unremunerating price likely to be obtained for grain, and he instanced the case of one who, at the late meeting in Bond street, asserted that there was no hope of obtaining more than 40s., whereas that same farmer refused an offer to take all his wheat for many years to come at 48s., and with great difficulty was persuaded to sell his wheat this year at 56s.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER could not allow the assertion that the country was not suffering great distress to pass without contradiction. He, the distress under which all the agricultural interests were suffering was great and overwhelming, and it had been caused by Parliament withdrawing that protection which they solemnly agreed, although it subsequently withheld protection to all other interests. The best and simplest way to relieve the agricultural interests would be to retrace the fatal steps that had lately been taken, but that could not be attempted at present. There was no alternative left to the farmers but to require a revision of local taxation, and to demand relief from those burdens that pressed unequally on them. The chancellor of the Exchequer had done all he could to justify what was already made by Mr. Disraeli. That honourable gentleman did not propose to double the income tax; he only proposed that those classes who did not now contribute to these local burdens should be made to bear a portion of them. Mr. Disraeli contended that the occupiers would be benefited by Mr. Disraeli's redistribution of local taxation. As to the malt tax, it was undeniable that it was an odious and unfair impost; but the question for the House to decide was whether it was better for the owners and occupiers of the soil to accept Mr. Disraeli's proposal or the repeal of the malt tax and hop duties proposed by Mr. Hume. In his opinion the greater amount of relief would be obtained by, and the feeling of the House would be more opposed to, the plan propounded by Mr. Disraeli. Unless the Government had some evidence of their own to submit for the relief of the agricultural interests, they would do well to agree to the plain, safe, practical course proposed by the hon. member for Buckinghamshire.

Colonel THOMPSON feared to know what compensation the agricultural interests meant to give for the protection they had heretofore received.

The Earl of MARNE quoted from the Poor-law report to prove that during seven years of low prices of corn was lowered, there were £10,000,000 expended in rates more than during seven years when the price of corn was high, thus showing that the amount of pauperism depended greatly on the price of grain. The noble Lord, moreover, demonstrated that the country was not labouring under great distress, demonstrated the unfair way in which the high-way rates and other local burdens weighed on the landed interests; and he contrasted the case of the owners and occupiers of land with that of the fundholder, to show the inequality. With respect to the malt tax, the opinion of the county with which he was connected was decidedly that that tax should be repealed, and he was prepared to vote for the proposition of the right hon. Baronet to that effect in preference to the amendment moved by Mr Hume. The noble Lord quoted Mr. M'Culloch's opinion, that, should the duties on foreign produce be repealed, protection would be given to the produce of land.

On the motion of Mr. M. GIBSON, the debate was adjourned.

The Recovery of Wages (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.
Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

On the motion of the Earl of WICKLOW, returns were ordered, showing the amount paid by the possessors of property in Ireland under the head of Income and Property Tax.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Mr. EWART presented a petition from the inhabitants of Birmingham, complaining of the want of public libraries. The hon. gentleman then proceeded to move the following resolution, of which he had given notice, viz. for a Select Committee on existing public libraries in Great Britain and Ireland, and on the best means of extending the establishment of libraries freely open to the public, especially in large towns

Sir G. GREY said that the general object of the motion was good, and he should have no objection to a Select Committee, if those words were struck out of the motion which had reference to the public libraries now in existence.

After an observation from Mr. HUME, recommending that there should be a conference out of the House to settle the words,

Mr. EWART acceded to Sir G. Grey's suggestion, and the select committee was ordered.

PAPERS MOVED FOR BY MR. HUME.

Viscount DUNCANNON moved for a return of the expense the country has incurred from printing, and publishing, and collecting returns moved for by the hon. member for Montrose from February, 1848, to February, 1849. The noble Lord disclaimed that he proposed his motion from any personal motives towards the hon. member; but he could not help stating that it would be well if he could be induced not to move for so large a number of papers, many of which were utterly valueless.

The motion being seconded,

Mr. HUME, who was greeted with loud cheers from both sides of the House, rose to move as an amendment, to insert after the word "Montrose," the words "and also by every other member." He assured the House that there was nothing that he did within his walls that he was unwilling to be made public.

Sir G. GREY said that the noble Lord had declared that he did not propose the motion from any personal motives towards the hon gentleman; yet no motion of the kind could be produced, unaccompanied as it did the conduct of an individual member, without implying motives which the noble Lord had disclaimed. No hon. gentleman was responsible for the returns for which he moved, since returns could only be obtained by an address to the Crown, and it was competent for any hon. gentleman, if he thought they ought not to be produced, to oppose them. With regard to the matter of printing, the House was perhaps aware that these returns were always referred to the Printing Committee, to decide whether they merited the distinction of being put in print. (Hear, hear.) He had no objection to this general return, but he did not think the return would serve the purpose the noble Lord had in view, and he therefore hoped the noble Lord would not persevere in his motion. (Hear.)

Mr HAWKES also appealed to the noble Lord to withdraw his motion.

Lord DUNCANNON disclaimed all intention of making this motion for the sake of reflecting upon the conduct of the hon. member for Montrose, and said he was quite ready, after what had passed, to withdraw it.

The motion was accordingly withdrawn.

SCHOOL OF DESIGN.—On the motion of Mr. M. GIBSON, a Select Committee was appointed to inquire into the constitution and management of the Government School of Design, and to report their opinion thereupon.

AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS.—ADJOURNED DEBATE.

The adjourned debate was resumed by Mr. GIBSON, who combatted the arguments of Mr. Disraeli. They had two proposals before them the one moved by the hon. member for Buckinghamshire, the other submitted by his hon. friend, the member for Montrose. (Hear.) Those two proposals involved entirely different principles. The one was founded on leaving the whole amount of the public burdens, and the public taxation, as it stood at present, merely transferring a portion of the taxation from one class to another; the other proposal, which was that of his hon. friend, the member for Montrose, was founded on the principle of giving relief to all classes alike—agricultural and commercial (Hear, hear). by, first, a reduction of the expenditure, in order that the claims of the national creditor might be duly regarded; and secondly, by applying the surplus procured by a reduction of the expenditure to the repeal of those taxes which pressed on agriculture and commercial industry. (Hear, hear.) He drew the attention of the House to the matter that gentlemen might see what was the immediate vote which the House should be called on to give. The first vote the House should come to would involve any question in the general principle involved in either proposition. For his own part, he would vote for the amendment of his hon. friend, in order to give it at least the opportunity of being put to the House.

In the course of a lengthened discussion which ensued, the proposition of Mr. Disraeli was opposed by Lord NORREYS, Mr. G. Lewis, Mr. Bright, Mr. Sidney Herbert, Mr. Cobden, Lord J. Russell, &c.; and was supported by Mr. Seymour, Sir R. Lopes, Mr. Miles, Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Cayley, &c.

Mr. DISRAELI then replied, and the House divided. The numbers were:—

For Mr. Hume's amendment	.. .. ..	70
Against it	.. .. ..	394
Majority	.. .. ..	—324

The amendment was accordingly lost.

The House again divided on the original motion, when the numbers were:—

For the motion	.. ..	197
Against it	.. ..	280
Majority against the motion	.. ..	—91

The motion was thus also negatived.

The House then rose at a few minutes before three o'clock.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—On the whole this was a very dull afternoon, the investments, with a few exceptions, being in small amounts, and without much influence on the odds. The exceptions were The Tartar, for the Northampton; Deep-a'-day Boy, for the Metropolitan; and Joe-o'-Sol, Hide, and Chanticleer, for the Chester Cup; all of whom were in improved favour.

NORTHAMPTON VALUABLE STAKES

3 to 1 agst The Tartar (t)	9 to 1 agst Deep-a'-day Boy	16 to 1 agst Wateldog
8 to 1 —— Fernhill	12 to 1 —— Vixen	30 to 1 —— Gowlie

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP

13 to 8 agst Lagar	15 to 1 agst Deep-a'-day Boy (t)	18 to 1 agst Escentos
10 to 1 —— Chanticleer		20 to 1 —— Do-the-Boys (t)
14 to 1 —— Firecatcher (t)	16 to 1 —— Lord Caxton

NEWMARKET HANDICAP

5 to 1 agst Cameron	14 to 1 agst Fernhill

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES

4 to 1 agst Uriel	4 to 1 agst Honeycomb

CHESTER CUP

13 to 1 agst Joe-o'-Sol	20 to 1 agst Blucher	50 to 1 agst Ballinafad
16 to 1 —— Halo (t)	33 to 1 —— Cossack (t)	50 to 1 —— Iodine
27 to 1 —— Chanticleer	40 to 1 —— Rathmines	60 to 1 —— Taffrail (t)
28 to 1 —— Geraldine (t)	40 to 1 —— John Cosser (t)

DERBY

3 to 1 agst The Flying Dutchman	100 to 8 agst Uriel	50 to 1 agst Magician (t)
	26 to 1 —— Honeycomb (t)	50 to 1 —— Indus
7 to 1 —— Tadmor (t)	50 to 1 —— Chatterer

DERBY, 1850.

1000 to 20 agst Tordesillas (t) | 3000 to 45 agst Mildew (t)

COVENTRY STEEPLE-CHASES. TUESDAY.

Craven Steeple-Chase Open Handicap of 20 sovs each, with 100 added, &c.

Lord Chesterfield's Victim	(Taylor)	1
Mr. Vevers's Vengeance	..	2

Won easy by nearly three lengths.

Selling Hurdle Stakes of 5 sovs each, 3 ft, and 30 added.

Mr. Baxter's Forget-me-not	(H. Hadley)	1
Mr. Haddy's Flycatcher	..	2

Won cleverly by half a length.

No race for the Aristocratic Stakes.

WEDNESDAY

Hunt Steeple-Chase of 10 sovs each, h ft, and 25 added.

Mr. Bedford's The General	(Lord Strathmore)	1
Lieut.-Colonel Richardson's Chance	..	2

Won cleverly. Second and third.

Selling Steeple-Chase of 5 sovs each, and 30 added.

Mr. W. Taylor's Queen of Hearts	(Owner)	1
Mr. Cartwright's Justice to England	..	2

Won easily.

Free Handicap Hurdle Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 100 added.

Mr. Denham's nd Yardarca	(Archer)	1
Lord Lurgan's Fugitive	..	2

Won by a length.

The superintendence of the several prisons under the control of the Government, and the convict department, is about to be consolidated under one board, an arrangement that will combine uniformity of treatment with economy in the management of the prisons and hulks. No additional expense will be incurred, as the services of some of the present members of the board of superintendence and of the inspectors of prisons will be made available in the proposed consolidation, which is to take effect from the beginning of the next month.

POST-OFFICE NOTICE.—A monthly packet communication having been established between the Mauritius and Ceylon, by the Government of the former colony, all letters for Mauritius will in future be transmitted from this country by the overland mail made up at the office on the 24th of each month, unless specially addressed to be otherwise forwarded.

ERECTION OF BARRACKS, &c.—A circular has just been issued from the Horse Guards, enclosing ordnance regulations for the future erection and repairs of barracks in the United Kingdom. It orders that, for the future, no repairs shall be made without a report and estimate to the authorities on the subject. It would appear that the expenditure of money in barrack erection and repairing has been for some time carried on in the most reckless manner. In Ireland, barrack jobbing has been lucrative recently, and the country is now literally a barrack in the country capable of affording comfortable accommodation to the officers and men. Such items as a "Clock at Athlone barracks, £280," looks remarkably well at a period when the Prime Minister proposed an addition of two per cent to the income-tax. It is certainly a great pity that the Liverpool Financiers do not turn their attention to such matters as these DISASTROUS FIRE AT THE MINORIES.—On Tuesday night, at a few minutes before 11 o'clock, a fire broke out in the spacious range of premises, numbered 238 and 239, Minories. The buildings were of considerable depth, and five floors high. On the discovery of the fire several persons made their escape down stairs; but the females were so frightened that the constable was obliged to enter the building and pull them out. The conductor of the Royal Society's fire-escape from Aldgate-pump, on hearing the parties who had escaped cry out that several persons were in the upper part of the premises, placed his machine in front of the house; and, whilst he was at the top attempting to search the upper rooms, the flames shot out in a body, fired the canvas bagging of the escape, and he himself escaped with the greatest difficulty. Several engines speedily reached the scene, when the firemen found the flames ascending so high into the air as to endanger the adjoining property. By 12 o'clock the fire was extinguished, but not until the whole of the premises from the ground-floor were burned.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"P.," Bolton.—All wrong, and quite unstateable.

"G. S. J.," Oxford.—They shall appear shortly.

"R. H. A."—Much too easy.

"M. Rosenstiel."—The letter alluded to, of the 21st ult., we regret to say, has not yet come to hand. We beg, however, to acknowledge, with thanks, the receipt of the first three numbers of the new Chess magazine LA RÉGENCE.

"E. L. W."—It looks ingenious. We will report on it next week.

"Simple Boy."—The Pawns are all privileged to move two steps on being first played.

"Disciplus" You can have two Queens on the board at once.

"E. H. G" Your Chess puzzle is a failure. If in the second variation the Black Knight be moved to K 8 sq., now, then, can White draw the game?

"Rhyboz."—The word "Gambit" is derived from an Italian word, which signifies a movement in wrestling by which the adversary is tripped up.

"R. H. A."—Your first Problem is nothing more than the simple old smothered mate with the Kt, and the second is wholly altogether.

"Forsyth." The communication in question never reached us, or it would certainly have been replied to. Address, in future, always "To the Editor," &c.

"Mera" is cordially thanked for his consideration and politeness. An apology for the delay in acknowledging his previous letter has been despatched. It is proper to add, that the packet to which he referred has not yet arrived.

"C. D.," Pimlico. It is under examination at this moment.

"Helena," Certes.—Black can checkmate on the move at his King's 4th.

"C. W. R." In the Problem from "Lolli," White draws the game by playing the Q R to K Kt sq. If the Bishop takes, White takes Kt with his other R (ch), being stale-mated if his R be taken, and winning a Kt if it be not.

"A. G.," Mullingar. – You are Castle, guard check in the act.

"E. H. G."—Yes: an improvement on the former.

"C. D.," Pimlico.—The Problem, as far as the first condition goes, is tolerable, though not original. The subsequent solutions are wrong. Your second Problem shall be examined.

"A. J. H."—The first move in the solution of the Problem mentioned is B to Q Kt 5th.

"S. M."—Certainly, if the Piece is not protected, he can capture it.

"O. J."—He good enough to write out the position, name of the author, &c.

"C. D.—E."—Very easy, and very good as a mere arrangement. Study D'Orville for the artistic disposition of the Pieces.

"W. B. M."—An improvement on the last.

"G. S. B." Liverpool, is thanked for the highly interesting games received.

"Juvenis."—1. Kt to K 4th. 2. R to K B 6th. 3. K to K 4th. 4. R to Q 6th —Mate.

"Sportday."—We never heard even the name of Mr. M. or of the "Champion Brahman in India." Can you favour us with a sample of the game?

"Hon. Secretary."—The match between Messrs. Harrwitz and Horwitz terminated last week, the score of the finish stood as follows: Harrwitz 7 games; Horwitz, 6 ditto; drawn, 2 ditto.

"S. P. Q."—Under such circumstances, the promised Problems cannot fail to prove acceptable. Thanks for the additional solution. The move to Lolli's "Fortuito Pratico" is Q R to K Kt sq.

Solutions by "S. U.," "H. E.," "M. D.," "M. P.," "C. F. L.," "Nompus," "Dereven," "Erda," "F. G. R," "Diana," "S. P. Q.," "Οδυσσευς," "Elena," "Mary," "Eugene Aram," "F. R. S," "R. P." Woolwich; "G. A. H.," are correct. Those by "M. E R.," "D. V.," "A. Z.," are wrong.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 268.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to Q B 6th (ch)	K takes R	4 Kt to Q B 4th (ch)	Q takes Kt, or *
2 Kt to K 5th (ch)	K to Q Kt 3d	5. R to Q 6th, takes P, and mates
3. B to Q 4th (ch)	P to Q B 4th

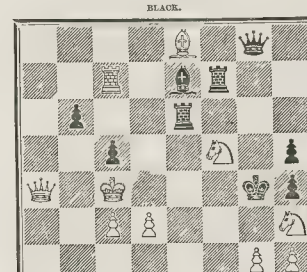
* 4. K takes P

2. Kt mates.

PROBLEM NO. 269.

BY AN AMATEUR IN INDIA.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play first, and check-mate in six moves.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF LONDON AND AMSTERDAM.

WHITE (Amsterdam). BLACK (London).

28. Q to Q B 3d

London to play.

GAME,

In which Mr. STAUNTON gives the Pawn and two moves to Captain KENNEDY.

(Remove Black's K B P from the Board.)

WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)
1. P to K 4th		21. Q R to Q sq	K to Kt 2d
2. P to Q 4th	P to K 3d	22. B to Q 5th	Q B to Q 2d
3. K B to Q 3d	P to Q B 4th	23. Q to K R 4th	K to B sq
4. P takes P	Q checks	24. B to K 4th	P to K B 4th
5. Q B to Q 2d	Q takes P	25. B takes K B P	B takes B
6. Q Kt to B 3d	P to Q R 3d	26. Q takes B	R to K B sq
7. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	27. Q to K R 5th	R to K Kt sq
8. Castles	P to Q Kt 4th (a)	28. Q R to Q 5th	B to K R 7th (ch)
9. P to K 5th (b)	Kt takes P	29. K to R sq	Q to K B 6th
10. Q B to K 3d	Q to Q B 2d (c)	30. Q to K B 6th	R to K B sq
11. K Kt takes Kt	Q takes K Kt	31. Q takes Q	B takes Q
12. Q to B 5th	Q to Q Kt sq (d)	32. P to K Kt 3d	B takes K Kt P
13. K B to K 4th	P to Q 4th (e)	33. P to K B 3d	R to K sq
14. Kt takes Q P	P takes Kt	34. Q R to Q 3d	R to K B 5th
15. K B takes P	K Kt to Q 3d	35. Q R to Q 6th	B to Q B 2d
16. R takes R	K B to Q 3d	36. Q R to K 4th	R to K B sq
17. K B to Q B 6th (ch)	K to B 3d	37. R K to K sq	R takes K B P
18. P to K R 3d	Q B to K 3d	38. Q R checks	K to Kt 2d
19. Q B to K Kt 5th	R to Q sq	39. Q R checks	R to K B 2d
20. Q B takes Kt	P takes B	40. R takes R	K takes R

White wins.

(a) Fearing White's playing Q Kt to Q R 4th, followed by Q B to K 3d.

(b) A well-planned sacrifice, the acceptance of which costs Black the game.

(c) If he takes the Kt with the Q, the latter evidently must have got a very bad game.

(d) If Black attempt to preserve his Rook by advancing his Q's Pawn, his opponent must obtain an irresistible attack; for suppose—

11.	P to Q 4th.
12. Kt takes Q P	P takes Kt
13. K to K 2d

(e) Better to have played the Rook to his 2d, and shifted to the first loss.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 422.—By an Amateur.

White: K at his sq, R at K Kt 5th, B at K R 4th, Kt at Q B 4th.
Black: K at Q R 6th, Kt at K Kt 6th, Ps at Q Kt 7th and Q R 7th.

White to move, and mate in five moves.

No. 423.—By Mr. LABURDONNAIS.

White: K at K B 5th, Q at Q Kt 5th, R at K R 8th, P at Q B 3d.
Black: K at Q 4th, Q at Q Kt 3d, B at Q B 4th, Kt at Q R 4th, Ps at Q 3d and Q Kt 5th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 424.—By an Amateur.

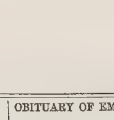
White: K at Q B 8th, Q at K R 6th, Rs at K Kt 7th and K sq, B at K 2d, Kt at K R 7th, Ps at K Kt 6th and Q 6th.
Black: K at his sq, Q at K 4th, Rs at Q 8th and Q B 7th, Bs at K 2d and Q B 5th, Kt at Q B 4th, Ps at Q Kt 4th and Q B 3d.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

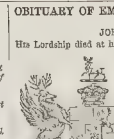
JOHN THYNNE, LORD CARTERET.

His Lordship died at his seat, Hawnes Place, Bedfordshire. He was third son of Thomas, first Marquis of Bath, K.G., by the Lady Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of William, second Duke of Portland; and succeeded to the peerage at the decease of his brother George, second Lord Carteret, in 1838. His Lordship was born 23rd December, 1772, and married, in 1801, Mary Anne, daughter of Thomas Master, Esq., of the Abbey, Cirencester, by whom he had no issue. The title consequently expires. It was originally conferred on the deceased Peer's uncle, the Hon. Henry Frederick Thynne (second son of Thomas Viscount Weymouth, by the Lady Louisa Carteret, his wife, daughter of John, Earl Granville), with limitation, in default of male issue, to each of the sons in succession (except the eldest) of his brother Thomas, first Marquis of Bath.



SIR GEORGE NUGENT, BART

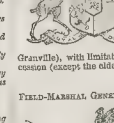
FIELD-MARSHAL GENERAL SIR GEORGE NUGENT, Bart., K.C.B., was the eldest officer in the British service. Sir George entered the army the 5th July, 1773. He served through the first American war, and was present at the capture of Forts Montgomery and Clinton, in 1783. Sir George accompanied the brigade of Guards to the Continent; was present at the siege of Valenciennes, and fought in the actions of St. Amond and Lincelles. In 1794, Sir George was at Walcheren with the 53th—a regiment he himself raised, and of which he was colonel.



During the whole of the Irish rebellion Major-General Nugent commanded the northern district of Ireland. In 1811, he was nominated Commander-in-Chief of the forces in India. In that distinguished post he occupied till 1815, when he retired, with the rank of General. In June, 1846, Sir George Nugent became one of the nine Field-Marshals of England. He has also been Field-Marshal of Jersey. He created a Baronet the 30th November, 1806. Sir George was an M.P. in Ireland before the Union, and in England for many years. He married, the 5th November, 1797, Maria, seventh daughter of Cortland Skinner, Esq., Attorney-General of New Jersey, by whom (who died 11th March, 1834, he leaves—with another son, and two daughters, Lady Fremantle and Lady Clayton—a son and successor, the present Sir George Edmund Nugent. The gallant Field-Marshal died on the 11th instant, at his seat, Westerpo House, Bucks, aged 92.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE MAURICE FITZGERALD, KNIGHT OF KERRY.

THE Knight of Kerry, who died recently in Ireland, was long prominently before the public For thirty-five years he represented the county of Kerry in Parliament, and held, at various periods, influential official appointments. From 1799 to 1802 he was a Commissioner of Customs and Excise in Ireland, and from 1809 to 1806 a Lord of the Irish Treasury. In 1828 he became Vice-Treasurer of his native country, and in 1834 was constituted a Lord of the Admiralty. The right honourable gentleman was also a Privy Councillor, a County Magistrate, and Lieutenant-Colonel of the Kerry Militia. He was born 29th of December, 1774, and had been twice married. His first wife was Maria, daughter of the Right Hon. David La Touche; and his second, a widow lady named Knight. By his former he leaves several sons and daughters. The family of the Knight of Kerry is a branch of the illustrious house of Desmond, and was founded by Maurice Fitz John, third son of John Fitz Thomas Fitzgerald, Lord of Decies and Desmond, who, by virtue of his Royal Seignory as a County Palatine, created three of his sons Knights. Thus originated the peculiar titles of "the White Knight," "the Knight of Glin," and "the Knight of Kerry"—titles that have been constantly recognised in acts of Parliament and patents under the Great Seal.

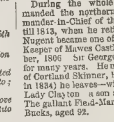


SIR ROBERT FRANKLAND RUSSELL, BART.

THE decease of this Baronet, the seventh inheritor of the title, is just announced. Sir Robert was born 16th July, 1784, the only son of Sir Thomas Frankland, Bart., of Thirkelby, county York, and assumed, by sign manual, the additional surname of Russell. He married, 30th Nov. 1815, Louisa Anne, third daughter of the Right Hon. Right Rev. Lord George Murray, Bishop of St. David's, and had issue five daughters; of whom the eldest, Augusta Louisa, wife of Thomas Lord Walsingham, died in 1844; and the second, Caroline Agnes, died unmarried in 1846. Of the survivors, Emily Anne is married to Sir W. Payne Gallwey, Bart.; and Julia Roberts to Ralph Neville, Esq., M.P.

THE RIGHT HON. SIR ALEXANDER JOHNSTON, OF CARNSALLOCH, CO. DUMFRIES.

The death of this distinguished gentleman occurred at his residence in Great Cumberland-place, on the 5th instant. He was elder son of Alexander Johnston, Esq., by Hester Maria his wife, only daughter of Francis, fifth Lord Napier; and became representative of an ancient branch of the family of Johnston of Johnston, or the deceased, in 1837, of his uncle, the late Peter Johnston, Esq., of Carnsalloch, M.P.



Sir Alexander was born in 1775, and for many years held some of the highest and most important offices under the State. At one time he was Chief Justice and President of the Council of the Island of Ceylon, and, to use the emphatic words of the late Marquis of Londonderry, "had the great glory of having given freedom of conscience, of establishing trial by jury, and of abolishing the slave-trade throughout Ceylon." Latterly, Sir Alexander resided much on his estate of Carnsalloch, where he was conspicuous for his munificence, his benevolence, and his energy in promoting the rising talents of his countrymen. The right honourable gentleman acted, for a lengthened period, as a member of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council. He married Louisa, only surviving daughter of Lord William Campbell, and has left four sons and two daughters, the eldest of the former being Colonel Thomas Henry Johnston, now of Carnsalloch.

Sir Alexander Johnston had one brother, the late Major-General Francis Johnston, C.B., who died in 1844. His first cousin is the gallant Sir Charles Napier, the newly-appointed Commander-in-Chief in India.

SIR ROBERT SHAW, BART., OF BUSHY-PARK, COUNTY DUBLIN.

THIS venerable Baronet expired, after a short illness, on the 10th instant, at his seat, Bushy-park, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. For more than half a century Sir Robert Shaw filled an honourable place in the public transactions of his time. His early sat in the Irish Parliament for one of Lord Elly's boroughs, but resigned when the patron Peer gave in his adherence to the Union. Shortly after he obtained a seat on his own interest, and remained for many years a Member of Parliament. Subsequently he represented Dublin in the Imperial Parliament from 1806 to 1826.

The worthy and excellent gentleman was son and heir of Robert Shaw, Esq., by Mary, his first wife, daughter of Higgins, of Higginsbrook, county Meath. He married, first, 7th January, 1795, Maria, daughter and sole heiress of Abraham Wilkinson, Esq., of Dublin; secondly, 2nd July, 1834, Amelia, daughter of Benjamin Spencer, M.D., of Bristol; by the former of whom, who died 30th March, 1831, he had issue five sons and two daughters: of the former, the eldest, Lieut.-Colonel Robert Shaw, succeeds to the Baronetcy and principal estates; and the second, the Right Hon. Frederick Shaw, becomes possessed of a portion of the county of Dublin property, which formerly belonged to his mother.

ANTHONY WHITE.

THIS eminent surgeon was of a north country family, and was educated at Cambridge, where he took an honourable degree. He came to London at an early period of his life, and began practice as Assistant-Surgeon of the Westminster Hospital, with which institution he continued to be associated till his death. His fortunes and his practice speedily increased; his eminence was soon recognised by his election to a place in the Council of the College of Surgeons He was afterwards elected President of that Institution. Latterly, the gout in his hands compelled Mr. White to relinquish practice as an operator, but he continued until recently to act as a consulting surgeon. Mr. White died at his residence in Parliament-street, on the 8th instant, at an advanced age. In him the medical profession loses one of its brightest ornaments.

Captain Maconochie, the author of several works on "Secondary Punishments," and "The Marked System," and whose name and authority were so frequently mentioned during the debate on Lord Mahon's motion, with respect to the transportation, in the House of Commons on Thursday night week, has accepted the Governorship of the New Borough Gaol, at Birmingham. The building, according to the plans of Mr. Hill, the architect, is said to be singularly well adapted for carrying out the views of the first governor.

"FANNY GREY," WINNER OF THE MANCHESTER GRAND STEEPLE-CHASE.

THE MANCHESTER GRAND STEEPLE-CHASE.

WE gave in our Journal of last week the result of this steeple-chase (on Thursday), allowed to take rank with the oldest established meetings of the same description. Mounds and banks were raised, ditches and furrows filled up, hurdles erected, and a artificial brook formed, whilst the course was varied by ploughed and grass lands, extending over that part not embraced in the race-course. To obviate the danger from the leap in and out of the new road, a large quantity of sand was laid down. The length of the course was rather more than three miles and a half.

For the principal event of the day, "THE MANCHESTER GRAND STEEPLE-CHASE," the following started:—

Mr. Robinson's gr m Fanny Grey (h b) aged	..	.. (Stagg)	1
Earl of Chesterfield's b g Victim, aged	..	..(Taylor)	2
Mr Buchanan's gr g Alfred, 5 yrs	..	(Wynne)	3
Mr. T. F. Mason's b g Prince George, aged	..	(Captain Peel)	0
Mr. Neale's ch g Sir Henry, aged	..	(Rackley)	0
Mr. Ithell's b g The Rover, 6 yrs	..	(Wainwright)	0
Mr. T. Wesley's ch g Ballybar, aged	..	(Heasley)	0
Mr. Brotherton's ch m Venom, 5 yrs	..	(Molasey)	0
Mr. W. Murray's ch h Election (h b) 6 yrs	..	..(Pinby)	0
Mr. Hargreaves's br h Rochester, aged	..	..(Archer)	0
Captain Broadley's b g Tom Bowling, 6 yrs	..	..(Fowler)	0

Betting: 5 to 2 agst Alfred, 4 to 1 agst The Victim, 6 and 6 to 1 agst Venom, 7 to 1 agst the winner. The Victim went off more quickly than the others, and soon had a lead of two or three lengths, followed by Election, The Rover, Fanny Grey, and Alfred. At the first hurdle Ballybar refused, and was thrown into the last place of all. The Victim continued to lead round the course, and till approaching to the enclosures, where Fanny Grey came with a rush to the front, crossed the fence leading into the meadow a length or two in advance, and led along it to the fence by the river side. She crossed it on the extreme left, close by the river bank. The Victim, almost at the same moment, crossing on the other side, close by the right hand flag. Some horse, pulling immediately to the right for the brook, crossed Sir Henry and threw him down. Venom, who was following in his track, jumped upon his rider, and all were down together. Rackley was a good deal bruised and hurt, but fortunately no bones were broken. Fanny Grey continued to lead over the artificial brook, followed successively by The Rover, Tom Bowling, Election, Rochester, Alfred, The Victim, and Prince George, all well together. Sir Henry's rider was not able to go on with the race, and Ballybar again refusing at the brook, he and Venom had in reality no more to do with the race. Venom refused at the fence beyond the brook, and Ballybar at the next, and both were then pulled up. The next inclosure—the wheat field near the castle—is intersected by several shallow drains, much more soft and yielding, in consequence of the water lying in them, than the rest of the field. In one of these, Prince George placed his fore feet, and the ground sinking beneath them, he rolled forward, pitching his rider some distance beyond him. Captain Peel was stunned, and for a time it was feared he was much hurt, but he soon rallied. In the meantime Fanny Grey went on with the lead at a good pace, followed by The Rover, with Tom Bowling third, The Victim, Alfred, and Rochester next; Election, here finding the pace too good for her, falling back. In this way they made the turn by the road leading from the suspension-bridge, and came up to that leading towards the race-course; here Tom Bowling, who was still running in the third place, fell, Fanny went on with the lead round the flags in the large grass field near the river, and passed on the outside of one of the white ones, followed by The Rover. The next field was covered by a dense mob, which, as soon as the leading horses had passed, closed in, and made it almost impossible for those behind to get through them. Fanny Grey led towards the race-course, and entered it in close company with The Rover and the Victim, the three flying the fence almost at the same time. About a dozen lengths behind them followed Alfred and Rochester, and some distance behind them came Tom Bowling, who jumped the fence very slowly, and in fact seemed quite beaten. His rider pulled him up soon after. In making the circuit of the course, Alfred and Rochester closed up with the others, and all came round the lower turn in a compact body, Fanny Grey having, however, a clear lead. A good race took place up the straight running towards the winning-post, which Fanny Grey won by about three lengths, never having been headed from the time she took the lead, the Victim beating Alfred only by a neck Rochester was an indifferent fourth, and The Rover fifth. After this race an objection was made that Fanny Grey had gone on the wrong side of the white flag in the turning field, but, after hearing the evidence of Mr. Bake, it was set aside.

We learn, however, by the Manchester Courier of Wednesday, that the stakes for the race were then unpaid, and were to be retained by the Clerk of the Course until the dispute was settled.

Fanny Grey is the property of Mr. Bold Robinson, of the Old Boar's Head, Manchester. Her victory was hailed with enthusiasm by thousands of spectators.

SCENE FROM "THE HONEST MAN'S FORTUNE," AT SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE.

SADLER'S WELLS.

"THE HONEST MAN'S FORTUNE" has been repeated here with increased success. We have engraved the recognition of Montague, in the second scene of the third act. The scene itself is a very pleasing and effective specimen of Mr. Fenton's (the painter's) skill and taste.

LIEUTENANT MOLESWORTH, R.N.

At the time of preparing the account of the lamentable wreck of the Forth, in our Journal of last week, we were not aware of the extent of the heroism of the gallant young seaman, Lieutenant Molesworth, by whose exertions 136 persons were rescued from a watery grave. The very interesting narrative of the calamitous scene has been detailed by the Lieutenant, in a letter to his father, the Reverend Vicar of Rochdale, by whom it has been communicated to the Times:—

"On the evening of the 13th of January I was sitting on deck; we had been talking about the wreck of the Tweed, which took place just two years ago (on the 19th of February next), and about 100 miles from where we were speaking about it. The captain was saying that we could not be off it till nine o'clock next morning, which quite set the minds of the lady part of the community at ease; and for my own part I was talking of it, danger being the last thing I thought of. At 11 o'clock I retired to my berth. How long I had slept I could not tell, when I was suddenly awoke by a slight bump, then another, and again a most awful crash. The first I felt I could not mistake what was the matter, nor should I have been long in suspense, hearing people rushing about the deck, crying, 'Oh, good God! we are all lost.' I got out of bed, and put on as many things as I could find in the dark. The crashes now became fearful, and the vessel seemed to be going to pieces fast; and as I was going on deck I heard cries of 'Stand clear of the mast! She is breaking up!" and such like sounds. At this moment I remembered my watch and chain, so I returned to the cabin, and, placing it round my neck, rushed on deck. I was about the last up, and found all the people in their night-dresses, clinging to the masts, ropes, and sides of the vessel, some crying, others praying. Never shall I forget that scene. The ship now swung from side to side, the decks working and the beams breaking. It was perfectly impossible to stand on deck. On looking round, nothing but a frightful scene presented itself—nothing, as far as the eye could see, but a ridge of breakers—no land anywhere; a rock through her bottom into the engine-room soon put an end to 'Turn her head full power,' which I could see was useless. The engines stopped themselves, the water ran out at the bottom of the boiler, and the sea rising inside soon put out the fires; so there we lay, powerless as a log, in the midst of the breakers, on the top of the rocks, the sea every now and then lifting her, and then sending her down with renewed force and a heavy crash on the rocks again. To see the decks opening and shutting, and the passengers crying to God for assistance and forgiveness, to see the mothers holding their children, and husbands and wives taking leave of each other, is a sight more easily imagined than described. I felt that we must all be lost, especially as I had seen the chart, and discovered that there was no land within 70 miles, but still I did not despair. I observed to the captain that it was an ugly-looking job, and said I should go to my cabin, and get such things as might be useful if we got clear of the wreck. He said, 'Mind what you are about, for I expect she will go to pieces directly.' However, I went to my cabin, struck a light, and opening my desk, took everything not too heavy to convey about my person, the knife which P—— gave me, and a box of matches. I again proceeded on deck, where I found everything much as I left it, except that the paddle-box boat had been launched in safety. I then endeavoured to console the ladies and passengers by telling them there was no immediate danger, and not to give way to despair, and I managed to get some of them all, out of the way of the mainmast which seemed inclined to come down by the run; and in doing this I experienced many heavy thumps on the deck. I then went to the captain, and pointed out the necessity of getting some of the people into the boats; and he asked me to take command of the large boat, which I of course accepted. The difficulty now was to get the ladies into the boat, which was not so easy a matter, for at times she was twenty feet below, and the next moment close to. There was a stout rope made fast from the deck; so, taking a lady round the waist with one arm, and with the other holding the rope, I swung myself from the ship into the boat alongside. In this way I put every lady in the ship, besides four children, safely into the boat. Then came my friend, Mr. ——, who from infirmity and fear had nearly lost his self-possession. He weighed about 13 stone, and could not get into the boat; so I said, 'Take hold of me, and hold on, and do as I tell you;' so he caught me tightly round the neck with both arms. 'Now,' I said, 'Jump when I tell you,' which he did with a vengeance, for he took a spring that might have cleared the boat altogether; and, as I could not well bear my own weight and his, we came down about ten feet together into the boat. Fortunately for him, I was underneath, and he has since told me that he never went more comfortably into a boat in all his life. I then took command of the boat; but finding a great lack of rope and other necessaries (to ask any one to get them was useless) I jumped on deck, and found my knife most useful. After getting everything I wanted, I again got into the boat, and made preparation to get round the ship's bow to seaward, which had we attempted many lives would have been lost, as I was going to try the reef; but just as we were starting, a boat managed to get partly into the breakers, and was turned over and over, and the bare rocks could be discovered after the wave broke; the passengers in my boat became terribly frightened, and the captain called to me not to go on. A small vessel was now discovered, and hailed with three cheers by the despairing passengers; but no one could tell whether she was approaching or going away. Guns of distress were fired, but still the vessel seemed going away. I therefore left the boat, and went and spoke to the captain, and said, 'Why not try the reef?' The wind is increasing, and the sea getting heavier; and if the worst comes to the worst, our only chance must be the reef. I will volunteer it in a boat, and if I succeed I will go for assistance to the vessel.' To which he answered, 'If you attempt it, you will be dashed to pieces, for no boat can live in such a sea; and the rocks are hardly under water.' So I said, 'If I can get volunteers, will you let me try?' to which he replied, 'Very well.' At this I jumped up on the bulwarks, and at the top of my voice asked for four volunteers. Some who were in the boat got out, and there was a pause for a moment; at last one said, 'I'll go;' and then another. I got my four men. So, taking off my coat, and giving it to a man to take care of for me if I returned, I swung myself into the boat, wished all the people good bye, and told them to keep their spirits up. I gave a cheer to the men, and, with a lond hurrah, dashed into the breakers, which followed high and fast, but the men gave way just when we were over the worst; she grounded on a rock, a towering sea was about to break, which would have swamped us, when she fortunately rose a little; one pull sent her a head, the sea broke just astern, and striking me on the back prevented the force of it coming into the boat: we therefore only shipped a little water, and in about three more strokes cleared the breakers altogether, at which all people on board gave three hearty cheers, but the noise of the breakers prevented our hearing them; so, waving my cap to them, we pulled away to the vessel. Finding we did not near her much, I rigged up a sail on one of our oars, and away we went most gloriously. In about an hour I discovered three small boats under sail, which turned out to be canoes, and we ran towards them; and getting into one of the canoes, put one of their men into the boat, and sent three for assistance, whilst I returned to the wreck, to tell them of an island about eight miles from the ship, which the men in the boats told me of. I was very much astonished, and you may fancy not a little delighted at the joyful news. When I got back to the wreck I found all the boats had crossed the surf, but there were still some hands on board the steamer; so I told the Spaniards they must cross, but they at first refused to do so, at last we tried, and had just got into the middle of the breakers, when a heavy sea broke into the boat and nearly filled her, the next following close after broke completely over us, and washed me clean out of the boat, turning me head over heels, but somehow I managed to get hold of the boat and clung to her, and was at length thrown inside the breakers, where standing on some rocks, we baled the boat out, and putting two or three of the Spaniards out of the boat, made preparation for another trial. I was in the water for about 20 minutes, and most unfortunately had my watch round my neck, but the old fellow never stopped going, though the steel parts got rusty. The boat being again all clear, we again tried the breakers, and this time our labours were crowned with success, though we were more than half full of water when we got alongside, and I was the first person that returned to the wreck. After getting a few things of my own and some of the passengers, I re-crossed the reef to go for the paddle box boat, which I took command of and brought her off in safety to the ship. I now got everything I possibly could for the comfort of the people when on shore at the little island called Peres; and, having loaded the boats pretty considerably, the ship giving some most awful wrenches and twists, and working like a basket, which made us think she was going, we left her and pulled away to the island (to our arrival there every one came up to thank me and shake hands, declaring that I had saved their lives, for, had I not crossed the reef, they, most probably, would have tried to go a-head of the vessel, and I am sure many would have been lost. As it was, there were only two men hurt—one broke his arm, and the other smashed his fingers. We found the island to be about a mile in circumference, with two wretched huts letting the daylight in all round, but luckily furnished with six barrels of water. Passengers and crew, we were in all 136. We were afraid the provisions would fall short, so we were put on allowance of half a pint of water and three biscuits, about the size of a crown, each. We then threw ourselves down on the ground and tried to sleep, after offering up thanksgiving for safe deliverance from shipwreck. Many slept well that night, but I was far too much fatigued, my arms and neck were so burnt with the sun, and the skin off the inside of my hands, that I could not sleep. We found a small brigantine, which we engaged to take us to Campeachy, and the next day they went to the wreck and succeeded in getting provisions and water, and a great deal of passengers' baggage, amongst which I got some of mine. I was so stiff that I could hardly move, but the next day I went off to the wreck, and got some more of my things, besides lots of provisions. A Spaniard and myself crossed the reef in a small boat, and were only capsized once; altogether, I crossed the reef thirteen times. Having got as many things as we could from the wreck on the night of the 16th, we embarked on board the Isabella brigantine, and on the 17th sailed for Campeachy, where we arrived on the evening of the 18th. There was a good deal to be done, and we had to stop there till the 21st; and on the 20th they formed committees, and wrote me a letter which you will most likely see in the papers.* We arrived here on the 5th, and I see no prospect of getting to the Wellesley for some time. I have not been in bed ever since we were wrecked, and yesterday was the first morning I have had a shirt. I am very well, however, never better in my life."

LIEUTENANT MOLESWORTH, R.N.

Lieutenant Molesworth, we learn, is in his twenty-third year. He first entered the navy in the Implacable, under an officer of the highest reputation for judgment and discernment, Captain H. H. Henry, whose esteem young Molesworth so won by his good conduct, that he was treated rather as a son than one under command. He served afterwards in the Cressy, under different captains. His next served in the Tenasserim, Captain Lethbridge (now superintendent of the Indian navy), who committed to young Molesworth (then a midshipman) the very responsible charge of the lower deck, when the ship was crowded with troops. This duty he discharged to his captain's entire satisfaction, from England to the Mediterranean, thence to Bermuda, and thence back to England, with many changes of regiments. He next qualified himself in seamanship (as mate), and in his final examination at Portsmouth he passed so satisfactorily that for such distinction, and his uniformly high character as midshipman and mate, the late Earl of Auckland promoted him to his Lieutenancy, under Earl Dundonald, in the Wellesley, which his father was anxious he should join as soon as possible: for this purpose, he agreed to pay his son's passage to Bermuda, instead of waiting for a Queen's ship; and the train of circumstances which followed led to his being on board the Forth at the time of her wreck. Lieutenant Molesworth was to have gone out in the packet that started before the Avon, but the agent informed him that the Avon would probably reach Bermuda first, as she proceeded direct; whereas the other vessel would have to go the round of the West Indies before she came to Bermuda. This, as the event turned out, but could not be foreseen, was not fulfilled. He started in the Avon, in an adverse gale, which continued with such violence, that the ship could not make her passage, and bore up for Madeira, and was obliged to proceed to St. Thomas'. Here they were a day too late for the steamer to Bermuda, and proceeded to Jamaica, where, under the Commodore's direction, he embarked in the Forth. The rest is known.

It is fully expected that the Admiralty will not fail to prove their high sense of Lieutenant Molesworth's intrepidity, by giving him advancement in the profession wherein he has already so highly distinguished himself by courage and humanity.

* (Copy.)

Campeachy, Yucatan, Jan 20

Dear Sir,—We, the undersigned passengers on board the late Royal mail steam-ship Forth, wrecked on the Alacranes Reef on the morning of the 11th inst., cannot separate without taking this opportunity of recording our high admiration of your conduct in nobly volunteering to cross the reef on which a heavy surf was running, which it was uncertain whether there was water to float us over, the ship not being

Your intrepidity and courageous conduct, when they were only what might have been expected from one upholding such a name as that service whose renown is recognised by every nation, from a knowledge of which we have all proudly remembered by us as fellow-passengers and the rest on board.

We trust your heroic conduct may not pass unnoticed by those who are able substantially to reward you. Be pleased to accept this humble but sincere expression of our gratitude for the services you rendered, not only in the moment of danger, but subsequently, in assisting to secure our property from the wreck.

That you may rise to eminence in that service to which we feel sure you will prove an ornament, and that every happiness may attend you through life, is the earnest wish of your obliged and grateful fellow-passengers. (Signed by all the passengers.)

Lieutenant G. M. Molesworth, R.N., her Majesty's ship Wellesley.

YOUNG HERNANDEZ, AT ASTLEY'S AMPHITHEATRE.

ASTLEY'S.

We have engraved one of the "Scenes in the Circle," with one of the most astonishing feats of the young American equestrian, Hernandez. The ease, rapidity, and finish of his execution is surprising. He is not above 14 years age; and there is an elegance approaching poetry in his performances, which wins rapturous applause from crowded houses.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

This establishment was opened for the season on Thursday night with Auber's celebrated opera of "Masaniello," produced for the first time in this country according to the original score. Auber's "Muette de Portici," the French title of the work, was originally brought out at the Académie Royale de Musique, in Paris, in 1828. It is justly regarded as Auber's masterpiece. To this day, in France, Italy, and Germany, it enjoys continued popularity—combining, as it does, a splendid overture, choral pieces of infinite power and grandeur, exquisite descriptive music for the dances and for the action of the Dumb

SCENE FROM "MASANIELLO," AT THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Girl, and charming compositions for the principals, more especially for the brave; and when, to the musical and dramatic interest of the story, which is great; and when, to the musical and dramatic interest of the story, which is great; and when, to the musical and dramatic interest of the story, which is great

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Just published, price 5s.

MOSCHA LAMBERTI; or, "A Deed Done has no End." A Romance. By MARY ELIZABETH SMITH. London: ARTHUR HALL, and Co., 25, Paternoster-row.

Now ready, post 8vo, 12s

OUTLINES of ENGLISH LITERATURE. By THOMAS B SHAW, B.A JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-st.

Now ready (by authority of H. M Government), 2 vols. 8vo., 30s.

THE ANCIENT PRACTICE of PAINTING in OIL and on GLASS, and other Arts, described from unpublished Manuscripts, dating from the twelfth to the sixteenth centuries. With introductions and Notes by MR MERRIFIELD

Just published, price 1s.

WITH H.I. GRACE'S PERMISSION.

A SELECTION from his GRACE the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY'S PRACTICAL EXPOSITION of the GOSPELS, of those parts more particularly which refer to the Faith and Practice of a Christian.

By the Rev GEORGE WILKINSON, B.D., Rector of Wilcham. C. COX, 18, King-st., Cheapside, and Strand

Now ready, with numerous Illustrations on wood, price 16s 6d.,

ELEMENTS of ELECTRO-BIOLOGY; or, the Voltaic Mechanism of Man; of ELECTRO PATHOLOGY, especially of the Nervous System; and of ELECTRO-THERAPEUTICS. By ALFRED SMEE, F.R.S., Surgeon to the Bank of England, to the Central London Ophthalmic Hospital, to the Royal Dispensary, &c.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS, Paternoster-row.

Just published, price 1s., with 40 Woods, 12s, Newgate-street

LAMARTINE'S MEMOIRS of MY TIMES. Vol. II. of the PARLOUR LIBRARY of INSTRUCTION (a new Monthly Series of Works of Biography, Travels, History, and General Literature). Price 1s. Saner boards

London: CHARLES KNIGHT, 22, Paternoster-row, London, and

MRS. JAMESON ON THE FEMALE CHARACTER.

Third Edition, in 2 vols. with Etchings by the Author,

CHARACTERISTICS of WOMEN; By Mrs. JAMESON, Author of "Sacred and Legendary Art," &c. "We truly delightful volumes. The most charming of all the works of a charming writer."—Blackwood

Also, by the same Author, Third Edition, in 2 vols.,

LIVES of FEMALE SOVEREIGNS.

In silk, with coloured plates, gilt,

THE LANGUAGE of FLOWERS.

Tenth Edition, revised by the Editor of "Ho Not."

THE HAND-BOOK of TURNING. Small 8vo, with Engravi

SAMUEL and OTLEY, Publishers Conduit-street

Just published

THE FAMILY ECONOMIST for MARCH, 1849. Contents: Self-Improvement; in Three Lessons—Lesson 2. Philosophers in Humble Life. Part 1. Poverty: The Boy. REMORSE: To Relieve Asthma—Waterproof Clothing—Poem Sup.—Vegetable Diet—Church Rhubarb—Dumpling—To Salt Rice dry Boiling Potatoes, The Four Chorles, a True Tale—Chap. 2. Early Marriages induced by Unequal Prosperity. Gardening and RURAL AFFAIRS: How to lay out a Cottage Garden—Directions for Seasons for March.

* * The monthly impression of the FAMILY ECONOMIST is now 50,000. It is unrivalled for the interesting and moral character of its contents and for its general respectability and cheapness. Price a Penny a Monthly Part.

A VOLUME FOR ALL

THE FAMILY ECONOMIST for 1848, in paper wrapper, is 6d bound. In addition to the large monthly sale, above 20,000 of the bound volume are sold. It is, therefore the cheapest, most useful, and entertaining volumes ever publ

A NEW SERIES of CHILDREN'S BOOKS, at 2s each,

STORIES for SUMMER DAYS and WINTER NIGHTS. By the EDITORS of the FAMILY ECONOMIST The first of the Series, CARL THORN'S REVENGE, was published on the 1st of February. ALLY'S BIRTHDAY is in the press, and each Book contains 48 pages, with Frontispiece, and other Engravings. These are the best and cheapest books of their class published.

Plaistow Office, 87, P

MASANIELLO.—THE PIANISTA, No. 103, contains the Overture and Airs of this splendid Opera, as Piano Forte, for 2s. Also, La Jaime Blanche, Reminiscences of Sonnambula, and 30 others, 2s each Number. Post-free, 30 Stamps Catalogue gratis

NEW MUSIC Just published, Miss Goodall's Polka

"THE SEA-SERPENT POLKA." By ELIZA LAGOODAL. Beautifully illustrated, price 3s Published at WE 28 Soho-square: where may be had, by the same Author, "The Queen of Graces Waltzes

"MY WIFE IS A MYSTERY." A NEW Eccentric Song, written by H MATHEW, composed by J BLEWITT. Price 2s.—Mr Blewitt has the honour to announce he sings it, he is sure, to produce great fun. The words, by Mr. H. Mayhew (the originator of "Punch" so exceedingly droll and quaint. Chappell, 50, New Bond-street

NEW SONG.

THE LADIES' MELODIOUS PENNY MAGAZINE for this day (price 1d.) is a very unique Price One Shilling. Some of the most beautiful patterns yet published, and all perfectly original; and, great novelty, it is also the cheapest work of the kind. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL and Co.; ATKINSON and DARTON and Co.; and all Booksellers and Berlin wools throughout the kingdo

GARDENING.—The FRUIT, FLOWER, and KITCHEN GARDEN By PATRICK NEILL, LL.D F.R.S.E. Secretary to the Caledonian Horticultural Society In post 8vo Woodcuts, 12s. Price 8s "One of the best modern books on gardening extant."—London's Gardener's Magazine. "Combines practical and amateur—now a debt of gratitude is due to this excellent work on Horticulture, which is now one of the standard works on the practice of science of which it treats." Professor Dunbar's Speech in the Edinburgh Horticultural S

Sold by all booksellers

NEILL on CATARACT, 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d. A NEW WORK on CATARACT, embodying the views of the most recent Continental Eye Surgeons, with a Summary of Practical Remarks on the best Modes of Operating for the Cure of this Disease. By HUGH NEILL, Surgeon to the Queen's Eye and Ear Infirmary. "And if Mr Neill had conferred no further benefit on the public than that of attracting the attention of the profession to the safe and successful operation of redirection, whereby honourable eyes will be saved in future from the destruction occasioned by laceration in the operation, he would have deserved the highest commendation."—Medical Gazette. Read and think Mr Neill's book it replete with practical information, and should be read by every surgeon."—Cordial, Provincial, Medical, and Surgical Journal. Sold by JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Leicester-square, London; and by all Booksellers. Liverpool: DEIGHTON and LAUGHTON (late Grapel). London: JOHN CHURCHILL. And all booksellers

SOUTH'S HINTS ON EMERGENCIES

HOUSEHOLD SURGERY; or, Hints on Domestic Emergencies. By JOHN F. SOUTH, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital Price 5s

The object of this work is to afford some useful hints as to the means death—may be prevented if a judicious person, having been put on the track, makes use of the simple remedies almost every house affords

J. CON, 16, King, Wi Hanover-street, Strand

The 6 vols published, price 7s; free by post, 2s. 6d.,

THE SCIENCE of LIFE; or, How to Live, and What to Live For. With ample rules for diet, regimen, health, longevity, and the sacred state of happiness only attainable through the judicious performance of a well-regulated course of life. By A PHYSICIAN, SAINT and RICHARDS, 32, Paternoster-row; and on which may be had, gratis,

THE HAIR and TEETH.—Read a TREATISE on the HAIR and TEETH, with Hints on their Management, &c., 8vo, 80pp with a number of valuable Recipes. By a SURGEON of Eminence. MANN, Cornhill; WALL

Sold by

London-road, Twickenham, Middl

CHEAP MUSIC.—Eighty Shillings for Eight. Much beloved and admired by the Queen and Royal Family, and

HARD'S FARINACEOUS FOOD.—The important article of diet, for children and invalids has be ridden of that before the public. The purcha on the fact that it is also and Infants would, moreover, prevent many disorders, in manhood. Sold in packets and canes are signed "JAS. HARDS," and manufactured at the Royal Victoria Mill, Dartford, Kent.

MUSICAL UNION.—TICKETS for 1849, with the Record of 1848 are this day sent to the residences of Members. Any candidates will be attended to on applying at CHAPPELL and Co.'s, 50, New Bond-street where Candidates may Memberships are requested to forward names and address. The Honorary Secretary and will be presented to any Musical Institution or Lecture Room on application to J. ELLA, Director. 63, Welbeck-street

BANVARD'S PANORAMA of CANADA is the THIRD Lecture on the following has appeared in several of the late American papers:—"The Duke of London should by all means be induced to hear this grand, splendid, and magnificent work of Art. The grand appeal of a spurious copy of Banvard's great painting of the Mississippi River, which has been got up by a party of speculators who have already sailed for Europe, with the intention of palming it off on the British public as the original." BANVARD'S ORIGINAL PAINTING is EXHIBITING at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly every Morning at Half-past Two, and Evening at Half-past Seven. This is by far the largest painting ever executed by man, showing a country extending over 3000 miles, from the Rocky Mountains to the City of New Orleans. Admission: lower seats, Two Shillings; gallery, One Shilling Doors open half-an-hour before

AN ENGLISH FAMILY, residing in the most fashionable part of BRUSSELS, close to the Park and Boulevards, are desirous of receiving a GENTLEMAN and LADY, or two or three LADIES as BOARDERS. For terms and particulars, apply to Mr YATES, Banker, No 89, Montagne de la

FIRE AT GREENWELL AND CO.'S. 55, 54, and 55, BLACKFRIARS-ROAD.

GREENWELL and Co. beg to announce that the Fire which broke out on their premises on last Sunday morning was, through the exertions of the Firemen of the Metropolis Brigade and that, as the Stock in Trade, although only slightly injured, their business, which has not in consequence been interrupted, is conducted as usual.

16th March, 1849.

IMPORTANT to LITHOGRAPHERS, PRINTERS, and Dealers in Artists' Materials.—The valuable STOCK and GOODWILL of the TRADE of Dr. Leonard Mr. Mc. Lithographer, Engraver, Draughtsman, and Printer, Union Buildings, Aberdeen, will be DISPOSED OF by PRIVATE BARGAIN, by the Executors either in one Lot or separate Sale Shop and Premises, Lithographic and Printing Materials by themselves. It is well known that the Business carried on by the late Mr. Henderson was the most extensive and successful in the north of Scotland; and now that it is to be disposed of, while in its utmost activity, it is one first as favourable an opportunity occurs, for a pa entitled individual, to enter upon a trade of such long Application to be made to Mr. Ma ALD, Bon-Accord Square, Aberdeen.

March, 1849.

1st Feburary, 1849

FRAUDULENT IMITATION.—S. MORTLOCK and Cumberland Lead Pencil Cases, the consequence of their various engrav M and Co. receiving of their Labels and Marks imitated for the purpose deceiving the Public, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN DAN and CO are determined to s ecute every one prosecution against all parties who s E or SELL such spurious goods.

PATENT GALVANIC PENS.—The action of Ink upon Steel Pens renders them soon useless by eating through the hard metal, thereby making them scratchy. They is prevented by the use of Pens of nitrodiferous steel, a small bar of zinc, which produces a galvanic action that altogether ink, and at the same time keeping the pen in a state of brilliancy, and causing it to flow freely. Sold by A.J. Stationers, Booksellers, & throughout the kingdom, and at the patentees, RICHARD MOSELEY and Co., 8, Hatton-garden, London

GOLD PENS.—RICHARD MOSLEY and Co.'s Gold Pens still maintain their superior action as the very best pens have yet been introduced. Their lasting qualities are admirable. The writer will find the nibs to be hard, it will be found to be perfectly flexible with a Pen which is Pens have all the pliancy and softness of the quill. They never cut, blot, spurt, and the ink flows freely and pleasantly. A or hours of use the ink will not run as with the ordinary pen, and the writing remains the same from the impossibility of the point wearing

Sold by all Stationers, Jewellers, throughout the kingdom.

Manufactory, 3, P

FENDER and CUTLERY WAREHOUSE.—Families furnishing may select every article for purchasing at S. and J. SLACK'S, 336, Strand (adjoining the Adelphi). In mosogany Warehouse, 336, Strand (adjoining Somerset-house, where is always on sale an extensive assortment of Fenders, Fire Irons, Fire Screens, Tea Trays, Tea Urns, Patent Ovens, and every article in Furnishing Ironmongery of the best manufacture, at more moderate than other houses. Fenders, as 6d; Bronzed ditto, 3s; Ivory Table Knives, 3s per dozen; Other goods equally low. Illustrated Catalogue as sent post free to any pa

EMIGRATION FACILITATED.—Those of intending to emigrate to Australia, or to assist them in their OUTFIT might write to their friends to this effect:—"Go to and see the Office of the Royal Colonial Co's AGENTS in Australia, or to their Agents in the district, who would furnish you with a Passage Ticket to Sydney, Port Phillip, or Adelaide, at moderate rates. The agent's acknowledgment would be received by W Silver and Co. as Cash at the Colonial Office, for the Guild. This proposal will be as to communicated through the Colonial Journals. Apply personally, or by letter, to the Secretary, 1, Rathbone-place (opposite the London Pavilion), where colonial information may be obtained, and a small parcels of Gloves and forwarded to the colonies

N.B. Intending Emigrant Passengers generally to all parts of the globe (with experienced Interpreters as Stewardesses in the Department of Mr Lahee), should be personally at 56 and 57, Cornhill, by A. W SILVER and Co., Outfitters, Clothiers for Home Use and Contractors to and at St. George's-crescent, Liverpool.

SOVEREIGN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, No. 6, St. James's-street, London, Assurances may be effected on the lives of persons in every station of life, and every part of the world, on peculiarly favourable and moderate Profits of Europe may effect assurances on payment of moderate increased rates.

Immediate annuities granted on liberal terms, affording great advantages to persons in declining health.

Half-credit rates may be purchased at rates which secure a return of the whole or part of the premiums paid, in case the age at which the assurity is to commence be not attained.

No charge for stamps, or for policies.

Loans are granted on approved security to parties effecting assurances with the Company.

At the Company's engagements are guaranteed by an ample subscribed and paid-up capital.

Prosperous and the necessary forms of proposal, with every information, may be obtained on application, either personally or by letter at the Company's offices.

Affects canvassers, allowed to solicit and agents in every branch of insurance.

The Company grants a of the operations of the m tion referred to, and every information required by such proposer for assurance

H. D DAVENPORT, Secretary.

CLERGYMEN.—The Fathers, Brothers, Sons, and the Members of Widows' families, and Clergymen are respectfully to observe that they and none others are entitled to the privileges which the Society have of assuring with Lessons upon Life in the CLERGY MUTUAL ASSURANCE SOCIETY. Established 1829, and enrolled in the year 1836, by the Parliament of City gentlemen and their Families, and it is confidently expected that, by extending the age of receiving Assurance to such a class, larger profits will be the whole of which, and not a part, only, will be divid d amongst the Assurers. The next bonus will be apportioned in 1

Bishops of Canterbury and York Lords for the Sum of £1000 each, who had been Seven Years in force on December 31, 1846.

Chairman The Archdeacon of London

Deputy Chairman Wolmerston, M.A

Any Clergymen and parishioners application is to be made to the office, No. 61, Parliament-street, London

JOHN HODGSON, M.A. Secretary.

JOHN BLAIR.

An amount of upwards of one million five hundred thousand pounds is already secured to the Society by the Clergy and members of their families as above.

DECLARATION of BONUS. The CORPORATION of the ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE give Notice that, in conformity with the system of Periodical Distribution of Profits adopted in December 1841, they have declared a BONUS on the Policies which have subsisted for a term of Years, whatever of life, which were subsisting on the 31st D

The following TABLE shows the amount BONUS on British Policies for the Sum of £1000 each, who had been Seven Years in force on December 31, 1846.

Age	Annual Premium.	Amount of Premiums paid.	Bonus by addition to the sum Assured.	Bonus by reduction of Premium for the remainder of Life
20	£ 17	£ 119	£ 102	£ 1
25	19	133	102	1
30	21	147	102	1
35	24	168	102	1
40	28	196	102	1
45	33	231	102	1
50	40	280	102	1
55	49	343	102	1
60	61	427	102	1
65	77	539	102	1
70	98	686	102	1
75	126	882	102	1
80	164	1148	102	1

Assurances may be effected with the Corporation for any amount not exceeding £10,000 on one life

The Governors and Directors feel pleasure in stating that the Public will continue to manifest their confidence in the Corporation which has maintained a high position during a period of UNPARALLELED COMMERCIAL AND A QUARTER'S affords ample Security by its ESTABLISHED Invested Capital-stock,

Which is Responsible to the Assured while it is Supported by most considerable Income with these Premiums

FIRE ASSURANCES are also transacted every kind of Property.

By Order,

February 5th, 1849. ALEXANDER GILLES, Secretary.

BREIDENBACH'S AMANDINE, for HANDS, 2s 6d.

88, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

BREIDENBACH'S EAU de COLOGNE, the same as distilled for her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Duchesses of Kent and Cumberland. This Cologne is no spurious imitation of Farina's but the genuine article itself and as such defies all competition. Price 4s per quart. 88 Park-street, Grosvenor-square

SATIN SHOES (Black or White), 3s 6d per pair; Kid Shoes for 2s. 6d. BOULTS, 305, Oxford-street.

LADIES' ELASTIC BOOTS.—CHARLES MARSHALL, 207 208 Piccadilly.

ING BOOTS, 10s 6d per pair. Lists free by post on application to the office.

WHITELOCK and SON'S Celebrated Patent Long Cloth SHIRTS, 6s. 8d. each, cut with their recent improvements to ensure a perfect fit. Any one as sample free per post on receipt of P.O. order for 34. Measure to be taken round the neck, chest, and wrist. The new patterns and colours to each. 168, strand (London Counties 40 years).

IMPORTANT!!—Just Received, a large parcel of IRISH SHIRTINGS, purchased under peculiar circumstances from a celebrated manufacturer, and which will be sold during the next 8 of March at a small profit, by the Irish Linen Company, 43, Ha

THE NICOLL, a PATENT PALETOT for Changeable Weather, the latest novelty from a well-known artist, to appear somewhat fantastically, and cost moderate. To be had in London only of the Patentees, 114, 116, 120, Regent-street; or 22, Cornhill.

CROSBY-HALL VAULTS — PORT and SHERRY, each of very excellent quality, at 28s per Dozen. Sherry, 42s; and Hock and Sauterne, 48s per Dozen Quarter Pipes, 21 15s; or, 24s per dozen.—CURRALL and SON, 35, Bishopsgate-street Within

STANDARD or NATURAL SHERRY.—By the arrival of the "Emerald," from Cadiz, I have received one of the finest parcels of that delicious wine, imported direct, in brilliant condition. 30s per dozen; 2s. 6d. Hgrs. 1s. per gallon. Cash; carriage free.—CHAS. MORRIS, 26, Leicester-street, Cha Chapside. Deliveries will commence on the 5th March

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE, 42s per Dozen Pints, 24s, from Epernay and Rheims. Gardner's golden Sherry, 30s, Amontillado very fine, 36s. Old Port, Hock, and Sauterne, 42s per Dozen.—MEREDITH and BELL, 4, Gt. Russell-street, Bloomsbury

N.B. Pale Old Brandy, 6s per Gallon

TRY the COCOA-NUT FIBRE BRUSHES. Cocoa-nut and Horse Brush, 3s; Spoke Brush, 4s 6d; Water Brush, 1s 6d; Cloth Brush, 1s 9 These Brushes are not only cheaper, they are also better than Hair Brushes.—T. TRULOAK

A LBERT NIGHT LIGHTS.—GEORGE and WAY JOHN DEANE are the sole making the celebrated Night Lights by their certain mark of the name of the Queen's Arms, and Crown, on every package. Special orders, which have instant attention.—DEANE'S Lamp Oil, Candles, Lamps, and Furnishing Ironmongery, opposite to the Monument, 46, King William-street

ENAMELLED MANGER for HORSES.—The Nobility and Gentry are informed that DEANE, DRAY, and LEANE'S Enamelled Manger, which is declared to be the cleanest and most cleanly article of the sort ever offered to the Public, is now ready, price 8s. 6d. Deane, Dray, and Deane's Agricultural Warehouse, Upper Thames-street

LADIES are most respectfully invited to inspect the new and most delightful EAST CHAIR ever invented; "THE SUTHERLAND," which has been pronounced, to be, by all who have seen it, that effort of genius for the good comfort and RICHARD & G. LOADER'S Show-Rooms, 69, London

THE LADIES' MANTLE EMPORIUM, 5, Shower-street, Bath, Shawls, mantles, &c.; the newest and most fashionable and common shawl pins of every description, in gold, silver, and pearl, at the lowest prices.

PARASOLS.—W. and J. SANGSTER beg to submit to the nobility and gentry the following Parasols for the present season, called the Regent Parasol, of which the style and make is particularly new and elegant. It will be sold for the small charge of 21s each, or unlimited at 6l each. W. and J. S. also respectfully solicit an inspection of their Stock of Parasols and Silk Parasols suitable for the carriage, promenade, and dress, from 5s to £5 each. elegant assortment of Fancy Goods. H. Royal Exclusive Wholesale Warehouse, 40, Cornhill.

THE NEW REGISTERED PARASOLS FOR THE KING AND PRIEATH

Also, a large assortment of Parasols, ready to suit, they will show their new Registered BROCADED POULT DE SOIES, at 21 17s 6d. the Full Dress. Also, Rich Moire Antique Manufactured at an immense Expense with a Double Face, so that Two Dresses can be made out of a Single Pattern.

Patterns sent (postage free) to any part of the Kingdom.

PETER ROBINSON, 103, and 104, REGENT-STREET, Corner of Glasshouse-street.

THE NEW SPRING SILKS

Patterns sent (free of expense) to any part of the Kingdom.

GLACE, STRIPED, FIGURED, and CHECKED SILKS, at 19s. 6d. and 25s. 6d. the Full Dress, originally sold at £3. The Richest Glaces, Striped, and Figured Poult de Soies, at 35s. the full dress.

Address KING and SHEATH, 501 N

N.B. Black Glaces Watered

ESTABLISHED IN 1778

WEDDING AND GENERAL OUTFITS JOHN CAPPER and SON, 69, Greenbrook-street, have added a wareroom for LADIES' READY MADE LINEN under fem-ale superintendance Manufactured Parisian goods, needlework excellent, and prices moderate. Decided HEADY LINEN superior work Paris is above £ throughout England. LINEN, which is sent to Ladies on approval

INFANTS' CLOAKS, HOODS, HATS, and BONNETS CHILDREN'S FROCKS, COATS, and PELISSES, LONG and SHORT DRESSES, French Cambric Caps, Day and Night Robe Blankets, Swan and Down Pilgrim Cloaks, Quilted Bassinet Mats, Trimmed Nurse Baskets and Hammocks, with or without Stands, to suit every climate in MARY JANE'S Infant's Warehouse, 21, Regent-street, Waterloo-place. Prices on application.

BONNETS—PARISIAN MILLINERY.—To LADIES who are cash purchasers and wish to avoid the charges of private milliners, carriage, and credit, the Show Rooms of Mrs. Runnels richly trimmed (in all colours), Cash, &c., complete, One Guinea each; French Bonnets, 15s 6d; 21s; 25s 6d; 31s 6d. Mourning, Opera, or Dorcas, richly trimmed, Patent Crape, 9s 6d to 42s 6d; Widows' Bonnets, with Cambric Frills complete, 10s 6d to 21s; Fairy Chips for Brides, One Guinea each; the crown Chips for Brides, from 10s 6d to 15s 6d. Dress Bonnets, of the newest and most fashionable cannot be procured at any price, and the largest stock in London to select from. Dunstable Whole Straws, the new shape, 3s 11d each; Fine Dunstable, 4s 11d. Children's Leghorn Hats and Bonnets in endless variety and supply cheap, for cash only, at CRANBOURN HOUSE, No. 29, Cranbourn-street, Leicester-square (Opposite the Queen's Theatre), and Company

FURTHER REDUCTION of PRICES on CONSIGNMENT DISPOSAL of STOCK. IMPORTANT SALE of Costly Silks, Velvets, Dresses, Shawls, Mantles, Lace Gloves, Hosiery, Haberdashery, Drapery.

MESSRS. BEECH and BERRALL, 64, 65, Edgware-road, have great pleasure in announcing to the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, that they have purchased the whole of their valuable Stock of Silks, Velvets, Dresses, Shawls, Mantles, Lace Gloves, Hosiery, Haberdashery, Drapery, and Linens, at a great reduction from the original prices, and are now selling the same at the following extraordinary low prices:—

A few words of plain truth will suffice to call the attention of the Public to the above Sale. The whole of their valuable Stock of Silks, Velvets, Dresses, Shawls, Mantles, Lace Gloves, Hosiery, Haberdashery, Drapery, and Linens, has been purchased at a great reduction from the original prices, and are now selling the same at the following extraordinary low prices:—

Rich Striped, Checked, and Figured Silks, 1s 6d per yard, former price 2s 6d. Rich Striped, Checked, and Brocaded Silks, 1s 9½d, worth 3s 6d to 4s 6d. Rich Silk, 2s 6d to 3s 6d per yard, former price 4s 6d to 5s. Rich Silks of Ladies' White Cotton and Linen Thread Lace of the newest make, and at greatly reduced prices. 3000 pieces Fancy Ribbons, Paris Goods, 3½d per yard, worth 6d. The newest shades in Parasols, at the Lowest Cash reduced prices. Rich Velvets, Black and Coloured, at very low prices.

Beech and Berrall, 64, Edgware-road.

The Sale will commence on MONDAY NEXT, and is limited to Fourteen Days only.

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase good instruments is at R. W. TOLKIEN'S, 23, King William-street, London-bridge. H. P.'s splendid toned Piccolos, with 61 Octave Metallic Plates, 0 G Full, 8 Stops Complete As manufacturer, Stock always on hand

23, King William-st., London-bridge

"AS YOU LIKE IT."—Six Pounds of Sterling CONGOU TEA, in a tin case, carriage free to all parts of the kingdom, for 30s. Five Pounds of very superior quality and extraordinary strength, in a tin case, sent free, for 20s.—ALEXANDER BRADEN, Tea Merchant, 2, High-street, Bloomsbury

CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES of a superior, elegant, compact, easy, and secure build Now in the front Palace to the springs Diamond and new Collection, from 10s to 20 guineas. INGRAM'S Invalid Wheel-Chair, 27 Mountenary 27 Old-road 1 factory-square. N B Illustrated Catalogue

HUME'S MARKING INK, 108, Long-acre. The Original Ink for writing on Linen was invented in this house a century since, and a unrivalled in excellence. It leaves no sediment or grave rounds pen, commercial washing preserves it deep colour till worn out. It is warm salt. 2s 6d. Inserted 2s. It is particularly recommended, without wire, preparation all Marking Inks generally wash out.—In Cases, 1s and 2s 6d each

CARBY'S HECLA COF. EE-POT prepares the aromatics inhalers to the nostrils sealed hitherto discovered. by Mr Ryan, of the Royal Polytechnic Institution, well-known author of the "Gastronomic Regenerator," M. Soyer with it his unqualified approbation GEORGE and JOHN CARBY, 65, King William-street, London-bridge

ELASTIC BANDAGES.—BAILEY'S NEW BANDAGE is soft; it increases circulation, and gives great comfort to the parts where ordinary bandages. May be had through the post, 6d. and 7s6. per pair. Also his Patent Elastic Stockings, Knee caps, ankle bandages, belts, trusses, spinal stays, and every thing for the relief of the afflicted. Copy the address, 418, Oxford-street, London, and 3, Old Bond street.

WATCHES and CLOCKS.—A Pamphlet, explaining the various contrivances and the advantages of each, with a List of Prices, will be forwarded, gratis, by post, if applied for by a prepaid letter, addressed to E. COX SAVORY and CO., Goldsmiths, Watchmakers, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

ELECTRO and SHEFFIELD PLATE.—The Catalogue of Prices, with Drawings of Silver Plated Dish Covers, Vegetable Dishes, Cruet Frames, and every requisite for the Dinner Table, is published, and may be had gratis, or will be sent by post free, to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies.—E. C. & S. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank.

THE NEW FISH CARVING KNIVES and FORKS.—A. E. SAVORY and Sons respectfully inform their customers that their STOCK of these useful articles is ready for selection. In silver plated blades, with ivory handles, 24s per pair, in silver, from 84s the pair.—14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank

SILVER PLATE.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS beg to call the attention of customers to the reduced prices at which they are now selling the best wrought Fiddle Pattern Spoons and Forks, and every description of Plate and Coffee Services. The Pamphlet illustrated by drawings, and containing the weights and prices of the articles, as regulated in family use, may be had on application, or will be sent, post free, to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank.

HANDSOME GOLD WATCHES, jewelled in four holes, with maintaining power, and all the modern improvements, in elegantly engraved cases, for 2l 15s. Also, highly-finished Silver Watches, engraved dials, &c., with movements similar to the above, for 2l 5s. A written warranty given. Gold chains, and watches purchased or taken in exchange.—HAWLEY and Co., 204, Regent-street, and 4, Royal Exchange. Every Watch sold by them will serve the on y Watchmakers and Jewellers in London of that name.

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES with the movements, opposite Somerset House. Each warranted and sent free to any part of the kingdom for £4 4s. Gold Watches, £6 6s. Every Watch skilfully repaired, and sent free to any part of the kingdom for 5s. Barometers, Thermometers, Telescopes, Opera Glasses, Spectacles, and every description of Optical Instruments, at the lowest prices.—JONES, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House.

S. S. HENSON'S £4 15s. GOLD WATCHES Of the same movement as Silver Cases at £3 15s.—at his manufactory, 7, Cornhill, three doors from the Royal Exchange. S. S. HENSON begs to inform the public that no watch shall be put into the hands of his customers without a certificate of its being sound. A large and beautiful stock can be selected from. Highly-finished movements, in silver cases, with the gold dials, and every improvement. A written warranty for two years, and sent free to any part of the kingdom. Gold chains, rings, pins, &c., of the best quality. Old gold wanted, for which the highest price will be given. Clocks, of every variety of construction, warranted. Barometers, Thermometers, Telescopes, and Opera Glasses, at the most reasonable prices. Every article in the trade may be had at this house very low for cash. Observe the only address, 7, Cornhill, three doors from the Royal Exchange.

SARL'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE. SARL and SONS, 3, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, have finished a large and splendid stock of SPOONS and FORKS in every variety of pattern, which they have recently purchased for cash, having rendered a constant supply impossible. S. and Sons take this opportunity of informing their friends and the public that orders to any extent can now be promptly executed. All the articles usually kept in a first-class shop are now manufactured by S. and Sons in their Argentine Plate. Pamphlets of prices and patterns gratis

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A GOLD WATCH and GOLD CHAIN, fitted complete in a morocco case, for £3 10s, very suitable for a present. The description of the watch is as follows:—Highly-finished gold case, gold dial, horizontal movement, four holes jewelled, maintaining power, a stout hunting bang wound, and all recent improvements, a written warranty is given with the watch for two years. Watch Manufactory, 18, Cornhill, opposite the New Royal Exchange

N B The above presents can be forwarded through the Post-office with perfect safety, by the obtain of an order for the amount.

HEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING, containing a full description of Weights, Sizes, and Prices, by which Purchasers can select the articles best suited to make a good Set of Bedding, sent free by post.—Application to their Factory, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road, London

HEAL and SON'S PRESENT PRICES of BED FEATHERS.—Prime Goose Goose Grey Goose Dutch Goose Mixed Feathers Foreign Duck Best Dutch Duck Extra Fine Dutch Duck Best Irish Duck Best Foreign Duck Best Dutch Duck Best Irish Duck Best Foreign Duck Best Dutch Duck Best Irish Duck Best Foreign Duck Best

SETTLER'S HUT, IN AUSTRALIA.

AUSTRALIAN HUT.

THIS pair of Emigration Scenes is from the pencil of Mr. Skinner Prout, whose pictures on a voyage to Australia the reader will, doubtless, remember in No. 354 of our Journal.

The Sketch of the Settler's Hut represents an Australian dwelling, of a class commonly met with in the Bush. It is constructed of rudely split logs, placed upright in the ground, the interstices being in most cases filled up with mud or clay; but the peculiar circumstance connected with the Hut here drawn was this:—

On one of his sketching excursions, our Artist was anxious to cross some mountain tiers, in order to make a straight line to a spot he was anxious to visit, at some twelve miles distant. He was aware that there was no marked road; and that to attempt it without a guide would be to run a serious risk of losing himself in the intricacies of the wild forest, with which the country is covered. However, as very soon had the gratification to reach a clearing, and to see, a few hundred yards before him, a column of bright blue smoke rising among the gum-trees, and indicating the hut of some settler.

Australian hospitality has become proverbial, and, says Mr. Prout, "perhaps few persons have experienced it more frequently than myself. My wanderings as a sketcher have often led me among scenes and in situations where I have been wholly dependent on such sources for food and shelter; and I have ever received it with a hearty good-will, and in such a manner as one might have inferred that I had been rather the dispenser than the recipient of such kindness. It was just so, at the time to which I have alluded. I made my wants known, and as readily a young man who was the shepherd on the station offered to become my guide. This matter being settled, the iron pot was placed on the fire, and a plentiful repast of mutton chops and sassafras tea prepared us for our journey; but before we started, my friend 'Joe' must have his pipe, and I must have my sketch. The interior of the little hut presented so quiet, so enticing a bit, that I must needs make a memorandum of it. Joe had smoked himself into a state of semi-dreaminess, and seated on a log of wood, displaying an attempt at the formation of a chair, was contemplating with a most thoughtful visage a large posting-bill—an advertisement of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, announcing the Queen's visit to Drayton Manor, &c. Doubtless, dreams of greatness, and thoughts of home, were passing through the poor shepherd's mind: he appeared quite lost in thought, and in imagination was far, far away from the wilds of Australia; but his kangaroo dog, which had been lying at his feet, roused himself, disturbed his master's reveries, and at the same time afforded me an intimation that it would be well to commence our journey."

How the posting-bill, announcing the Visit of Queen Victoria to the Midland Counties of England, had found its way into the Settler's Hut, we are not informed; but there our Artist witnessed the office, treasured as a picture.

EMIGRATION OF THE POOR.—The following are the conditions which are inserted by the Poor-law Board in their orders sanctioning the emigration of poor persons:—1. The party emigrating shall go to some British colony not lying within the tropics.—2. The guardians may expend a sum not exceeding 3*l*. a mile in conveying each emigrant above seven years of age to the port of embarkation, and a sum not exceeding 1*d*. a mile in conveying each child under seven years of age. 3. The guardians may give to each emigrant, the place of whose destination shall not be eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, clothing to the value of £1, and may also expend a sum not exceeding 10*s*. for each emigrant in the purchase of bedding and utensils for the voyage.—4. The guardians may give to each emigrant proceeding to the Cape of Good Hope clothing to the value of £3, and to each emigrant to places eastward of the Cape of Good Hope clothing to the value of £2 10*s*.; and in either case may expend a sum not exceeding £1 for each person above 14, and 10*s*. for every child above 1 and under 14 years of age; and in cases of free emigration, £2 for a single man above 18 years of age, in the purchase of bedding and utensils for the voyage.—5. If the emigrant be not conveyed by or under the authority of her Majesty's Government to the place of destination, or provision be not otherwise made in a manner satisfactory to the said Commissioners for the maintenance of such emigrant on arrival at such place, a contract, to be approved by the Commissioners, shall be entered into for securing a sum of money to be supplied to the emigrant on such arrival, according to the following scale: to each person exceeding 14 years of age, £14 to each person not exceeding 14 years of age, 10*s*.—6. If the emigrant be not conveyed by or under the authority of her Majesty's Government to the place of destination, and the cost, or any part thereof, of conveying the emigrant from the port of embarkation to such place, shall be defrayed from the fund above directed to be provided, a contract shall be entered into for conveying the emigrant to such place, to be approved by the said Commissioners.

INTERIOR OF SETTLER'S HUT IN AUSTRALIA.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1849.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 363.—Vol. XIV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1849. [Sixpence.

THE INCREASE OF PAUPERISM.

IT was to be expected that the enormous pauperism of Ireland would seriously affect both England and Scotland. The union between Great Britain and Ireland is too real in fact, whatever it may be in sentiment, to permit Ireland to be a hotbed of beggary, without afflicting us with its overflow. Liverpool and Glasgow have, as a matter of course, received large additions to their casual poor from this source; and the unwelcome immigration has spread itself from these two centres into every district of the country. But, unfortunately, this invasion of the proletaires of Munster and Connaught, hard as it is to bear, is not the only increase which has been received by the pauperism of Great Britain. Within the last two years there has been such a formidable addition to our own native pauperism, as to excite very serious alarm and perplexity in the minds of those who look before them, and who can see the shadows of an approaching danger. From the last Report of the Poor-law Commissioners to the House of Commons, it appears that the pauperism of 1846 amounted to 1,471,133 souls. The pauperism of 1848 amounted, according to the same document, to 1,876,541; showing an increase of no less than 405,408 persons—a number equalling the population of New York, and more than equalling the population of the largest cities and towns in England, with the sole exception of the capital. The whole amount of the pauperism of 1848 about equals the population of London, Westminster, Southwark, Lambeth, the Tower Hamlets, Finsbury, Marylebone, Woolwich, and Greenwich! Part of this army of misery is stationary, and eats into the resources of the districts in which it happens to have its legal settlement. Another part is ambulatory. This division of the great army of pauperism is calculated at the lowest rate to amount to about 50,000 persons. They include men, women, and children, and are known by the names of "tramps" or "vagrants." They levy their contributions from place to place, and bestow the favour of their presence most frequently upon those unions where the workhouse fare is the most abundant, and where the labour required of them is the lightest and most agreeable.

Although there can be no doubt that a large percentage of the 405,408 paupers that swelled the numbers of the poor in England in 1848 were Irish, and that the depression of trade in the years 1847 and 1848 caused an unusual number of applications for relief from the poor-rates, from men and women who, in times of brisker business, might have maintained themselves by their honest industry, yet, after a liberal deduction on both these scores, the country should ask itself whether there is not a sufficiently grievous addition to its habitual pauperism, to call for serious investigation. Already there are manifold symptoms of public alarm and uneasiness on the subject. It was stated at a late meeting for the "Equalisation of Poor-Rates," that the town of Manchester, which had paid only £35,000 for the poor in 1837, paid £125,000 in 1847. The other great towns and cities of the empire tell the same tale. Liverpool and London are equally oppressed; and Scotland, with a different system of Poor-Laws, and denying relief to the able-bodied, joins the universal chorus of complaint and alarm. In fact, the question of the age is, What shall we do with our poor? Their support at present is a very severe and almost intolerable burden. It will not do to shift its weight from shoulder to shoulder—from class to class—from one description of property to another. Its present amount must be greatly reduced, and its future growth must be permanently checked, unless we are content to see the industrious middle classes of our towns and cities, as well as our rural occupiers and proprietors, drawn into one common vortex of impoverishment and ruin.

But while we consider it to be of good omen that public attention is strongly directed to the subject, we regret to perceive that the agitation which has already commenced has taken a wrong direction. Mr. Disraeli, on one side, wishes to relieve real property of half the poor-rate, at the expense of the nation collectively; and some of the metropolitan parishes, on the other hand, begin to clamour for what they call the "Equalisation of Poor-Rates." We have already stated our objections to Mr. Disraeli's exploded plan. The same objections apply with still greater force to the Equalisation of Poor-Rates, or to the establishment of any uniform and national system of rating. It may seem hard that some parishes should pay 7s. 6d. or even 10s. in the pound for poor-rates, while other parishes only pay 1s. 6d. or 6d.; but if the equalisation sought by those who are overburdened be accompanied, as it would necessarily and inevitably be, by the destruction of the old system of local responsibility and local management, even these parishes would ultimately be in as bad a pecuniary position as they are at present. The certain effect of such a change would be to increase pauperism, not in one parish, but in all; and to raise the average of the rate for the whole country to the highest amount paid by the most highly-rated parishes under the present system. In fact, the most rabid French Communist could not propose a project more calculated to establish the principles of Communism, than the project for the equalisation of the poor-rates. Under a national system of rating, there would be no local interest in the diminution of the rates. Each district would sink into apathy on the subject. If its poor were few, it would be none the better; and if they were many, it would be none the worse. The tight hand would be withdrawn, and the speedy result would be—not an organisation of labour, but an organisation of idleness, vice, and ignorance.

TRIAL OF THE CONSPIRATORS OF THE 15TH OF MAY, AT BOURGES.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

If there be one principle which the owners of property, real or personal, or the hard-working community generally, should cling to with a desperate pertinacity, it is that of the local support and local superintendence of the poor. To renounce that salutary principle will be the first step towards the confiscation of property for the support of an increasing multitude of paupers. Under the local system, while the aged and the impotent are duly cared for, there is always a motive for keeping the poor-rate as a sacred fund for misfortune, and for preventing it from becoming the common and ever-open purse of the abandoned and the worthless. Under a national system, the distinction between the deserving and the undeserving, the industrious and the idle, the unfortunate and the criminal, would be gradually lost. In very large parishes this is the result even now. It cannot be otherwise; and, were England made into one great parish in respect of its liability, all the evils which we now see in large parishes would be enormously augmented. We have before us an extract of a letter from an active county magistrate, who supports by his experience the opinion we have expressed:

"I observe," he says, "that there is a Committee on Irish Poor-Laws; but I doubt their doing much good unless they will make up their minds to have small divisions, and to make each division responsible for its own poor only. We are getting out of that system in England, I am sorry to say; but I suspect that both here and there it is the right one, and the only one which brings people's interests and sympathies to work. You are interested in your own neighbour, and you are interested to keep down your payments, and the most efficient way to do that is to give employment; but it the rate is for a whole union, you have no longer a personal acquaintance and sympathy with the poor, nor does your employing your own neighbour save you from being as taxed with the support of all those whom others neglect; and the universal temptat on is therefore to spend as little as possible on individual exertion, and leave them all on the general rate, which by that means at last grows too great for the land.

This we believe to be the true, and the only true policy. Though we have the utmost respect for the intentions of those who, feeling the burden of pauperism in their respective parishes, are anxious to have the burden equally distributed all over the country, we trust that they will take a wiser view of the matter, and turn their attention to the real object for which they should strive, which is not so much the distribution as the DIMINUTION of the cost of pauperism. If, even with local management, and the strong incentives to economy, which that system is so well calculated to foster, pauperism is increasing upon us, it is clear that something else must be done to stop its growth. Our pauperism of 1,800,000 souls is a burden upon existing wealth. It makes that wealth less. The problem for a nation is, not the re-distribution of that wealth among those who do not contribute to make it;—not the communism of pauperism with property; but how to transform these unproductive paupers, in whole or in part, into creators of wealth for themselves. The greatest and surest of all remedies for pauperism has never been tried. That remedy is EDUCATION. It is rare that an educated man is a pauper. Nineteen-twentieths of our pauperism is composed of the ignorant—of men and women who would have been wealth producers if they had had in their youth the advantages of instruction. This great and enlightened country spends £100,000 per annum for National Education, and between £6,000,000 and £7,000,000 per annum, if not more, in support of the poor. But surely we want a little more enlightenment if we are content to continue in such a course. The expenditure of a couple of millions for the education of the whole people in their youth, would add to the wealth of the country; it would transform unproductive paupers into productive labourers; and it would lessen the future ranks of pauperism nearly all except the aged and the impotent. It seems to us that this is the real and the only remedy. England must be made richer; and the only means of accomplishing that object are the intelligence and the industry of her people. Make the multitude intelligent, and they are certain to become industrious; and, being intelligent and industrious, they are certain to become wealthy. A local poor-rate to keep down existing pauperism—a national rate for education, to stop the growth of pauperism in future; these are the remedies for the evil. The plan of Mr. Disraeli, and that of the metropolitan parishes, which desire a national assessment for the poor, might for a while give a slight apparent relief to a few individuals and a few districts; but they would ultimately only aggravate the general evil, and re-act even upon those whom at first they might have relieved. Pauperism is a disease. Let those who are of this opinion devote their minds, not to the question who shall pay the cost of maintaining it in the lazar-house, but to the more essential question, how it shall be cured. It is a great question in all the densely-peopled countries of Europe; but in none is it so pressing as it is in England. Though it may be a safe question at present, there is no knowing how long it may remain so.

TRIAL OF THE CONSPIRATORS AT BOURGES.

Upon the preceding page, we have Engraved the portraits of the conspirators of the 15th May, who are now on their trial before the High Court of Justice sitting at Bourges. This interesting town, anciently the capital of Berry, and now of the Department of the Cher, is situated nearly in the centre of France.

The trials take place in the Hôtel de Ville, originally the private mansion of Jacques Cœur, a building in the late or florid Gothic style, of great magnificence, and characterised, like many other French domestic edifices of the 15th century, by its circular stone-roofed towers, containing spiral staircases. The greater part of the interior has been unsparingly mutilated and altered, to fit it for conversion into law courts; instead of panelling, cornices, chimney-pieces, &c. The Court sit in a large circular salle d'audience, where the army of president, counsel, jurymen, and prisoners forms an imposing spectacle.

In the preceding Illustration, the conspirators are seated in three lines, and the counsel who defend them in the lower, or front line: Barbès has just risen to address the Court.

Upon the first day the conspirators were seated as follows:—Upon the first bench—Blanqui, Barbès, Albert, Sobrier, and Raspail; upon the second bench—Flotte, Quentin, Degré, and Larger; and in the third range were Bourne, Thomas, Courtais, and Villain; subsequently, Courtais, the place of Albert, on the first bench.

The proceedings were resumed at the usual hour on Monday.

The galleries were very much crowded, in the expectation that Ledru-Rollin and Vidocq were to be examined. Ledru-Rollin was the first witness. He had heard of a manifestation in favour of Poland on the 15th of May. He detailed his own proceedings on that day in company with M. Lamartine. The Government had received information from the police that Poland was only a pretext, and that the object was to overthrow the Government. He considered that the manifestation had done his best to protect the Assembly, but his orders had not been obeyed.

He read the dictated parts of Ledru-Rollin's evidence.

Raspail complained bitterly of the treatment he and his fellow-prisoners had been exposed to since their arrival at Bourges. Their sleep was interrupted during the night by visits from the police. All the subjects his health seriously.

The other prisoners made the same statement.

The President of the Court retired for half an hour, and on his return said, that, as the complaint was made to public, the explanation should be public too. He called on the director of the prison to explain. The director denied the charge. He said the inspection was made every two hours; but that every attention, consistent with safety, was shown to the prisoners, who were allowed to see their counsel and their friends without any guard being present.

M. Marrast, President of the National Assembly, was next examined; but his evidence was only a repetition of that of the previous witnesses. He had received cries at the Hôtel de Ville of "Vive Raspail!" "Vive Albert!" "Vive Louis Blanc!"

The next witness called was the celebrated Vidocq, whose presence excited much sensation in the court. His evidence, however, only referred to the prisoner Barbès.

The Court adjourned at six o'clock.

The proceedings on Tuesday presented no incident worth mentioning.

The only important witness examined was M. Récurt, formerly Minister of the Interior during the Executive Commission. He detailed the particulars of the visit of Sobrier and two of his companions to him on the 16th, asking him to send a telegraphic despatch to the provinces, to announce the dissolution of the Assembly, and the formation of a new Government, and proposing to him to retain office.

Three more partisan witnesses examined on Tuesday, making in all 140.

The Court adjourned at the usual hour.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

PRESENT STATE OF PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, 21st March, 1849.

THE physiognomy of Paris continues to remain à peu près the same as for the last two or three weeks, or is only very slightly varied by modifications of expression. In the more thoughtless classes still exists every attempt at gaiety and so-called pleasure. In the commercial world a faint revival of trade—that is to say, a species of wearied hope, which cannot exactly be called confidence, still struggling with apprehension for the future. Among the lower classes a slight stagnation of business, and a greater re-assumption from the declamations of utopian socialism and tyrannical red-republicanism in favour of the man at the head of the State, as a plank to which to cling in the ocean of misery into which the storm of revolution has plunged them. There are thus on the face of Paris a partial aspect of quiet—a fictitious calm, laid on as a temporary cosmetic: and, above all, in so far as it has powerfully contributed to the amusement of the day, that real spring sunshine once more, which has such an influence upon the outward appearance of the barometric people of Paris. There are chinks and wrinkles, however, in the above-mentioned coating of cosmetic, which are very visible to the eyes of those who take the trouble to examine politically, and who does not paint as now-days? Times have arisen, internally, from the stirring up of the dangerous question of the closing of the clubs in the Assembly internally, from the still more and more dangerous agitation of foreign affairs, which may possibly force the French Government into a position which it would willingly avoid. The former movement, which has thus well-kited the appearance of calm, has produced, not only in the Assembly, but in the world without it, confusion. The Republicans of all conditions are in the hurry of the nation's representatives the outrage and clamour have even exceeded what in that last week have been considered unsurpassable. The accusation of "the Serpent," as M. Proudhon since his appearance in that part in the "Propriété, c'est le Vol," is designated, namely, that the Governments was the cause of the bloody days of June, raised a storm on the first day, which could only be forgotten on the second day of the debate, when the "blanketeer" of the day, M. Pierre Leroux, with his wild hair thrown back upon his shoulders, with his fat, greasy face distorted with affected passion, and with the most unbearable affectations of a dancing dervish in the tribune, denounced the Assembly as the immoral and monarchical reconstructor of the political scaffold (he alluded to what the Red journals chose to call the "murder" of the political martyrs), for the execution of the assassins of General Bréa); and, after being twice in vain called "to order," was deprived of his right of speaking by an almost general vote of the Assembly. These wild distorted accusations, and such outrages upon the decencies of a legislative assembly, as the "insolent" bestowed by M. Félix Pyat upon the Minister of the Interior, and the hit thrown every second in the teeth of the Government by various members of the "Mountain"—all surely not prove recommendations to the re-election of those good gentlemen in the next ensuing active chambers. The first part of the amendment accepted by the Government, inflicting the Cloture, has passed, although by a small majority; and, although revolutionary Paris may discuss the issues of the measure with more or less of harmony, yet the great majority of the country will applaud and support the decision. This affair of the suppression of the clubs has been a most serious ground.

The last great event of the week, at all events the most notable, must be said to have been the second Presidential ball, given on Wednesday last, the 14th, at the Elysée National, more splendid even than the first. This second fête, however, has not met with such praises of unanimous approbation as the first one of the summer ones. It was far more crowded, and the above-mentioned "disdainful" turned up their nose at it as a "shed," a damning word in French fashionable phraseology. The great novelty, however, was the Cossack dancing on the first occasion. The representatives of exclusive fashion had accepted with as much empressement as before the invitations of a Republican President. The toilettes were as brilliant as before, and the ball-room was filled by most of the Ambassadresses of Spain, and still more splendid parure of Madame Demidoff—or Princess Mathilde, as she must be called, in Bonapartist nomenclature—did all their glittering honour, in company with many hundreds of Parisian rivals, to the fête. But certainly it wore a more mixed and genuine Republican aspect, and survey cannot, under the circumstances, be criticised on that account. The union was greater: the absence of letters and of the aristocratic rivals, and, although the crowd was such that, at times, fair ladies screeched at the danger which their dresses ran, and indignant gentlemen quarrelled at the over-thronged and close passes of the rooms, yet at the fête of a despotic President, the scene was one more striking and characteristic of its kind. The uniforms added a greater splendour to the show. The "Ecoles d'Schools" had received their invitations; and the écolier de St. Cyr or of the Ecole polytechnique was enabled to talk a Duchess "for the next quadrille," or offer his hand to a young Countess for "the aspuachin, polka." The Sovereignty of Paris had also its greater quenines of representatives. But the ultra-democratic journals still insisted upon their right to grumble forth their thunder. Not a sans culotte was requested to represent fraternity in a house; but even a Montagnard was selected to typify liberty, with ferocious mien: equality, under such circumstances, was, of course, out of the question. It would have been vain to have pointed out to them as types of Republicans de la vieille roche guests as Marrast or Pagnerre: these are considered traitors to the good "Red" cause; and did not Madame Pagnerre actually wear a coiffure à la Marie de Medicis, and thereby symbolise her aristocratic and reactionary tendencies? Marrast and spouse ever since they slept in the bed of Last Queen of tyrannic days in the Palace of the Luxembourg? Moreover, were not, in this reactionary exclusion, the types of the infamous and suspected monarchical moderates there—Thiers, and Dupin, and tutti quanti, and General Changarnier, of insurrection suppressive memory, although Cavaignac held back? And was not literature represented by Girardin and Jules Janin, and such writers as reactionary journals, when Proudhon and Co., who attack the President as an assassin, were not even asked? Such were the Spirit of ultra-democratic sarcasm on the hand, and the exclusion of "canaille" in the mouths of fas-lionable exclusives on the other, the Rep-blican President a fête, however, was brilliant and gay. The supper-room, built for the occasion in the garden of the Elysée, communed and bowered tent, afforded a splendid coup d'œil of glitter and profusion from the height of the carpeted garden steps.

If the Mi-carême, or Mid-Lent day, which was formerly regarded as a sort of last day of Carnival, was outwardly passed over unnoticed for the first time in Paris, other gaieties, public and private, in unwonted numbers, have marked the week, as though Paris were still on jours Gurnard. The ball of last Saturday evening for the education of orphans at Pet: Bourg, given at the Jardin d'Hiver, merits especial mention. Never, perhaps, was such a scene of fairy-like applomb collected on earth.

Some interest is still kept up by the three trials of the day that of Bourges, where revelations "show up" the dreary comedy of the ruin of the Provisional Government, spite of the efforts of Ledru-Rollin to throw all the blame upon royalist gold, of Flocon to excuse the prisoners, and of Lamartine to carry favour with all men by such famous expressions as that in which he called the attempt of May an "histoire à pouffer de rire!"—that of the self-styled Provisionary Government of Limoges, which affords revelations no less piquant, and that of Rouen, where one of M. Ledru-Rollin's pet commissaires of the number of one of his own agents—as most interesting and characteristic disclosures.

S.

FRANCE

The execution of Dax and Lahr, the two men reserved for capital punishment, for the murder of General de Bréa and Captain Mangin, to take place on Saturday morning, at seven o'clock, has spread consternation over the whole of Paris. They were preceded and followed by strong detachments of dragoons and lancers; and there was a considerable force of infantry round the place of execution. After the executioner had done his office, the interment, followed by the priests who had attended the men to the scaffold. The sentence of death pronounced upon Choppart, Nenry, and Vaprenaud, jun., has been commuted by the President of the Republic, with the advice of the Council of State, to imprisonment for life, with hard labour. The People has published a very violent article against the President of the Republic, for not having commuted the sentence of Dax and Lahr also. M. Proudhon, in his article, goes the length of saying that Louis Bonaparte an assassin, and declares that the whole responsibility of restoring the guillotine will rest on the President's head. The article concludes by calling on the workmen of Paris not to place any confidence in any such measure, whilst they have the power to prevent it.

The grand Parisian fancy business of last week was the debate on the bill for the suppression of the clubs. On Monday the whole sitting was occupied with the speeches of M. J. Favre against the measure, and of M. Louis Faucher in its favour.

On Tuesday the discussion was resumed when M. Pierre Leroux, in most violent language, defended the right of association, and opposed the bill. His language became so violent that he was called to order, when he accused the Government of erecting political scaffolds. This odious accusation, applied to the execution of the murderers of General Bréa, was the signal of cries to order from every side of the chamber, with the exception of the Mountain, who supported M. Leroux. When the noise had somewhat subsided, the President rose, and said it was his duty to call M. Pierre Leroux to order. M. Pierre Leroux replied that he deemed it an honour to have been twice called to order for the cause of the people. Shouts of "Down from the tribune!" "Prevent him from speaking!" now followed. The excitement in the National Assembly had reached its height. The President read the clause of the regulations which empowers him to consult the Chamber on the propriety of preventing a speaker from addressing the Assembly. This was voted by a large majority. M. Pierre Leroux then left the tribune, and the general discussion closed.

MM. Odilon Barrot, Sénard, Georges, and La Fayette addressed the Assembly for and against the measure. On division, there appeared:—

In favour of the abolition of the clubs	378
Against it	292
Majority	86

The decision of the National Assembly was given general satisfaction. The members of the Mountain, it is said, were concerned at the odium with which the fact of sedition and permanent conspiracy aimed at by the bill are regarded by the country at large, that they did not dare to vote openly in their favour. A division was at last only demanded the votes should be taken in secret. Had the voting been public, instead of being by the scrutin secret, the Government would, it is thought, instead of nineteen, have had a majority of two hundred.

On Wednesday the articles of the bill were voted seriatim, and then in their entirety, as carried by a majority of 404 to 300.

On the Petit decreed on Tuesday, at the Hôtel des Invalides, into the hands of Jerome Bonaparte some articles of value entrusted to him; viz. the sword worn by the Emperor at the battle of Austerlitz, his hat, and his cordon of the Legion of Honour, the funeral crown presented to him by the inhabitants of Cherbourg; the crown of gold worn by him at his coronation; the keys of the tomb where his ashes repose; the pall adorned with the emblems of the Empire, and which enveloped the coffin brought from St. Helena; and 52 standards taken at Austerlitz. Jerome Bonaparte distributed, in the name of the President of the Republic, eight crosses of honour to as many hundreds of all ranks

The Rev. Father Rootan, General of the Jesuits, has arrived in Paris, from Rome, on his way to Portugal, where he intends establishing the head-quarters of the order.

M. Salamanca, ex-Minister of Finance, in Spain, has arrived in Paris. He has obtained permission to pass some days in the capital, after which he was to proceed to Bordeaux. It is believed that he will obtain permission from the Government to reside permanently in Paris.

Letters from Marseilles state that orders had been received there and at Toulon to have the troops in readiness for embarkation.

The compos non of the corps destined for some point in Italy was as follows:—A brigade formed of the 20th and 33rd Regiments of the Line, under the command of General Mollier, a brigade formed of the 36th and 40th Regiments of the Line, under General Levaillant. A mounted battery of eight guns, and a company of Engineers are attached to each of the brigades. A company of Engineers had arrived at Sisteron with a battery of Artillery, stationed at Aix, was about to march to Marseilles. The order to depart was hourly expected on the 17th inst

The number of cases of cholera which have appeared from the 9th up to last Tuesday night are, Paris, are 46, 21 of which were fatal. The victims to the malady were persons debilitated by previous disease or pressed in the most abject poverty. The opinion amongst medical men is that it will continue in the same comparatively mild form it has appea ed in in London.

The Socialist chiefs are actively attempting to seduce the soldiers to their doctrines, and it is feared in some instances with success.

SPAIN.

According to accounts received this week from Madrid, Queen Christina has received a despatch from the ex-King of the French, urging her to use her influence to adjust the diplomatic quarrel with England, and giving his opinion that the constitutional thrones of her daughter would be in imminent peril if some arrangement did not take place, and the first step towards such an arrangement must be the dismissal of the Narvaez Ministry. Her Majesty read the letter to General Narvaez, who observed that he was aware of the danger, but what would become of the Moderado party if he turned on the reins of government? Christina made no answer. She is said, however, to be working secretly to turn down the "hombre necessario," as Narvaez is called by his creatures.

From Catalonia the news is unimportant. The war still drags on.

HOLLAND

DEATH OF THE KING.—The death of King William II. was formally announced at the Hague on the 17th. The Second Chamber of the States-General was immediately called together, and the King's Message of last May having been notified to the Members by the Ministry, the Prince of Orange was proclaimed King.

M. Luitenlevald, Minister for Foreign Affairs, left the Hague on Saturday for London, to announce the death of his father to the new Sovereign, who will assume the title of King William III.

During the afternoon of Saturday the troops composing the garrison of the Hague were mustered on the parade ground and took the usual oath of allegiance to King William III. The city remained profoundly tranquil, nor was any apprehension entertained that popular disorder would break out.

His Majesty expired at the Hague, on Saturday last, of inflammation of the lungs, having only completed his fifty-second year in December last.

The late King was educated in England, and had been, in every relation, intimately connected with this country. Having been driven from Holland, with the rest of the family, on the foundation of the Batavian Republic, he was placed under the charge of the late Archbishop of Canterbury, and received his education from that distinguished prelate. At the age of nineteen he was appointed, as Prince of Orange, Lieutenant-Colonel of the British Army, and served as extra Aide-de-Camp with the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsula, from 1811 to 1814. He was present at the sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajos, and the battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, and Toulouse, and commanded the Dutch troops in the campaign of 1815; and the first corps d'armée at the Waterloo, in which he was severely wounded, after having taken an active part in the preceding engagements. He acceded to the throne in 1840, on his father's abdication.

The King married, in 1816, the sister of the present Emperor of Russia. The present King of Holland—who had only left London on Friday week, to visit the Duke and Duchess of Cleveland, at Raby Castle—arrived at Fenton's Hotel on Monday evening, and left London for the Hague in the course of Tuesday.

ITALIAN STATES

PIEDMONT. The long-threatened resumption of hostilities between the Austrians and the forces of Charles Albert may be at length considered as a fait accompli. On the 12th inst. a major of the Sardinian Royal Engineers announced to Marshal Radetzsky the cessation of the armistice concluded on the 9th of August.

A manifesto has been addressed to all the States of Europe by the Sardinian Government, setting for th the wrongs of Piedmont and of Italy, and declaring there was no other course left than to appeal to the sword. On the 14th M. Rattazzi, Minister of the Interior, announced to the Chamber of Deputies the expiration of the armistice: "Our forbearance, and the friendly interference of the mediating Powers (the French), have hitherto proved unavailing. The attitude of Austria has shown that no honourable peace can be hoped for unless won by arms. By waiting longer we should have wasted our strength without any result. Our finances would be exhausted, our army, now so efficient and patriotic, would have felt its spirit broken had it been compelled to remain much longer under arms. You understand it, gentlemen, when a few days ago you manifested the wish of the nation. You caused the war-cry. The Government has heard it. It is well aware of the perils attending the struggle about to recommence, and of the evils which will be its sad and unavoidable consequence. But between these perils and the shame of an ignominious peace, which should not ensure Italian independence, the King's Government could not and ought not to hesitate. On the 12th, at noon, the cessation of the armistice was announced to Marshal Radetzsky by a despatch of the Cabinet, handed to him by a superior officer expressly sent to Milan."

The King is at present in Alexandria. Previous to his departure, his Majesty appointed the Prince de Carignan Lieutenant-General of the Kingdom, and addressed a proclamation to the National Guard, which was specially charged with the maintenance of order during his absence.

MM. Mamiani and Serra have left Turin for England, to treat for the loan; the Chamber of Deputies having adopted, by 105 votes to 14, the project of law authorising the Cabinet to conclude a loan of 60,000,000 of francs

On the 17th instant a decree of the Prince de Carignan was published, ordering a levy en masse of all the able-bodied citizens of all the Lombardo-Venetian provinces, from 18 to 40 years of age.

The commissariat for the approaching war is said to be thoroughly organised, so that there will be no want of supplies.

ROME. According to our latest intelligence from Rome, the Executive Committee had ordered the arrest of Cardinal de Angelis, Archbishop of Fermo, under whose auspices a counter-revolution was organising.

The Roman Ministry had been again changed. M. Bunsoni had been appointed Minister of Finance; M. Calandrelli, of War, and Mon. ccalo, of Public Works. It was said that the Government in garrison at Ferrara had refused to take the oath to the Roman Government

PRUSSIA.

Accounts from Berlin state that the 18th inst., the anniversary of the Revolution, had passed over without disturbance, owing, it was thought, to the extreme coldness of the weather and to the strong military precautions adopted.

AUSTRIA.

There is little news of interest this week from Vienna. Some of Count Latour's murderers have confessed their guilt. One of this party, against whom circumstantial evidence was very strong, was, in the last moments of his existence, a most determined Republican, and, in the face of a most [illegible] the Napoleon dynasty. He was executed on the 14th inst. [illegible] Count Latour. [illegible] The Cabinet of Vienna has [illegible] Austrian Government at Milan.

Count Radetzsky has published a letter to the Archbishop of Milan, in which he declares that he has been induced to enter into negotiations for peace with Piedmont by the wish of the Emperor, who is desirous of preventing the further effusion of blood.

Count Radetzsky has published a letter to the Archbishop of Milan, in which he declares that he has been induced to enter into negotiations for peace with Piedmont by the wish of the Emperor, who is desirous of preventing the further effusion of blood.

Royal letters patent, of the 9th March, will this week officially appear in one of which was signed and [illegible] publish [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] in the other only the dates and a table of contents of the above, with all the Landgesetze, or provincial laws, of Hungary. The text of the laws will appear in the language of the respective provinces, with a German translation annexed.

HUNGARY.

The war still rolls its tide of ruin slowly over the fair plains of Hungary Field Marshal Wind schgrätz will no longer take the field in person against the Hungarians, but remain at Buda. The acting commanders are Field Marshal Lieutenant Schlick and Field-Marshal Lieutenant Jellachich

General Bem, who commanded the Magyars hitherto, has been so severely wounded, that he is said to have resigned the command to a Frenchman.

UNITED STATES

Accounts from New York to the 7th inst. have been received this week by the Europa. The chief genre is of interest. On the 5th Genera Taylor was inaugurated as President at Washington on taking the following oath of office in the Senate :—"I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the constitution of the United States."

The President then delivered his inaugural address, in which, after renewing the various pledges made by him on former occasions, to follow in the footsteps of Washington in the administration of the Government, to exercise no proscription against political opponents who may chance to be holders of public offices, and to regard not merely local interests, but the general welfare of the Republic, he declared that the United States will preserve a strict neutrality in any national disputes or convulsions that now exist, or may hereafter arise, in Europe At the same time he proclaimed a deep sympathy with all struggles for the rights of the people, and the extension of the blessings of liberty

During the ceremony every portion of the Senate was crowded with both sexes, and the greatest enthusiasm was manifested in the reception given both in and out doors to the new President, whose popularity is "immense."

The composition of the new cabinet is as follows; but the respective nominations had not been confirmed by the Senate on the departure of the mail :—

John M. Clayton, of Delaware, Secretary of State
William M. Meredith, of Pennsylvania, Secretary of the Treasury.
Thomas H. Ewing, of Ohio, Secretary of the Home Department.
William B. Preston, of Virginia, Secretary of the Navy
Jacob Collamer, of Vermont, Postmaster-General.
George W. Crawford, of Georgia, Secretary of War.
Reverdy Johnson, of Maryland, Attorney-General.

The domestic affairs of the United States present no new feature. The movement towards California is observed, had ceased to be of a speculative character, and had assumed an aspect of bond fide business. Many vessels had left, more were leaving, and since the 31st ult. some 2000 additional emigrants had left the shores of the United States for San Francisco.

From California, however, no later advices had been received; and the contents of the Journals, touching the auriferous districts, are merely repetitions of old statements.

INDIA.

Advices have been received during the week in anticipation of the Overland Mail. The dates are from Calcutta to the 2d, and Bombay to the 3d of March, which intimate intelligence from the army of the Punjaub to the 3d, and from Lahore and Moolan to the 4th Feb

There is no fearure of any particular interest in the accounts thus brought. There has been no battle, nor any movement of importance, since the battle of Chillianwallah, in the army of the Punjaub, since that received by th last mail Lieutenant Herbert arrived at Lord Gough's camp on the 27th of January, and Lieutenant Bowie on the following day. The latter officer was the bearer of some prayers from Shere Singh, but the nature did not transpire, though it was understood Lord Gough would hear of nothing but "unconditional surrender." Those two officers, as well as the other prisoners in the hands of the Sikhs, seem to have received kind and considerate treatment. A redoubt has been thrown up in advance of the right face of the camp, and several guns have been mounted on this field-work. A number of the enemy's cavalry, on the look-out for our camels at grass, came in contact, on the 30th of January, with a party of Christie's Irregular Horse, under Lieutenant Chamberlain, who attacked and put them to flight, killing sixteen, and taking several prisoners. Lieut. Christie himself was wounded, as well as some of his men.

Shere Singh's army is about four miles distant from the Commander-in-Chief's camp. It was generally supposed in Lord Gough's camp, that nothing would happen in the way of offensive operations till the arrival of reinforcements from Moolan and Lahore.

The conduct of the 14th Dragoons has been very freely commented upon, and the local papers are filled with letters on the painful subject. Another part of the most searching inquiry will satisfy the public mind, to say nothing of the wish on the part of the gallant officers concerned to have all doubts cleared up as to the cause of the alleged disgraceful movement.

It is reported that the detachment of Affghans said to be in Shere Singh's camp is commanded by three Europeans, formerly serjeants in her Majesty's 44th Regiment, who remained in Cabul and became Mahometan

Major Lawrence has been allowed to join Mrs. Lawrence, and they are said to be treated with great kindness by Chuttur Singh. The surrender of Moolraj and his garrison has placed a considerable force at the disposal of Lord Gough, and no time was lost after the Dewan's surrender in making preparations for the onward march.

Additional details have been received from Moolan. The bodies of Mr. Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson (who were murdered on the first outbreak of the rebellion) were found near the place where they fell, and, after identification, were buried at the time by Affghan merchants, according to the rites of their country. The bodies had been exhumed, and re-interred with all the honours of war

A portion of the Bombay column moved on the 2d of February in progress to join Lord Gough's camp. This consists of her Majesty's 60th Rifles, the Queen's European Regiment (Fusiliers), the 3d and 19th Regiments of Native Infantry; Major Blood's troop of Horse Artillery, and 500 of the Scinde Horse. Moolraj accompanies the force as far as Ramnuggur, whence he will be sent to Lahore. Lieutenant Henry, of the 19th Regiment, and formerly aide-de-camp to Lord Falkland, has charge of the Dewan

On the 1st of February two squadrons of the 8th Lancers, two of the 14th Dragoons, a regiment of Light Cavalry, and four of Warner's guns, proceeded from the camp in the direction of Gosgerat, to bring on a convoy of some 2500 camel loads of provisions, and bringing with them the twelve Sikh guns, captured on the 13th of January, to be deposited at Ramnuggur. This detachment marched as far as Bugrowalla, where they intended to have bivouacked, having taken no tents with them; but at that place Colonel Byng, who was in command of the party, received a letter from Captain Boldbuth, who was in charge of the convoy of camels, calling for immediate support, as the convoy had only met a large force of cavalry for the purpose of in ercepting him. Col nel King immediately advanced and succeeded in bringing in the convoy in perfect safety, which furnished an abundant and timely supply of provisions.

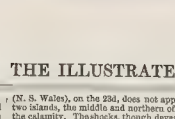
Chuttur Singh paid a visit to his son's camp soon after the action of the 13th; but he did not long remain there. The Delhi Gazette represents him as "incapable of by personal infirmity from taking an active part in the military operations," and says that, in consequence, he has "placed himself in charge of the civil duties connected with the rebellion." Mahomed Akram Khan, a son of Dost Mahomed, is also said to have been for a considerable time with the Sikh camp. There have also been rumours of Shere Singh having been joined by large bodies of Affghans; but although there is reason to bel eve that a considerable number of regular Cabul troops have made their appearance in the hill country beyond the Jhelum, no authentic information has been received of any portion of them having as yet crossed over to the left bank of that river The next fight with the Sikhs will effectually test the willingness of their Affghan friends to join and co-operate with them.

NEW ZEALAND.

EARTHQUAKES.—Advices and Singapore by intelligence of a formidable visitation having befallen the colony in October last, in the shape of an earthquake which lasted nine days, the shocks being felt at various places, from the 23rd to the 28th degrees of east longitude, and from the 39th to the 44th degree of south latitude. The heaviest and most continuous shocks were felt at Wellington, Queen Charlotte's Sound, and Cloudy Bay, nearly in the centre of the region over which they seemed to have exercised their influence. On stormy weather, with heavy gales from the south and east, which lasted the greater part of the nine days. The volcano of Tenaariro was not in activity, nor were any others known to be so. On the afternoon of Tuesday, the 16th, a terrific flame was seen to shoot up in the north-east at Wellington. At Nelson the atmosphere is said to have been surcharged with electricity. As Wednesday the first shock, which was a very severe one, was experienced about 10 A.M. on the morning of Monday, the 16th of October. Three or four slight quiverings were subsequently felt in the course of the day. Two slight shocks were felt at 4 and 7½ A.M. on Tuesday. At 9½ A.M. a slight shock was perceived; this was immedia ely followed by a second, also slight; and then came a third, anything more severe than the first, of Monday Wednesday passed over with two or three slight shocks. A few minutes before 5 A.M. on Thursday the 18th, a third severe shock occurred, which lasted almost a minute. On Friday, also, but not more than two slight shocks were felt at intervals. The slight shocks still continued on Saturday On Sunday shocks continued to take place at intervals of three or four hours. On Monday a few slight vibrations were felt. On Tuesday, 24th, a slight shock was experienced at 9 A.M., and at 10 A.M. and in the space of seven minutes and a half there were three vibrations. Shocks continued to be felt throughout the evening. On the west of Wellington, all the shocks felt up to the 23rd were of a more violent character than those of less violence. They had occurred at all the intervening places, becoming more violent as they approached Wellington. The schooner Sarah Ann felt the first shock of the earthquake, when off Taranaki, on the morning of the 16th; she also experienced the shocks of the 23rd, off Kapiti. At Nelson all the shocks appear to have been felt, but with less violence than at Wellington; the severest at Nelson was that of the 23rd. The earthquake did much damage in Queen Charlotte's Sound, and at Cloudy Bay, but we have no particulars. On the east of Wellington, the shocks were felt severely in the valley of the Wairarapa. The Clara, on her passage from Auckland to Wellington, experienced a shock when 60 miles from the shore; and a second when working in at the bar of Port Nicholson, on the 16th. The first shock (which came on during a calm), the 16th) was felt with great violence at Akaroa, and lasted longer four minutes. It was remarkable, it is said not to have been felt at Port Cooper, a few miles to the westward. The brig Sea, which arrived at Wellington from Auckland on the 23d, does not appear to have felt any of the shocks. The two Islands, the middle and northern of the New Zealand group, were visited by the calamity. The shocks, though devastating to house and other property, were fortunately not attended with much destruction of life Only one family "Barrack-Sergeant Lovel and his son and daughter, both children—are reported as sufferers. The children were killed, and the father badly wounded and bruised.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

MARTHA SOPHIA, COUNTESS DOWAGER OF MULGRAVE.



Rev. Augustus F. Phipps, Rector of Boxford, in Suffolk.

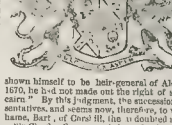
HER Ladyship, who died at 68, Eaton-place, on the 17th instant, was daughter of the late Christopher Thomas Maling Esq., of West Hennington, in Essex. Her marriage to Henry, first Earl of Mulgrave, took place 20th October, 1793, and its issue consisted of two sons and three daughters, the former being Constantine Henry, Marquis of Normanby; the Hon Lieutenant-Colonel C. B. Phipps, private secretary to Prince Albert; the Hon. Edmund Phipps, Recorder of Scarborough; and the Hon. and

SIR CHARLES DALRYMPLE FERGUSSON, BART., OF KILKERRAN, CO AYR.

THE decease of the gentleman occurred on the 18th instant. He was the eldest son of the late Sir James Fergusson, Bart., of Kilkerran, by Jean, his first wife, second daughter of Sir David Dalrymple, Bart., Lord Hailes; and grand-nephew of Sir Adam Fergusson, M.P. for Edinburgh, who preferred a claim, in 1796, to the honours of the noble House of Glencairn, which was denied by the Lords declaring, "that, although Sir Adam Fergusson had shown himself to be heir-general of Alexander, Earl of Glencairn, who died in 1670, he had not made out the right of such heir to the dignity of Earl of Glencairn." By this judgment, the succession to the title was confined to male representatives, and seems now, therefore, to vest in Sir Thomas Montgomery Cuninghame, Bart., of Corsehill, the undoubted male heir of the House of Glencairn

Sir Charles Fergusson succeeded his death by creation, in 1820, and married, 1st June, 1929, Helen, second daughter of the Right Hon. David Boyle, Lord Justice-General of Scotland, by whom he leaves a son and heir, JAMES, born 14th March, 1832, and several other children.

SIR JOHN SHELLEY-SIDNEY, BART., OF PENSHURST, KENT.



PATERNALLY, Sir John descended from the ancient Sussex family of Shelley, being eldest son of the first Sir Bysshe Shelley, Bart., of Castle Goring, by his second wife; and maternally, he was heir and representative of the baronial [illegible] Sidney, and [illegible] Walsh, of the Boddens and Penshurst, Lords of Leicester. In 1791 he assumed the additional name and arms of Sydney, and in 1818 was raised to the degree of Baronet. At the period of his decease Sir John had completed his 77th year

He married, 29th April, 1795, Henrietta, daughter of the late Sir Henry Blunden, Bart., of Wargeworth, and by her (who died 8th Feb., 1841) he leaves an only surviving child, Philip-Charles, LORD DE L'ISLE and DUDLEY, who married Lady Sophia Fitzclarence, and was raised to the peerage by the late King William, in the seat of his ancestor, Barnard, is chosen ground, as the birthplace of Sir Philip Sydney, the soldier, the scholar, the statesman, and the poet—the favourite of his Sovereign, and the idol of the people

THEOPHILUS THORNHAGH GURDON, ESQ., OF LETTON, CO. NORFOLK

THIS venerable and respected country gentleman, formerly Lieutenant-Colonel of the West Norfolk Militia, and High Sheriff of the county in 1824, died last week, in his 87th year He was one and heir of the late Brampton Gurdon Dillingham, Esq., of Letton and Grandisburgh, by Mary, his first wife, daughter of Philip Bedingfield, Esq., of Ditchingham, and grandson of Thornhagh Gurdon, Esq., of Letton, by Sarah, his wife, daughter and heiress of Theophilus Dillingham, Esq., of Swaton, in Bedfordshire.

The family of Gurdon, of Letton, is a branch of the old Suffolk House of Gurdon, of Assington, founded by Brampton Gurdon, Esq., M.P. for Sudbury, who was Colonel of a regiment of horse during the civil war, and sat as one of the court-martial on Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Lisle

Mr. Theophilus Thornhagh Gurdon married, 25th July, 1796, Anne, daughter of William Wellbeloved, Esq., of Blyth, Notts, and by her (who died 3rd June) had one daughter, Anne, widow of the late Henry Wodehouse, Esq., and mother of the present Lord of that name.

WILLIAM II., KING OF HOLLAND.

To the great grief of his people, the King of Holland expired, at Tilburg, at half-past two o'clock on the morning of the 17th inst.

His Majesty was born on the 6th of December, 1792, at a moment of deep national gloom. Just one month previously, the battle of Jemappe had been lost, and, with it, the integrity of the United Provinces. At the age of thirteen months the infant Prince was carried as a prisoner into his native country to pass in England the first period of his youth, and thus became almost an adopted son of our Royal family. Inheriting the martial character of his illustrious ancestors, the Prince of Orange, so soon as his years permitted, sought employment and renown on the battle field of Spain, where the English troops were then reaping imperishable laurels; and in this brilliant sphere of action he gained fame and distinction, taking part in the memorable conflicts at Ciudad Rodrigo, Badajos, Salamanca, Vittoria, the Pyrenees, and Nivelle, and closing his honourable military career at the glorious victory of Waterloo At this period his Royal Highness was looked up n as the worthiest and most becoming candidate for the Princess Charlotte, but it was not so ordered; and the heir of the House of Nassau yielded place, as well as a subsequent offer of a son and one daughter, to more conspicuous f rtune— Leopold, Prince of Saxe-Coburg, now sovereign of a considerable portion of the kingdom of the Netherlands. In 1840, his Highness's father King William I. resigned the reins of government into his subsequent hands, and the Monarch, whose death is now so universally deplored, reigned over the destinies of Holland

His Majesty married, February 21, 1816, Anne Paulowna, daughter of the late Emperor Paul of Russia, and has left one daughter, Sophia, wif. of Charles, Hereditary Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar Eisenach, and three sons, the eldest of whom ascends the throne as William III

The ancient house of Nassau, rendered illustrious in the sixteenth century by the patriotism and sagacity of William of Orange, the renowned asserter of his country's independence against the mighty power of Spain, became still more familiar to the English people by the accession of that Prince's great-grandson to the throne of England, as our William III The late King of Holland derived from the branch well known in history as that of Nassau Distat.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE, AND EAST LANCASHIRE.—Captain Laws and Mr. Hackin met at Salford station on Saturday morning, and came to an amicable arrangement of matters in dispute between the two companies. We therefore hope we shall not hear of a repetition of Monday week's affair.

RAILWAY RATING.—A large and respectable meeting of railway proprietors was held in the Town-hall, Manchester, on Monday last—Mr. Henry Houldsworth in the chair—when petitions to both Houses of the Legislature were unanimously adopted, praying for an alteration in the law relative to the arbitrary and unequal system of rating rai ways which at present exists.

EASTERN COUNTIES.—Mr. Waddington, M.P., has been appointed by the court chairman of the company, in the room of Mr. Hudson; and Mr. Samuel Anderson, the deputy-chairman, in lieu of Mr. Waddington.

Mr. Robert Savill has been appointed assistant-secretary to the London and North-Western Company. Mr. Savill, who has for a long period filled the office of transfer clerk to the establishment, joined the old London and Birmingham Company nearly on fifteen years since

A RAILWAY STATION TAKEN BY STORM.—The station ground of the Maryport Company was on saturday morning last the theatre of a scene as exciting to the inhabitants of the "merrie city" of Carlisle as it was destructive to the property of the Maryport Railway, at present leased by Mr. Hudson, the "Railway King." By the act of the Lancaster Company they were empowered to take the station ground of the Maryport Company at the amount assessed by a special jury, for the purposes of the joint or central station at Carlisle, provided that the two companies, together with the Caledonian Company, could not agree upon the conditions on which the Maryport Company were to enter the central station Being unable to agree upon these conditions, a special jury was summoned by the Mr Carrick, last October, at the Court-house, some weeks ago, and after a hearing of two days, it decided that the land and property upon which it stands be given up to the Lancaster Company, upon payment of £7147 4s. 3d. The Lancaster Company forthwith paid this sum into the Bank of England; but Mr. Hudson still objected to their taking possession, and did all in his power to prevent it. A fortnight since, Mr. Blenkinsopp, of the firm of Swift and Co., of Lancaster, solicitors to the Lancaster Company, applied for immediate possession, but was refused by Mr Heysham, a director of the Maryport Company, who did possession on behalf of that body. In consequence of this refusal, the Lancaster Company resolved to take forcible possession; and, accordingly, they communicated with the High Sheriff of the county upon the subject. The result was, that the Under-Sheriff, Mr. Harrison, of Penrith, accompanied by Mr. Worthington, the resident engineer of the Lancaster Company, and Mr. Blenkinsopp, proceeded to the Maryport station, at 10 A.M., which he entered, and, after a short conversation with the clerks, who were the only persons upon the premises at the time, he crossed the platform and went upon the line, and there gave formal possession to Mr. Blenkinsopp. That gentleman immediately waved his handkerchief, when a strong force of about a hundred men, armed with crowbars, pickaxes, shovels, &c., rushed from the goods-station of the Lancaster Company, to which they had been brought from all parts of the line, to the ground of the Maryport Company, and without further ceremony commenced operations by tearing up the rails. This was the work of a few minutes only, as the men were particularly expert. They next pulled down the sheds of the coal and lime depôts; and, lastly having allowed the clerks of the Maryport Company sufficient time to carry off their books, they quitted the station, which was accomplished only a short time after the commencement of the whole building. In these operations the men were assisted by a long string of horses. In the meantime, a man was posted near to where the Maryport line joins that of the Newcastle and Carlisle Company, and at about 300 yards' distance from the station of the former company, to inform the driver of the engine due at half-past 11 that he could not proceed further on the line. The driver, upon hearing this, immediately drove off to the Carlisle-end station of the Newcastle Railway, which is also leased by Mr. Hudson. Bills were subsequently posted throughout Carlisle, announcing that, as the Lancaster Company had taken forcible possession of the Maryport station, the trains for the west would, till further notice, start from the station of the Newcastle and Carlisle Company

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

THE ENGINE-WORKS AT CREWE

If an exemplification be needed of the magnitude of the arrangements necessary for the maintenance of an arterial railway—such as the London and North-Western line—it may be found at Crewe, the third communality in the kingdom, that—like Swindon, on the Great Western, and Wolverton on the London and Birmingham lines—owes its origin to the enterprise of the railway system. It has been established entirely from the necessity of fixing the Company's laboratories of their locomotive operations, and the dépôts of their mechanical power, where constant accumulations of labour have formed communities of handicraftsmen and mechanics. Crewe was an unmarked spot upon the map until the railway converted it into the most important station on the line, constituted it a school-house for engineers and mechanics, and laid out for a location of the population of the north new fields for honourable industry.

Of the present thriving condition of this vast railway to ship, we find a very striking picture in the paper by Sir Francis Head, in a late Number of the Quarterly Review; and which Mr Murray has very judiciously reprinted under the forbidding title of "Shorts and Folkery," in his Home and Colonial Library. The object of this paper is to detail the practical working of a railway, and, for this purpose, he made a short inspection of one of our largest lines. This he describes in his most felicitous vein—such as none but the Old Man of the Brunnens of Nassau could do; and not the least interesting is the review of the scene he witnessed at CREWE.

"The Company's workshops at Crewe consist of a Locomotive and of a Coach department. In the manufactories of the former are constructed as well as repaired the whole of the engines and tenders required for the Northern Division, namely, from Birmingham to Liverpool; Rugby to Stafford; Crewe to Holyhead; and from Crewe to Manchester, Liverpool, Mancester, and Warrington to Preston; Preston to Carlisle. This establishment also 'works,' as it is termed, the Lancaster and Carlisle and Chester and Holyhead Lines. The total number of hands at present (6th inst.) the distance, of course, increases with the completion of every new branch line. In this division there are 220 engines and tenders (each averaging in value nearly £2000), of which at least 160 are at work every day. The Southern Division of the line, the establishment has turned out a new engine and tender on every Monday morning since the 1st of January, 1846. The number of workmen employed in the above departments, is 1600, their wages averaging £2000 a fortnight.

"Without attempting to detail the various establishments, we will briefly describe a few of their most interesting features.

"Close to the entrance of the Locomotive department stands, as its praxum modele, the tall chimney of a steam-pump, which, besides supplying the engine that propels the machinery of the workshops, gives an abundance of water to the locomotives at the station, and also to the Crewe railway to which it connects, at present about 8000 inhabitants. This pump lifts about eighty or ninety thousand gallons of water per hour from a brook below into filtering-beds, whence it is again raised about forty feet into a large cistern, whence it at a second time filtered through charcoal for the supply of the town. On entering the first building of the department, the office of which is at the entrance on the left hand, the first object of attention is the great engine-stable, into in which the hot daily locomotives are conducted after their journeys to be cleaned, examined, repaired, or, if sound, to be greased and otherwise prepared for their departure—the last operation being to get up their steam, which is here effected by coal, instead of coke, in about two hours.

"After passing through a workshop containing thirty-four planing and slotting-machines in busy but almost silent operation, we entered a smith's shop, 200 feet square, with forty forges all at work. At several of the anvils there were three and sometimes four strikers, and the quantity of sparks that more or less were exploding from each—the number of sledge-hammers revolving in the air, with the clanging noise, bare throats and arms of the fine pale men who wielded them, formed altogether a scene well worthy of a few moments' contemplation. As the heavy work of the department is principally executed in this shop, in which iron is fabricated and then rather roughly divided into two service of the company, it might be conceived that the mode of labour in its anvils at work would altogether be rather noisy to connect. The grave itself, however, could scarcely be more morose than this workshop, in comparison with the one that adjoins it, in which the boilers of the locomotives are constructed. As for asking questions of, or receiving explanations from, the guide, who with motionless lips conducts the stranger through this chamber, such an effort would be utterly hopeless, for the deafening noise proceeding from the riveting of the bolts and plates of so many boilers is distracting, beyond description. Even the hammers of the workmen must be aware of the effect upon a stranger, and that on seeing us enter they therefore reduced their weight by a charivari sufficient to awaken the dead. As we hurried through the din, we could not, however, help pausing for a moment before a boiler of copper inside and iron outside, within which there sat crouched upon the bottom of it a workman, who, with a hammer-strap—an intelligent-looking workman, holding with both hands a hammer against a bolt, on the upper end of which, within a few inches of his ears, two lusty comrades on the outside were hammering with energizing strength and quickness. The noise was reverberating within this boiler, in addition to that which was resounding without, therefore together a dose which it is astonishing the tympanum of the human ear can receive uninjured at all events we could not help thinking that, if there should happen to exist on earth any man unpatient enough to complain of the occasional accumulation of a female tongue, it he will only go by rail to Crewe, and sit in that cellar for half an hour, he will most surely never again complain of the chirping of that 'cricket on his hearth'—the whispering curtain lectures of his dulce domum.

"The adjoining shop contains a brass and also an iron foundry, in which were at work seven brass-moulders and five iron-moulders. In the corner of this room we stood for a few moments, looking over the head and shoulders of a fine blue boy, who was practically examining the interior of the recently-melted of the mineral productions of nature—the lodestone. Among the mass brought into this foundry to be tested are a quantity of brass shavings and other sweepings, among which there is a small proportion of iron filings, &c. The little boy's occupation consisted in constantly stirring up the mass or mess before him with a magnet, which, as often as it came out dripping with resplendent particles of iron of various sizes, he swept clean, and then commenced his work until the investigator came out of the heap as clear of iron as it went in. Close by the side of the shop in which the models and patterns of the castings are constructed. From a spacious open yard covered with stacks of old scrap-iron, much of which was of the size of common tramway rails, a door opens into a large shop containing twelve cranes so very used for the construction of engine-wheels, which are forged on as well as of their axles by an ingenious machine of extraordinary power. Adjoining the shop yard we saw in operation Nasmyth's gigantic steam-hammer, on the summit of which there sat perched up a man who could regulate its blow from a very weighty few ton to a little tap sufficient only to drive a common-sized nail. As soon as the farmer-door on one side of the hammer was opened, a large lump of scrap-iron at a white heat was lifted, and then conducted by a crane on to the anvil beneath. At the same moment, from an opposite furnace, a long iron bar, heated only at the one extremity, was by a gentle blow of the hammer no sooner welded to the mass, than the head-smith, using it as a handle, turned and re-turned the lump on the anvil so as to enable the steam hammer to weld its contents into proper form. Of course there has been selected for this extremely heavy work the strongest man that could be obtained. He is of about the height and bulk of the celebrated Italian singer Signor Lablache, with apparently the strength of Hercules, or rather of Vulcan himself; and certainly nothing could be a finer display of muscular power than the various attitudes which this heavy man assumed, as, regardless of the sparks which flew at him, or of the white heat of the lump of iron he was forging, he turned it on one side and then on the other, until at a given signal a small smith in attendance placed a sort of heavy double-headed [illegible] which by a single blow of the steam hammer was at once severed from it, the smaller half being [illegible] Close to this [illegible] were [illegible] which, though not rough from the smiths forges we have described, never leave this place until they are ready to go under the engine for which they have been made.

THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY ENGINE-WORKS, AT CREWE.

"FITTING SHOP."

"After passing through a grinding-shop and a coppersmiths' shop, which we must leave without comment, we entered a most important and interesting workshop, 300 feet in length, by 60 feet in breadth, termed the 'fitting-shop,' because the work [illegible] states is all finally finished and fitted for its object. Besides 11 planing-machines, 36 shaping and slotting machines, and 20 turning-lathes, all worked by steam-power, we observed, running nearly the whole length of the building, five sets of tables, at which were busily employed in filing, rasping, hammering, &c., eight rows of 'vice-men,' only so called because they work at vices. The whole of the artificers in this room are of the best description, and the importance of their duties cannot perhaps be more forcibly [illegible] than by the simple fact that, besides all the requisite repairs of [illegible] engines, they were employed in finishing the innumerable details of 40 new ones in progress. Some were wholly engaged in converting bolts into screws; some in fitting nuts; some in constructing brass whistles; in short, in this division of labour almost every 'vice-man' was employed in finishing some limb, joint, or other component part of a locomotive engine destined to draw trains either of goods or passengers.

"After visiting a large store-room, in which all things appertaining to engines, sorted and piled in innumerable compartments, are guarded by a store-keeper, who registers in a book each item that he receives and delivers, we will now introduce our readers to the climax of the establishment, commonly called the fitting-shop.' Hitherto we have been occupied in following in tedious detail from the foundry to the forge, and from the anvil to the vice, the various items, such as plates, rivets, bolts, nuts, rings, stays, tubes, ferrules, steam-pipes, exhausting-pipes, chimney-pipes, safety-valves, life-guards, axle-boxes, pistons, cylinders, connecting-rods, splashers, leading and trailing-wheels, &c., amounting in number to 5416 pieces, of which a locomotive engine is composed. We have at last, however, reached that portion of the establishment in which all those joints, limbs, and boilers, which have been separately forged, shaped, and finished in different localities, are assembled together for the consummation of the especial object for which, with so much labour and at so great an expense, they have been prepared; indeed, nothing, we believe, can be more true than Mr. Robert Stephenson's well known maxim that 'A locomotive engine must be put together carefully as a watch!'

The fitting-shop at Crewe is a room 300 feet long by 100 feet broad, containing five sets of rails, upon three of which are erected the new engines and tenders the other two being usually occupied by those under [illegible] repair. The number of artificers we found employed was [illegible]. In this magnificent building we saw in progress of erection 20 passenger-engines, also 10 luggage-engines; and as the shop has (as we have before stated) turned out a locomotive engine and tender complete on every Monday morning for very nearly a year, and is continuing to supply them at the same rate, we had before us in review locomotive engines in almost every stage of progress; and when we reflected on the innumerable benefits, and even blessings, which resulted to mankind from their power, it was most pleasing to be enabled at one view to see—as it were in rehearsal behind the scenes—performers who were so shortly to appear upon the stage of life.

"FITTING SHOP."

"THE ERECTING SHOP."—GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY ENGINE-WORKS, AT CREWE.

"At the further end of the line of rails close to the north wall there appeared a long low tarnished mass of black iron-work, without superstructure or wheels, in which the form of an engine-bed in embryo could but very faintly be traced; a little nearer was a similar mass, in which the outline appeared, from some cause or other, to be more distinctly marked; nearer still the same outline appeared upon wheels: to the next there had been added a boiler and fire-box, without dome, steam escape, or funnel pipe; nearer still the locomotive engine in its naked state appeared, in point of form, complete; and workmen were here busily engaged in covering the boiler with a garment about half an inch thick of hair-felt, upon which others were affixing a covering of inch deal-plank, over which was to be tightly bound a tarpaulin, the whole to be secured by iron hoops. In the next case the dome of the engine was undergoing a similar toilette, excepting that, instead of a wooden upper garment, it was receiving one of copper. Lastly (it was on a Saturday that we chanced to visit the establishment)—there stood at the head of this list of recruits a splendid bran-new locomotive engine, completely finished, painted bright green—the varnish was scarcely dry—and in every respect perfectly ready to be delivered over on Monday morning to run its gigantic course. On other rails within the building were tenders in similar states of progress; and, as the eye rapidly glanced down these iron rails, the finished engine and tender immediately before it seemed gradually and almost imperceptibly to dissolve, in proportion to its distance, until nothing was left of each but an indistinct and almost unintelligible dreamy vision of black iron-work."

The accompanying Illustrations show two of "the Fitting Shops," and "the Erecting Shop."

The Coach Department constructs and maintains, for the traffic on 393 miles of rails, all the requisite passenger-carriages, luggage-vans, travelling post-offices and tenders, parcel-vans and parcel-carts, mill-trucks and break-waggons. The total number of carriages of all descriptions maintained at Crewe amounts to 670, of which about 100 at a time are usually in hospital. There are generally from 30 to 40 new carriages in progress; and the number of workmen employed is 350.

THE "ACADIA," STEAM-SHIP.

THE loss of this magnificent steam-ship, 1200 tons burthen, recently one of the North American Ocean Steam Navigation Company's mail steamers between Liverpool and Halifax, was announced last Saturday afternoon, in the Merchants'-room at Lloyd's; and from her having accomplished some of the quickest passages between the two countries on record, her wreck gave rise to considerable interest, and has induced us to engrave the ship

The Acadia, with another of the steamers composing the fleet of the North American Steam Navigation Company, the Britannia, also 1600 tons measurement, were purchased about two months since by the Central German Confederation, to be converted, it is stated, into war-steamers; and for that purpose had undergone at Liverpool, in the Coburg Docks, great improvements, as regards strengthening, in order to carry heavy guns, &c. The Acadia steamed from the Mersey on the morning of Friday, the 9th inst., fully equipped for the service in question, manned by a crew of 60 seamen, officers, &c., under the command of Captain Jackson; the Britannia following last Sunday. The destination of both steamers was Bremen; and from the time of the vessels leaving the Mersey, no tidings were heard of their progress until Saturday last, when the mail from Amsterdam, dated Wednesday, the 14th, announced the sad misfortune of the loss of the Acadia.

It appears that on the night of Sunday week the ship was steering along the coast of Holland, the weather being hazy, and the wind somewhat boisterous from the north. Towards midnight, from some unexplained cause, she struck with great force on a dangerous shoal, known as the outer bank of Terschelling. All efforts to get her off proved unavailing. She quickly settled over on her broadside. All hands, together with the representatives of the German Confederation who were on board, were saved; a portion of the crew reached Amsterdam by a Dutch vessel on the 14th; and the remainder, who had taken refuge on board another vessel, were expected there in a few days.

From the position of the ship, it was apprehended she would become a complete wreck; but the following satisfactory letter has since been received at Lloyd's

"Amsterdam, March 16.

"The Acadia steamer, from Liverpool for Bremen, which was on shore on the Outer Grounds, near Terschelling, on the 12th instant, was got off on the following day by the assistance of pilots, and taken into Terschelling, having sustained but slight damage, and will promptly be able to put to sea again."

THE "ACADIA," NORTH AMERICAN MAIL STEAMER.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—CIRQUE NATIONAL DE PARIS.—Mons Pontrelli the LAST FIVE NIGHTS.—First Appearance of M. REID DE BRIGG'S Sc MR DEBLAN begs respectfully to state that the present unprecedented Engagement forbids him to engage to commence in the Circus the Carnival Performances until FIVE EVENING (THURSDAY) next, when he will give, at Drury-Lane ... FIVE EVENING (THURSDAY) next, when he will give, at Drury-Lane ... by the 3rd Day Evening and the last two by Day Performances ... at 1 ... ... in London will take place on FRIDAY EVENING, March 30th.—The ... ... Pontrelli ... Mons Pontrelli ... Mons Pontrelli ... Mons

COURT AND HAUT TON.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO BUCKINGHAM PALACE

On Monday afternoon the Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, the Princess Alice, the Princess Helena, and the Princess Louisa, left Osborne, Isle of Wight, at seven minutes past two o'clock, attended by Lady Portman, Hon. Flora Macdonal, Mr. G. E. Anson, Major-General Bowles, Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey, and Colonel Bouverie. The royal party crossed the Solent in the Fairy to Gosport, travelled to town by a special train on the London and South-Western Railway, and was received from the Nine Elms station by a party of the 11th Dragoons. Her Majesty and the Prince arrived at Buckingham Palace at six o'clock, and were received by the Viscountess Jocelyn, the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, &c., the Lord Chamberlain, the Master of the Horse, the Groom of the Stole to the Prince, Lord Byron, &c. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by the Marquis of Abercorn and Colonel Bouverie, has used the Statistical Society of London with a visit the same evening, in St. James's-square. The Queen honoured the performance of the French Plays with her presence during the evening.

On Tuesday morning, the Queen, attended by the Honourable Miss Dawson, Maid of Honour, and Colonel the Honourable Charles Grey, Equerry in Waiting, visited her Majesty the Queen Dowager, at Marlborough House. His Royal Highness Prince Albert presided the same morning at the Council for the management of the Duchy of Cornwall, at the Duchy Office, Somerset House. His Royal Highness was attended by Mr. G. E. Anson and Colonel Bouverie. Her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians arrived at Buckingham Palace in the afternoon, on a visit to the Queen; her Majesty was attended by the Countess de Hulst, Lady in Waiting, and Major de Moerkerke. Prince Albert met her Majesty at the Vauxhall station.

HER MAJESTY'S LEVEE.—On Wednesday afternoon, the Queen held a levee in St. James's Palace. Her Majesty and Prince Albert arrived from Buckingham Palace, escorted by a party of Life Guards. The Royal suite consisted of the Mistress of the Robes; the Viscountess Jocelyn, Lady in Waiting; the Marquis of Abercorn, Groom of the Stole to the Prince; the Marquis of Ormonde, Lord in Waiting, &c. After the various presentations of Diplomatic and other persons of distinction, a petition to the Queen's most excellent Majesty, from a public meeting of the citizens of the city of Chester, praying that her Majesty would be graciously pleased to refer the constitutional advisers of the Crown the enactment of a general conservancy bill for the improvement of the open ports and tidal harbours of the kingdom, was presented to her Majesty at the levee, by Sir Edward Walker, Mayor of Chester, Mr. Robert Thyer, sheriff; and Mr. John Rosson, barrister-at-law, honorary secretary to a deputation from the city of Chester. Sir E. Walker and Messrs. Turner and Rosson were presented to the Queen by Lord Grosvenor, M.P. After the levee, her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, returned to Buckingham Palace, escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards.

Her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians, the Countess d'Hulst (in waiting on her Majesty), and Major de Moerkerke, dined with the Queen, at Buckingham Palace on Wednesday evening. The lofty wing had also the honour of receiving invitations.—His Excellency M. Van de Weyer and Madame Van de Weyer, the Duchess of Sutherland, Lord John Russell, and Viscount Jocelyn.

PRINCE ALBERT AT THE VAUXHALL STATION.—On Tuesday afternoon Prince Albert, attended by the Marquis of Abercorn, visited the station for the purpose of meeting the Queen of the Belgians, who had been on a visit to her illustrious parents, the ex-King and Queen of France, at Claremont, and who was to return to town by the 3.55 train from Esher. His Royal Highness, in the interval that elapsed, minutely inspected the station, with which he seemed much pleased, and was most affable in his inquiries as to the various buildings in the surrounding neighbourhood. The expected train arrived at its appointed time, 4.35, when the Prince assisted the Queen of the Belgians to alight, and escorted her Majesty to one of the Royal carriages, into which he himself got, and the carriage started off at a rapid rate over Vauxhall-bridge for Buckingham Palace. This is the first occasion of Royalty visiting this station.

The Duke of Cambridge is suffering from a very severe attack of gout at his residence at Kew.

COUNT KIELMANSEGGE.—The Hanoverian Minister is now gradually recovering from a severe and dangerous illness, which, at one period, occasioned much alarm. The brother of the noble Count has arrived from Germany, and is staying with his Excellency at the legation.

Lord J. Russell entertained a distinguished party at dinner on Saturday evening, at his mansion in Chesham-place.

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston entertained at dinner on Saturday evening, at their mansion in Carlton-gardens, the Danish Minister and the Countess Helda Reventlow, the Count Adelsvin and the Count de Trashow (envoys from the Danish Court on the Schleswic-Holstein question), the Sardinian Minister, &c. After the banquet the noble Viscountess opened her saloons for the second time this season for the reception of company.

LORD CHAMBERLAIN'S OFFICE.—Notice is hereby given, that, with a view to prevent injury to trade, the Queen has been graciously pleased to command that the Court mourning, announced to commence on the 22d inst., shall not apply to the occasion of the ensuing Drawingroom to be held on Thursday, the 29th inst.

ALMACK'S.—We are enabled to announce the recommencement of these fashionable réunions, the first ball for the present season having been definitively to take place on Thursday, the fifth proximo. The old house has been entirely redecorated, and the whole of the furniture, sofas, draperies, &c., being entirely new, the coup d'œil presented by the saloon is now most tastefully beautiful. The whole of the former ladies patronesses, including the Duchess of Norfolk, the Marchioness of Ely, the Marchioness of Londonderry, the Marchioness of Westminster, the Marchioness of Salisbury, the Countess of Jersey, Countess of Lichfield, and the Viscountess Palmerston, have consented to act again; and it is arranged that a majority of them shall attend each ball. We have much pleasure in adding, that a very brilliant season is anticipated.

DEATH OF THE DOWAGER QUEEN OF SARDINIA.—The ex-Royal Family of France, resident at Claremont, have received intelligence from Italy of the death of the Dowager Queen of Sardinia, only surviving sister of the amiable and pious consort of Louis Philippe. The deceased Queen expired on the 11th inst., at Savona. Maria Theresa Josepha Isabella Christina was the Ferdinand IV., King of the Two Sicilies, and married Charles Felix, late King of Sardinia, the 7th of April, 1807, but did not have any family by that Monarch, who died in 1831. Her Majesty had completed her 70th year.

THE MEMBER FOR LYNN.—Amongst the passengers by the Europa, on Tuesday last, from New York, was Lord Stanley's son, M.P. for Lynn-regis, who returns from America after having passed several months visiting the chief objects of interest on the western continent. The hon gentleman was elected during his absence, to the re.m.ns of the late Lord George Bentinck. On his landing he was complimented by several Liverpool gentlemen, in reference to that event.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD.

The Chancellor's Assessor, Chancellor's Court Proctors, Public Orators, &c., in the Convocation House. The [illegible] of the Vice-Chancellor and proctors alone, as before, rejected by 152 to 88.

4. The examinations to be gone through before the 12th term, carried by 155 to 48.

5. Relating to subjects of examination for the first examination, rejected by 107 to 91.

6. Four classes in both schools, rejected.

9. Directing that in the second examination there should be school of Literæ Humaniores and of Mathematics, and physical and natural science, carried by 170 to 25.

10. School of natural science, carried unanimously.

11. Modern history and cognate science, thrown out by a majority of 118 to 107.

12. Every person to be exam ned in the school of Literæ Humaniores and in one of the others, carried by 111 to 88.

13. Examiners to be appointed by a Board of Professors, in addition to the Vice-Chancellor and proctors, thrown out by 101 to 97.

14. Directs that every undergraduate must attend a course of public lectures by two professors, carried by a large majority.

15. Prescribing the subjects of examination. In the second examination in the school of Literæ Humaniores, was thrown out by a large majority—139 to 54; Mr. Marriott, of Oriel, in a Latin speech, protesting against allowing Divinity to have weight in the distribution of honours.

16. Prescribing the subjects of examination in the school of Natural Science, was carried by a majority of 149 to 40.

17. Prescribing the subjects of examination in mathematics and physics, carried by 155 to 33

18, 19, 20. Relating to modern history, was negatived by the Vice-Chancellor, in consequence of the other portion relating to it being heavily thrown out.

24, 25. Restricting honours in the second examination to those who have acquired some distinction in the first examination, was negatived by a large majority.

* Diminishing the salary of the examiners from £80 to £50, was negatived by a majority of 109 to 49.

The other votes, relating to certain changes in the responsions, were carried.

Mr. Caffin, of the laboratory department, in Woolwich Dockyard, has been superannuated on full pay, equivalent to £307 per annum; and Mr. Cheetham, principal storekeeper, is to be superannuated upon full pay, his remuneration being greater than Mr. Caffin's.

CARRIAGE FOR THE PACHA OF EGYPT.—An elegant little carriage has been built by Barker and Sons, of Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, for the Pacha of Egypt, to be used in his gardens and pleasure-grounds. It is tastefully lined up with figured satin lining, trimmed with rich silk lace. It is painted a bright ultramarine blue, relieved with white, and is altogether very unique, and does credit to the builders.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

EAST INDIA HOUSE.—On Saturday last a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Messrs. Sir Charles James Napier, G.C.B., was sworn in Commander-in-Chief of the Company's forces, and an Extraordinary Member of the Council of India.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—The General Court held on Thursday (last week), and adjourned to Tuesday last, met at eleven o'clock on that day, for the purpose of taking the determination by ballot, by printing or writing, of the question on the following resolution, proposed at the court, for a dividend, viz.:—"That a dividend be made of £5 15s per cent. interest and profits, for the half-year ending the 5th of April next, to whom any deficiency on account of the income-tax. Messrs. Gribble, Vine, Casenove, and Sullivan had been appointed scrutineers to take the votes. At four o'clock on Tuesday the ballot closed, and the scrutineers having retired for the purpose of examining the votes, returned into court in about ten minutes, and declared that the question was determined in the affirmative. The Governor then informed the proprietors that the dividend warrants would be paid on Saturday, the 7th of April next, and the court adjourned.

THE RATE IN AID.—MEETING OF IRISH MEMBERS.—A meeting of members of Parliament connected with the Irish represent tive body and having property in Ireland, was held in one of the committee-rooms of the House of Commons on Saturday afternoon, for the purpose of deciding on the course to be adopted with reference to the second reading of the Government rate in Aid Bill. The meeting was very numerously attended by the most influential of the Irish members present, and to Lord John Russell's scheme. Sir Lucius O'Brien occupied the chair. The majority of those present expressed their determination to oppose the second reading, or, if beaten on that, to vote for Mr. Reynolds's amendment, that all Government salaries amounting to £150 and upwards, and all incomes derivable from the public funds, should be liable to a tax, and that the 3 per cent. now paid on the £8,000,000 of absentee rent collected in Ireland, and a tax upon the interest on mortgages derived from Ireland, should be paid to the credit of the Poor-law Commissioners, for the support of Irish paupers.

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—On Wednesday evening a meeting of the committee of the above valuable charity was held at the Board-room, Portugal-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, when it appeared that during the past year the number of in-patients amounted to 1258, and the out-patients to 19,883, making a total, since the foundation of the charity, of 127,856. The most strenuous exertions are being made to render forthcoming festival (over which the Earl of Carlisle will preside) gratifying to the friends of the hospital, and beneficial to its funds. Already have almost powerful list of stewards, headed by the Duke of Buccleuch and Lord Cardigan, and including their leaders no farther the benevolent cause: and as the festival will not take place until the 12th of May, it is hoped that the stewards' list will be augmented by the names of many other noblemen and gentlemen who have already offered their sympathy for the objects of King's College Hospital. Some routine business having transpired, the meeting broke up.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—A large room is in course of construction a the Gardens in the Regent's-park, for the reception of living reptiles, which will, when complete, will eclipse everything of the kind in Europe.

RAGGED SCHOOLS.—One of these educational seminaries has been recently instituted in the parish of St. Pancras, and a spacious and extensive course of premises have been purchased in Munster-street, adjacent to Albany-street, for the site of a new chapel. The Rev. Mr. Dodsworth, for many years the incumbent of Trinity Church in the above parish, delivers the evening Lent lectures in the school-room every week.

NEW ASSURANCE OFFICES.—The following offices were founded last year:—The Ægis, British Empire (Fire), Counties, Dundee, Etonian, Engineers, Gresham, Indisputable, Independent, Mentor, Metropolitan Counties, National Mercantile Fire, Prudential, and Scottish Marine. In all, seven offices ceased to exist; in 1846, ten; in 1847, five; and last year, 13. From 1844 to 1846, no less than 145 companies were projected, but only 76 were founded. Out of 20 companies projected up to the close of the last year, nine have commenced business. At the present moment nearly a dozen new companies are in the course of projection.

IMPROVEMENTS IN HUNGERFORD MARKET.—The [illegible] improvements which have been for some time in progress in this market are now completed, and the handsome and commodious range of shops on each side appropriated for the sale of fish are now opened. The objection which has hitherto existed on the part of the public, of being obliged to descend by stair cases to the lower area of the market, is now entirely obviated.

GROSS CRUELTY.—On Saturday, information was received by the police that Mary Ann Holland, servant to Alexander Bel., Esq., of 58, Upper Norton-street, Portland-place, had been plundered of £48 and a quantity of wearing-apparel, under the following circumstances:—A few days back, while cleaning the front door, she was accosted by a female hawker of caps, who proffered to sell her fortune, and the result was several interviews on the subject. The victim, full of wealth and future greatness, which the artful woman said destiny placed before her, completely bewildered the poor girl, who was persuaded that, in order to work out the charm, some valuables must be buried at midnight in the garden. Accordingly, on Thursday night, she took out the sum, the savings of years of toil, in the impostor's hands, and it is almost needless to say she saw no more of her. She is described about 30, of dark complexion.

MELANCHOLY SUICIDE OF A CITY MERCHANT.—On Wednesday night, Mr. William Payne, Coroner of London, held an inquest at the Prince Albert Tavern, Cooper's-row, Tower-hill, upon the body of Nathan Stevens, aged 65, a partner in the firm of Dennes and Co., the extensive wine merchants, 14, Savage-gardens of the former ladies patronesses, including the Duchess of Norfolk, the Marchioness of Ely, the Marchioness of Londonderry, the Marchioness of Westminster, the Marchioness of Salisbury, the Countess of Jersey, Countess of Lichfield, and the Viscountess Palmerston, have consented to act again; and it is arranged that a majority of them shall attend each ball. We have much pleasure in adding, that a very brilliant season is anticipated.

DEATH OF THE DOWAGER QUEEN OF SARDINIA.—The ex-Royal Family of France, resident at Claremont, have received intelligence from Italy of the death of the Dowager Queen of Sardinia, only surviving sister of the amiable and pious consort of Louis Philippe. The deceased Queen expired on the 11th inst., at Savona. Maria Theresa Josepha Isabella Christina was the Ferdinand IV., King of the Two Sicilies, and married Charles Felix, late King of Sardinia, the 7th of April, 1807, but did not have any family by that Monarch, who died in 1831. Her Majesty had completed her 70th year.

THE MEMBER FOR LYNN.—Amongst the passengers by the Europa, on Tuesday last, from New York, was Lord Stanley's son, M.P. for Lynn-regis, who returns from America after having passed several months visiting the chief objects of interest on the western continent. The hon gentleman was elected during his absence, to the re.m.ns of the late Lord George Bentinck. On his landing he was complimented by several Liverpool gentlemen, in reference to that event.

BURGLARY AND ATTEMPTED MURDER AT CHELSEA.—On Tuesday a communication was made to the police commissioners of a burglary, followed by two attempts at murder, which took place between two and three o'clock on that morning, at No. 8, Manor-place, King's-road, Chelsea, the residence of Mr. Collings, a member of the English bar, and who holds a high legal appointment at the Mauritius. As the regular hour, the family, including three servants, retired to rest, when every part of the house appeared to be safe. Between two and three o'clock Mr. Collings was awoke by hearing a noise in his bed-room, when, after listening for a few seconds, he was satisfied there was one, if not two, persons in the room. Upon making this discovery he instantly jumped out of bed, and came in contact with some person, whom he at once grappled with. In another instant he was felled to the floor. Directly after Mr. Collings had left his bed, Mrs. Collings, who was awakened, also got out to ring the bell, but, before she could do so, she heard her husband groan and fall, when she rushed towards the spot, and was rendered senseless by a blow. Two consecutive falls and cries aroused the servants, who, upon entering the bed-room, found both Mr. and Mrs. Collings apparently dead, bleeding profusely from wounds in the head. An alarm was raised, when it was found that an egress had been made by the street door. On Wednesday, Inspector Field, of the detective force, went to examine the premises, and, from the results of the inquiries, no doubt remains that in the first instance a burglary had been effected, and from its being committed by one who was in the habit of keeping a large quantity of valuable property in his bed-room, the burglars at once made for that part of the house, and had possessed themselves of Mr. Collings's gold watch and some money, when they were disturbed by his awaking. From the nature of the wounds inflicted on Mr. Collings and his lady, the worst results are anticipated. In the course of Wednesday after noon an examination was gone through which, in all probability, will lead to the speedy apprehension of the parties.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—The Registrar-General's report for the week ending Saturday last gives the number of deaths registered in London for the week, 983; less by 86 than the average of the season. The return, therefore, indicates improvement in the public health, though the total number of deaths exceeds the previous week by 36. Mortality from all diseases continues to decline. The deaths registered from cholera were only 9, as follows:—St. George's, Hanover-square (Belgrave), F., 7; "bilious cholera" (24 days); health officials from both.—St. George's-in-the-East (St. John's). In the workhouse, a labourer, 63, "cholera;" in the workhouse, widow of a mariner, 65, "cholera."—Poplar (Poplar), M., 61, "Asiatic cholera" (30 hours).—St. Saviour (St. Saviour's), M., 54, "cholera" (24 hours).—St. George's-in-the-East (London-road), F., 50, "cholera" (15 hours).—Lambeth (Church, 2nd part) M., 12, "cholera bilosa" (10 days). Camberwell (Camberwell), M., 15, Queen-row, Grove-lane, a gentleman, 78, "dyspepsia, English cholera (3 days); rheumatism." Rotherhithe (Rotherhith), F., 49, "Asiatic cholera," (5 days).—The total number of births during the same week was 1521.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean height of the barometer was above 30 inches on every day except Tuesday, when it was 29·96 inches. It was highest on Sunday, namely 30·279 inches. The highest temperature observed was 60·7 deg. On 5 nights, the mean of the week was 45·9 deg. The greatest difference between the dew point temperature and the air temperature was on Sunday, and the mean on that day was 11 deg. The weather has been calm, but the wind generally in the north-west.

NEW COAL-PIT VENTILATOR.—Dr. Dunn, of Doncaster, maintains that the recent coal-pit explosions in different parts of the kingdom have occurred during the prevalence of high winds, and this is attributed to the wind forming an eddy in the up-cast as well as the down-cast shaft; the eddy in the down-cast shaft does not penetrate to the bottom of the mine, nor can the lighter and deleterious gases force through the eddy in the up-cast, and by these means accumulations of hydrogen gas and its compounds with sulphur and carbon take place, which require but the least ignition of fire in mine to cause an explosion. These grave inconveniences may be obviated by a considerable current of pure atmospheric air in every part of the mine, taking care that the up-cast shaft shall be so guarded that no eddy, however small the gale, can form in it. This can easily be done by placing a ventilator (of wood, zinc, tin, iron, or copper) in the form of a hood or cowl, and semi-circular, over the up-cast shaft; and, in order to ensure a free and rapid current of air through the mine, a revolving fan must be placed over the down-cast shaft, with its open side or mouth to the wind. This, also, can be made self-acting, where a down-cast shaft can be appropriated to it. By those means a current of air, as rapid as that on the earth's surface, can be made to circulate through every part of a mine. The ventilator has been tried with success at the Darley Main Colliery, and was witnessed and tested by the practical men of the pit. As Dr. Dunn gives his invention to the world, we feel pleasure in aiding its publicity.

LITERATURE.

DOD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE, &c.—Whittaker and Co., Ave Maria Lane.

There is no lack of works on this subject, but, in general, they are so voluminous, and the heterogeneous mass of matter compiled so defective in systematic arrangement, that many of them would require a key. Mr. Dod's work is not only free from these defects, but possesses many advantages peculiarly its own, in its portable size, and the comprehensiveness of the information conveyed in the most compact one form, and in a clear flowing style of composition. The author has been most happy in hitting the "golden mean" between sufficiency of unnecessary detail and a compilation in the style of a catalogue raisonné, and we can truly aver, that few more useful or more acceptable books of the kind have come under our ken.

In the preliminary pages will be found,—1st. Twenty four Illustrations, amongst these are the un ig.nia peculiar to Princes, Peers, Bishops, Baronets, Knights of the Garter, the Bath, St. Patrick, the Bath, St. Michael and St. George, the Guelphic Hanover, &c. 2nd Precedence. An essay in which the grounds for and claim to precedence are examined, and the gift, and the head of every office of dignity. To this are added copious tables of knighthood, of judicial and legal, of clerical, of university, of naval, of military, and of East Indian precedence, as well as an article on precedence amongst ladies.

In part 2 of the work, one of the most useful features is the article on the "Mode of Addressing Letters"—a series of statements, establishing the formal mode of addressing letters to every person of title, arranged in alphabetical order.

Altogether, Mr. Dod's "Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage" is a unique and perfect work of its class, and should be in the hands of all who desire an intimate and correct knowledge of the various attractive subjects on which it treats.

CZERNY'S GREAT SCHOOL OF PRACTICAL COMPOSITION, Op. 600.—R. Cocks and Co.

This important work, translated from the German by Mr. John Bishop, of Cheltenham, in three large folio volumes, has lately been completed. In this masterpiece on composition, the translator has suggested many new points to the advantage of the work, which have received the approval of M. Carl Czerny. It is unlike all other treatises on composition, which works are generally confined to instruction in thorough bass and counterpoint, with which arts the student is there pre-supposed to be acquainted. But even with the best grounded knowledge of harmony and pure composition, the pupil is still ignorant of the forms which the different pieces must assume, in order that a so-called waltz may be indeed a waltz; a symphony, a symphony; a sonata, a sonata; and so on. After a suitable introduction, the author commences by teaching the form and construction of short and easy scenes of only two strains. Part II. embraces a copious explanation of instrumental compositions without the pianoforte, from the Quartett to the Grand Symphony. Part III. is exclusively devoted to vocal compositions. Part IV. contains short and easy exercises, for the nature, scale, and capabilities of the different orchestral instruments.

THE BOTANIC GARDEN AND FRUITERY. By I. MAUND, F.L.S. No. 29. Groombridge.

This popular work contains a coloured plate of four flowers; and another of a pear-shaped apple, with descriptive letterpress, and portions of the Account, and Professor Henslow's Dictionary. The work is interesting, as well as scientifically useful

THE MEDICAL PORTRAIT GALLERY

The publication of a series of Portraits has lately been commenced, under the able superintendance of Mr. T. M. Stone, of the Royal College of Surgeons. In the series is an excellent likeness of S. Hammick, Esq., Senior Surgeon of Charing-cross Hospital. It is cleverly drawn on stone by Maguire, and nicely printed by Hanhart. The other Portraits in the series are Professors Ferguson, Todd, Baird, Forbes (of King's College); J. F. South (of St. Thomas's Hospital); and Dr. John Forbes.

COUNTRY NEWS.

RETIREMENT FROM PARLIAMENT OF SIR WILLIAM HEATHCOTE.—Sir William Heathcote has addressed the following letter to his constituents, the electors of North Hampshire:—"Gentlemen, Having served for many years as your representative in the House of Commons, I am warned by impaired health, that, to devote to the duties of that service the time and toil by which it has hitherto been my pride to endeavour, to the best of my power, to justify your choice, is now beyond my strength; and I beg permission to re-transmit into your hands the trust with which you have honoured me. Allow me, in taking leave of you, to express with warmth and sincerity the deep and grateful sense which I retain of the confidence which has been reposed in me, and, permit me to add, of the unvaried kindness and courtesy by which, without reference to political differences, my constituents of all ranks and shades of opinion have been pleased to encourage in me the gratifying hope that I have enjoyed their personal good-will. I have the honour to be, &c. WILLIAM HEATHCOTE. Hartley Row, March 16, 1849." Mr. Campion moved, in the House of Commons, on Monday night, for a new writ for North Hampshire, in the room of the hon. Baronet, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. Sir William has sat for Hampshire upwards of 20 years, and is a Conservative.

NORTH HANTS ELECTION.—On Wednesday, the High Sheriff of Hants received the writ, calling upon him to appoint a day on which to elect a knight of the shire for the county in the room of Sir William Heathcote, resigned, when he ordered that the nomination should take place on Saturday, the 31st inst., at 10 o'clock precisely, at the Castle, Winchester, and the election on the following day, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 4th and 5th of April next. Melville Portal, Esq. (Conservative), has declared himself as a candidate for the representation of this division of the county.

INSTALLATION OF MR. MACAULAY.—The installation of Mr. Macaulay as Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow took place on Wednesday in the common hall of the College. Mr. Macaulay's friend, Lord Jeffrey, was supported on either side by Principal M'Farlane and Professor Ramsay. The customary formalities were gone through, Mr. Macaulay addressed the assembled students in an eloquent speech, returning thanks for the honour, the constituted, and, on his part, unanticipated honour of his election.

THE SHILLING DUTY.—About £10,000 has been paid in the port of Liverpool upon farm gr ain corn and bread stuffs, entered for consumption at the nominal duty of 1s. per quarter.

MR. STONE IN THE DEBTORS' WARD.—The Plymouth Journal says:—We understand Mr. Stone holds quite a levee in the debtors' ward at St. Thomas's, Exeter. On Tuesday he was visited among others by Sir C. Hardy, J. Darby, Esq., Totnes; D. Derry, Esq., Plymouth; E. S. Cood, Esq., Plymouth; and on the previous day, amongst others, by Lord W. H. Bidder."

MANCHESTER BOROUGH CORONER.—The recent resignation of Mr. James Chapman, who, since Manchester became a corporate town, filled the office of borough coroner, drew forth upwards of 50 candidates in the field. The new coroner has been elected Mr. Herford, deputy town clerk, to the value of £[illegible] the emoluments arising from the coronership are said to be about £450 per annum.

THE OLDEN TIMES REJOICINGS.—COACH TRAVELLING.—A coach was last week again put on the road from Gloucester to Cheltenham, to run three times a week, in consequence of recent alterations in the railway traffic. Cirencester and Cheltenham have been placed at such an immeasurable distance from each other, as regards space, time, and money, that under such a system of travel each communication cannot fail of being both attractive and popular, more especially as the spring and summer seasons advance.

INCREASE ON THE COAL EXPORTS.—The official tables furnish evidence that the declared value of the exports of coals during the year 1848 amounted to £1,066,356, being an increase of upwards of 13 per cent. upon the exports of 1847. For the information of our readers we give the following statement of the declared values of coal exports for a number of years past:—1834, £720,746; 1835, £744,895; 1836, £892,861; 1837, £831,855; 1838, £865,890; 1839, £[illegible] 1840, £876,949; 1841, £871,797; 1842, £734,000; 1843, £[illegible] 1844, £874,056; 1845, £919,516; 1846, £971,174; 1847, £968,852; 1848, £1,066,356. The ad valorem duty of 10s. per cent. on the export of coals was repealed in 1844, when the duty of 5s. per ton by British and re-imported vessels, and 4s. per ton by foreign vessels, was abrogated in each. The beneficial effects of these wise measures of coal-duty abolition are made apparent by the above figures, that we refrain from even a word of comment.

BRITISH INSTITUTION.

On your left, as you ascend the staircase of the British Institution, is a very clever picture, by Mr. J. Gilbert (No. 161), "The Murder of Thomas à Becket." This has long been a favourite subject with the English painters; the greatness of the event, the time, costume, and place all uniting to make it a great spectacle for the world. Nor have we seen it (as often as it has been painted) better treated than by Mr. Gilbert. Northcote would have it more animated; Opie, more terrible and Caravaggio-like; and Mr. Maclise more picturesque and perhaps more baroque: but Mr. Gilbert has contrived very successfully, as we think, to bring back the scene much as it must have happened, without giving play to the unnecessary resources of his art. Few of our readers need be told that the Archbishop Thomas à Becket was murdered in his own cathedral, and that the steps before the altar where he fell, and the whole surrounding architecture of the scene, remain much as they were when the murder took place. The bold Norman architecture of the transept has often been painted without the terrible scene of Becket's death: and a very fine picture it presents, with nothing but the grandeur of its style, and the varied hues of age on its rich recesses, and the bold carvings of its arcades.

On the left of Mr. Gilbert's lunette-shaped composition is a very different picture by Mr. John Phillip, entitled "Man from first to last requires Assistance." Mr. Phillip has endeavoured to embody a pleasing passage in Wordsworth. —

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION EXHIBITION.

"THE MURDER OF THOMAS A BECKET."—PAINTED BY J. GILBERT.

Here the child doth put
His budding courage to the proof; and here
Declining manhood learns to note the sly
And sure encroachments of infirmity—
Thinking how fast time runs, life's end how near.

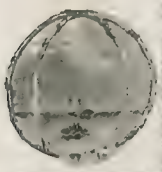
The scene is the exterior of a cottage door, covered with honeysuckle; and the personages in the picture are an old, enfeebled man, watching with interest a youthful mother and her younger sisters (his own grandchildren, perhaps), who are busily engaged in inducing the great-grandchild of the old man to run unassisted. The old man himself is very tottery, quite as feeble as the child.

Men are but children of a larger growth.

And the artist has managed to portray an inward consciousness on the mind of the old man that the great-grandfather and the great-grandchild are much in the same position. The incident of the old cat watching the first movements of a kitten is skilfully introduced, and shows that the artist has been observant of every circumstance likely to assist his composition. We are glad to see that Mr. Phillip's picture is marked as "sold," for it is very finely painted. Mr. Gilbert's picture deserves to be the same, but when we appreciate the beauty of historical composition, and the high degree of interest the leading of a picture, particularly of a female, as Mr. Phillip's is addressed, to the prepared sympathies of masses of people.

"MAN FROM FIRST TO LAST REQUIRES ASSISTANCE."—PAINTED BY JOHN PHILLIP.

DINNER TO SIR CHARLES JAMES NAPIER.



...ning last the Court of Di... grand banquet at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, in honour of Sir ...intment, which ...the Com... ...diplomatic ...tment was en... In the centre of ...displayed a mag... nificent group in bright and frosted silver, ...senting a tournament scene, the ...steeds being mounted ...ness. The other tables were furnished with a profusion of magnifice... ...andelabra, goblets, and ornaments, ...nately worked in gold; and the ... ...of them carved ... ... uniforms and glitt... contrast to the mo... richly dressed ladies in the gallery enhanced the general effect of the scene.

...nd of the Coldstream Guards was in attendance, and played an appro... ...selection of music during the evening.

The Duke of Wellington, who was attired in the uniform of a Field Marshal, Sir C. Napier, and Viscount Hardinge, were enthusiastically cheered on their ...ll...

Lieutenant-General Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., Chairman of the Board of Directors, presided.

Sir Charles Napier, in responding to the toast of his health, said,—My lords and gentlemen, I rise to thank you for the honour you have ...me in drinking my health this night, and also to thank the chairman for the compliments which he has been so kind as to pay me. I go to India at the command of her Majesty, by the recommendation of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, and I believe I go also with the approbation of my countrymen. (Much cheering.) My lords and gentlemen, I might well have been excused had I declined, under the pretence that I have not ability to sustain such a command in the trying circumstances of the present hour. Two con... ...my declining this grand and honourable command. The fi... ...vice and assistance of the greatest soldier in the worl... ...ndence in the support and cordial co-operation which I shall receive from her Majesty's Ministers and the hon. Court of Directors. ... ...

Under these circumstances, it is not surprising that those whose duty it is to advise the Sovereign, and those who are entrusted by law with the administration of the British constitution in India, should have selected my hon. and gallant friend to be Commander-in-Chief in India on this occasion, when it may be expected that, as the period of service of the noble Lord who now commands the army in India will soon expire, he will be desirous of returning back to his native country, and therefore it is desirable that an officer of such distinguished service and ability as my gallant friend should be on the spot to take the command of the army. It is well known that I do not consider the existing period as one of extraordinary emergency (Loud cheers)—seeing that the great object of the war now existing has been attained. A great fortress, which it was absolutely necessary to obtain in order to the maintenance of peace, has fallen into our hands, after a long siege, without loss of men, by the unqualified surrender of the enemy, who was in possession of it. A battle has since been fought, where it is true that great losses have been sustained, and my Lords and gentlemen, I must say, that if we are to fight great battles, and if great risks are to be incurred, we must expect to bear losses in the attainment of great actions. If such actions should be fought and such victories gained without loss, it would be considered that little honour would be acquired in gaining such victories. (Cheers.) But I do consider it of the utmost importance that such a man as my honourable and gallant friend should be at the head of the army. Though I do not look upon the circumstances of the country at this moment to be such that they should be considered critical (Cheers) I am delighted that my honourable and gallant friend does to take the command there. I have done every thing in my power to attain that object, both with my honourable and gallant friend and elsewhere, and I am no doubt, if my noble friend, the Marquis of Anglesea, had thought proper to consult himself and feel any satisfaction in this country by some of the most splendid successes of which it has ever received accounts. (Loud cheering.)

Amongst the company present were, the Duke of Norfolk, the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Marquis of Sligo, the Earl of Clare, Lord Campbell, Sir George Grey, Sir T. Baring, Sir J. Hobhouse, Sir James Graham, the Right Hon Henry Labouchere, the Right Hon. Fox Maule, the Right Hon. Lalor Shell, Sir John Romilly, and several civil and military officers of high rank.

In the course of the evening the Chairman read the following letter from Lord J. Russell:—

"Downing-street, March 14, 1849.

"Dear Sir,—It is with much regret that I decline the invitation of the Directors of the East India Company to meet Lord Gough, Sir Charles Napier, and Sir Charles Napier, and my respect for the Court of Directors, who administer with so much ability the vast territory confided to their care.

"I am, &c.,

"J. RUSSELL."

The incident of the banquet represented in the Engraving is just the moment when the entire company, rising and, amidst a perfect roar of applause, drank the health of General Sir Charles Napier. In obedience to the signals of the toast-master, cheer after cheer was given, until the room resounded with the shouts of its assembly. The ladies then rose, and their handkerchiefs from the galleries, while the Duke of Wellington bowed continually to the gallant officer who was said of in his side. Sir Charles sat apparently unconcerned at the attention paid to him: he merely seemed the honour conferred on him by the Duke, and then bowed to one or two other distinguished personages who had drunk the toast, with a modest grateful feeling. The cheering had hardly subsided before Sir Charles rose from his seat, and, in a few rapid sentences, delivered in a loud tone of voice, returned thanks for the honour done to him.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR CHARLES J. NAPIER, G.C.B.—The gallant Commander-in-Chief for India takes his departure for India this day (Saturday). He proceeds out Marseilles, accompanied by General George Napier, Captain Pitt Kennedy, his extra a de-de camp and military secretary, and the members of his suite. Lady Napier does not accompany the gallant General to the scene of his future labours

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF IN INDIA.—Majors Macmurdo and William Napier, Sir Guy Campbell and Captain Byng, have been appointed Aides-de-Camp to his Excellency Sir Charles James Napier, G.C.B. Colonel George Napier, eldest son to Sir George, will accompany his uncle as an extra A.de-de-Camp, while the office of Military Secretary will be filled by that able and distinguished officer of the Royal Engineers, Captain Pitt Kennedy.

STAFF.—Captain Fellows, late of the 53rd Regiment, has been appointed Staff Officer of Pensioners at Truro, R.S., vacant by the decease of Quartermaster Macdonald. Lieutenant-Colonel Hope is to act as Staff Officer of Pensioners at Edinburgh, during the absence of Captain Tulloch in North America.

INCREASE TO THE ARMY.—The following regiments have received orders to complete their rank and file to 1000 each, viz.:—26th, Cameronians, 15th, 30th, 41st, 47th, 49th, and 69th, and to hold themselves in readiness to embark for foreign service.

BOUNTIES TO SOLDIERS.—To complete the regiments in India, as well as those about to proceed there, as quick as possible, the Government has sanctioned a bounty of one guinea each man who shall volunteer from other regiments, to enable him to defray the expense of altering his clothing and appointments

COMMISSIONS WITHOUT PURCHASE.—A return just published of the number of non-commissioned officers, and of pupils educated at the Royal Military College, and other persons, who have obtained commissions, without purchase, in eighteen years—viz. from 1830 to 1847, both inclusive, in Her Majesty's army at home and abroad, gives the following as the total results:—Non-commissioned officers, 45; gentlemen cadets, from the Royal Military College, 473; private gentlemen, 1265: total of the persons who have received commissions without purchase during the eighteen years, 2185. The promotion amongst the non-commissioned officers during the year of this period was as follows:—In 1830 there were promoted to commissions, 11; in 1831, 11; in 1832, 12; in 1833, 8; in 1834, 18; in 1835, 18; in 1836, 16; in 1837, 34; in 1838, 36; in 1839, 21, in 1840, 25; in 1841, 46; in 1842, 47; in 1843, 17; in 1844, 33; in 1845, 17; in 1846, 36; in 1847, 41.

A NEW MINIE BALL.—On Monday and Tuesday experiments were carried on at the Butts, in the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, to test the merits of a musket-ball, submitted to the select committee by Mr. Minesinger, an American by birth, but of Dutch origin. The ball is cast with a four-grooved tail attached to it, in length about three-fourths the diameter of the spherical portion; the ball resembles the first screw propellers introduced with four leaves, but with a slight obliquity instead of the archimedean screw form. Mr. Minesinger fired his balls, 23 to the pound weight, from a long-barrelled gun, the length being 5 feet 7 inches; and Colonel Dundas, C.B., from a common musket, the barrel of which was 3 feet 3 inches long, both guns having percussion locks. The firing commenced at 100 yards, but, after a few rounds by each, the distance was expanded to 200 yards, when excellent practice was made, the target being struck every time, with two or three exceptions The advantage to the ball gives it singular advantages to the half-inspected form ffich, and probably increased the range; and shot d it, on further trial, be approved of, every common musket by its adoption would possess the projective power and excellent direction at present only attained with any degree of certainty by grooved rifles. It is intended to have a number of 32-pounder solid shot and shells cast on the same principle for trial in the Marshes.

IRELAND.

DEPARTURE OF THE LORD-LIEUTENANT.—His Excellency the Earl of Clarendon left Kingstown Harbour on Wednesday morning at nine o'clock, in the Banshee steamer for Holyhead. The Prince of Wales, the same day were in Lords Justices, to act as Chief Governors of Ireland during his Excellency's absence in England.

SAILORS' HOME, DUBLIN.—Captain W. H. Hall, of her Majesty's steamer Dragon, now on the coast of Ireland, having been lately awarded some salvage money from the Admiralty Court there, for assisting, at great risk and peril, a Spanish vessel in distress, has very generously given £200 of this money to open a subscription for the endowment of a Sailors' Home at the port of Dublin. Among the benefactors to so truly humane and national a work, we find recorded the name of Lord Lieutenant, Liberal, and generous friends of seamen, Admiral Dudley Oliver and Sir Charles Forbes, Bart., of London; the Right Hon Sidney Herbert, M.P.; Captains James, Coote, Smith, and Rawdon Maclean, of the Navy; and Henry Corbett, Esq., Q.C. Henry Hall, LL.D., Esq., and Dublin. The subscription already amounts to £500, and is fast progressing under the direction of a provisional committee, of which the warm-hearted Admiral Oliver has been elected president, and Captain Hall, F.R.S., of her Majesty's ship Dragon, honorary secretary

THE COAST GUARD.—The Board of Customs having recommended a reduction of the Coast Guard on the Rosses, Wexford, the duty of boat pulling and rummaging vessels arriving at the port of Wexford will be performed by tide waiters and boatmen on the ordinary staff of the Customs This requires some additional hands to be presently attached to the Wexford establishment. It appears, however, that the business of the port of Londonderry will admit of the reduction of the number of officers there; and, with a view of carrying into effect that system of economy which is now most rigidly enforced in all the revenue departments, the redundant officers now at Londonderry have been ordered to remove to Wexford, to carry on the duty at the Rosslare station.

THE CLEARANCE SYSTEM.—The Cork Examiner gives an account of the eviction of nine families at Clonpriest, near Youghal. The sheriff, with a body of police and military, attended. The Tipperary Vindicator contains accounts of clearances near Moneygall and Dundrum.

THE LATE INSURRECTION.—At Clonmel, on Monday, William Kelly, John Shea, and Thomas Burke were convicted of attacking the police barrack at Ballingarry. Judge Jackson sentenced them to transportation for 10 years. The learned Judge then passed sentence of death on William Quinlan, for the murder of John Walsh at Banagher. The 9th of April was named for his execution.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Earl GREY stated, in reply to a question from Lord Stanley, that he had received a memorial from the Cape of Good Hope, complaining of the transportation of convicts to that colony, and praying for the discontinuance of the system. He would have no objection to produce all the papers on this subject

On the motion of the Earl of CARLISLE, the Out-door Paupers Bill was read a second time

The Overseers (Cities and Boroughs) Bill was read a third time and passed

The Earl of EGLINTON moved for returns relative to the refugee Poles which led to a short conversation The returns were agreed to in a modified form. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

QUESTIONS.

Mr HAWES stated, in reply to a que tion from Mr Mackenzie, that there was no foundation for the report in the Morning Chronicle, that a bill had been introduced into the Colonial Legislature of Canada to indemnity certain persons convicted of rebellion in 1847 8, and pardoned by her Majesty, for the losses they had sustained in consequence of their rebellion.

Lord DUNCAN gave notice of a motion for the repeal of the window tax.

To a question from Mr. Anstey, the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said that inquiries were going on with respect to the growth of chicory in this country, and to its use as a mixture with coffee; and that it might be necessary to subject how-grown chicory to an excise duty; but, until the inquiries should be terminated, he could come to no decision on the subject. The right hon gentleman added, that he had from the best authority that colony greatly improved coffee; and that he did not attribute the diminution of revenue in coffee altogether to the use of home-grown chicory, but to the greater quantity of colonial coffee now imported at the lower duty, and to the lower quantity of foreign coffee imported at the higher duty

In reply to Mr. Hume, Lord J RUSSELL stated that he did not think it would be proper to make any material reduction in the Post-Office Bill this year

To a question from Mr EWART, Mr. F. MAULE stated that the Commander-in-Chief had determined to institute an examination, as a test of education, for officers, previous to their obtaining commissions in the army, such examination, of a professional character, on the promotion from the rank of ensign to that of lieutenant; and a third and final examination on matters of military skill for subalterns before they should obtain their companies The right hon gentleman, in answer to other questions, stated that the usual movement of the troops at this season, the household brigade, would not take place this year, for economical reasons.

THE ARMY ESTIMATES

The House having gone into committee of supply,

Mr FOX MAULE moved the army estimates, which he prefaced by the usual general statement The right hon. gentleman said, that it had been the intention of the Government to diminish the number of men this year by discharging 10,000 men; but since that determination had been formed three regiments had been sent to India, and the intelligence recently received from that part of our empire induced the Government to send out two additional regiments, and therefore it was now proposed to discharge 9000 men Considering the state of affairs abroad, the military wants of our colonies, and our domestic exigences, it would be most unwise to make any further reduction—the number of men proposed, viz. 103,254 men, he no any doubt would be found fully relied on as an effective military force for our home and colonial wants. The number of men voted last year, exclusive of those employed in the East India Company's service, was 113,847; so that the actual reduction of our force would be 10,593 men. The right hon. gentleman paid a high compliment to the British army for the good conduct displayed by them during the recent turbulent times, and condemned as unjust and mischievous the charges of the Financial Reform Association respecting military officers

On the first vote, for 103,254 men for our land force, exclusive of that employed in the service of the East India Company,

Mr. HUME moved, as an amendment, that the number be limited to 89,254 men

Mr H Drummond, Mr. M. Gibson, Mr. J. O'Connell, Mr. P. Wood, Mr. V. Smith, Captain Boldero, Sir W. Molesworth, Mr. S. Crawford, Mr. Cobden, and Lord J Russell took part in the discussion that followed. The House then divided:—

For Mr Hume's amendment	.. .. ..	.. 40
Against it	.. .. ..	.. 182
Majority against the amendment		-142

The vote for 103,254 men was then agreed to.

Several money votes to the same number were taken.

Colonel DUNNE called attention to the privileges granted to officers of the Foot Guards of holding rank in the army superior to that of officers of corresponding regimental rank in regiments of the line, and to the [illegible] appointments in the Guards being colonels in the army. The system [illegible] and it was [illegible] that no officer should be appointed to any regiment of the line who had not served [illegible] anything so peculiarly onerous in the duties of the household troops as to justify the continuance of this privilege, which, by giving more rapid promotion to one branch of the service, ensures, among other disadvantages, an undue proportion of general officers from these favoured corps, to the disadvantage of officers who serve in regiments of the line in every part of the world.

Mr. FOX MAULE said that the whole question would come naturally under the consideration of the committee on the Army Estimates, and therefore he hoped the gallant Colonel would postpone the question

Colonel DUNNE acquiesced, and the subject dropped

Some votes on account of the NAVY Estimates were also taken

To a question from Mr Hume, Lord J. RUSSELL replied that he proposed to go into committee on the Navigation Bill the first thing on Friday next

The Indictable Offences (Ireland) Bill and the Summary Convictions (Ireland) Bill went through committee, and were ordered to be read a third time.

The Protection of Justices (Ireland) Bill was committed.

The Lunacy Act Amendment Bill was read a second time, on the motion of Sir G. GREY.

Adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Earl of ABERDEEN gave notice that he would on Thursday ask for information relative to the renewal of war in the north of Italy.

After the presentation of petitions the House adjourned to Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

QUESTIONS AND NOTICES OF MOTION.

Mr. P. SCROPE gave notice, for the 3rd of April, of his intention to move for leave to bring in a bill to facilitate the employment of the labouring poor in Ireland

To a question from Mr Wodehouse, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that it was not the intention of the Government to bring in a measure to alter the sale accounts of the land tax.—Mr. Wodehouse thereupon gave notice that he would draw attention to the subject after the Easter recess

Mr. W. MILES complained of false returns relating to the importation of cattle, and asked for an explanation.—The Chancellor of the EXCHEQUER promised to inquire, and then give an explanation if he could

DISTRIBUTION OF CHURCH REVENUES.—BISHOPWEARMOUTH.

Mr. HERBERT moved for an address to her Majesty, praying for a commission of Inquiry into the allegations contained in the petitions presented to the House from the parishioners of Bishopwearmouth and Sunderland; and that the commissioners be directed to take into consideration the agreement made in Parliament (on the authority of the patron of the living of Bishopwearmouth) to have been entered into between himself and the present incumbent, whereby the surplus income of the living, over and above £2000 a year, was applied to make up the income of the incumbent, is to be paid over to trustees; and to report on the best mode of appropriating that surplus to spiritual purposes connected with the two parishes, and of providing for future appropriations. The honourable member desired to impress on the House that his motion was prospective, and not intended to be, in any degree, retrospective. He stated that the income of the living was £5000 a year, and that the population of the two parishes of spiritual instruction. There were four district chapels, with four half-starved curates, whilst the incumbent was able to keep a numerous table. The result of the existing arrangements was, that there were only five places of worship belonging to the Established Church, containing 4200 sittings, while there were eighteen places of dissenting worship, with 14,360 sittings. The parish could, therefore, request Parliament to take the temporalities of the rectory under its control. The Prime Minister was the first statesman who ever asserted the doctrine of episcopal irresponsibility.

Lord J. RUSSELL denied that he ever laid down the principle of episcopal irresponsibility. On the contrary, he asserted the doctrine of episcopal responsibility; but there was a large and important exception to that principle, and that was, that no bill should be passed by Parliament into every case of patronage which any hon. member might call in question. The petitioners, in the case under consideration, did not complain of the sufficiency of the income of the living, but, on the contrary, they admitted that he was of "exemplary character, and of great ministerial devotion." It was evident that the arrangement made by the Bishop was intended to give a large part of the pecuniary revenue of the rector for the spiritual improvement of the parish, and for the increase of the incomes of the chapelries. There one, while he declined to give any opinion whether the arrangement was the best possible one or not, he (Lord J. Russell) thought it would be better for Parliament to make some general arrangement with respect to such temporalities than to vote for an individual case, which could not fail to have unwholesome effects. The noble Lord passed a high panegyric upon the Bishop of Durham, and bore testimony to the right rev. prelate's fitness for his high office

Alderman THOMPSON had hoped that the noble Lord would have been authorised by the Bishop of Durham to state that he was ready to deal with the temporal fees according to the wish of Parliament. This was a peculiar case, and Sunderland had strong claims to have her spiritual wants supplied out of the revenues derived from the excess of income of Bishopwearmouth. He should support the motion if pressed to a division.

Mr. DISRAELI recommended the Government, as the opinion of all sides of the House and of the Prime Minister himself was in favour of the proposition, to bring in a bill to regulate the distribution of these temporalities. Should the Government give a promise to do so, it would save the House from the painful duty of dividing on this individual question, which he, for one, would rather avoid, if possible.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER could not give any such assurance.

Sir R. PEEL would not do anything that could reflect on the conduct of the Bishop of Durham; but he could not refrain from stating his concurrence in the general principles laid down by Mr. Horsman. The right hon. Baronet advised an act of Parliament to regulate the temporalities

Lord ASHLEY heartily concurred in the principle of the motion, but he recommended Mr. Horsman to abstain from pressing it to a division, and to leave it to the good sense of the Bishop of Durham to introduce a bill in accordance with the expressed opinions of the House.

Sir FRANCIS BARING, as a member of the House, regretted a division on the motion, moved the previous question, and the House divided:—

For the previous question	.. .. ..	.. 52
Against it	.. .. ..	.. 39
Majority	.. .. ..	.. -13

The effect of this division was to postpone the consideration of Mr. Horsman's motion.

Lord J. RUSSELL immediately rose, and said that he would feel it his duty to convey to the Bishop of Durham the general opinion of the House on his arrangement with the present incumbent of Bishopwearmouth, and he had no doubt but that the right rev. prelate would introduce a measure in accordance with that opinion.

CONDITION OF THE WORKING CLASSES.—Mr. SLANEY moved for the appointment of a standing unpaid committee on to consider and report from time to time on the political changes (economical and with political changes) likely to improve the condition of the working classes, to encourage industry, and increase their contentment. The hon. member was proceeding, when the House was counted out, at a few minutes after eight o'clock

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House of Commons met at twelve o'clock

Mr. FAGAN moved the second reading of the Small Debts (Ireland) Bill. After a brief discussion, the House divided, and the numbers were—For the second reading, 39; Against it, 31: majority against, 2. The bill was then thrown out

On the motion of Mr. PUSEY, the Landlord and Tenant Bill was committed pro forma, in order that amendments might be introduced into it. The Bill was then ordered to be printed as amended, and to be recommitted next Wednesday.

On the motion of Mr. BOUVERIE, the Clergy Relief Bill was then, after a brief conversation, referred to a Select Committee

The Recovery of Wages (Ireland) Bill went through committee, after which The House went into committee on the Incumbents Bill. Some discussion took place on the fourth clause, Sir W. CLAY moving as an amendment that the chairman report progress. The committee divided, and the motion for reporting progress was negatived by a vote of 77 to 34. The bill then went through committee, and was reported, with some amendments, to the House.

On the motion of Mr. SCHOLEFIELD, the Tenants at Rack-Rent Relief Bill the object of which is to relieve occupiers of one-half of the rates levied for the erection of lunatic asylums—was read a second time

The report of the Committee of Supply was received

Mr. MULLINGS obtained leave and brought in a bill to extend the remedies of sequestrations of ecclesiastical benefices. Adjourned at five o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

ROYAL COMMISSION.

Their Lordships assembled at four o'clock.

The Royal Assent was given this day by Commission to the Overseers in Towns and Boroughs Bill. The Royal Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Clanricarde, and Lord Campbell.

Their Lordships then adjourned during pleasure.

Their Lordships resumed at five o'clock.

ITALY.

The Earl of ABERDEEN, in moving for papers relative to the mediation of this country between Austria and Sardinia, took occasion to review the conduct of her Majesty's Government on the subject, which he condemned in many respects as not characterised by that friendly feeling towards Austria which we ought to have shown to an old ally.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE defended that conduct, contending that they had adopted the only course which was open to them under the peculiar circumstances of the case.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE WAR IN THE PUNJAUB.—Sir J. C. HOBHOUSE, in reply to Mr. HUME, stated that the papers relative to the late operations which had been received from India were very voluminous, and he could give his best attention to them, and lay such of them as he thought necessary before the House on as early a day as possible.

EMIGRATION

Mr. SCOTT wished to ask the Under-Secretary for the Colonies the following questions: 1. Whether any information has been received by the last packet from any, and which, of the Australian colonies upon the subject of emigration.—2 What debt has been incurred in New South Wales on account of emigration, from the 1st of January, 1847.—3. Whether any further loan has been recommended, forestalling the annual revenue derived from the Land Fund in New South Wales.—4 Whether funds have been granted for the colony. 5. Whether the funds applicable to emigration to that colony are not expended, and if not, how much remains. 6. How much of the colonial fund available at the meeting of Parliament has since been expended in Dorset and Wilts alone, to pay the whole passage money of emigrants from those counties only. 7. Whether it is known to the Government that shoe-makers and other mechanics have been sent out by the agents of the Government as "agricultural labourers eligible for a free passage;" and whether these agents have received a commission of fifteen shillings a head for passing such emigrants, and if it is intended to continue such a system of commission to agents. 8. Whether her Majesty's Government mean to persist in restricting the number of mechanics and of landed proprietors to persons whose entire passage money is paid for them, or whether it is intended to economise the funds, and promote a continuance of emigration upon a principle of mutual advantage, by giving a preference to emigrants who contribute towards or who contribute towards their passage.—9 Whether there is any intention of reducing the number of clerks or others in the emigration department in Park-street, Westminster?

Mr. HAWES said, with regard to the first question, none but the ordinary information had been received, and none of that official character which the hon. gentleman desired. To the second, third, and fourth questions, a mode had been proposed for meeting the difficulty, but that mode had not yet been called into operation. With respect to the fifth and sixth questions he expected to have had an account sent him before to-day, in order to have been able to answer the hon. member's question, but he had not received it. He hoped to have it to-morrow. With respect to the seventh question, he was not aware of that circumstance. He had made some inquiry whether any mechanics had been passed by the agents of the Government as "agricultural labourers" eligible for free passage," but he was not aware of any such parties having been so passed. In reply to the ninth question, he could only say, that the correspondence in that department was daily increasing, and increasing to such an extent, that rather an augmentation than a diminution of the clerks would become necessary.

CANADIAN REBELLION OF 1837 AND 1838.

Mr. GLADSTONE rose to ask her Majesty's Government—1 Whether any instructions have been given or will be given to the Governor-General of Canada as to the course which he is to pursue, in the event of its being proposed to him by his advisers; to allow them to introduce into the House of Assembly any bill giving compensation to any persons who may have been implicated in the rebellions of 1837 or 1838, on account of the damage sustained by them in those rebellions, or in the event of the passing of any such bill through the two Houses of the Legislature, to give the Royal Assent, according to the usage of Canada, if any such bill should have passed through both Houses of the Legislature, and should have become an Act by the Governor-General's assent, without any responsible clause, that the money thereby authorised to be paid would be payable forthwith, or before her Majesty's servants had had an opportunity of advising her Majesty with respect to the allowance or disallowance of such Act. 2. Whether any official intelligence had yet been received in respect to that transaction from Canada?

Mr. HAWES was able to answer in the affirmative, that no instructions whatever were given to the noble Lord at the head of the Canadian Government with references to the introduction of those bills into the House of Assembly. His noble friend the Secretary of State for the Colonies had entire confidence in that noble Lord, and was not in the habit of fettering him with instruction. With regard to the second question, he had to state that all the colonial laws he believed arrived really—but he could not pretend to offer formal stages, and having passed through the House of Assembly, came into immediate operation, unless they contained a suspending clause. That would apply, of course, to all acts, whether for the appropriation of money or not; and they were to come into operation immediately, unless disallowed by the Queen In that case it would only cease to be law on the arrival of the Queen's disallowance in Canada. In reply to the third question no despatches had been received from Lord Elgin whatever on that subject. Lord Grey had received a private letter (hear, hear), which was only received yesterday.

Mr. HUME said the question which he wished to ask was, whether her Majesty's Government had or had not received a communication from Lord Metcalfe, to the effect that a grant of 60,000 had been voted on the recommendation of the Governor-General of Canada an Legislature

Sir G. GREY said something of the sort had certainly been stated, but he was unwilling at present into the matter, as he was unable to give a decision which could be only mischievous without any equivalent benefit to be derived from it

Mr. GLADSTONE wished to ask whether the House of Assembly could have justified such a proceeding?

Sir G. GREY begged to reply to order. If the matter had been one of which the House had a right to take any cognisance—

Mr. GLADSTONE conceived that the matter was in the hands of the Government, and could be one that was competent to deal with and that concerned it

After a few words from Mr. ROEBUCK and Mr. HAWES, the matter dropped.

A short discussion followed, on the motion of Lord DUDLEY STUART, who moved for papers upon the occupation of Midiah and Wallachia by Russian troops, in the course of which Lord PALMERSTON showed there was no appearance to be entertained relative to the future conduct of Russia towards those provinces.—Adjourned.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

It is said that on the Ministers concluding their deliberations on the subject of the disastrous news from India, his Grace the Commander-in-Chief was requested, through Lord Fitzroy Somerset, to furnish the Board of Control with the names of three officers whom he might deem to be equal to the crisis, and the three names furnished by his grace were Sir Charles Napier—Sir Charles Napier—Sir Charles Napier.

The united Boards of Stamps and Taxes and Excise into one revenue board of in and duties and taxes, by act of Parliament, are now styled in official documents, and on all business matters connected with the department, the "Board of Inland Revenue."

Mr. Freeman, the Stone Receiver of Sheerness Dockyard, who has been absent on special duty for near y nine months, has been appointed by the Admiralty to determine the value of the decayed stock of timber, in which service their lordships have ordered him to be assisted by Mr. J. Bennett, the timber inspector of Portsmouth Dockyard.

We mentioned last week, that M. Moreton, an American printer, who had just died in Paris, had bequeathed a legacy of £40,000 to any person who should succeed in constructing a machine capable of striking off 10,000 copies of ne spaper within an hour. La Liberte, of Paris, announces that the fact has been communicated to the Abbé Deivau, parish priest of Zonafiques, in the Department of the North, w o has obtained a patent for a machine which appears to be calculated to realise the compliance of the problem in which M. More on was so much interested.

Louis Christophe, the soi disant Prince of Haiti, who figured so prominently t wards the close of last year at some of our police courts died on Sunday last in the workhouse of St. George's-in-the-East. The Black Prince, as he called himself, had been several times committed as a rogue and vagabond, and had been for some time in the workhouse.

The analysis of some samples of the gold brought from California to this country showed in one 88 75 per cent. of pure gold, 8 88 of silver, 0 85 of copper, with a trace of iron and 1 40 per cent. of silicious residue. In another sample the pure gold was 86 57, the silver 13 33, the copper 0 29, and the iron 0 54 per cent. It is found that the surface of the gold is purer than the interior, and that before fusion the metal appears nearer the colour of pure gold, and after fusion it assumes the hue of a brassy yellow.

Mr. Richardson, the eminent sculptor, who has been for some months engaged in restoring the interesting series of mutilated alabaster effigies and tombs (temp Henry IV. to Henry VIII. inclusive), of the Staffords, Ardernes, Stanley, &c., in Elford Church, Staffordshire, is about to publish accurate drawings of those interesting works

The vessel Ralph Bernal, just arrived in the docks from Sydney, New South Wales, has brought four cakes and 347 cases of preserved meat as a portion of her cargo, the production of the place. This is a naval article of importation rem t. ls far distant colony.

The largest salmon witnessed this year was exhibited on Mr. Grove's premises in Bond-street, on Saturday last, the weight being 41 lb.; it was regarded as a feature of much curiosity among the brethren of the ang.e.

A private of the 62nd R giment, named William Hankins, was married last week at Fa.wood to a young lady of very prepossessing appearance, and who has a fortune of £15,000. The father of the lady gave his daughter to the gallant young soldier

The Lord Bishop of Durham, with his usual liberality, has subscribed £50 to the proposed new church at Shincliffe; the Dean and Chapter have given £300; the late Hon. and Rev. Dr. Welles ey, £100; the Marchioness of Londonderry, £5; the Diocesan Church Building Society, £100; the Rev T Twis, £100; the Rev. H. Stoker, £50; pupils of the Rev. I. Todd, £100; and Thomas Davison, Esq., £20. In all, nearly £900 has been promised.

There are said to be no less than 50,000 Germans in the city of New or k.

The Cathedral of Mexico was commenced in 1552, and 90 years were s pent in completing it. The New York Custom-House cost about the same sum, and was built in something less than nine years.

Wisconsin is the last state admitted into the American Union. The rapidity with which it is filling up may be judged of from the report of land sale. in the Green Bay District. During the four months, February, March, April, and M ay, last year, these amounted to 182,192 d.s., being 146,562 acres—more than 9 00 farms of 160 acres each

The French naval station on the coast of Africa is reduced to nine s hips, and the English Ambassador at Paris has delivered to the Government of the Republic a like number of letters, authorising these cruisers to visit English ships.

The West India steamer Tay left Southampton on Saturday. Among the pa-sengers were upwards of 20 for Chagres, bound for the north western and south-western coast of Am rica. The mails for Chagres were unusually large, consisting of 14 sacks of letters and papers. The labels on the letter b gs for the Mosquito country have been altered from San Juan de Nicaragua to "Grey Town."

The amount of the Consolidated Three per Cent. Annuities sold by the Commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt between October 27, 1847, and the 26th January, 1849, has been officially stated at £2,355,418 s., being average £87 7s 11d.—£3 8s. 7d. per cent. money. The amount produced and paid into the Exchequer was £2,000,000.

We have great pleasure in stating that there will be a statue of Nelson in Norwich. The Committee have concluded the engagement with Mr. Milnes, the sculptor, and the work will be immediately commenced, although several hundred pounds are yet wanted of the required sum

A decked boat, called the Jason, during the week, brought up the Seine to Paris, from Rouen, three small iron-bound barrels, sent from London to a dealer in precious metals. These barrels were filled with gold dust from the mines of California, amounting to nearly a million of francs.

The East India Company have deposited, for a short time, at the gardens of the Zoological Society, in the Regent's-park, a flock of Thibetan sheep and lambs, from the mountain district of Ladak, which, we believe, have been imported with the view of introducing this fine-woolled variety in the Highland mountains of Scotland and Wales.

A ragged school is about to be established in Chatham. It is understood that a building will be erected for the purpose, the project being liberally supported, and a lady of wealth having munificently promised to supply whatever money may be wanting. The site of the building will probably be near the turnpike on the new road.

Mr. Odo Russell, son of the late Lord William Russell, is appointed an unpaid attaché to the British Embassy at the Austrian Court Edward Thornton and Daniel Brenan, Esqrs., are appointed Executive Councillors, and David Kaye, Esq., a Legislative Councillor for Prince Edward's Island.

The proportions of the Nankin frigate, at present building at Woolwich, a 50-gun frigate, have so extended, that the sl p, No. 7, is not large enough for her; or rather the boundaries of the roof so interfere with the progress of the massively-framed ship, that the Admiralty have been obliged to order a portion of it to be removed, to make room for fitting the knee of her head.

A return moved for by Mr. Hume shews that the total number of non-commissioned officers educated at the Royal Military College from 18.0 to 1847 amounted to 446; the number of gentlemen cadets, to 473; and the number of private pupils, to 1295: making a grand total of 2214.

On the recent medical examination of the men at Woolwich Dockyard, it was ascertained that only about a dozen of them will be superannuated. The others who are to be discharged have been generously offered permission to remain as labourers. The pay of the labourers is about 12s. per week.

Mr. John O'Connell, M.P., has been appointed Hon. Secretary to the Repeal Association; Mr. Ray, the late secretary, having resigned, in consequence of receiving an appointment in a large mercantile establishment. Mr. O'Connell will have a sinecure for some time to come.

Mr. Wilson, the jockey, who was injured in the steeple-chase last week, is fast recovering from the consequences of the accident.

The cholera in Glasgow has, it appears, destroyed 1900 persons since the 11th November last, out of a total number of about 4000 cases.

A convoy of 265 emigrants to Algiers left Paris on Saturday for Lyons, where they were to be joined by 200 others.

The National Printing-office of Francehas just published a work entitled "Chronology of the Kings of Egypt," by Lesueur. This is the first book in which the new hieroglyphic types of that establishment have been used at any length. They are said to be extremely delicate and beautiful very superior to anything put forth by the English or German presses. The work is also the first bearing the new formula used under the Republic to distinguish a book printed at the cost of the Government

A fever, said to be of a typhoid character, prevails in the Lincoln gaol, to such an extent as almost to make it necessary to postpone the assizes.

The library of the late Mr. Disraeli, author of the "Curiosities of Literature," and other well-known works, and father of "The Conning Tower" of the Protectionists, was sold by auction last week. There was nothing particular in the sale, except that the books, especially such as had the late owner's autograph annotations, were sought after and realised good prices.

There is no foundation for the statement that Mr. George Clive, the Judge of the Southwark County Court, had been appointed Recorder of Wovingham. In fact, the office does not now exist, having been abolished by the Municipal Reform Act.

The usual official return of the state of the Suitors' Fund of the Court of Chancery has been laid before Parliament. The total of the investments on account of the said fund during the year ended the 1st of October, 1848, amounted to £66,75b, and the total receipts to £123,465. The cash balance on the said account on the 1st of Oct.-ber last was united to 3,710. The total receipts for the year ended the 26th of November, 1848, exhibits an excess of fees above charges amounting to £8083.

On Monday morning one of the guards of the London North-Western Railway, named Ireland, was killed at Newton Junction (Lancashire) in foolishly attempting to cross the line while a trai was approaching

The vessel Parsevgore, arrived on Monday from Canton and Hong-Kong, has brought from the latter place 22 boxes of treasure, consigned to our The vessel Packet, arrived also on Monday from the Cape of Good Hope, brought one box of specie, consigned to a party in the metropolis.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"S. S. J."Oxford—Alexandre's collection numbers about 2000 Problems. The prices are believe to be 1*½s.*

"A. P."—1. A Bishop is considered to be more valuable than a Knight; but the difference is so small as to be unappreciable, except among very fine players. 2. Get Bohn's "Chess-Player's Handbook," and play as often as you can with proficients

"J. C. L."—Neat, but hardly difficult enough

"E. W."—It shall be examined. Who is the author?

"G. S."Dooplin—We have always much pleasure in looking the diagrams over. In the one last received the mate is quite unpracticable, since Black may take the Queen with his R, and set his opponent at defence

"A. L."—The King can Castle under the circumstances mentioned

"J. W. B."—The Chess-Player's Companion is likely, we are told, to be published immediately. When such great exactitude as prevailing is required as in works on Chess, a book takes a long time in passing through the press With respect to your second question, we should say it would be a difficult matter to raise sufficient stakes

"R. H. A."—We are sorry to say the last is equally unadapted for publication.

"Amateur," Manr, India.—We shall rejoice at receiving another packet of equally rare and beautiful variations

"T. H." Hon. Secretary—The Liverpool Chess Club numbers about 100 members.

"O. S. S."—Very acceptable. They shall all appear in due course.

"J. R." Richmond.—1. The match began about three months back. 2. We are not aware of any work expressly devoted to "Position" in Chess; but nine-tenths of every elementary treatise is taken up with its analysis

"R. T. T."—The solution of Enigma 413 is as follows:—1. R takes Q (ch). 2. Q to Q Kt 7th (ch). 3. Kt mates.

"An Amateur of Kensington."—Winning at Chess would be easy enough, if one could find opponents so accommodating as the player of Black in your diagrams. Pray understand that in a Problem mate must be given within the stipulated number of moves, and the win is impossible.

"F. W. A.," Stoke.—The Problem No. 268 cannot be solved as you propose. Try it once more

"G. H. L."—Our Problem of last week is one of exceeding beauty. Examine it attentively, and you will soon discover your error.

"M. E. R." should have sent his note of the solution; we can then tell if it were correct or not.

"E. H. O."—1. We have not the Enigma of "Omicron" at hand to refer to. 2. You had omitted the all-important Bishop in the first diagram. The position now appears correct, and the win is impressive.

"Omicron."—The missing letter has since reached us, and the Problem shall be examined.

"C. W. R."—Mr. Lambert's clever little Enigma No. 423 is solved thus:—

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE	BLACK
1. K to K 4th	K to any 3d (best)	3. R to K 8th	Anything
2. Q to K 8th (ch)	K to B 3d	4. R to K 6th—Mate

Perrie.'—They shall be examined.

"C. D.," Pandora—The second solution of your Problem is wrong, since the Black Queen can take the Kt at the first move, and thus defer checkmate.

"Solissona by" "W. W. P." "J. B." "R. H. P." "Ellen," "N. G. P." "Pupa" "W. F. P." "H. P." "R. H. A." "M. E. R." "R. F." Woolwich; "Otho," "Mary," "C. A. M. K." "Sigma," "G. S. J." are correct. Those by "Gaul," "W. T. R.," "H. E." "F. C." "C. F. L.," "Dereven," "S. T.," Hull, are wrong.

 Want of space compels us to defer the Answers to very many Correspondents.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 269.

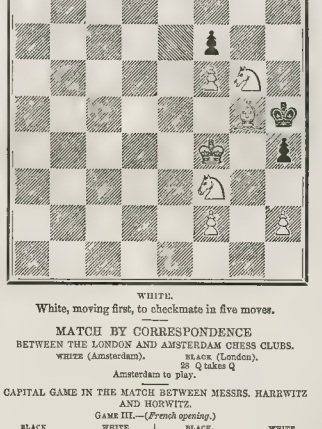
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to K 6th (ch)	R takes Kt	4. R to Q 8th	Q to K 3d (a)
2. B to Q 7th (ch)	R to K 3 4th (dis. ch)	5. Q to Q sq (ch)	Q or R interposes
3. K to Q Kt 5th (dis. P to Q 3 4th (dis. ch)	ch)	6. Q takes Q or R—Mate.

(a) Black has many other modes of play at move 4, but none which can prevent the mate in six.

PROBLEM NO. 270.

By E. L. W.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, moving first, to checkmate in five moves.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUBS.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
	23 Q takes Q

Amsterdam to play.

CAPITAL GAME IN THE MATCH BETWEEN MESSRS. HARRWITZ AND HORWITZ.

GAME III.—(French opening.)

BLACK. (Mr. Harwitz).	WHITE. (Mr. Horwitz.)	BLACK. (Mr. Harwitz.)	WHITE. (Mr. Horwitz.)
1. P to K 4th.	P to K 3d	19. K B takes K Kt	K R takes B
2. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th	20. B to K 3d (e)	K R to K R 4th
3. P takes P	P takes P	21. P to K R 3d	K to R sq
4. P to Q B 4th	K Kt to B 3d	22. Q to Q Kt 3d (f)	Q R to K Kt sq (g)
5. Q Kt to B 3d	B to K 2d	23. Q takes K P	Q R to K Kt 3d (h)
6. P takes P	K Kt takes P	24. Q to Q B 8th (ch)	Q R to K Kt sq
7. K B to Q B 4th	Q B to K 2d	25. Q to K 6th	Q R to K Kt 3d
8. Q to Q Kt 3d	K B to Q Kt 5th	26. Q to Q 7th	Q R to K Kt 2d
9. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	27. Q to Q B 8th (ch)	Q R to K Kt sq
10. Castles	K B takes Kt	28. Q to K 6th	Kt to Q sq
11. P takes B	Castles	29. Q to Q 7th	Q to K 3th
12. Kt to K 6 5th (a)	Q Kt to Q R 4th	30. P to K Kt 3d	R to K 3d
13. Q to Q B 3d. (b)	P to K Kt 3d	31. K R to Q sq (c)	K R takes K R P
14. Kt takes B	P takes Kt	32. K to K B sq	K R takes K Kt P
15. K B to Q 3d	Q Kt to Q B 3d	33. P takes R	Q takes B
16. Q B to K R 6th	K R to K B 2d (c)	34. Q to Q 4th	R to K B sq (ch)
17. K R takes K Kt P	K R to Q 2d.	35. K to Kt 2d	R to K B 7th (ch)
18. K B to K 4th	Q to K R 6th (d)	36. K to K 3d	Kt to K B 6th (ch)

White Wins

(a) An excellent move—relieving himself at once from the threatened danger to his Queen and opening a most formidable attack upon the adverse King.

(b) The strong rush, and thus escaping the loss of the exchange.

(c) We should have preferred an attempt to carry the war into the enemy's territory, by playing the Q to K B 5th, and R. Kt to B 5.h afterwards

(d) White now turns the assault upon his opponent, and the attack and counter-attack are admirably managed

(e) If he ... 2nd wou.d, perhaps have been better

(f) This is ingenious; but it gives White too much time

(g) Losing move He should have played Kt to K 5th, when the following variation was probably—

BLACK.	WHITE	BLACK	WHITE
22	Q to K 8th	24. P to K Kt 3d, or e	Q to K Kt 5th
23. K to B 2d	Q to Z. Kt sq	25. P to K B 5th	Q or B takes K P (ch)
		And wins.

(h) BLACK. WHITE BLACK. WHITE.

24. K R to K Kt sq	Q to K 6th (threatening to take in three moves)	26. P takes Kt	Q takes a P (check)
		27. Q to K sq	Q takes B
25. P to K B 3d	Kt to K 6th. (He may also play Q to K Kt 3d.)	28. Q to K sq	Q takes K B P
		29. Q takes K P (best)	Q takes Q B P

With a fine game.

(i) Again White loses time. Why not play the Kt to Q square directly?

(j) P to Q 4th seems much more effective, and leads to many striking variations.

AN AMERICAN'S OPINION OF ENGLAND.

(From the New York Tribune.)

RALPH WALDO EMERSON lectured before the Boston Mercantile Library Association, December 27, on England, giving the results of his observations during his recent visit. He appears to have derived strongly favourable impressions of the English character. He spoke of the steady balance of the qual ties of their nature as their great characteristic, and the secret of their success. Everything in England betokens life. The land and climate are favourable to the production and preservation of good men. Mr. Emerson facetiously remarked that it was against his theory to travel—he did not like it, and in most cases he considered it a disadvantageous to the literary man. Running up hills and over valleys—he bel ieved the office of a wheel, not of a man. But he had profited by his trip to England.

He referred to the elements of that power which the English now hold, and have held for centuries. After looking at her manufactories, scattered all ov r the land, her commerce, her agriculture, her arts,—and witnessing the stupendous results which have been wrought out—one is convinced that if he would see the best development of common sense—the standard sense—he must go to England to witness it. The land, in every part so like a garden, shows the triumph of labour; the fields look as if finished with the pencil, not the plough. Every arable spot has been cultivated, and everything turned to the best possible.

England, indeed, is a huge mill, a grand hotel, where everything is provided to one's mind. On the railroads we ride twice as fast, and with one-half the shaking than we do upon our roads. All day and a night—over-by-day moves on a railway—the Englishman ever touches the ground. Eng and has the best working climate in the world; it is never hot or cold; their winter days like our November days in the early part of the month. The only drawback which Mr. Emerson mentioned was the dark gray colour of the sky, which renders gray and bright too nearly alike, and makes it painful at times to read and write. To this must be added the dark dense smoke of many of the manufacturing towns; this smoke pervading and completely enveloping at times every surrounding object.

England has all the materials for a working country—iron, coal, &c., excepting wood.

The Englishman enjoys great health and vigour of body. They are larger than Americans. One hundred Englishmen taken at random would probably weigh one-quarter more than the same number of Americans taken in the same manner; and the skeleton is said not to weigh more. The Englishman is plump, round, and full, and presents a stout, respectable, and grandfa herly figure. The women even have thick-set forms, and seldom a tall, spare Englishman is seen. The figures of the days of chivalry carved in stone, some of them 500 years old, which adorn the churches all over England, present the same types which characterise the present race. Enjoying vigorous health, they last well, and their animal powers are strongly developed. They are great eaters, and claim that a good supply of food is essential to health. They have more constitutional energy and vigour than we have. Pluck is the national characteristic the coalman, the port r, the no.leman, the bishop and even the women have it; the press runs over with it.

An Englishman speaks with his whole body; his elocution is stomachy—an American's is labial. He may growl at the petty annoyances of an hotel, but he has abundance of self-command. But the "taxes of his eyes" are united to his income-taxes, and only agree with his trunk. Whenever and wherever he goes, the Englishman will not He has existed for a thousand years, and will continue to exist, as his character possesses as much energy as ever.

London and England are now in full growth. Birkenhead, opposite Liverpool, grows as fast as South Boston or Brooklyn, opposite New York. London is enlarging at an alarming rate, even to the swallowing up of Middlesex The British Museum is not yet arranged. London is increasing as rapidly as one of our western colleges Everything in England betokens life.

Be sure the Englishman does not build castles and abbeys, but what the 19th century demands, he builds—docks, wharfs, warehouses, &c., wi hout number. In all that the Englishman does, even to the noise of clearing his throat, he gives evidence of strength. It is not the.and for faint hearts

One thing is very noticeable among the people, and that is their total neglect of each other. Each man shaves, dresses, eats, walks, and runs just as he pleases, and his neighbour pays no attention to him, so long as he is not interfered with; and this is not because Englishmen are trained to reserve, but because each man is trained to mind his own business. Personal eccentricities are allowed here, and no one observes them. Each islander is an island himself, repo sing in quiet and tranquil waters.

It is very certain that the Englishman has so much confidence in the power of his nation that he cares very little about any other. Swedenborg, who visited England frequently during the last century, and an Italian author who wrote in 1800, were both quoted in this connexion. The Englishman is handsome, and has always been so. If a handsome foreigner comes among them, the people declare that it is a pity he is not an Englishman. This arrogance is his birthright. His praise is to tell you it is "so English" in character, and his highest praise is to say to an acquaintance, "I should not know you from an Englishman." Now his is admirable in some respects.

The English surpass all others in general culture—arms are so harmoniously developed. They are quick to perceive any meanness in an individual. And it is reasonable that they should have all those fastidious views which wealth and power and position create. But it is not to be disguised, that there is much in English culture that will not bear analysis. It is material, built solely upon wealth, cockneyism, and is most fully exemplified in boxing, racing, gaming, &c.—which are called the English sports. They are vast, orderly, and respectable, and have the nicest care of their wines, guns, &c. But these are trifles. Their manly forms are attributed to the exercises, such as boating, boxing, and riding, in which they indulge from early years. The attachment to horses among them is almost universal they are always on horseback—the hotels are crowded with pictures of races. Betting, not without its uses, causes them to be very exact in their data, and settles everything as a fact.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.—Information having been received from the Director-General of the French Post-office that a regular packet communication exists between Marseilles and Tunis, the packets leaving Marseilles for Tunis on the 8th and 23d of every month, and departing from Tunis for Marseilles on the 4th and 19th of every month, all letters hereafter posted, addressed to Tunis, will be transmitted by French packet, vid Marseilles, unless specially addressed to be otherwise forwarded. The postage on letters forwarded to Tunis by this route will be—British, weighing under ½ ounce, 5d.; foreign, 10d.—total, 1s. 3d. British, weighing ½ oz. and not exceeding ½ oz., 8d.; foreign, 1s. 8d.—total, 2s. 4d. British, exceeding ½ oz. and under 1 oz., 10d.; foreign, 2s. 6d.—total, 3s. 4d. British, weighing 1 oz. and not exceeding 1 oz., 10d.; foreign, 3s. 4d.—total, 4s. 2d. British, exceeding 1 oz. and under 1½ oz., 1s. 8d.; foreign, 4s 2d.—total, 5s. 10d. Newspapers will be liable to a charge of 2d. each. The postage on both letters and newspapers must be paid in advance.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS.

On Wednesday evening the Society of Arts again opened their "Exhibition of Select Specimens of recent British Manufactures" to a large and fashionable assemblage of visitors, who entirely filled the rooms in the Adelphi. We learned that the Society would have been honoured with the presence of the Prince of Orange, had not his Royal Highness been called to England by the death of his Royal father. The principal saloon, with its superb ceiling of gold and colour—the renovated masterpieces of Barry's genius upon the walls—the brilliant plate, and decorative glass, receiving a flood of light from the richly-gilt chandeliers, lamps, and lustres,—had a truly splendid effect.

One of the principal attractions of the evening was the tasteful specimen of table-plate, designed by his Royal Highness the President of the Society of Arts, and occupying a prominent position near the centre of the room. It is described in the catalogue as a "Gilt Centre-Piece, executed by command of her Majesty, from a design by his Royal Highness the Prince Albert, lent for exhibition by her Most Gracious Majesty."

The composition, as our Illustration also shows, consists of a circular base supporting a four-sided pedestal, somewhat reminding that of a continental fountain, in two faces of which is a grotesque head, and a shell beneath. The sides are panelled, and rich in ornamentation; and at the angles are trusses of tasteful design and combination. The entire composition is surmounted by a salver, in antique taste, supported by four scroll dem-figures upon a pedestal, with bridle heads at the angles, and fruit in a kind of patera at the sides. Upon the principal pedestal are grouped four of her Majesty's favourite dogs: a large greyhound and a rough terrier are grouped with a dead hare; and on the opposite side is another specimen of terrier and a "turnspit" dog, watching a rat in a circular w e trap.

The style of ornament throughout the design is generally of late Elizabethan character. In the two principal faces of the circular base are the arms of her Majesty and Prince Albert; and upon the other faces are the Royal initia s. The whole exhibition shows that the entire design of this centre-piece is much matter, or compartment, besides those exhibited. It has been beautifully executed by Messrs. Garrard; the animals modelled by Mr Cotterell. This is altog ther a very interesting work; and its exhibition will have a beneficial tendency in shewing that the practice of the art of design is in no way incompatible with the highest position: while the fact of the Queen having been pleased to allow two of her consort to be sent from the Royal nurseries, to be modelled, shows the interest her Majesty takes in the prosperity of the "Society of Arts," and its truly national aim and object.

The Gilt Exhibition has been already well attended, daily A few striking specimens have been added since the opening day. A fine and large piece of carving of fruit and flowers, intended for the back of the pulpit of a church at St. Mary-at-hill, reminds one of the age of tribbons. Among the glass, some Opaline Enamel articles, with designs prin ed as well as painted in colour, are novel and beautiful. A specimen of printing on white velvet is, also, very successful. A golden flax satin damask table-cloth, manufactured and exhibited by Baker and son, is an exq isite work: the pattern, the Port and Vase for a centre, and the several portions of that matchless production around it, with a very tasteful border, is entitled to the highest praise Among the Race Plate, we noticed "the Orange Prize" (Goodwood, 1846), the gift of the late King of Holland.

In the large lower room is a large tile of fine Gothic design, by Minton, applicable to ceilings or walls, and quite novel. Among the Pottery is a specimen of printing by electricity; and a vessel made of pounded granite, capable of withstanding any heat. Altogether, the assemblage of specimens considerably exceeds that of last year: the several rooms are filled, and even the walls of the staircase are covered with drawings.

GILT CENTRE-PIECE, EXECUTED BY COMMAND OF HER MAJESTY, FROM A DESIGN BY HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

NEW CHAPELS IN THE TOWER HAMLETS CEMETERY.

At this period, when public attention is so universally directed to the sanitory condition of the metropolis, and when the suppression of intramural interments may shortly be anticipated as the law of the land, a sketch of the City of London and Tower Hamlets Cemetery, which has been recently completed, cannot fail to be interesting.

To the inhabitants of the city of London more especially, it must form a matter for congratulation, that within a distance of two miles from the Royal Exchange, a suitable resting-place has been provided for the remains of those who once formed its busy occupants, so preferable in every respect to the already over-crowded churchyard burial-ground.

This cemetery was incorporated by act of Parliament in the year 1841, and a considerable portion of the ground has since been consecrated by the Lord Bishop of London. It comprises an area of upwards of thirty acres, most eligibly situated, being close to the high road leading to Bow.

The chapels, which form the subject of our illustration, have just been completed from the designs of Messrs. Wyatt and Brandon, and are greatly admired for their purity of style and propriety of arrangement. That erected in the consecrated ground is in the early Decorated period, with a belfry at one angle, in which are some nicely ornamented windows; and at the sides are attached cloisters for the reception of mural tablets, so constructed as to afford an effectual screen from the weather. The chapel appropriated to the use of Dissenters is of octagonal form, and in the Byzantine style of architecture. Beneath both chapels are dry and extensive catacombs, arranged so as to accommodate single coffins or to form family vaults.

The grounds have been judiciously and effectively laid out by the same artists, and inclosed by high walls and ornamental iron railings; and the drainage, which is effected by means of an artesian well, to a depth of 310 feet, and tributary drains running through the land in various directions, is, we understand, most successful—a depth of twenty-six feet having in many instances been obtained without moisture.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. MUNTZ.

Among the many visitants of the House of Commons during the period of the Parliamentary session, within the last eight or nine years, there are few who, when casting back a glance at the varied aspect which the benches of St. Stephen's presented to their eager gaze, will recal to memory any one of its features more frankly or forcibly than that of the portly person, and bearded patriarchal presence of the honourable member for Birmingham. If they have heard him address the House, we question if the lapse of years can remove the impression it conveyed at the moment. There he stands, at the back benches, near the gangway on the Ministerial side, the very impersonation of manly strength and honest determination: they again hear his sonorous voice rolling forth in full deep tones from his ample chest, as, with calm earnestness, he urges his views upon the question in debate, enforcing his argument from time to time with a vigorous thrust of his ponderous stick against the floor; and though the speaker's opinions or their effect at the time upon his hearers may have totally faded from memory and form no part whatever of the retrospective sketch, the remarkable appearance of the man, his eccentricity of manner, of sentiment, his common sense and goodness of heart, will stand forth in prominent relief.

MR. MUNTZ, M.P. FOR BIRMINGHAM.

His speech on Monday night week, towards the close of the adjourned debate on the second reading of Mr. Labouchere's bill for the alteration of the Navigation Laws, was highly characteristic—full of odd suggestions, apparently at variance with his well-known views—and abounding in that peculiar expansion of a man's mind, when the judgment is not yet definitively settled on th

NEW CHAPELS IN THE TOWER HAMLETS CEMETERY.

SCENE FROM ROSSINI'S OPERA OF "CENERENTOLA," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—MDLLE. ALBONI AS "CENERENTOLA."

question mooted, which may be regarded as "thinking aloud," rather than the utterance of matured ideas, the result of reflection or experience. He said, "He was about to do what he supposed would be called speaking on one side and voting on the other. (A laugh.) The object of the present measure was to reduce the freights and profits of the English shipowner and give them to the foreign shipowner, in the same way as we had taken the profits of the English agriculturist and given them to the foreigner. (Cheers from the Opposition.) He had yet to learn that any of these changes were productive of national advantage. (Renewed cheers.) He had voted for the repeal of all protection. (A laugh.) When he heard that laughter he always thought of Goldsmith's line in which he connected the 'loud laugh' with the 'vacant mind.' Since other classes had been deprived of protection, he thought that it ought not to be enjoyed exclusively by the shipowner. Besides, this advantage would result from the repeal of the Navigation Laws, that the standing excuse for the failure of all the free-trade measures of the last two years would be removed. ('Hear,' and laughter.) The honourable member for Liverpool said we would compete with all the countries in the world, because we had the largest capital. He (Mr. Muntz) believed that that capital consisted in our land, houses, and ships (hear); but, if we reduced the value of them, he was not sure we should have the largest capital in the world. ('Hear,' and laughter.) They ought to consider what had been the success of the measures they had taken. He would mention the effect of them on the article of zinc, in which he had been a large dealer. No zinc was now made in this country. Why? Because the price of foreign zinc was only £13 or £14 a ton, while in this country it could not be made under £18. But what had been the effect of free trade on the town he represented? A few days ago a person handed to him a newspaper published there, called the Midland and Birmingham Advertiser, and pointed out an advertisement in it from a respectable ironmonger in Birmingham. It was headed, 'The Effects of Free Trade,' and stated that the advertiser had just imported from Germany a stock of superior tools, which, although the duty was 10 per cent., he could sell at from 30 to 60 per cent. under the price at which they could be made in Birmingham. (Hear, hear.) It struck him that every day they were getting out of the frying pan into the fire. (Laughter.) For the last twenty-five years he had been competing in the foreign market with the merchants of his own town. By care, industry, and economy, the whole of them had ceased to compete with him; but, although he had the whole trade, he found himself so reduced by competition with the foreigner, that it was not worth keeping, and he was going to give it up. (Hear, hear.) It was said that they should buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest. That did not consist in the abstract price. (Hear, hear.) They might get an article that was manufactured in England 10 per cent. cheaper on the Continent. It did not follow that that was the cheapest market. (Hear, hear.) Take iron. It might be £5 a ton here, and only £8 on the Continent; but if it were bought there, the labour here would be unemployed, and instead of buying in the cheapest market, it might in the end prove the dearest. (Hear, hear.) He expected to see the produce of this country as low as foreign produce (hear, hear), and he knew that that price could not pay the taxes and liabilities of the country. (Hear, hear.) If they had a fixed amount of revenue to make up, and they lowered the price of produce, they increased the pressure of that taxation on the industrious classes (hear, hear), and by so doing prevented the possibility of their competing with foreign labour. (Hear, hear.) He believed they would find their land uncultivated, their trade profitless, and their people unemployed, and that something else was wanted besides absolute Free-Trade." (Hear.)

Notwithstanding this apparently Protectionist speech, the hon. member voted in the majority against Mr. Herries's amendment, "that the bill be read a second time that day six months" the usual mode of shelving a measure—thus showing by his vote, which is the true test of a Legislator's opinions, what, in reality, was the faith that was in him. It was not that the previous lengthened discussion had conjured up anything before him that rendered him less of a Free-Trader than he has been accounted to be; but that, seeing what to him appeared the weak points on his own side, instead of sinking them as another man would have done, he could not help throwing them forth to ease his own mind as or elicit opinion one way or the other upon them.

On the Thursday night following (the 15th), however, he alone of all the Free-Traders in the House voted in the minority in favour of Mr. Disraeli's motion relative to the burden of local taxation on land

Mr. Muntz is a merchant of Birmingham, and is an extensive manufacturer as a metal-roller. He is the inventor and manufacturer of the patent yellow metal ship-sheathing and bolting

In politics, he is a "Radical Reformer;" and he has written many pamphlets on subjects connected with commerce, political economy, and finance. On the latter question he is a zealous advocate of the views of the Birmingham school, whose doctrine is that an unrestricted paper currency should be the medium of monetary circulation. Mr. Muntz was the first Vice-Chairman of the Birmingham Political Union; and, having been subjected to repeated legal prosecutions on account of an alleged riot at a church-rate meeting in that town, he was convicted on the charge in the year 1837; but the conviction was quashed the Court of Queen's Bench deciding that the proceedings had been illegal, and that the prosecution ought never to have been instituted.

The hon. gentleman is of foreign extraction. He is the son of a respectable German merchant, who settled in Birmingham in the year 1783, and married Miss Purden, a lady of that place. The subject of the present notice was born in 1794, and received the names George Frederick. In 1818 he married the daughter of the Rev. John Pryce. He has sat in Parliament for Birmingham since the year 1840.

On Saturday the Commissioners of Excise, with whom the Board of Stamps and Taxes is now amalgamated, issued instructions for proceedings to be taken against several parties charged with evading the stamp duty in the transfer of railway shares, by omitting to state the precise amount received on account of such transfer. The penalty is £50 and five times the amount of duty evaded.

THE LATE RAILWAY FRACAS.

THE extraordinary scene which occurred last week at the Clifton Railway Station, and of which we gave the full particulars in our last, ought not to be allowed to drop from memory without the indignant reprobation of the public. Our police regulations will not tolerate that two rival omnibus drivers should block up a street to impede traffic, and endanger life by their quarrels, neither should the infinitely more dangerous blockade of a line of railway be allowed to pass unpunished. By all acts authorizing the formation of railways, the directors are empowered to punish any person who may wilfully place obstruction on the rails; and that, too, whether damage to property or loss of life have or have not occurred. A wilful obstruction on the part of railway officials themselves is an offence still more flagrant and dangerous. Were there such a functionary in England as a public prosecutor, the blockade at Clifton would fall under his special cognizance; but, in the absence of such a functionary, it is to be hoped that some means will be found to bring within reach of the law the railway officials who acted in the highly culpable manner to which we have alluded. These railway gentry, who seem inclined to carry things with so high a hand, both in their relations with other companies and with the public, should remember, too, in their own interest, that railway dividends are not entirely composed of fares received from persons who travel on business, but that large numbers of their best customers travel for pleasure and recreation. This class are very sensitive to danger, and will transfer their favours to other lines, where civil war is not raging, and where there is no more than the ordinary risk to life and limb. The every-day casualties of railway travelling are quite sufficient of themselves to deter the timid from all unnecessary travelling. It is a suicidal policy, as well as a public offence, to increase these risks by such reckless conduct as was exhibited at Clifton.

RAILWAY BLOCKADE AT CLIFTON STATION, NEAR MANCHESTER.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

MADEMOISELLE ALBONI AS "CENERENTOLA."

WE present our readers with an Illustration of the last scene in "Cenerentola;" with Mdlle. Alboni singing the celebrated "Non più mesta." The performance was repeated to a very crowded audience, on Tuesday night, with increased enthusiasm. Their Serene Highnesses the Princess Amelie and Elise of Hohenlohe-Schillingsfürst, and his Serene Highness the Prince of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, occupied her Majesty the Queen Dowager's box.

Mdlle. Alboni's appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre has presented a new phase in her career, not merely on account of the change of locale, but because she has adopted a totally new style of singing, in consequence of her assuming soprano parts in Paris.

Mdlle. Alboni has returned to finish her engagement, until after Easter, at the Italiens, a theatre that she alone saved from utter ruin, and the fortunes of which have been once more perilled in her absence.

Guillard and Bordas make their début to-night (Saturday). Celetti re-appears on Tuesday once more on the scene of his former triumphs. On Saturday, Mdlle. Parodi, the adopted daughter and pupil of Pasta, of whom such sanguine hopes are entertained, will appear in an heroic part. She is in person far handsomer than the celebrated prima donna, and of higher stature; but she is said to resemble her marvellously in her lyrical qualities—which was the reason that she won such favour with the great Pasta, who constantly says that in her "she lives again." Another début impending is that of Casolini, the young contralto, from La Scala, and so successful at the latter theatre, where she made her début last season. A young comprimario from the Conservatoire of Milan, and two handsome danseuses from La Scala, will likewise appear for the first time next week.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The power and grandeur of the music in Auber's "Masaniello" are evidently more and more appreciated on every hearing. Since the days of Rossini, there has been no such representative of the part of the fisherman-king as Mario. Whilst the latter exhibits in his acting the skill and energy of the great French tenor, he is far superior in the quality of his voice and in the perfection of his style. Mario, who in his early career was chiefly distinguished as a vocalist, has been gradually gaining ground as an actor; and his success in Raoul, in Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," seems to have inspired him to fresh exertion. His acting in the market scene and in the last act, in which the reason of Masaniello is overturned by the revolutionary horrors, is particularly fine. His delivery of the operatic recitative, and the refrain of the "Dio, consolati," are exquisite specimens of refined vocalisation. The duo between him and Massol who so spiritedly sustains the character of the fierce Neapolitan Pietro, is nightly encored with acclamations. The elegant and effective pantomime of Pauline Leroux never fails to create a powerful sensation, and she has fully maintained here in Fenella the celebrity she acquired in the part in Paris. The other characters, Elvira Alphonso, and Borella, are not very prominent; but the vocal gifts of Mdlle. Dorus Gras, who is so accomplished in feats of dexterity which might dismay an expert violinist, and the tact of Mei and Romani, render them conducive to the effective ensemble.

The playing of the overture, accompaniments, and music to the characteristic dances, by the orchestra, and the choral singing, are highly creditable to Costa. Taglioni, Mdlle Wauthier, and M Alexandre are much applauded in the incidental dances. "Masaniello" is to be repeated for the fourth time this evening (Saturday). It is said that either Miss Catherine Hayes or Mdlle. Angri will make a début in the ensuing week.

PRINCESS'.

Auber's pretty opera of the "Sirène" was revived on Monday night, for the first appearance this season of Mdlle. Nau, who resumed her original part of Zerlina. She was entitled, on this occasion, to a most favourable reception and graceful acting made as great an impression as on her former visit. Mdlle. Nau is a singer of the brilliant French school; she is startled by no difficulties, and she revels in a series of florid divisions and intricate rondos, the precision and delicacy and the execution of which a most clever violinist might envy. Allen and Rafter were the tenors, and Weiss the bass; and the opera was respectably sustained in the ensemble.

HAYMARKET.

An agreeable variety was given to the performances of this house on Wednesday evening, by the revival of "The Brigand," in which Mr. Wallack appeared in his original character of Alexander Mansfeldt, the part in the production of which no one has been able to approach him. It must be acknowledged that the second scene of the first act, since "The Brigand" was first produced; but we perceived no diminution of spirit in Mr. Wallack's acting. He is a most gentlemanly, facetious robber, who captivated everybody for so long and successful a period. "The Brigand" is the first piece of its class of melodrama—the union of the domestic and romantic interest being managed with admirable tact, in a manner certain to enlist the sympathies of the audience. Mr. Wallack was warmly cheered through out the piece, and loudly called for at its conclusion.

After "The Brigand," a new musical drama, called "The Trumpeter's Wedding," was produced, and with most complete success. The idea on which it is founded is not remarkable for its novelty, but it comprises one of those equivocal scenes which are certain to amuse, however frequently they may be served up And it also keep Mr. Keeley, as Titus Tuttop, a Puritan trumpeter, in one of his estate of constant good humour, and in which he is so irresistibly comical—an I more than ever in the present instance, from wearing a high steeple cap and jack-boots, which, together, almost hide him up.

The story may be briefly told. Tuttop is the accepted of Nelly, the niece of the Mayor of St. Albans (Miss Reynolds) Her foster-brother, a young cavilier, Sir Charles Rivers (Miss P Horton), having come to seek an interview in the house, with a lady of whom he is enamoured, is passed off by Nelly as the Puritan trumpeter, who, of course, on his arrival, is utterly confounded, he being, in turn, taken for the cavalier. The position of parties leads to a most diverting chain of contretemps and intrigue until, finally, a proclamation of Charles the Second sets everybody to rights again. It is needless to say how excellingly Croll Mr Keeley was, in his various dilemmas. He made a very great part out of what might have been, in other hands, a very ordinary one, and even amused the house with laughter Miss P. Horton, Miss Reynolds, and Mr. Caulfield had some pretty incidental music assigned to them; the latter gentleman was loudly encored in a bacchanalian song. Mr. James Bland was an amusing, important, country Mayor, and Mrs. Buckingham was the other lady. We have said that the drama achieved a perfect success. It will have a good run, which it really deserves.

LYCEUM.

"Hold your Tongue" is the name of one of the most ingeniously constructed pieces we ever witnessed, produced at this theatre, with great success on Thursday evening. It is impossible to describe the plot, which is entirely one of cross intrigue worked out in a style of the highest comic humour; the characters of the different characters resemble those of the men at the game of military tactics, constantly thwarting each others plans, and driving their antagonists into corners. A masquerade at night, a duel in the morning, an explanation, furnish the materials of the story, which is capitally worked out by Madame Vestris, Mr. Charles Matthews, Mr. Selby, and Miss Gilbert. The costumes, of the time of George III, are perfect, and the mise en scène unexceptionable. The curtain fell amidst general applause; and, in reply to the demands of the audience, Mr. Roxby informed them that Mr. Planché was again the fortunate author. Another novelty in the evening was the appearance of Mr. Charles Matthews in Mr. Buckstone's part in "Box and Cox:" the piece was entirely different, but, at the same time, very diverting, keeping the house in roars of laughter.

The STRAND Theatre has been again opened; and this time for the performance of legitimate drama. Mr. Leigh Murray (who, we regret to find, has left the Olympic) is the principal actor; and he is assisted by several ladies and gentlemen "of great provincial celebrity," formerly at Hull.

A new drama of the old school of transpontine pieces, called the "Old House on the Thames," was produced on Monday evening at the STRAND. The alterations intended to be made by Mr. Shepherd in the management of this house will not, however, take place until after Easter. Engagements are pending with several performers of acknowledged position, and the co-operation of some popular authors is been promised

"The King of the Peacocks" came to the end of his reign at the LYCEUM on Saturday, having, as we prophesied, outlived all the other Christmas pieces.—The pantomime is "to succeed" has also gone out of the kiln. Those who did not see the admirable burlesque acting of Mr. Honey as Bluff King Hal, and the Clown of Mr. Flexmore, have something to regret.

The appearances of Mr. G. H. Lewes as Shylock still form the topic of conversation in the theatrical circles of Manchester. Some more elaborate articles have appeared on the subject in the local journals. He is said to be gaining confidence and power, and displaying great judgment in his impersonation

The annual ball for the benefit of the Metropolitan Ear Institution took place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday evening, and was very numerously attended by a highly-respectable company.

MUSIC.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

At the last Conservatoire concert, a new work by Halévy, the composer of the "Juive," "Val d'Andorre," "Reine de Chypre," "Charles VI," &c., was performed. The composition was in the form of a cantata—music being written to the first Book of "Lamothhe Houdard's Odes," by Fromental Halévy, brother of M. Halévy translating the words. The principal object of the composer was, as he explains in a programme, not to have the pretension to enumerate a style of which that poet was the type; but to give an idea in a chorus of the effect which can be produced from the use of the quart du ton, a characteristic element of the unharmonic gamut of the Greeks. The choruses were sung by Mademoiselle Hartigny as La Force; Mdl. a. Meyer, as Insanité; M. Battaille (bass), Vulcan; and M. Gueymard (tenor), Prométhée. The habitués of the Société des Concerts received the work with attention, but, like all the compositions of living composers, it was listened to with mistrust. The instrumental introduction created a great effect.

At opera, in two acts, entitled the "Postillon de Saint Valery," the libretto by MM Comte-Sainte Foix, and the music by M. Flotow, has been produced at the Porte Saint Martin successfully. a though the lyric resources of the theatre were not sufficient to do justice to the work.

MM Duponchel and Roqueplan, on Monday last, raised the prices of admission at the Grand Opera (Théâtre de la Nation) to the tariff which existed prior to the Revolution. This measure has been adopted on account of the forthcom ng production of Meyerbeer's "Prophète," the first representation of which is fixed for the 9th of April. The rehearsals are proceeding rapidly. Upwards of 8000 applications have been already received for tickets for the first performance. The scene of the opera is in Holland and Germany, a winter scene in the former with skaters being much spoken of. The story is selected by Scribe, the author of the poem is John of Leyden, the Chief of the Anabaptists, who was the hero of such extraordinary proceedings in Munster.

The performance of Donizetti's "Lucrezia Borgia," which Victor Hugo permitted to be played only for one night, was very unequal The part of the heroine was quite beyond Mdme. Ronconi's powers, but she dressed it superbly. The new contralto, Mdlle. Rapp, in Orsini, was quite a failure. The subordinate characters were very indifferently sustained, except the one which the great Labiche condescended to play, and in which he secured an encore for the prologue, by his prodigious voice. Roncoui acted the Duke very finely—it was quite Keanlike in its devolent energy. Moriani, the tenor, who reappeared after an absence of some years, also acted splendidly, especially in the death-scene, and his voice seemed less fatigued than when he was last heard. Flavia has appeared to the best advantage in "Il Matrimonio," with Mdme. Castellan; he is a graceful and lively actress. A Spanish lady who has made her début in Amina, but from fright at the c. is hoarse, and Castel an replaced her. The season will terminate on the 31st of March, but before it, or during it, will be no doubt glad to be freed for a while from the labour and vexations of management.

Alboni is announced for two concerts here on the 23d and 30th instant. Mdlle. Parodi, who is to make her début at her Majesty's Theatre, has just passed through Paris. Miss Catherine Hayes, who is to make her début at the Royal Italian Opera, is still here, labouring under the attack of influenza. She leaves for London the end of the week

Mdlle. Angri, Mdlle. Corbari, Signor Laval, Signor Tamburini, and Signor Tagliafico, have arrived from St. Petersburgh, where the Italian Opera season terminated on the 27th of February, and leave in the course of the week for the Royal Italian Opera. The Emperor of Russia made Tamburini a present of a magnificent snuff-box, studded with large diamonds, on the occasion of his benefit

Salvi, after the season, visited Moscow to give concerts, and will be in London at Easter,—Coletti has also arrived from Russia, to join the company at Her Majesty's Theatre.

Mdlle. Nissen, the Swedish singer, has just arrived in Paris. A concert for the poor of the twelfth arrondissement took place to-day at the Jardin d'Hiver. The vocalists, who gave their gratuitous aid, were Madame Castellan and Madame Ronconi, Labache, Ronconi, Morelli, and Morlans, with Allard and Franchomme as solo instrumentalists. Vivier, the celebrated horn-player, quits Paris this day for London.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The first concert of the season was given last Saturday at the Hanover-square Rooms, conducted by Lucas, the principal violin being Sainton. Mendelssohn's "Praise to Jehovah," and a new motet by Samuel Lover, from the Psalms, were performed by the pupils, chiefly from the sacred school. There was a creditable but not a striking exhibition of talent on the part of the pupils.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Mendelssohn's "Athalie" is to be produced by the Society at their Concert on Friday next, the 30th instant. In compliance with a generally expressed wish of the subscribers, the "Lobgesang" of the same composer will be repeated on the same evening.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—The second concert of the Amateur Musical Society took place on Wednesday.——On Thursday was the celebration of the eleventh anniversary of the Royal Society of Musicians, the details of which will be given in our next Number.——Her Majesty and Prince Albert will honour the second Philharmonic Concert with their presence next Monday, when Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" will be repeated by command.——The first meeting of the Musical Union will take place next Tuesday, at Willis's Rooms; and in the evening Mr. W. S. Bennett will give his third and last performance of classical pianoforte music; and Mr. Lucas's second concert of chamber music will be on Wednesday.——On Tuesday and Saturday evenings, Italian opera at Her Majesty's Theatre and the Royal Italian Opera, and English opera nightly at the Princess' Theatre.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

WARWICK SPRING MEETING.—Tuesday.

The Scurry Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 20 added, gentlemen riders.

Mr. Townsend's Mulford, 5 yrs ..	..	(Mr. Davenport) 1
Captain Peel's Yard-arm, 6 yrs ..	..	.. (Owler) 2

Won by a head.

The Trial Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 50 added.

Lord Strathmore's Sir Launcelot, 3 yrs, 6st 12lb ..	..	(Sabin) 1
Mr. Gordon's First Love, 3 yrs, 7st ..	..	(Kitcomer) 2

Won by half a length. Run In 1 min. 52 secs.

The Wroughby Handicap of 20 sovs each, 10 ft, and 5 only if declared, with 50 added. Gentlemen riders.

Mr. Archer's Teresa, aged, 10st 5lb ..	..	(Captain Little) 1
Mr. Parr's Miss Nipper, 4 yrs, 9st 13lb ..	..	(Mr. Baville) 2

Won by a length.

FARMER'S PLATE of £50, with £10 for the second. Heats

Mr. F. Robins's Logic ..	..	.. (Mr. W. Savin) 1
Mr. W. Gulliver nd b m by Coronation out of Matilda (Mr. Hughes)		2

WEDNESDAY.

Great Warwickshire Handicap of 100 sovs, added to a sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.

Mr. E. Heseltine's Quiver ..	..	.. (Fenn) 1
Mr. Archer's Teresa ..	..	.. (Whitehouse) 2

TATTERSALL'S.

THURSDAY.—Many of the subscribers aving been attracted to Leamington by the Military Steeple-chase, the muster this afternoon was small, and the business slack. There was considerable show of business in bets for the Metropolitan, which was the only change worth speaking of. The Derby cracks remain at pretty nearly the same prices as on Monday

	FORTNIGHT-HERSHER STAKES.
7 to 4 agst The Tartar	6 to 1 agst Loup-garon	20 to 1 agst Goodwood
13 to 2 — Weston (t)	10 to 1 — Yiza	20 to 1 — Woodbridge (t)
8 to 1 — Fernhill	15 to 1 — Gisella	25 to 1 — Vesta
	METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.
10 to 1 agst Dacia	14 to 1 agst Epsilon	25 to 1 agst Maid of Lyne
13 to 1 — Do-the-boys	20 to 1 — Executor (t)	30 to 1 — Mogador
	100 to 7 agst Clermont
11 to 1 agst Joe-o'-Soi	22 to 1 agst Slaucher	25 to 1 agst Inheritor
12 to 1 — Halo	22 to 1 — Ivanhoe	25 to 1 — Chantrelle
	66 to 1 agst Clermont
	TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.
6 to 2 agst Honeycomb	7 to 1 agst Nunnykirk	7 to 1 agst Weston (t)
	DERBY.
7 to 2 agst Flying Dutchman	18 to 1 agst Sir Hugh	50 to 1 agst Chatterer (t)
15 to 2 — Nunnykirk	30 to 1 — Strongbow	50 to 1 — Weston (t)
	OAKS.
	9 to 2 agst Escalade
	DERBY, 1850
	50 to 1 agst Windhound (t)

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English funds continue depressed notwithstanding the efforts of the parties for a rise, who, being disappointed at the last settlement, were under the necessity of borrowing money on its security to close accounts. To raise prices and sell is, therefore, naturally their aim. The growing entanglement of political affairs, however, daily increasing in complication, causes sales rather than purchases on behalf of the public; and, although on Monday Consols opened at an eighth improvement on Saturday's prices, quoting 90¼ to ⅜, a decline to 90⅛ soon afterwards occurred, closing, however, at the former price. Rather more buoyancy was perceptible on Tuesday, and a rise of ⅛ per cent. was quoted, but not maintained. On Wednesday, the arrival of the Britannia with at any rate a partial set of dispatches afforded an opportunity to the parties operating for the rise, and prices were pushed up to ⅜, for Money, and ⅝ for Time; but a reaction on Thursday again caused a decline to 91⅛, which, after some fluctuations, still further declined to 90⅞. This depression was caused principally by the Continental news, and the fear that Russia contemplated some interference in the affairs of Europe. Exchequer Bills newly exchanged have been done at 3s to 4l pm., and Bank Stock, with dividend, at 199 to 199. The other stocks are closed until after the payment of the dividends. Prices at the noon of the week were heavy at the following rates:—Three per Cent. Consols Annuities, 90¼; Annuities to expire 30 years, Jan. 5, 1860, ⅛ 11-16; Bank Stock for Account, 199; Consols for Account, 90⅞; Exchequer Bills, £1000, March, 89 p; £1000, June, 41 p.; £500, June, 41 p.; Small, March, 39 p.; Small, June, 41 p.

In the Foreign house considerable business has been done in Mexican and Buenos Ayres Stock. By the packet which arrived on Wednesday, intelligence was forwarded that a remittance of 500,000 dollars is on its way to the Mexican agents here, which, with the £136,000 already in hand, will leave but a small sum requisite to pay a quarter's Dividend. Stock has consequently advanced from 28¾ to 33, afterwards receding to 32¾. The advance in Buenos Ayres Stock arises from a communication forwarded by Messrs. Baring Brothers and Company to the Committee of the Stock Exchange, stating that Governor Rosas had recommended the representatives of the Argentine Republic to agree to a compromise for the last quarter's dues for Brazilian Bonds, 82½; Ditto, New, 1829 and 1839, 82; Buenos Ayres Bonds, Six per Cent., Account, 38½; Chilian Bonds, Three per Cent., 56; Danish Bonds, Five per Cent., Scrip, 1849, 79; Spanish Bonds, 5 p Cent. Deferred, 19¾ ex Cent., 19½; Ditto, Deferred, 4; Mexican, Five per Cent., 1846, 32½; Ditto, Account, 32½; Peruvian Bonds, Six per Cent., Account, 61; Portuguese, Five per Cent., 73; Russian Bonds, Five per Cent., New, 1840, Account, 104; Ditto, Three per Cent., Account, 39; Venezuela Bonds, Two-and-a-Quarter per Cent., Account, 29; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 12 Guild., 48; Ditto, Account, 48; Ditto, Four per Cents, Account, 77.

Shares have been neglected during the late fluctuations in the Foreign House, prices consequently giving way where sales have been pressed. At the close of the week—Aberdeen were 87; Caledonian, 24; Chester and Holyhead, 9½; Ditto, Preference, 12¾; East Anglia, £25, L. and E. and L. D., 3¾ xd.; Ditto, £3 10s., 3¼; Eastern Counties, 9¾; Ditto, New, Guaranteed Six per Cent., 14¼; Ditto, Extension, Five per Cent., No. 1, ¾ pm; Great Northern, 14; Ditto, Half, B, Six per Cent., 6¾; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 35; Great Western, 94¾; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 31; Ditto, New, £17, 12½; Hull and Selby, 90; Lancashire and Yorkshire, Fifths, 6¾ xd.; Ditto, Thirds, 8 xd Ditto (West Riding Union), 42 xd.; Leeds and Bradford, 98; London and Blackwall, 9¾; London and Greenwich, 3¾; London and North-Western, 104; Ditto, New, Quarters, 11¾; Ditto, Fifths, 8¾; London and South-Western, 37; Ditto, New £50, 29¾; Ditto, Thirds, 10¾; Midland, 78; Ditto, £50 Shares, 17; Norfolk, Guaranteed Five per Cent., 112; North British, 14¾ xd.; Ditto, Thirds, 6¾ x d. North Staffordshire, 14¾; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 21¾; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 13¾; Royat n and Hibdin, 35; Scottish Central, 24 x d.; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, New Guarantees, 9¾; Shropshire Union, 2¾; South-Eastern, Scrip No. 4, 7¾; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 25; Ditto, Orig nal New and Berwick, 24¾; Ditto, N. w Shares, Thirds, 18; Ditto, 1 N E Pfer ence, 7¾; York and North Mid and, 49; Ditto, Preference, 97; York & N rth Mid nd, East and West Riding Extens n, 2¾; Central of France (Or-Vierzon), 13¾; Lux mbourg, 4; Namur and Liege, 8¾; North and e of France, 10¾; Rouen and Havre, 11¾; Sambre and Meuse, 4; Tours and Nantes, 2¾; Andre-an Mines, 6; United Mexican, 4.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE.—Although the arrivals of English wheat have been on a very limited scale since last week, the demand for all descriptions has ruled heavy, at unaltered quotations. The few samples which have come to market have sold at full prices. The middling and inferior kinds have been easy to purchase. In barley, wat is nothing doing. Grinding samples have had a dull sale at former rates. The malt trade has ruled dull, at barely late rates. Oats have sold at stationary prices Both beans and peas have been almost nominal. Indian corn and flour have commanded scarcely any attention, at the long price of flour has fallen to 42s per 280 lbs

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 38s to 42s; ditto, white, 44s to 45s; Norfolk and Suffolk red, 41s to 43s; ditto, white, 44s to 46s; rye, 30s to 32s; grinding barley, 24s to 26s; Lincolnshire and Yorkshire ditto, 26s to 28s; Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 56s to 58s; brown ditto, 47s to 54s; Kingston and Ware, 56s to 58s; Chevalier, 58s to 60s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 19s to 20s; potato ditto, 20s to 22s; Scotch and Cork, black, 18s to 19s; ditto, white, 18s to 20s; tick beans, new, 27s to 30s; ditto, old, —s to —s; grey peas, 30s to 34s; maple, 34s to 37s; white, 34s to 38s; boilers, 42s to 47s, per quarter. Town made flour, 37s to 42s; Suffolk, 34s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 34s to 36s per 280 lbs

Foreign: Dantzig red wheat, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, —s to 27s per barrel; Baltic, —s to —s per barrel

The Seed Market.—Our market is in a very sluggish state for most kinds of seeds, at about last week's quotations.——

Linseed, English, sowing, 50s to 52s; Baltic, crushing, 38s to 44s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 38s to 42s; Hampseed, 34s to 36s per quarter; Coriander, 16s to 19s per cwt.; Brown Mustard-seed, 6s to 7s; white ditto, 6s to 8s; Tares, 6s to 8s per bushel. English rapeseed, new, £20 to £22, per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 5s to £10 10s; Foreign, £9 5s to £9 15s per 1000. Rapecake, £5 5s to £5 10s per ton. Canary, 50s to 52s per qr. Hempseed, English Clover-seed, red, 4s to —s, extra, —s to —s; white, 4s to 4s, extra, 4s to —s. Trefoil, 2s to —s; Carraway, 24s to 26s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6d, per 4lb loaf

Imported Weekly Average.—Wheat, 43s 6d; barley, 27s 2d; oats, 17s 7d; rye, 32s 9d; beans, 31s 1d; peas, 33s 9d

The Irish Corn Trade.—Wheat, 45s 10d, barley, 29s 6d; oats, 17s 2d; rye, 26s 6d; beans 32s 2d, peas, 32s 10d

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wh at, 18 6d; barley, 1s 6d; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 1s 6d; beans, 1s 6d; peas, 1s 6d

Tea.—Large imports of tea have taken place this week. The quantity thus received is about 5,000,000lbs. This has produced some heaviness in the market, but no actual decline can be noticed on the quotations.

Sugar.—All kinds of sugar have met a very inactive demand, and prices have receded quite 2d per cwt. Brown lumps are quoted at 50s, and fine grocery, 50s 6d to 52s per cwt. English crushed, dull.

Coffee.—Native Ceylon is steady, at 33s 6d to 34s per cwt. All other kinds of coffee are a slow supply.

Rice.—This article is dull in sale, and prices have given way quite 2d per cwt.

Fruit.—A large business is doing in raisins of full prices. Other kinds of fruit are dull.

Provisions.—Since our last report, the foreign butter market, owing to the increased arrivals, has ruled heavy, and prices have declined to some extent. Fine hay Ireland is selling at 98s to 102s, fine new milk Holland, 90s to 96s; and fine hay, 78s to 82s per cwt. For 4 cwt butter the average state, at twenty-eight stations, for the last week's quotations Cork, landed, first, 65s to 70s; Waterford, 56s to 62s; and Cork, 54s to 56s per cwt. In English butter complaints are general, and a considerable fall is noticed in the qualities. Fine Lane will it Dereel, 106s to 108s; inferior and middling, 90s to 96s; old, 96s to 98s per cwt. Fresh, 9s to 11s per dozen pounds. Bacon has met a further check in heavy, at 44s to 48s per cwt. Prime small Limerick, 62s to 64s; heavy 56s; prime singed Waterford, 54s to 56s and heavy 48s to 50s per cwt. The hams and lard are quite as dull.

Tallow.—The market is flat, at 40s 6d to 40s 9d per P.U. on the spot. For forward delivery the quotations is 6d to 1s per cwt. lower. Rough fat is 2s to 2s 2d per 8lbs.

Oils.—The demand is chiefly confined to house consumption, at rather lower prices

Spirits.—Rum is steady, at full prices. Brandy is dull, and Hollands and West Indies, is 2d to 3d per gallon proof. Irish and even spirits support last week's quotations

Coals.—Tanfield Moor, 20s 6d; Hetton, 19s; Hilda, 19s; Burnett s, 18s; Cassop, 14s 6d, Tees, 18s, and Hartley, 13s 3d per ton.

Hops and Wool.—Mondays buy, at 12s to £4 0s; other ditto, £3 10s to £5 5s, and straw, £1 7s to £1 12s per load.

Potatoes.—Only fine hops are in steady request, at full prices. Most other kinds are lower in value.

Wool.—A fair amount of business is passing in this market. Prices are firmly supported in every instance.

Potatoes.—The arrivals continuing extensive, the demand is heavy, and most kinds of potatoes may be had on lower cms.

Smithfield.—This market has ruled exceedingly heavy this week, at a general decline in the quotations of 2d per 8lb:—

Beef, from 3s 4d to 4s 8d; mutton, 3s 10d to 4s 6d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 10d; and pork, 3s 2d to 4s 2d per 8lbs, to sink the offals.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—The general demand has continued in a very depressed state, at the following prices:—

Beef, from 3s 2d to 3s 8d; mutton, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d; and pork, 3s 0d to 4s 4d per 8lbs, by the carcase.

ROBERT HERBERT.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

FRIDAY, MARCH 16.

WHITEHALL, MARCH 14.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edward Lee Lee, Esq., Advocate, to be Sheriff of the Shire or Sheriffdom of Perth, in the room of Robert Wagnam, Esq, deceased.

WAR-OFFICE, MARCH 16.

1st Regiment of Life Guards: Cornet and Sub-Lieut and Adjutant G Andrews to have the rank of Lieutenant. Lieut W G Earl of Munster to be Captain, vice Cavendish: Cornet and Sub-Lieut J C Lord Kesteven to be Lieutenant, vice Earl of Munster; R Bateson to be Cornet and Sub-Lieutenant, vice Lord Ideal

2nd Regiment of Dragoons: Lieut-Gen. Sir D C R O Buchanan

4th Foot: Lieut H Maunsell to be Lieutenant, vice Bolton. 8th Staff Assist-Surg R M Allen to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Mesney. Lieut C Mesney to be Lieutenant, vice Hon Da Wilton. 14th. Lieut W F De Winton to be Lieutenant, vice Lonsdale. 19th Assist-Surg T Cowan, M.D. to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Stafford. 23rd Lieut-Gen Sir Thomas of the Second Lord C Mulgrave to be Surgeon, vice Barr. 60th Assist-Surg N Buttfurnan, M.D, to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Cowen. 84th Surg-Gen D Gordon to be Deputy-Inspector, vice Story. 94th Lieut G Rodona to be Lieutenant, vice Maunsell.

Memorandum: Assist-Surg R Hart, M.D, to be Staff-Surgeon of the First Class, vice Wherrell, M.D., Assist-Surg J Watson, M.D, to be Staff-Surgeon of the Second Class, vice Millingham; and Assist-Surg S Bailey, M.D, to be Staff-Surgeon, vice Nash.

ADMIRALTY, MARCH 9.

Corps of Royal Marines. First Lieut W L Bayer to be Captain, vice Urquhart; Second Lieut C B Clarke to be First Lieut, vice Sapte.

BANKRUPTCY.

I and D ALLSOPP, Arlington-place, Pentonville-in-the-East, builders. J AYERS, Elham, Kent, farmer. W BRINKER, High-street, Angel-st, Strother. G HALE, Hoorgate-street, tailor W. G. and J. BOWDEN, Liverpool, Merchants. ROBERTSON and DOWNES, Leeds, Upholsterer and Cabinet, Essex, miller. J COSSINS, New Church-street, Portman-market, linen-draper. H WILCOX, Manchester, tailor. J PLANT, Birmingham, grocer. W PALMER, Bagnor, Berks, shoemaker, mine-merchant. T WESSON, Nottinghamshire, lace-manufacturer. J LIGHT, Wednesbury, Staffordshire, maltster. H ADAMS, Bridgetown Totnes, Devonshire, carpenter. J HEWARD, Gateshead, Durham, coppers-maker. T CRAGG, Blankpool, Lancashire, grocer G H HUMBLE, Salford, Lancashire, joiner

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS

R GRANSTON, Edinburgh, wool-keeper. W LITTLE, Schiehrahles, cabinet-maker D SILLES, Dundee, shipowner. J CRICHTON, Kelso, merchant T DEWAR, Crieff, innkeeper. G A ROBERTSON, Dentonly, Stirlingshire, stay-manufacturer. W K STEEL, Glasgow, merchant. J ROBERTSON, Dentonly, Stirlingshire, stay-manufacturer. P YOUNG, Glasgow, tavern-keeper. A BUCHANAN, Glasgow, gingham-manufacturer.

TUESDAY, MARCH 20

ADMIRALTY, MARCH 19

The following promotions have taken place consequent on the death of Rear-Admiral Thomas Searle, C.B., on the 13th instant.—Rear-Admiral of the Blue, Philip Browne, to be Rear-Admiral of the White. Capt W B Kendle to be Rear-Admiral of the Blue

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS-LIEUTENANT.

County of Sutherland: The Marquis of Stafford to be Lord-Lieutenant. Sutherland Leveson Gower, commonly called the Marquis of Stafford and Lord Sir-Chancer, to be Deputy-Lieutenant

County of Caithness: Henry Edward Frederick Sinclair Lambert, Esq, to be Deputy-Lieutenant County of Monmouth: Jean Arthur Herbert, Esq, to be Deputy-Lieutenant, George Cave, Esq, to be Deputy-Lieutenant.

WHITEHALL, MARCH 5

The Bishop of Chester has appointed Hubert Smith, of St Leonard's, Bridgenorth, in the county of Salop, Gent, to be a Master Extraordinary in the Court of Chancery.

BANKRUPTCY SUPERSEDED

T STAFFORD, the younger, St Columb-street, Pat Saltbridge, pawnbroker.

DIVIDENDS.

G MORRIS West Cowes, Southampton, broker. C LEE, Marlborough-cottages, St John's-wood, jeweller. J WAILE, high Holborn, Bloomsbury, Middx. Victualler. C GWIN, Harley-street, Cavendish-square, dentist. J WILSON, West Bromwich, Staffordshire, steel manufacturer. J WESSON, Nottingham, lace-manufacturer. W SMITH, Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, carpenter. E BROOKER, Cheltenham, carver. T B JONES, Rhosan, Brecknockshire, mariner. JAMES and Robert HARRISON, Leeds, Yorkshire, Cloth-merchants. T CARLILL, Kingston-upon-Hull, grocer. G KIRKE, Bryn Mawr, Denbighshire, lime-burner. R RIDSDALE and J CUDELL, Liverpool, Lancashire, ship-owners. D EDWARDS, Northwich, Chester, lucifer-match manufacturer. J LEWTAS, Manchester, cabinet maker

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

J CAMERON, Anderston, Glasgow, wine and spirit-merchant. J HIGGINS, Glasgow, baker J CUDELL, Liverpool, Lancashire, ship-owner. T WALKER and J MUIR, Kirkmuck, grocers. J NICOLL and CO, Dundee, sea-merchants. A GILLON, Glasgow, stonekeeper. J BROWN, Glasgow, sailor.

BIRTHS

At Fleagwyn, Lady Vivian, of a son—on the 24, Upper Harley-street, Lady Laura Palmer, of a daughter.——At 46, George-street, Euston-square, the wife of Dr A Helmuth, of a daughter.——At Bath, the lady of Capt. O'Brien, of a daughter.——At Grove-cane, Camberwell, Mrs. Albert Lumsdaine, of twins—At 30, Lower Seymour-street, the lady of Commander Cracroft, of a daughter.——At 39, Inverness-road, Bayswater, the wife of Captain Nattrey, late 13th Light Infantry, of a daughter.——At Stourbridge, Worcestershire, the wife of the Rev C H Crawford, of a daughter.——At Chilham, in Shropshire, the wife of the Rev H E Bunsen, of a daughter.——At Hampstead, the wife of Robert Browning, Esq, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At the church of St Nicholas, Arundell, James holmes Hopkins, Esq, Manager of the County Bank, to Sarah Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Ede, Esq, architect both of that place.——J A Baker, Esq, of Manchester, to Lathom, the eldest daughter of H Hyam, Esq, Upper Seymour-street, Portman-square.——At the church of St Luke-near, Southampton, Charles Desmima, fourth son of the late William Francis Barnard, Esq of Shemphish-hill, Surrey, to Sarah Maria, youngest daughter of the late Rev Joseph Hyde, Esq, of Wraysbury, Bucks.

DEATHS.

At Eaton-place, the Dowager Countess of Mayo.——At her residence, Alderley, Gloucestershire, the lady of Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Bart.——Formerly of Wykes Hall, Hertfordshire, and Deanhall, Wilts, founder of Leicester and Shaftesbury.——At Valparaiso, Mr. Charles Williams, aged 36, midshipman of H.M.S. Dido, Captain Courtenay, son of Lieutenant Williams, of her Majesty's ship Agincourt.——At Southampton, in the 91st year of her age, Mrs. Katherine Kenrick, relict of the late Mr. Robert Kenrick, and the late Sir Robert Strange.——Aged 11 months, E ness Gambier, the youngest son of the Rev Francis Maclaurin, Lecturer of St Mark's, Myddelton-square.——At the church of St Luke-near, Southampton, Charles Desmima, fourth son of the late William Francis Barnard, Esq of Shemphish-hill, Surrey, to Sarah Maria, youngest daughter of the late Rev Joseph Hyde, Esq, of Wraysbury, Bucks.

DEATHS.

At Eaton-place, the Dowager Countess of Mayo.——At her residence, Alderley, Gloucestershire, the lady of Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Bart.——Formerly of Wykes Hall, Hertfordshire, and Deanhall, Wilts, founder of Leicester and Shaftesbury.——At Valparaiso, Mr. Charles Williams, aged 36, midshipman of H.M.S. Dido, Captain Courtenay, son of Lieutenant Williams, of her Majesty's ship Agincourt.——At Southampton, in the 91st year of her age, Mrs. Katherine Kenrick, relict of the late Mr. Robert Kenrick, and the late Sir Robert Strange.——Aged 11 months, E ness Gambier, the youngest son of the Rev Francis Maclaurin, Lecturer of St Mark's, Myddelton-square.——At the church of St Luke-near, Southampton, Charles Desmima, fourth son of the late William Francis Barnard, Esq of Shemphish-hill, Surrey, to Sarah Maria, youngest daughter of the late Rev Joseph Hyde, Esq, of Wraysbury, Bucks.

DEATHS.

At Eaton-place, the Dowager Countess of Mayo.——At her residence, Alderley, Gloucestershire, the lady of Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Bart.——Formerly of Wykes Hall, Hertfordshire, and Deanhall, Wilts, founder of Leicester and Shaftesbury.——At Valparaiso, Mr. Charles Williams, aged 36, midshipman of H.M.S. Dido, Captain Courtenay, son of Lieutenant Williams, of her Majesty's ship Agincourt.——At Southampton, in the 91st year of her age, Mrs. Katherine Kenrick, relict of the late Mr. Robert Kenrick, and the late Sir Robert Strange.——Aged 11

NEW BOOKS, &c.

This day is published, price One Shilling
WAR IN THE PUNJAUB.—Three Months
Marches of Moultan. Illustrated with a Map.
By a CAPTAIN, 14th Regiment.
NEW WORK by the OXFORD GRADUATE
Preparing for immediate publication in Imperial 8vo.,
With Anthology by the Author,
THE SEVEN LAMPS of ARCHITECTURE.

Royal 8vo., sewed, price 8s 6d. cl.
CORRELATION of PHYSICAL FORCES.
By W. R. GROVE, Esq, M.A., F.R.S.
"The almost attempt of our time to simplify our views . . . . Medico Chirurgical Review.
LONDON: S. HIGHLEY

NEW PUBLISHER—COLLINS'S GEMS
THE JOURNAL of the PILGRIMS at PLYMOUTH, in NEW ENGLAND, in 1620. Reprinted from the Original Volume; with Historical and Local Illustrations, Notices, Pedigrees, and Personal . . . by G. B. CHEEVER, A.M. In fcl. sewed; 1s cloth, with an Engraving of the Pilgrims' Chapel.
GOSPEL STUDIES. By ALEXANDER . . . .
. . . . . ministrations in Europe
THE MANSE GARDEN; or, The Pleasant Culture of Fruit Flowers, and Vegetables, for the Beauty and Fruit of the Villa or Farm. By N PATERSON, D.D. Sixth Thousand. Price 3s 6d cloth.
WILLIAM COLLINS, Glasgow and London; and all Booksellers

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST ATLAS EVER PUBLISHED
On the 31st March will be published Part I., price 2s 6d, of ALLEN'S Imperial Countrie Edition of
THE ILLUSTRATED ATLAS, and Modern History of the World, Geographical, Political, Commercial, and Statistical. Edited by R. MONTGOMERY MARTIN, Esq., Author of "The History of the British Colonies," &c.
The MAPS are drawn and engraved by J. Rapkin, from Government and other authenticated sources; including all new Boundaries, Discoveries, and Lines of Railways, of which accounts have been received in London to the time of going to press
The Illustrations are beautifully engraved by Wallis, Allen, Rogers, Sargent, &c., from Original Designs by Warren, Gray, Meadows, &c.
Each Part will contain two finely-coloured Maps, with . . . Letterpress Published by . . . and . . .

ROYAL DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES.
BUCKINGHAM PALACE and WINDSOR CASTLE.—Now publishing, price Two Guineas, the COMPLETE SERIES of the PLAYS from 3 Supernatural by command, under the express sanction of . . . his Highness Prince Albert, and the Royal Family, at Windsor Castle; with Illustrated Title and Frontis . . . in Colours, representing the Scene Auditorium at the Windsor Theatre. The Plays of each Evening from the authorised copies, with full Lists of the Characters and Performers, and a List of the Nobility and Visitors present at each Representation.—"Lepage only printed."—ATHENÆUM. Books like to her Majesty, Royal Library, Old Bond-street; and all Booksellers

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—Mr. GEORGE BARKER will sing his favourite Song "THE OLD HOUSE AT HOME AND TELL" written by Mr. FRANK ROMER, in his New Entertainment at the above Rooms—Published by LEE and WALKER, 68, Aldersgate-street, where may be had "The Jovial Friar," price 2s, sung with unbounded success by Mr. Lofflier, and in the whole of the Month in "The Legs of the Farmer," or Sonny's Robin Hood," beautifully illustrated with costumes of the period, 2 Stanleaf

THE GOOD TIME'S COME AT LAST
THE RACE TO CALIFORNIA. A Comic Song. . . . a spirited measure, and dedicated to the Master of the Mint, by one of the boldest hands with a Showman Effect. Price 2s. Also of the above, the Song from Gordon Goodchild. Price 2s 6d. Published by ADDISON and COCKS, 63, Alexandra-street, Majesty's Theatre, and may be had this Friday, sung by Mr. Lefler in the "Legs of the Farmer," and nightly encore, with Portrait of Miss Poole in the Character of "Jenny Lind's Sleeping Lesson," with a Comic Scene with Signor Lablache and Mdlle. Jenny Lind in the "Puritani" and Sonnambula" by Brandard, price 2s 6d; and may be obtain'd of all music and book sellers

Oct. vo., cl. cloth, gilt edges
THE SINGING MASTER PEOPLE'S EDITION, at One Half the usual Price
I FIRST LESSONS IN SINGING AND THE NOTATION OF MUSIC. Price 1s.
II. THE ELEMENTS OF THE SCIENCE OF HARMONY THOROUGH BASS. Price 1s
III. TEN FIRST CHILD TUNE-BOOK. Thirty Simple and Pleasing Airs, arranged, with Words . . . . Price 1s
IV. THE SIX CHILD TUNE-BOOK. Price 1s 6d
V. THE WHOLE TUNE-BOOK Price 1s 6d
The 4 . . . Any Part may be had separately.
London: TAYLOR, WALTON, and MABERLY, 28, Upper Gower Street, and 27, Ivy-lane, Paternoster-row.

THE CHANTER'S HAND-GUIDE. By JOSEPH WARREN Price 8s, or 3s per dozen postage-free
"We are delighted to find that the Author has succeeded in reducing to their congregations the results could not fail to be most rewarding. Many worshippers never sing, merely because they are unacquainted with the mode of chanting."—Vide Jersey Times, Feb. 26, 1849.
London: S. CHOSS and Co., 5, New Bridge-street, and of all Music-sellers and Booksellers

Now Ready, Warren's Elegant and Complete . . . . in a Collection of CATHEDRAL MUSIC. Three Books . . . Price 15s 6d.

. . . . . price 3s., from 1 post, 2s. 6d.
THE SCIENCE of LIFE; or, How to Live, and What to Live For. With ample rules for diet, regimen and self-management; together with instructions for securing sound health, longevity and that sterling state of happiness only attainable through the judicious observance of a well-regulated course of life. By A. PHYSICIAN.—KENT and RICHARDS, 58, Paternoster-row MANN, 39, Cornhill; London.

TWO HUNDRED STEEL ENGRAVINGS for 8s 6d.—These Plates consist of finely executed Views, Portraits, and Historical subjects, selected from the various works, and all on sized the impressions perfect, and admirably adapted for the albums, Albums, Scrap, or other purposes, and forming an elegant present. Sent free by post on receipt of Post-office order for . . . .
. . . . . Warehouse

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWINGROOM, LIBRARY, and DINING-ROOM.—MR. TENNANT, 186, Strand, ... begs to inform his friends he has received a new and elegant assortment of . . . Figures, Vases, Candelabras, Inkstands, beautiful oxidized Tables, Paper-weights, Card-trays, and other Ornaments. These objects have been completely overcome in the above preparation, which is the successful result of experiments prosecuted during several . . . with patient perseverance, aided by eminent medical and chymical advice, and will be found superior to any of the preparations styled . . . bromo-cyanic or diastatic cocoa that are now being puffed off by parties at their own manufactories, but who have really no agencies for the purpose. The genuine article is sold wholesale by TAYLOR BROTHERS, at their Mills, Bridge-street, Westminster-road; and retail, and resell by most respectable grocers and tea-dealers in the kingdom, in lb. and half-lb. packets, at 1s 6d per lb.

PATENT GALVANIC PENS.—The action of Ink upon Steel Pens renders them soon useless by eating away the points, thereby making them scratchy. This is prevented in the Patent Pens by introducing a small bar of zinc, which produces a galvanic action that altogether counteracts oxidation either with red or black ink, and at the same time serves as a reservoir, holding at least three times the usual quantity, and causing it to flow freely.
Sold by all Stationers, Booksellers &c. three, and the kingdom, and at the Sole Manufactory, MORDAN and Co., 5, Hatton-garden, London

GOLD PENS.—RICHARD MOSLEY and Co.'s Gold Pens still maintain their character as the very best that have yet been introduced. Their lasting qualities are admirable . . . . . and . . . to fit . . . and with a fine nib, even at 4s. They have all the . . . . . Sold by all Stationers, Jewellers, &c. throughout the kingdom. Manufactory, 4, Bishop-gate-street, London.

SEA-WEEDS.—Any Lady or Gentleman . . . . . and being . . . . . lb.

ST. GEORGE'S CHESS CLUB . . . . .
. . . . . NEWS.
. . . . . ENCE INSTITUTION. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, THREE GUINEAS, which entitles to the Library, Lectures and Exhibitions. NO ENTRANCE FEE or FLABILITY. The RULES and REGULATIONS, with a List of the Members, may be obtained on application to Mr. J. LONGSTAFFE Secretary

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH COMPANY
. . . . . 166, Strand.
. . . . . London Bridge Railway Station.
. . . . . agents,—Communications of every description, private, commercial, and parliamentary, forwarded to and from the principal towns in England and Scotland for either of the above stations, at moderate charges. The greatest care taken to ensure privacy in the communications and all messages delivered to the parties addressed by carefully

WIMBLEDON PARK, now within . . . minutes ride of London.—Beautifully Freehold Building Sites—With 50 ACRES in the Immediate Vicinity, and Open Parade of FIELD GROUND forming the Entrance of Wimbledon-park, towards the High-road from Wandsworth to Putney-heath. This Lease is the most desirable Park Property which could be offered for the erection of Mansions and Villas, having a good supply of water, and overlooking the extensive and proverbially healthy neighbourhood of Wimbledon and Putney, within a few minutes walk of the Putney Station of the London and South-Western Railway, and of Richmond park, with delightful drives and walks in its . . . . Particulars, Plans, and Conditions of Sale may be obtained . . . to Messrs. DANIEL SMITH and SON, Land Agents, 99, ... Fall-mall, London, or to their Agents at Wimbledon

. . . . . 1st February, 1849
FRAUDULENT IMITATION.—S. MORDAN and CO. caution all Customers and vendors of Cedar Pencils and Cedarwood Lead . . . . . that the best and cheapest, ... is of the very numerous complaints S. M. and Co. are daily receiving of the failure of pencils . . . . purchased by them as . . . deceiving the Public, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that S. MORDAN and Co. are determined to apply to the Court of Chancery for protection against all parties who either MAKE or SELL such spurious goods.—Patent Office, Cheapside

SILVER SUPERSEDED by R. and J. SLACK a clyndical y-purified NICKEL SILVER, acknowledged to be the purest metal in existence, made into every article for the table, as spoons, forks, candlesticks, cruet frames, teapots, &c., at one-fifth the price of Silver. Send 16 postage stamps, and by return of post you will receive a sample spoon, fork, salt spoon, tea, or table, and three seal paper orders. Their Illustrated Catalogue may be had Gratis, and sent free by post.—R. and J. SLACK, 336, Strand

MECHI'S CRESSMEN, in Ivory, Bone, and Wood, 4 Guineas each. Lowest Cash prices for the best and cheapest, which may also be sold at his Bazaar, 4, Leicester-square, Draught, and Chessmen, in Antique Box of Pope, Castle and Bagdad Tables, Pope . . . Boxing, Work Boxes, Desks, Pocket-books, Writing and Inkstands, Dressing cases, Tea Caddies, Tea Caddy, Scuffle, Pocket Books, Razor Strops &c. Quality of all articles first-rate.

IRON BEDSTEADS and CHILDREN'S COTS.—I on Bedsteads, with dove-tail joints with no . . . cash. A large assortment of Iron and Brass Beds . . . which the attention of purchasers is respectfully . . . 112 LOK and PAGE'S, Bedstead manufactory, . . . Haymarket; square; also at 3, Queen-street, Cheapside, City; where may be obtained the new German Spring Mattress, and every description of Bedding, at Illustrated Catalogues, with Prices of Bedsteads and Bedding, to be forwarded by application, post free.

LIGHT, CHEAP, and DURABLE ROOFING
CROGGON'S PATENT ASPHALTE ROOFING FELT, approved by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, the Royal Agricultural Society of England, the Lords and Members of the London and North-Western, the Liverpool and Manchester, the Chester and Holyhead, the Norfolk, and other Railways and the Corporations of the City of London and Dublin.—PRICE ONE PENNY per SQUARE FOOT CROGGON'S PATENT BOILER FELT . . . . .
CROGGON and Co., 3, Ingram-court, Fenchurch-street.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The attention of the Public is respectfully requested to the Seventh Annual Report of the ROYAL LONDON BENEFIT INSTITUTION
. . . . . ensuing. The deposit details various important and beneficial provisions, the adoption of which . . . . . Lives and Annuities, ... Reversions, and has rendered it a . . . . . Institution, except the Government Offices.—By Order, WILLIAM OWEN HARRIS, Secretary
London Office, 31, Moorgate-street

CLERGYMEN.—The Fathers, Brothers, Sons, and other Relatives of Widows, Widows, Sisters, and Daughters of Clergymen are requested to observe that they and none others are entitled to join the privileged CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL ASSURANCE SOCIETY, established in the year 1824, for the special benefit of the clergy and their Families, and that the Society is protected that, by confining the right of making Assurances to such a class, larger profits were to be derived, of which said not a particle can, until the dividend amongst the Assurers. The next bonus will be apportioned to the year 1850.
Patrons. The Archbishops of Canterbury and York.
Trustees. The Lord Bishop of London, and Archdeacon Wachester
Chairman of Directors: The Archdeacon of London
Deputy Chairman: The Rev. Dr. HAWKINS
For papers and particulars application is to be made to the office, No. 61, Parliament-street, London
JOHN HODGSON, M.A. } Secretaries.

An amount of upwards of one million five hundred thousand pounds is assured upon life in the Society by the Clergy and members of their families as above

LICENSED VICTUALLERS and GENERAL . . . . . COMPANY, Adelaide-place, London-bridge.—Empowered by Act of Parliament
. . . . . CHAIRMAN.
John Musgrove, Esq. and Alderman, Chatteran
. . . . . Clarke, Esq. Deputy-Chairman
J. K. Hooper Esq. and Alderman Sir . . . . Esq.
. . . . . Wilson, Esq.
The public are informed that fire policies falling due at the approaching . . . day must be renewed within 15 days therefore
The Company has been formed by an eminent and influential body of proprietors, with a large capital and extensive connexions
Property of every description is insured against fire at rates and on conditions as advantageous as are offered by any other office and leases are taken of insurable risks.
Insurances for seven years may also be effected on the most favourable terms. The . . . . are calculated on the lowest scale consistent with the safe interests of the Company and the security of the insured, and may be unpaid by the payment of the annual premium, or in addition to the policy, at the option of the assured, ... to one half of the premium. No . . . . may remain unpaid for the first five years at the interest of 5 per cent. annum.
. . . . . Edinburgh, Liverpool, Manchester, Bath, Brighton, &c., and in the principal towns in Ireland.
Transfer of policies free of expense . . . JOHN BIGG, Secretary

DECLARATION OF BONUS.
THE CORPORATION of the ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE have declared a Bonus, to be entirely with the system of participation as Profits adopted in December, 1841, they have declared a BONUS on all Policies effected subsequently to that date, for the whole term of life, which were subsisting on the 31st December, 1848, and on which three or more annual Premiums had been paid.
The following TABLES shows the amount of BONUS on British Policies for the sum of £100 each, which had been in force on December 31, 1848:

Age when Assured.	Annual Premium.	Sums Assured and Premiums paid	Bonus added to Sum Assured.	Bonus by reduction of Premium for the year
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£	£ s. d.
20	1 17 6	166 7 6	100	2 10 0
25	2 9 17 6	209 3 6	106	3 15 7
30	3 3 0 0	262 0 0	113	5 6 11
35	4 0 0 0	322 0 0	121	6 17 4
40	5 1 0 0	317 1 6	133	7 14 3
45	6 8 2 6	371 17 6	149	10 5 7
50	8 0 13 6	445 7 6	166	14 5 7
55	9 18 7 6	548 12 6	189	17 0 0

Assurances may be effected with the Corporation for any amount not exceeding £12,000 on one life.
The Governors and Directors feel persuaded that the Public will continue to support the Corporation as they have done, and have maintained a high position during a period EXCEEDING A CENTURY AND A QUARTER; affording unquestionable security by its splendidly invested Capital-stock; and distributing among Life Assurance Members of the Profits, proportionate to healthy vigour, . . . which will advantageously bear comparison with those obtained from other offices.
FIRE ASSURANCES are effected upon every kind of Property.
ALEXANDER GILES
February 5th, 1849.

FINE HEAD OF HAIR.—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL invaluable as balsamic properties into the roots of the head, nourishes the hair in a delightful manner, . . . with, clearness from Scurf and Dandriff, . . . and imparts to it a beautiful vigour, . . . various redundancy, to the latest period of life. . . . growth of Whiskers, Eyebrows, and Mustachios it is . . . its stimulative operation For Children it is especially recommended as forming the basis of a beautiful head of Hair, and rendering the use of the fine-comb unnecessary Price 3s 6d.—7s.—Family (to the quan. to four . . .) 21s. and double that size 2l. 2s. per . . .
. . . . Each bottle of the genuine article is . . . the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL," engraved . . . . . and "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR" on the . . . . . Sold by . . . . . 20, Hatton-garden, London, and by all Chemists . . . . . and Perfumers.

BREIDENBACH'S AMANDINE, for WHITENING the HANDS. 3s 6d
86, Park-street, Grosvenor-square; and 42, Sloane-street.

BREIDENBACH'S EAU de COLOGNE, the same as distilled for her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent and the Abruzzi. This Eau de Cologne is so superior to . . . . . of Farina's, but the genuine article itself, and as such defies all . . . . Price 10s per case. 86, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

THE NICOLL, a PATENT PALETOT for . . . . . Changeable Weather Cloths; convertible from a warm to a light . . . . . in approved gentlemanly style, sent to Kerala To . . . and to London easy of the Patentees, 114, 116, 120, Regent-street; 22, Cornhill

CROSBY-HALL VAULTS.—PORT and SHERRY, each of very excellent quality, at 36s per dozen . . . . . Marsala, per quarts 41l 10s, or, 36s per dozen. CRISALL and SON, 33, Bishopsgate-street Within

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE, 42s per Dozen; Pints, 24s, from Epernay and Rheims. Gordon's Golden Sherry 24s per dozen, 30s per dozen, three years old. MOSELLE and HOCK. Purchasers, 30s, 36s 42s, and 48s, according to age. Pure St. Julien . . . Dozen.—HEDGES and BUTLER, Wine Importers, 155, Regent-street, Corner Beak-st. 60s per Dozen

DANCING TAUGHT in the most Fashionable Style by Mr. GEORGE BARNETT, at WILLIS'S ROOMS, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private . . . . . Quadrilles, Waltz, Polka, Cotillon, Deux Temps, &c., at all hours, to ladies and gentlemen at their residences. An Evening Class on Wednesday and Friday. A Juvenile Class on Wednesday and Saturday

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in . . . . . Pianofortes, by the best makers, ... from 15 guineas to 100 guineas. Every . . . . . warranted. Pianofortes to hire.—WILLIAM STREET, 27, Wigmore-street, London-bridge.

LONDON PIANOFORTE MART, 76, ... Instruments at £2, 2s, 3l, 3l, and 4l Guineas . . . . . ty of MOTT'S PIANOS, with his latest and . . . improvements, including the "New Check Action" . . . . ing," the "Metallic Grand Cottage," the "Mutium in Parvo," . . . Metallic Piano," the "Invisible Chorus," the "Double Dampler," and other Pianos

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. Every watch requires every implement . . . . . and . . . . . must not to vary more than half a minute per week. The . . . . . Jones's Silver Lever Watches, at 4l 4s, are . . . . . Jones's Gold Lever Watches, at 8l 8s, are . . . . . Jones's Marine or Chronometer, at 16l 16s, are . . . . . Jones's Electro Silver Watches, at 4l 4s, are . . . . . Jones's Watches, at 4l 4s, are . . . . . Jones's Watches, at 4l 4s, are . . . . . Jones's

LONDON CHARACTERS.—DRAWN BY KENNY MEADOWS.

THE GOSSIP OF THE "AIREY."

THE TAVERN SOT.

THE GOSSIP OF THE "AIREY."

"Well! did you ever now?" cries Jane;
"No, never!" answers Mary:
And quick as bells their tongues run on,
The Gossips of the "Airey."
What is the topic? Never mind:
This only we lay down—
Each whisper'd "He" a sweetheart means;
Each whisper'd "It" a gown!

THE TAVERN SOT.

With pimply face, and sodden, muddled wits,
The vulgar soaker of the tavern sits,
Body and mind entranced—a human log,
Bound by the potent charms of steaming grog.
The hours pass by—fresh glasses mark their flight—
Night succeeds eve, and morning follows night;
Till the sot's very soul is soak'd away,
From the gross heap of alcohol-steep'd clay.

THE CUSTOMER OF THE EATING-HOUSE.

A scant half-hour is barely snatch'd
From counting-house or shop;
A scant half-hour is all he gives
His paper and his chop.
Both eyes and jaws keep hard at work—
He can't afford to lose
A moment, who at once devours
His dinner and the news.

THE FRUIT-WOMAN.

The sturdy form—the very racy brogue—
And that mix'd style of dress so much in vogue
With dames you meet beneath the scented shade
Of Covent-Garden's flowery colonnade,
Proclaim the honest, humble Irish drudge,
Ready to furthest suburbs off to trudge,
Crown'd with your purchased flowers—hard-working Norah!
A somewhat vulgar—but a useful Flora!

THE CUSTOMER OF THE EATING-HOUSE.

THE FRUIT-WOMAN

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE. [illegible]

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 364.—Vol. XIV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1849. [Sixpence.

THE IRISH PERPLEXITY.

Those fortunate, and hitherto loyal, portions of Ireland that are peopled by Saxons, and that have some property to lose or to preserve, continue their agitation against the Ministerial measure of a Rate in Aid for the relief of the bankrupt unions of Munster and Connaught. They allege that they maintain their own poor, and that there is no more justice in calling upon them to support, in whole or in part, the pauperism of other districts of Ireland, than there would be in calling upon Kent, Lancashire, or the Lothians for the same purpose. They insist that Ireland is an integral portion of the United Kingdom, and that the Rate in Aid is virtually a separatist and Repeal measure. They furthermore condemn the policy of the Ministers, in attempting mere palliatives and temporary relief for the enormous misery and degradation of Connaught, while the main thing needed and expected at their hands is a remedy. There is a large admixture of truth in these representations; and although it is to be deplored that peaceable Ulster and Leinster should have taken up the business of agitation, it is possible, and indeed probable, that good will flow from it; and that sooner or later the result will be, not only the "Justice to Ireland" for which they clamour, but the "Justice to England and Scotland" which has hitherto been a stranger to their thoughts.

It is acknowledged on all hands that it is a hard case upon the industrious north of Ireland, which maintains its own poor, and does its duty by them, to be called upon to aid the overwhelming pauperism and bankruptcy of the west. But, unless the west of Ireland is to be abandoned to despair and famine, and to become a waste, the burden of the temporary relief and the permanent cure must be borne by property somewhere or other. We cannot draw sustenance for the paupers of Connaught out of the air. We cannot levy a rate in cloudland. Men of flesh and blood must pay it; and if the burden be hard upon Ulster, it would be equally hard upon any other part of the kingdom on which it might happen to be placed. "Take the money out of the Consolidated Fund," says Ulster. "Contribute your fair share to the Consolidated Fund," reply England and Scotland; "and then, but not till then, there may be reason in your recommendation." Ulster and Leinster have hitherto very conveniently forgotten that all Ireland has been excused from the payment of Assessed Taxes, and from the Income and Property Tax, because a portion of Ireland was very poor; and that they, the rich portions of the country, have been the gainers by this exemption. As long as the sole effect of what they now call "a separate national interest as between England and Ireland" was to relieve them of burdens that the broader shoulders of their fellow-countrymen upon this side of St. George's Channel were forced to bear, the now indignant men of Ulster were as quiet as lambs. They never considered it a step towards Repeal and separation to be freed from the unwelcome visits of the collector of the Assessed Taxes. It was all right and proper, in their estimation, that the man in England or Scotland who had an income of £300 should pay nine pounds per annum to the State, while the comfortable man of Ulster should pay nothing, although he had as large an income. As soon, however, as Government proposed a rate of sixpence in the pound, in aid of their bankrupt neighbours in the west, they discovered that the proposal was Repeal in disguise, and insisted upon a closer union with Great Britain. The men of Ulster and Leinster are doubtless the best blood of Ireland. It is a misfortune that they should be dissatisfied; but they must see that they cannot claim a double exemption. England and Scotland will be quite content with the defeat of the Ministerial proposition if it lead to a fair fiscal settlement and equalisation of burdens. If Ulster and Leinster deserve no harsher treatment than any other portion of the kingdom, neither do they deserve any greater favour. We know that they maintain their own poor; but they should not forget that England and Scotland do so too, with the addition of a large immigration of pertinacious Irish vagrancy, that will not be denied, and that overflows from their shores to ours. The argument of the men of Ulster, if it be valid to save their pockets from the Irish Rate in Aid, is equally valid to mulct them in the British Property Tax. Indeed, this seems to be pretty generally acknowledged, even among themselves. At some of the meetings held for the denunciation of the Ministerial project, we see that this argument has produced its effect, and that many of the speakers have expressed their willingness to pay Property and Income Tax, or any tax borne by England and Scotland, if, by their liability to it, they can escape the more disagreeable liability to the poor-rate of Munster and Connaught. Major Blackall's amendment affirmed this principle; and, in the subsequent debate in the House of Commons, on Monday night, Mr. G. A. Hamilton emphatically stated his belief that the proprietors in the north and east of Ireland were perfectly ready to submit to any just taxation, provided this question were dealt with as an Imperial and not as a provincial question. Mr. Corry expressed the same sentiment, and said he had voted for the amendment of Major Blackall, because he considered an income tax the less objectionable of the two alternatives, and advised the

EMBARKATION OF SIR C. J. NAPIER, AT DOVER.—(SEE NEXT PAGE)

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

Irish landed proprietors to accept an assimilation of taxation between Ireland and England, which would entitle them to look to the Consolidated Fund for relief, rather than be subjected to a Rate in Aid. We can but express our hope that the matter will not, ultimately take this turn, and that all property, real or personal, in Great Britain or in Ireland, will be called upon to contribute in fair proportion to the general burdens of the United Empire. With such a result in prospective, we should rejoice at the defeat of the temporary and inefficient, if not ignorant, policy of the Ministers.

The opponents of the Rate in Aid, both in and out of Parliament, raise very valid objections to the Ministerial plan—considered, not with reference to the pockets of the men of Leinster and Ulster, but with reference to the far more difficult and serious social question of the gigantic pauperism of the west. Even were the Rate in Aid agreed upon, collected, and distributed, it would do no real and permanent good. It would but provide a few scanty meals for a vast multitude of perishing people. It would be like money thrown into the Atlantic. The same cry of destitution and misery would continue to be rung in our ears after it was expended. The howl of misery would be repeated day after day. The drain would be incessant, and every drain would but teach the people to rely less upon their industry, and more upon the clamour of their beggary. We must not trust entirely to a Poor-Law as a cure for the ills of Ireland. No Poor-Law, however wisely or justly administered, is of itself sufficient to remedy such a state of things as exists in that country. A Poor-Law amongst an insolvent proprietary is but cutting from the top of the blanket to put a patch at the bottom. It does not increase, even by a fraction, the wealth of the country; it is consumed by idle multitudes as soon as it is received. The loan kine are no the fatter, feed them as we will; they would swallow up the fat kine, and be none the better. In fact, a Poor-Law is but a "communism" of misery in such a pauper-ridden country as Connaught—a communism which will, unless the number of paupers be enormously diminished, rapidly extend itself into other provinces and districts, not of Ireland alone, but of England and Scotland, which already feel a foretaste of what they may expect if this overflow of wretchedness be not stopped at the fountain-head. As we have already said, the evil to be remedied in Ireland is poverty—and the only remedy for poverty is labour. In the circumstances of the landed proprietary of the West of Ireland, it is useless to look to them to employ the people. They cannot do it. A mere poor-rate, with such a helpless and numerous population of beggars, may make beggars of the landlords, but it cannot make labourers of the paupers. Emigration, as far as it goes, is a relief to those who remain; but it is only a slight and temporary relief. To remove half a million of paupers would be a scarcely perceptible boon; but what agency shall remove such a number? Emigration creates no wealth for those who remain behind. It may, at the utmost, leave them an additional mouthful to divide among them; but unless it take away all the population except such a proportion as shall be no more than sufficient to cultivate the land, it would be of no permanent advantage.

What then remains? Can nothing be done for Ireland? Are the nominally rich to be reduced to the actual level of the paupers around them? Are the really rich to be "taken down a peg?" Are the paupers themselves to be none the better for the daily and hourly immoiation of new victims at the fearful shrine of this worse than Moloch? Are we to temporize and retemporize, and patch and re-patch, and do increased mischief in our well-meaning ignorance of the real evil, or in our equally well-meant fear, of grappling with a subject so stupendous? Or are things to be left to themselves? We know that there are some who in utter hopelessness are inclined to fold their arms and let fate do its worst; but such, we are convinced, is not the prevalent feeling of the country. Amid all the confusion and perplexity of Irish affairs—amid the angry warfare of contending theorists—amid the fears or despair of many, one plan, as yet rather timidly stated, begins to assume larger proportions, and to recommend itself to the serious attention of the country. That plan is Sir Robert Peel's. The favour with which it has been received both in Ireland and in England will doubtless encourage that sagacious statesman to speak out more boldly upon the subject. He aims, as a statesman should, at the eradication of this perilous pauperism. The empire has paid more than sufficient to alleviate or to pamper it. The time approaches when we must try a new experiment. Come what may, we cannot lose more money by it than we lose by the expedients to which, under present Ministerial guidance, we resort. In no case could the prosecution of such a plan lead to the demoralisation of the people, which is more than can be said for the benevolent but worse than Proudhonian system that is now engaged in assimilating and "communising" all ranks and classes of men in a large portion of Ireland. We trust that Sir Robert Peel will gain courage, and that he will take an early opportunity of unfolding his plan with more explicitness, and therefore with more authority. He may be assured that the mere attempt will secure him the respect and gratitude both of the people and the English parliament.

DEPARTURE OF SIR CHARLES NAPIER, G.C.B.

THE new Commander-in-Chief of India, Lieutenant-General Sir Charles James Napier, G.C.B., took his departure on Saturday evening for the Continent, en route to India, to enter on his important military duties in that country. Sir Charles J. Napier was occupied the whole of Friday week in taking leave of Lord John Russell and the principal members of the Government, and paying farewell visits to his numerous friends in the metropolis. On Saturday afternoon he had a protracted interview with the Duke of Wellington, at the conclusion of which he took leave of the illustrious Duke. Sir James Lushington, Viscount Hardinge, Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Ripon, the Earl of Ellenborough, and a host of personal friends, called at the gallant General's residence in Upper Berkeley-street, to make complimentary visits prior to his leaving England. Sir Charles, accompanied by Lady Napier and Mrs. M'Murdo (his daughter), and by Lieutenant-Colonel George Napier, Major W. M. G. M'Murdo, Captain Bunbury, and Captain Pitt Kennedy, aid-de-camp, left Upper Berkeley-street, at a quarter past eight o'clock, for the terminus of the South-Eastern Railway, at London-bridge, and proceeded by the mail train to Dover, where the gallant General took farewell of Lady Napier and his daughter, on embarking in the mail-packet to Calais, whence Sir Charles and the members of his staff repair by the shortest route to Nice to see his brother, General Sir George Napier, and to sojourn there only a few hours. One of her Majesty's steamers stationed with the squadron in the Mediterranean will then convey Sir Charles and suite to Alexandria. Lady Napier and Mrs. M'Murdo remain in England for the present. Both ladies have travelled all through our oriental possessions, and have witnessed some of the most trying scenes.

It may be proper to state, in consequence of some inaccurate statements having found their way into the daily journals, that Sir Charles's staff is composed of the following officers:—Major Pitt Kennedy, military secretary; and Major M'Murdo, of the 79th Highlanders (son-in-law to Sir Charles); Captain Bunbury, 32rd Foot; Colonel George Napier, Cape Mounted Riflemen; and Major William Napier, Aides-de-Camp. Major Kennedy is not extra Aide-de-Camp, as is stated by the daily papers. The conditions on which Sir Charles took the appointment, is that he be retained in India under all circumstances of an extraordinary nature.

The nature of the next news from India will decide as to the intentions of the authorities with regard to the further despatch of troops. The regiments now under orders are merely going according to the ordinary rule for India service, not because of news lately received. The two regiments in question will proceed to Calcutta, and not to Bombay, as at first stated.

POSTAL COMMUNICATION WITH AMERICA.—The Hermann steamer, which left Southampton, for New York, on Saturday, was the first of the American mail steamers that has left this country since the new postal arrangement between England and the United States, and some curiosity was manifested to see what effect the new arrangement had on the amount of correspondence to be forwarded by the Hermann. Hitherto the American steamers have only taken out a small bag of letters, but the correspondence mailed for the United States, to be forwarded by the Hermann on Monday, amounted to [illegible] sacks. The Hermann took out 126 passengers, about 80 of whom were Germans, and the rest French and English. She also took out 1500 cases of merchandise, weighing 425 tons; only 300 cases were from this country, 1200 were from Germany and France. The latter would only be admitted into the United States from an American ship on account of the present navigation laws.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

PRESENT STATE OF PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, 26th March, 1849.

THE last week has produced a very notable change in the physiognomy of Paris the old twitchings and throes, which, from time to time, still betray the disease within the body, have flitted over the face of the capital in tolerably rapid succession; and, although they do not necessarily predict any immediate convulsion, they indicate a state of constitution which is very far from healthy. The tumultuous scenes in the Assembly, the temporary secession of the Montagnard and its adherents of the Extreme Left, the refusal to vote upon the bill interdicting the clubs, the crisis that followed, and the open declaration of war made by the extreme Democratic party, its threat of rousing the "men of the streets" to insurrection, its defiance and its rage, commenced the agitation on Wednesday last; and although, upon "second thoughts," a great part of the seceders deemed it best to return to their duties and take part in the deliberation of the Assembly on the bill, yet the brand was thrown into the easily-inflammable stubble of public confidence; and renewed agitation, and the old alarmist cry, "Nous allons avoir quelque chose," have been the consequences. Nor has the confidence been restored by the truckling and would-be conciliatory police of a Government from which the nation at large only demands "energy and firmness," in accepting unconstitutional measures to mitigate and modify the more which declared the interdiction of the clubs, and in a great measure to nullify the effect of the whole bill; a very general sentiment prevails that there was great imprudence on the part of the Government in bringing forward the bill, which was sure to excite the most hostile virulence of the "Mountain" at the present hour, and before the present Assembly, when in so short a time a new Assembly will more probably be elected far more disposed to support firmly the most vigorous measures of the "friends of order," and then, in not carrying their point to its utmost extent, when once the measure was brought forward. The cause of "best-garden" attached to the rejection of the Assembly during the deliberation if deliberations such tumultuous skirmishes can be called, particularly on Thursday last—would be but a flattery and a compliment; "a person in an uproar" would convey a far better idea of the scenes of which the deliberative hall of the French nation has been a witness. The defiance bidden by the "Mountain" to their own Republican principle of universal suffrage: first roused the indignant exclamations of the majority of the Assembly; and, in the almost pugilistic encounters that ensued, Citizen Baringuier, "head bully of the Mountain," particularly distinguished himself by his menacing gesticulations of treachery to the country, hurled at the head of the majority, and by his incessant epithets of "liar," and "insolent fellow," applied to those of his colleagues who refused to condemn his violence. The suspension of these tumultuous outrages by the acceptance of a proposal to send back certain amendments to the committee-room, on the part of the Government, has restored the Assembly in the last few days to some degree of calmness; but the agitation of the capital has again assumed that revolutionary that, which, like certain aspects in the sky, known to the weatherwise, predicts a storm that may come slowly on the horizon, but that is almost sure to come eventually.

The movement of Wednesday evening, when those old revolutionary bugaboo suspects of men en blouse flocked down upon the streets of Paris once more, like first before the storm wind, and banners might be again seen to be carried hither and thither in the dusk of the night, has since subsided; but the anxious expectation has not yet had time to calm down. The event was a general rendezvous of fear among the bourgeois of Paris, that Monday was destined for an ultra-democratic manifestation against the interdiction of the clubs, which might have easily been transformed into an insurrection; but the day of Monday passed over quietly. Snow lay on the ground once more in Paris, and the cat-like temperament of the Parisian population is averse to cold and damp, even in the getting up of an émeute. The more probable reason, however, for the suspension of this manifestation may be supposed to have existed in the consciousness of the chiefs of the party, which has been unreservedly and frankly expressed, that "their time was not yet come;" in other words, that their preparations, and their expected success in propagandising and corrupting the military force were neither complete nor ripe. That some coup was intended, however, is very manifest, from the proclamations issued by the editors of the ultra-Democratic and Socialist journals, in which they entreat their "friends of the people" not to make any riotous demonstration on Monday, the 26th of March, and to calm down their rage (repressed for the present) until a better occasion. It is not necessary to dwell upon the insolent airs with which the party chooses to assume that ill. lie lower classes are at its back, to be led on to rise against the rest of the country, or not, at its will. The amusing enough is the old inconsistency with which these proclamations to the people, calling upon them to moderate their indignation, ascribes the undeniable agitation to the manœuvres of the Royalists and the subversive intrigues of a reactionary Government. That it was really the intention of the anarchist party to make what they call "an appeal to the people," and to make an insurrection on the day the bill for the suppression of the clubs passing the Assembly, is well known from the indiscretion of many of their boastful acolytes: it only remained for the Government to prepare for its defence. More than ordinary precautions, then, have again been taken; the military posts have been doubled, and sentinels cry "Au large!" to passengers in the streets by night, and do not allow themselves to be approached within a certain distance. The strenuous efforts made by the Red and Socialist parties to seduce the troops from their allegiance are unremitting. Their journals loudly vaunt their success, and the fraternal impressions, on every occasion, that it is their object that the army is staunch in "the cause of order." The exertions of M. Proudhon with his paper, Le Peuple, have been particularly notorious in this respect: the most flattering addresses to the military, and calls upon its feelings of "true patriotism," daily abound in this journal, and subscriptions have been raised to distribute the paper gratis in the various barracks. In vain old regimental names have been adopted, and the Peuple has been lately almost daily seized and confiscated for seditious and inflammatory language. These measures only excite the more the public curiosity. The paper is sold, and consequently sold [illegible] more. It is more important, it continues to find its way into the hands of the non-commissioned officers and common soldiers. The expressions of the papers increase in insolence of excitement in insurrection; and, in spite of the protestations in favour of the fidelity of the army made by General Changarnier, it seems that several regiments will be sent off to the camp of St. Maur, on the outskirts of Paris, to be more beyond the influence of these ultra-democratic organs.

The theatres, during the last week, have afforded striking examples of the increasing public acrimony of parties. It is the privilege of the so-called "reactionary" pieces, ministering the Republic, alone to attract crowds to the theatres; and authors and managers naturally profit by this disposition of the public.

S.

FRANCE.

In the National Assembly, on Wednesday, the discussion on the estimates was interrupted by M. Odillon Barrot, President of the Council, who, ascending the tribune, said, that the Government considered it its duty to communicate to the Assembly the two despatches announcing the abdication of Charles Albert. The despatches having been read, "However rapid was this dénouement," added the Minister, "it was not unforeseen; and although the Piedmontese Government in this circumstance disregarded the advice of France, we are, nevertheless, resolved to protect the integrity of Piedmont as well as the interests and dignity of France." (Murmurs and approbation.) M. Clement Thomas exclaimed, "It is rather late."

Some apprehension was entertained that a demonstration by the anarchists would be made on Monday in favour of the Clubs, and the organs of that party having also endeavoured to inflame the minds of the people against the Government, the Assembly filled its ranks, and every avenue was to be deprived of all public relief on that day—these fears, too, being aggravated by the attempted secession of the Opposition from the Assembly on the question of the decree against the Clubs—but the day passed away in impressive quiet. Precautions to prevent an outbreak, and for a few days preceding and subsequent to Monday large bodies of troops were kept, day and night, under arms. However, everything passed quietly on, and the streets were as tranquil as usual.

The Red Republicans now say that the whole story is an invention of the police; while the Government party declare that the republicans endeavoured to create a movement in the faubourgs, and failed. The Montagnard members in the National Assembly go so far as to declare that they have proofs that a complot was organised by the police.

A private soldier named Claverie, of the 9th Regiment of Light Infantry, was arrested on Saturday night, whilst on guard at the War-office, and was lodged in the military prison. He is a young man, and has been long publicly avowed himself a Socialist. Two sergeants of the 25th regiment of the line were also arrested in Paris on the same day, charged with a similar offence. Fifty-five artillerymen were arrested on Monday morning for having expressed opinions of the same kind. They are to be sent to Algeria.

Napoleon Bonaparte (son of Jerome), who has been appointed Ambassador of France at Madrid, presided at the popular Electoral Assembly which met the Hôtel de Ville, on Monday. A number of operatives were present, who loudly cheered the sentiments given expression to by the Emperor's nephew in a speech in which he declared his opposition to the reactionary tendencies of certain political executives.

In the National Assembly he has prepared an amendment to the budget of the Minister of the Interior, allocating a sum of 25,000f. towards the erection of a monument to the memory of the late Marshal Ney.

On Wednesday M. Bonaparte left Paris for Madrid.

The proceedings at the state trials at Bourges are drawing to a close. All the witnesses have been examined, and Tuesday and Wednesday were occupied in the address of counsel to the jury.

A woman named Leblanc was tried by court-martial in Paris, on Tuesday, for having taken an active part in aid of the insurgents of June, and for having mutilated the dead bodies of several Gardes Mobiles. She was sentenced to hard labour for 10 years.

ITALIAN STATES.

PIEDMONT ABDICATION OF KING CHARLES ALBERT.

The "war of Italian independence," as it has been called, has scarcely been recommenced, before an unforeseen event of the greatest importance has occurred, which may across its further progress. That event is the abdication of Charles Albert. The occurrences which led to this result will be found noticed below, as far as the scanty and confused accounts which have reached this country enable us to give them. Previous to undertaking active operations, Marshal Radetzsky addressed the following pithy proclamation to the inhabitants of Piedmont:—

"Your King, as you know, invaded last year the states of the Emperor, my master, in contempt of the right of nations. My victories had repelled that attack, which has no parallel in the history of nations; and yet I stopped my victorious army on the banks of the Ticino. Your King could have saved you from the devastation and the horrors of war, by accepting the proffered peace; but, instead of this, he renews his hostilities—and, led on by ambitious views, he again menaces the states of my Emperor. He forces me to place the theatre of war in your fertile fields. To him, and not to me, you must attribute the misfortunes that this unjust attack will draw upon you. I enter Piedmont with my army, to restore at least peace and tranquillity to the people. I cannot save you from the calamities which are inseparable from war, but the discipline of my army guarantees the safety of your persons and property. Do not take a part in the struggles of the armies—leave them to be decided by soldiers; otherwise you would aggravate still more the horrible evils of war, without a hope of success, and you would place me in the impossibility of alleviating them for you as far as is in my power. There never was a more unjust war than that which you have undertaken against the Emperor, my master; there never was a more just war than that which I feel myself forced to wage against you. The spirit of conquest does not animate me, like Charles Albert; but I come to defend the rights of the Emperor, my master, and the integrity of the monarchy, which our Government, that has made alliance with rebellion, lawlessly menaces.

"RADETZSKY, Field-Marshal."

The active resumption of hostilities commenced on the 20th inst., and the belligerents at once plunged in medias res. Both armies advancing from opposite directions to the Ticino, with the view of carrying the war the one into the others territories, and of ultimately occupying each others respective capitals Milan and Turin, viz. Charles Albert's troops, the former city, and Radetzky's the latter; they met on the 21st, when the first engagements took place. The accounts of those affairs are rather confused, and in some respects conflicting, but we are enabled to gather that they took place in the Piedmontese territory, after the Austrians had crossed the Ticino and driven in the outposts. The first conflict was fought near Galasco and Gambolo, two villages about half way between Mortara and the river. The Piedmontese troops are reported as having sustained the attack with spirit and vigour, and to have had some 1000 prisoners.

The more important affair, which took place on the same evening, near Mortara, was adverse to the Piedmontese. Marshal Radetzsky, after having crossed the Ticino, and passed by the bridge of Vigevano, advanced at the head of 40,000 men towards Mortara; and while, with the main body of his troops, he directed his march towards Vercelli, he disposed his left wing so as to cut the Piedmontese in two; and by a series of divisions of Charles Albert's troops, which were thus cut off from the rest of the Sardinian army, were forced to retire to the neighbourhood of Pavia. In order to re-establish the communications between the two wings of his army, Charles Albert was forced hastily to recal the 4th, or Duke of Genoa's, division, which had crossed the Ticino at Buffalora, and been pushed forward to Magenta, nearly at the same moment that Radetzky was crossing the Ticino in the opposite direction, at Vigevano. It was evident that his Majesty, in order to re-establish his communications, had then only one of two alternatives—either to retreat and endeavour to take up a position in the neighbourhood of Vercelli or Casale, or at once to give battle. The first plan was rendered difficult by the rapidity with which Marshal Radetzky moved forward to Vercelli, and he consequently determined upon at once attacking the Austrians. A battle was consequently fought on the evening of the 21st, in the neighbourhood of Vercelli, between that place and Mortara, the result of which was, that, after an obstinate struggle on both sides, the Piedmontese were defeated, and forced to retreat towards Turin, and the Austrians occupied Mortara.

Letters from Turin, of the 23rd, describe the battles fought on the 21st as of the most sanguinary description. The brigades of Savoy, Savona, and Pignerol conducted themselves with the greatest intrepidity; but the Piedmontese, it was said, had to have to do with the best troops of Austria, and suffered an inferior Austrian force to occupy that town. There was no fighting on the 22nd. The King's head-quarters were then at Novara. Marshal Radetzsky was at Pavia on the 21st, with his staff, and 30,000 men, and 84 pieces of artillery.

The King's army amounted to 65,000 fighting men; but the circumstance of the having, through Radetzky's operations, been divided by a distance of nearly sixty leagues, rendered the right wing, which had taken refuge in Pavia, paralyzed and useless. On the other hand, Radetzsky, who, on the day that the battles were fought, commanded 30,000 men, received 15,000 more under his command, had since received reinforcements which raised that number to between 65,000 and 70,000. He is at the head of a united and victorious army, flushed with success, and eager for a further encounter. The Austrians are at their resources, which he can call into play at any time in case of need, but for the employment of which it appears that there will be no occasion.

On Wednesday the French Government received a telegraphic despatch from its Minister at Turin, dated the 26th inst. It was couched in the following words:—

"THE MINISTER OF FRANCE TO THE MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

"TURIN, March 25.

"The army has been driven back into the mountains at Biella and Borgo Manero. The Austrians occupy Novara, Vercelli, and Trino.

"It appears certain that the King has abdicated, and has fled into Switzerland. The Duke of Savoy has not yet written to Turin. The Government have requested M. Abercrombies and myself to demand an armistice to cover Turin. We have placed ourselves at their disposal, and we shall set out as soon as they shall desire it. Turin is tranquil. All are prepared to maintain order.

On the same day the following also reached Paris:—

"THE FRENCH CONSUL TO THE MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

"TOULON, March 28, five o'clock P.M.

"Charles Albert, after having abdicated in favour of the Duke of Savoy, transversed Genoa on the 26th, at five o'clock in the morning proceeding to France. The Piedmontese army has been beaten at Novara, but its honour is safe."

The veteran Radetzsky, who is 82 years of age, it is said, entered Turin on the evening of the 25th inst.

Charles Albert was said to be at Lyons on the afternoon of the 27th, and it is added that England and France have proffered their joint mediation to preserve the integrity of the Sardinian dominions; and the Austrian Government, by its representatives at Turin and Paris, have accepted it, the Emperor of Austria having no object of conquest in view.

TUSCANY.—At Florence, according to the latest accounts, preparations for war were going on with the greatest activity. The Provisional Government had decreed the immediate organization of a Polish legion of 2000 men. The colours of this corps will be the Tuscan flag with the White Eagle of Poland.

Advices from Modena state that the Duke had retired to Brescello, taking with him everything he most values, such as jewels, pictures, the rarest manuscripts of his library. As yet, the Bishop, by his exhortations, has prevented an outbreak in that city.

NAPLES AND SICILY.—The Italian journals do not bring an official announcement of the rejection, by the Sicilians, of the ultimatum proposed to them by the King of the Two Sicilies; but a decree, dated the 11th, had been issued at Palermo, ordering a levy en masse, and other decrees and proclamations of a warlike tendency seem to render the fact more than probable. The Lance, a Sicilian journal, publishes a message from Ruggiero Settimo, President of the Sicilian Government to the Presidents of the Legislative Chambers, announcing the resignation of the Ministers of Finance, War, and Marine, Foreign Instruction, and Public Works; in consequence of which Marquis Torrearsa is named to the Ministry of Finance, Di Marco to that of Public Instruction and Public Works, Pasquale Calvi to that of War, and Mariano Stabile to that of War and Marine. At the moment of going to press, the same journal states that Marquis Torrearsa has not accepted the portfolio of Finance.

AUSTRIA.

There is little news of interest this week from Vienna.

Three of the murderers of Latour were hanged on the morning of the 20th last. Their fate seemed not to excite the least feeling of compassion in any portion of the numerous crowd assembled to witness the execution. The two other prisoners convicted of participation in the same crime were condemned to twenty years of imprisonment with forced labour.

From Hungary there is no intelligence worth noticing.

DENMARK AND THE DUCHIES.

The late rumours of a prolongation of the armistice between Germany and Denmark are being confirmed on all sides. The last German papers inform us, that the order which instructed the Bavarian troops in the Rhenish provinces of Prussia to march their troops to Altona, has been countermanded. The Prussian regiments [illegible] have received orders to [illegible] Schleswig.

GERMAN STATES.

FRANKFORT.—The motion for declaring the proposed ruler of the German Confederation States Emperor of Germany, constituting that dignity hereditary, and vesting it in the present King of Prussia, has been rejected by the National Assembly by a majority of 258 votes to 211. Count Maltzahn has resigned. The ministerial crisis, according to the latest accounts, still continues.

SPAIN.

According to the latest advices from Catalonia, Cabrera is about attempting to re-kindle the civil war in Navarre, Aragon, and Valencia, by detaching part of his forces into those provinces. He has already withdrawn 2000 men from the district of Gerona, the focus of the contest, and threatens to invade Aragon at their head. On their side, the Carlists in France and the above provinces, as well as those of Castile, La Mancha, Estremadura, &c., are not idle, so we may expect to see warm work in the course of the summer.

The entire force Cabrer [illegible] infantry, and 200 cavalry. Narvaez has instructed the Captain-General of Catalonia to adopt the severest measures against the insurgents; that is to say, to shoot all who fall into his hands, or such persons who hold communication with them, to collect the taxes with extreme rigour; to impose upon the provinces of Barcelona, Tarragona, Lerida, and Gerona, whatever extra charges he may think fit for the maintenance of local free corps, and to shoot, transport, and [illegible]. This savage measure, if persisted in, must lead to deplorable results, [illegible] the worst traits of the Carlist character will be called into play by it, and Cabrera will at length be forced to adopt reprisals.

POSTAL COMMUNICATION WITH AMERICA.—The Hermann steamer, which left Southampton, for New York, on Saturday, was the first of the American mail steamers that has left this country since the new postal arrangement between England and the United States, and some curiosity was manifested to see what effect the new arrangement had on the amount of correspondence to be forwarded by the Hermann. Hitherto the American steamers have only taken out a small bag of letters, but the correspondence mailed for the United States, to be forwarded by the Hermann on Monday, amounted to [illegible] sacks. The Hermann took out 126 passengers, about 80 of whom were Germans, and the rest French and English. She also took out 1500 cases of merchandise, weighing 425 tons; only 300 cases were from this country, 1200 were from Germany and France. The latter would only be admitted into the United States from an American ship on account of the present navigation laws.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Distraining for Rates Bill was read a third time, and passed, on the motion of Lord Campbell.

Nova Scotia.—Lord Stanley presented a petition from Nova Scotia, complaining of the removal of Mr. Fairbanks from the office of Provisional Treasurer, and of the manner in which the sum extraction of the colony has been conducted. In 1845, the office of Treasurer having become vacant, the Governor of the colony, Lord Falkland, suggested the propriety of establishing a rule, that no person having a seat in the assembly, or belonging to any party, should, in future, be selected to fill it. That suggestion was approved by the then Secretary of State (Lord Stanley), and Mr. Fairbanks accepted the office, on the express condition that he should hold his appointment during good behaviour, and independent of all political changes that might afterwards take place; and, in order to qualify himself, he had given up his seat in the Nova Scotia Legislature, and relinquished his practice as a barrister. His appointment had been subsequently confirmed by Mr. Gladstone, the Secretary of State who succeeded him (Lord Stanley), and the conduct of Mr. Fairbanks had been approved by the present Secretary, Lord Grey. But last year, a bill was introduced in the Nova Scotia Assembly to alter the departmental offices; and by this bill it was proposed to remove Mr. Fairbanks without compensation. Lord Grey at first resisted this injustice, and up to November last disapproved of the measure, as injurious to the best interests of the colony, and most unjust towards Mr. Fairbanks; but, after that, a marvellous change came over the mind of the noble Earl, and he came to the extraordinary conclusion that, as the honour of the Crown was not pledged, he was not prepared to refuse to submit the bill for her Majesty's assent, should the Provincial Legislature, by an address to the Crown, signify their desire to persist in the measure. Lord Stanley, having condemned this individual case of hardship, which involved a violation of the solemnly pledged faith of the Crown, proceeded to describe the fatal system of party government allowed to prevail, no check existing upon the chance small majority of the House of Assembly found in the Legislative Council, the Governor, or the Secretary of State of the Home Government. He pointed out the startling fact that 100 justices of the peace and other public offices had been removed by the dominant faction in the Assembly, and their places filled by party men; and he referred to the proposal for the rewarding of treason in Canada as a proof of the disastrous effects of the power of party government that prevailed.—Earl Grey said that it was only by a wise moderation, and by not straining the constitutional power of our institutions, whether in the mother country or in the colonies, that public affairs were kept from falling into confusion. He did not think it would be expedient, in the instance referred to, to insist upon exercising the prerogative of the Crown, and refusing the assent of her Majesty to the bill passed by the Nova Scotia Legislature. With respect to the removal of the 100 justices, he was not in possession of sufficient information to [illegible] opinion on that act, though he believed 40 of those whose names were struck off were dead men. As to the individual case of Mr. Fairbanks, he freely admitted that it was a hard one, but the Crown had no power to keep that gentleman in office. The salary of treasurer was voted annually by the Nova Scotia Assembly, and he had been appointed subject to the will of the Assembly. If the case were to occur again, he (Lord Grey) would pursue the same course.—After a few observations from Lord Brougham, the petition was laid on the table. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Mr. Hume gave notice that, after Easter, he would move for leave to bring in a bill for the establishment of county financial boards.

Lord J. Russell gave notice that on Friday next he would move, in committee of the whole House, that a sum not exceeding £100,000 be advanced, on the security of the rate in aid, for the relief of the distressed unions in the west of Ireland; and, should the resolution be agreed to, that it was his intention to insert it as a clause in the Rate in Aid Bill. The noble Lord also gave notice that he would move the adjournment of the House, for the Easter recess, from Wednesday week to Monday, the 16th of April. Likewise, that he would move that from and after the 19th April, orders of the day should have precedence of notices of motions on Thursdays.

THE NAVIGATION LAWS.

The House went into committee on the Navigation Bill.

On clause 19, Mr. Herries expressed his regret that Mr. Gladstone had abandoned the intention of pressing the amendment of which he had given notice previous to a division. He (Mr. Herries) should have supported that amendment, but certainly not with the intention of making it instrumental in any other design. He was as much as ever opposed to the bill, but should not reserve his opposition to a future stage.

Mr. Gladstone defended the course he had adopted with respect to his amendment.

After a short discussion, the remaining clauses were agreed to.

Lord John Russell stated that he would take an early opportunity to give notice of the day, after Easter, when the third reading of the bill should be moved.

RATE IN AID.

Sir W. Somerville moved the second reading of the Rate in Aid Bill.

Mr. Hamilton opposed the bill as unconstitutional, unjust in principle, insufficient for its professed object, and likely to give rise to separate national interests between the two countries. The honourable member moved as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.

Mr. Ossulston seconded the amendment. He believed that the proposed rate would prove insufficient, and that if once established it would be continued. He advised Ireland, should it be proved, which he did not think it could, that she did not bear a fair proportion of general taxation, to submit to an equalisation of taxation with England, rather than accept this Rate in Aid.

Sir Wm. Somerville urged the measure as one that was imperatively demanded by pressing distress. He trusted that it would be simply a temporary imposition. He could not understand the new-born zeal of the Irish landlords for an income-tax, and could only suppose that they wished neither an income-tax nor a rate in aid. He advised them not to insist on an income-tax; but, should they do so, they might have it—and then, what they had done in haste they might regret at leisure.

Lord Jocelyn and Mr. H. Herbert opposed the bill.

Mr. Fagan supported it, as the only chance he saw of saving the people from starvation.

Mr. P. Scrope insisted that the only just course to pursue would be to make the land of Connaught support the poverty of Connaught. It might appear harsh, but the principle of holding the land of the country responsible for the pauperism found thereon should be pushed to its extremity.

Sir J. Walsh also opposed the bill.

Sir George Grey said that it could not be denied that extraneous aid was necessary to assist the distressed districts of the west; and the only question to consider was, from what source that aid should be supplied. In his opinion, it could only fairly come from Ireland. He had heard that night no distinct tender of an income-tax from hon. gentlemen; and he could only gather two points from the observations of those who objected to the rate in aid—either that all assistance should be withheld, or that it should be drawn indefinitely from the Imperial resources.

Mr. A. Stafford drew attention to the curious fact that, during the debate that had lasted for several hours, only one member had ventured to rise in favour of the measure, and that hon. member (Mr. Fagan) could not be considered as a fair exponent of the opinion of the people of Ireland. The Home Secretary had not given the House any reason for this bill. The imaginative scheme propounded by Sir R. Peel had made some impression on the imaginative minds of the people of Ireland, and it was therefore the duty of the Government to take the earliest opportunity of declaring whether or not they had any intention of carrying out that scheme—whether they had any project in contemplation for the sale of the waste lands of Connaught.

Mr. M. J. O'Connell suggested the necessity of subjecting all incomes in Ireland to this rate, for he thought it would be most unfair to confine it to the ratepayers.

On the motion of Mr. Napier the debate was adjourned to Wednesday.

The House went into Committee of Supply, and Col. Anson moved for a vote of £97,984 for excess of Ordnance Expenditure for April 1, 1846, which was agreed to.

The Prisoners' Removal (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.

The Indemnity Bill passed through committee.—Adjourned at half-past twelve o'clock

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

Petty Sessions Bill.—Lord Campbell moved the second reading of this bill. The object of the measure was to place cities and boroughs on the same footing with respect to petty sessions, and to enable magistrates to engage suitable buildings for the purpose of holding petty sessions. The noble and learned Lord referred to the returns which had been presented, on the motion of the noble Marquis (Salisbury), for the purpose of showing the inconveniences to which magistrates sitting at petty sessions were at present subjected. By the bill, it was proposed that the expense should be thrown on the county rates—but only find on which it could be charged.—The Marquis of Salisbury and the Earl of Malmesbury opposed the bill, but did not move any amendment.—After some observations from Lord Stanley, the bill was read a second time.

On the motion of the Earl of Carlisle, the Out-door Pauper Bill was read a third time and passed.

Australia.—Lord Monteagle, in pursuance of notice, begged to ask his noble friend at the head of the Colonial department, whether it was the intention of the Government to introduce any bill during the present session for effecting changes in the constitution of Australia? and whether, in the event that such was the intention of the Secretary of State, despatches and other papers would be laid before Parliament, showing whether such constitutional changes had been submitted to the Legislative Council, and made known to her Majesty's subjects in Australia?—Earl Grey replied that it was the intention of the Government to introduce such a bill, and he had reason to believe that the bill would meet the views of the inhabitants of Australia. Papers on the subject had been laid before the other House of Parliament; and he had hoped that he should have been able to have induced that House so far to have modified its rules, as to have admitted of the bill in question being introduced in their Lordships House. He was sorry to say, however, the his endeavours had been unsuccessful, and that the state of the business in the other House of Parliament did not admit of the measure being introduced there at present.

Adjourned to Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

Notice of Motion.—Mr. H. Herbert gave notice of his intention to move, as an amendment to Lord J. Russell's resolution for advancing £100,000 on the security of the rate in aid, that an income and property tax in Ireland be substituted for the proposed rate in aid.

TRANSPORTATION TO SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. Adderley moved an address to the Queen, praying her Majesty, out of consideration for the honourable pride and moral welfare of her subjects the people of South Africa, to order that this hitherto unpeopled colony may be spared the disgrace and affliction of being made the receptacle for the convicted criminals of the mother country, whether as prisoners, free exiles, or holders of tickets of leave. The hon. member expressed a hope that, in bringing forward this motion, he had no grievance of a large and important colony, he would be able to do so without giving his motion the appearance of any personal attack. But he looked at the system pursued by the Colonial Office as one that, if persisted in, would lead inevitably to the destruction of the colony; and as felt bound, therefore, to make every attempt within his power to persuade the Colonial Office to alter their system. He desired to exclude all extraneous matter from consideration, and confine the discussion solely to the merits of the single question he brought before the House. The charge he made against Lord Grey was, that, having decided on a new experiment in reference to convict discipline, he had, in a grievous and unjustifiable manner, imposed on New South Wales, with the consent of the Legislature of that colony, and that he had commenced, for the first time, a system of transportation to the Cape of Good Hope, against the strong remonstrance of the colonists, expressed by resolutions, by petitions to her Majesty, and by memorials to the Governor. The justification of the course taken by Earl Grey was understood to be that, as the mother country had been put to great expense for the Kaffir war, she had a right to something in the way of compensation. This justification he considered an insult to the colony, and it was monstrous to urge it as an excuse for the adoption of a system that would deteriorate the morals of the people, and deter emigrants from going to the colony. Should the House permit this system to be carried on, it would amount to an adoption of the principle that we should make a retrogradation in colonisation.

Sir G. Grey warned the House against the danger of agreeing to the motion, which, taken with the speech made by the honourable member, would be tantamount to a declaration that the whole system of transportation was a debasing one, and that transportation, as a system, should be entirely discontinued. The right hon. gentleman proceeded to governments the class of convicts that had been sent to the Cape, which, he said, were not what were strictly called tainted criminals; but, for the most part, Irish boys and young men, who were led into the commission of crimes, in a great measure, by the pressure of famine and destitution which had fallen on their country. From this class of convicts he felt convinced that the colony would not suffer in the way they apprehended. But Lord Grey was not disposed to disregard the remonstrances of the inhabitants of the Cape colony; and, should they persist in their objection to the reception of all transported persons, he would not send any more.

Mr. Hume, Major Blackall, Mr. Aglionby, Mr. F. Scott, Mr. Hawes, Mr. Heywood, and Lord J. Russell made a few observations.

Mr. Hawes recommended the hon. friend not to press his motion to a division. His object was not to obtain any opinion of the House on the question of secondary punishment; and on the simple question of transportation to the Cape, he had received from the Government a very satisfactory reply.

Mr. Adderley expressed his contentment with the assurance he had received, and withdrew his motion.

MINISTERS' MONEY (IRELAND).

Mr. Fagan moved that the House should on the next day (Wednesday) resolve itself into a committee of the whole House to take into consideration the law relating to "ministers' money" in Ireland, with a view to repeal that rate or tax; and, further, to take into consideration the "Church Temporalities Act," for the purpose of amending it, so as to provide a substitute out of the revenue of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as a provision for the Protestant ministers in certain corporate towns in Ireland, in lieu of the annual sums now received by them under the act 17th and 18th Charles II., c. 7. The hon. member stated that he had prepared a bill on the subject, which he was ready to bring in should he be permitted to do so

Mr. Grogan opposed the motion, principally on the ground that the hon. member had failed to show that any substitute for ministers' money could be derived from the source he had indicated.

Mr. Osborne was prepared to abolish the impost altogether, and without providing any substitute. Ireland was a Roman Catholic country, essentially the same, and on what pretence could they, in the nineteenth century, call for provision for Protestant parsons from a Catholic people? As hon. members attacked the Government for not having acted on the principles they professed in 1835 with respect to the church of Ireland, and pledged himself, if the Government, or any Catholic member did not bring forward for discussion the grievances arising out of the church establishment in that country, he should do so at an early day, giving a proof of his sincerity by voting in favour of the present motion.

Sir George Grey was ready to admit, that ministers' money, as collected in Ireland, was liable to objection; but the difficulty he felt in dealing with the motion arose from the fact that no certain substitute had been proposed for the funds in the hands of the Ecclesiastical Commission might, at some future time, have a surplus, which might be applied to the removal of this burden; but at present there was no evidence that such a surplus existed. The right hon. gentleman, not wishing to give the motion a direct negative, moved "the previous question."

Mr. H. Grattan, Mr. Callaghan, and Mr. Keesham supported the motion.

Mr. Newdegate referred to the oath taken by Roman Catholic members, in which they swore not to disturb or weaken the Protestant religion; but if words meant anything, the House had the testimony of the members for Middlesex, Meath, and Cavan, that the motion of the hon. member for Cork was a direct attack on the established church in Ireland.

Lord Arundel and Surrey, in reference to the last speaker's observations with respect to the oath, observed that the oath was not imposing tests with heretics had been so repeatedly answered, that it required no further negative, Catholics being bound to keep faith with them in the plain and ordinary sense of the term.

Mr. Hume thought the feeling of the House ought to have been tested by going to a division, and was of opinion that there would be no peace in Ireland until the dominant church establishment was modified in some term or other.

Mr. Napier considered that, as no substitute was offered for the provision, it would be an injustice to agree to the motion.

Mr. Reynolds called upon the House to remove the plague-spot consequent upon the temporalities of the Irish Church, agitation with respect to which would not cease until that object was thoroughly attained.

Mr. G. Hamilton concurred in the propriety of the amendment.

Mr. J. O'Connell supported the motion.

Sir J. Tyrrell contended that the question of ministers' money was one of property, and not of conscience.

The House then divided on the motion that the original question be put—

For putting the question	..	..	..	..	..	74
Against putting it	..	..	..	..	..	72
Majority	..	..	..	..	..	2

The effect of the division, therefore, was, that no decision was taken upon the motion.

Mr. Somerton obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the Friendly Societies Act.

Adjourned at twenty minutes past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The House sat from noon till six o'clock.

A message from the Queen, by command from Mr. Spooner, stated that on the 26th of April he would further postpone the bill for altering the oaths to be taken by members of Parliament (the Jews Bill) for a week or two.

On the motion of Mr. P. Wood, the Affirmation Bill passed through committee.

On the motion of Sir W. Somerville, the Indictable Offences (Ireland) Bill, and the Summary Convictions (Ireland) Bill were committed, and all the clauses agreed to with amendments.

Landlord and Tenant Bill. Mr. Pusey moved the committal of the Landlord and Tenant Bill.—Mr. H. Herbert said that it was an instruction to the committee to extend the bill to Ireland, which was agreed to without discussion; whereupon Mr. Drummond expressed his regret, because the bill, having thus been made an Irish one, all hope of agreeing to its details, or making progress with it, was at an end. After a discussion of several hours on the first clause, the two principal topics debated being the best feeding for sheep, and whether pigs are cattle, Mr. Hewart moved that the Chairman report progress, which was agreed to, and leave was given to sit again on Wednesday, the 18th of April.

To a question from Mr A. Stafford, Lord J. Russell stated that he purposed to go on with the adjourned debate on the Rate in Aid Bill on Friday, and, should the second reading be agreed to, then immediately to go into committee of the whole House, to consider the proposition for the advance of £100,000 on the security of the Rate in Aid.

The Insolvent Members Bill was, after a brief discussion, withdrawn; and leave was given to Mr. Moffatt, who had it in charge, to introduce a new measure, under the title of "A bill to facilitate the recovery of debts from certain persons having the privilege of Parliament, and to prevent insolvent persons from sitting in Parliament."—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

THE MAGISTRACY OF STOCKPORT.

Lord Stanley, in presenting a petition from Stockport, complaining of certain recent appointments among the borough magistracy there, took occasion to condemn those appointments as having been caused solely by political influence.

The Lord Chancellor defended himself from the imputation conveyed in the noble Lord's remarks. In all appointments of the kind, the persons generally recommended for the office were of the same politics as the Government of the day, and that was the case undoubtedly in the present instance; but it was not that circumstance which had weighed with him in the appointment, but solely merit and fitness, and the wants of the population of Stockport, who, having greatly increased of late, required a fuller bench of magistrates. His subject then dropped.

NATIONAL EDUCATION.—(IRELAND.)

The Lord Bishop of Cashel inquired whether the Committee of Council on Education having laid down rules whereby they can give to schools in England, of all denominations, including Roman Catholics, assistance from the State, the Government is prepared to act upon the principle of those rules, [illegible] to the schools in connexion with the Established Church in Ireland an equal measure of assistance, without requiring any condition to which the members of the Church find themselves in conscience forced to object.

The Marquis of Lansdowne said it certainly was not the intention of the Government to apply to Ireland the same regulations with respect to National Education in Ireland, which were now in course of application in England. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

SAVINGS BANKS IN IRELAND.

Mr. Reynolds moved for a select committee to inquire into and report upon the circumstances connected with the failure of the St. Peter's Parish Savings Bank, in Cuffe-street, Dublin, and into any security or liability that may exist for the satisfaction of the losses thereby occasioned.

Mr. H. Herbert moved, as an amendment, that the inquiry be extended to the failure of the savings banks of Tralee, Killarney, and Auchterarder (Scotland).

The Chancellor of the Exchequer opposed both the motion and the amendment, as the inquiry could be attended with no advantage to the parties now deposited. The Government had contemplated introducing a general measure on the subject of savings banks, in consequence of the inquiries which the interests involved in them had assumed

After some discussion the House divided on the amendment, which was carried by a majority of 49 to 42. The amendment was then incorporated with the motion, and on a division it was carried by a majority of 51 to 48.

Adjourned.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD

The nominations of Mr. Powles, of Exeter, to be an examiner in Lit. Hum., and of Mr. Walker, of Wadham, to be an examiner in Disc. Math. et Phys., were unanimously approved.

Dean Ireland's Scholarship.—The examiners appointed for this scholarship have signified to the Vice-Chancellor that they have elected Maurice Day, scholar of University (in the county of Exeter), to the vacant scholarship on the Ireland foundation. Mr. Day was Hertford scholar for 1841.

Lusby Scholarship.—Wm. Allan Russell, commoner of Queen's, was this day elected to a Lusby scholarship at Magdalen-hall.

Corpus Christi College.—The following gentlemen have been elected for the vacant scholarships at this College:—Frederick Wm. Walker, from Rugby, for the Surrey scholarship; Bingham Salthorp Mallet, for the Hampshire scholarship; Arthur Henry Pearse, from Bedford school, for the Bedford scholarship.

The examiners appointed for the University Mathematical Scholarships have announced to the Vice-Chancellor that they have elected Francis John Otty, B.A., of Trinity College, to be senior scholar; and Edgar Hyde, scholar of Corpus, to be junior scholar

The compositions for the Chancellor's and for Sir Roger Newdigate's prizes are to come on before the 31st of this month.

The following are the principal changes made in the examination system by those parts of the proposed statute which were approved of by convocation last Tuesday:—There are to be two examinations for the degree, besides responsions. Seven examiners (called moderators) are to be appointed for the first examination, four for the school of Literæ Humaniores, and three for that of mathematics. This examination must be gone through between the eighth and twelfth terms. The names of all those who pass are to be published in alphabetical order. In the second and final examination, in addition to the present schools of Literæ Humaniores and mathematics, there is to be a school of natural science, and every candidate for a degree must pass through two of these, but not necessarily in the same term. Every one, also, who presents himself for examination, must produce certificates of attendance on two courses of professorial lectures. The names of all successful candidates are to be published. No one is to be placed in the second class who has not exceeded the 16th term from matriculation. Responsions are to be held twice in the year, and must be gone through in any term from the third to the seventh. One Latin and one Greek book must be taken up, together with arithmetic, algebra, and Books I. and II. of Euclid—instead of, as hitherto, the candidate having a choice between logic and three books of Euclid. The periods at which these changes are to come into operation are not yet fixed.

CAMBRIDGE

The Jacksonian Professor has given notice that on Tuesday, April 24, at 12 o'clock, he will commence a course of ten lectures, at the great room of the Philosophical Society, on ecclesiastical architecture. The lectures will be delivered every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

The Plumian Professor has given notice that he will commence a course of lectures on practical astronomy and astronomical instruments on Monday, April 23, at one o'clock, in the room under the University library.

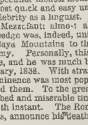
These lectures will be followed by a course on optics, hydrostatics, and pneumatics, commencing on Monday, May 7, at one o'clock, in the same room.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR ANTHONY LECHMERE, BART., OF THE RHYDD, CO. WORCESTER.

This venerable and respected gentleman died on the 19th inst., aged eighty-two, at the Rhydd. He was son of the late Edmund Lechmere, Esq., of Severn End, M.P. for Worcestershire in 1734, by Elizabeth, his second wife, daughter of the Rev. John Whitmore, of Penny Compton, co. Warwick, and grandson of Anthony Lechmere, Esq., M.P. of Hanley Castle, eldest brother of the celebrated lawyer, Nicholas Lord Lechmere, of Evesham. The family of Lechmere is one of the oldest in the Kingdom, being descended from Acelyne de Lechmere, who acquired from William the Conqueror a grant of lands in Hanley, co. Worcester. The worthy Baronet was twice married, first, 19th May, 1787, Mary, daughter and heir of Joseph Berwick, Esq., of Hallow Park, co. Worcester; and secondly, Sept. 8, 1823, Miss Eleanor Villiers, of Gloucester; by the former of whom he has left issue, the eldest son being the present Sir Edmund Hungerford Lechmere, Bart., who married, in 1815, Maria, daughter of the late Rev. D. Murray, and has issue.

PHILIP DUNCOMBE PAUNCEFORT DUNCOMBE, ESQ., OF GREAT BRICKHILL MANOR, BUCKS.



The decease of this gentleman, a landed proprietor of considerable wealth and fortune in the counties of Buckingham and Lincoln, occurred last week. He was born 16th July, 1784, the only son of George Pauncefort, Esq., of Witham, county Lincoln, by Henrietta, his wife, younger daughter and co-heir of James Digby, Esq., of Red Hall, second son of Edward, fourth Baron Digby, of Eye, Kettleby, who was knighted for his gallantry at the battle of Bosworth. Paternally, Mr. Pauncefort Duncombe descended from the very ancient Gloucestershire family of Pauncefort, of Hasfield. He married, first, 8th January, 1818, Lady Alicia Lambart, daughter of Richard, Earl of Cavan, and, secondly, 21st August, 1823, Sophia Frances, daughter of the late Sir William Foulis, Bart., of Ingleby Manor. By the former (who died 3rd April, 1818), he has left a son and successor, Philip Duncombe, born 5th January, 1818. The [illegible] Sir William Foulis, Bart., died [illegible]

MISS TAIL, OF BURLEIGH PARK, COUNTY LEICESTER.

This lady, an heiress of large fortune in the counties of Leicester and Hants, was the only child of the late George Tate, Esq., of Burleigh Park and Langdown, who derived in a direct descent from Anthony Tate, Esq., of Ilsley, second son of Sir Barthol omew Tate, of Delapre Abbey, county Northampton, Vice-Marshal of Calais temp. Henry VIII. Miss Tate succeeded to the family estates in 1822, at the death of her father.

CARDINAL MEZZOFANTI.

This eminent member of the Sacred College was born at Bologna, the 19th September, 1774. His early in life took holy orders; and, during Bonaparte's invasion of Italy, he was Chaplain to the hospitals of his native city, which were then overrun and filled with foreign soldiery. To enable him to confer spiritual assistance on these unfortunate men, he was obliged to apply to the study of different modern languages. While thus occupied, he discovered that, by some peculiar mental faculty, the acquirement of any given dialect was to him the most quick and easy undertaking imaginable. Hence his amazing skill and his celebrity as a linguist.

To Mezzofanti almost all the languages of the globe became familiar, his knowledge was, indeed, universal; there was scarcely a spoken jargon, from the Himalaya Mountains to the Andes, of which he had not made a comparative anatomy. Personally, this learned and gifted priest was most amiable and affable, and he was much believed in Rome. He was made a Cardinal the 12th February, 1838. With strangers, of whatsoever creed, visiting the Eternal City, his Eminence was most popular, from the ever ready courtesy and attention he showed them. To the great regret of all parties, however, he expired during this disturbed and miserable time at Rome, Cardinal Mezzofanti departed this life on the 16th instant. The Roman journals, even including those of ultra-Radical politics, announce his death with a broad mourning border.

WILLIAM MOORE, ESQ., OF MOORE-HILL, COUNTY WATERFORD

The death of this gentleman, a kind and most benevolent landlord, occurred at his seat, Moore-hill, on the 4th inst. Mr. Moore was son of the late Rev. William Moore, and grandson of Stephen, first Viscount Mountcashell. He married in 1812, Mary, eldest daughter of the Hon. and Rev. Robert Moore, and has left one son and one daughter, viz. William, born in 1815, and Emma, both of whom are married; the latter being the wife of Robert Percival Maxwell, Esq., of Finnebrogue, county Down.

THE KING OF HOLLAND.

IN OUR Journal of last week we recorded the death of his Majesty, King William II. ; and the departure of his successor, the Prince of Orange, from London for the Hague.

His Majesty William III. arrived on the morning of the 21st, at eight o'clock, at Helvoetsluys, on board the Cyclops steamer, from London. By the wishes of his Majesty, every public demonstration and ceremony was dispensed with, on account of his grief and the sorrow of the whole nation. The King and Queen reached the Hague at two o'clock, in a plain travelling carriage, but they were immediately recognized, and were cheered by the crowd till they reached the Palace of Pieta. As soon as his Majesty arrived, Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, followed almost immediately by his august consort, repaired to meet his brother. All the ministers assembled in council at the Palace at four o'clock. In the course of the same evening, his Majesty issued the following proclamation on his ascent to the throne :—

"We, William III., by the grace of God King of the Netherlands, Prince of Orange Nassau, Grand Duke of Luxembourg, &c.—My well-beloved countrymen and subjects, of every rank and every condition,—Called to the throne by the death of my august father, whose memory is so justly dear, I deeply feel the importance of the task which devolves upon me. In firm reliance upon God, and filled with confidence in my people, who are so devotedly attached to my house, I take into my hands the reins of Government. It is my first act to issue this solemn declaration in my residentiary city, although a sacred and melancholy duty calls me elsewhere without delay. William I. accepted the sovereign power which was to be carried out according to a constitution. William II., in concert with the national representatives, modified the fundamental law according to the requirements of the times. It is my mission in the same spirit to give the fundamental law its complete force. For the accomplishment of this mission I confidently depend upon the faithful concurrence of all the constitutional powers. I retain in their present functions all the officers of the army and navy, and the communal guard, whatever be their rank or station. Men of the Netherlands, remain faithful to the motto of your ancestors, 'Union is strength,' and strive with me for liberty by submission to the laws. We desire and command that the present decree be promulgated at a public and solemn audience of the High Court of the Netherlands, at the provincial courts and tribunals of the circuits, and that it be farther affixed, according to usage, in all public places, and inserted in the official journal.—Done at the Hague, March 21st, 1849.

"(Signed), WILLIAM. (Countersigned), the Minister of Marine, J. C. RIJK ; the Minister of Justice, D. DONKER CURTIUS ; the Minister for Foreign Affairs, LEZENTEVAN ; the Minister of the Interior, J. M. DE KEMPENAERE ; the Minister of War, FOUT ; the Minister of Finance, VAN BOSSE ; the Minister of the Colonies, G. J. BAUD."

After the completion of the above act, his Majesty quitted the Hague at 10 o'clock at night for Tilburg, whence he returned on the morning of the 23rd. After his return his Majesty issued a Royal mandate, calling upon all the people of the Netherlands, of all denominations, to unite in public prayer on Sunday for the special blessing of Divine Providence upon the reign just commenced.

On Tuesday morning, the English Ambassador at the Hague, accompanied by the other members of the Diplomatic Corps, presented an address of condolence and homage to his Majesty, who having returned a gracious reply, immediately received, at the same audience, an address from the First Chamber

The King has addressed a Royal rescript to the Government of the Duchy of Luxembourg, informing them of the death of his father, and of his own accession, and of his consequent readiness to accept the hereditary constitutional powers, and to take the oath prescribed by the constitution : in expectation that the Luxembourg Government will immediately convoke the Chamber of Deputies, and wait upon his Majesty and receive his oath.

This rescript was published in the Grand Duchy, with a proclamation from the local Government, stating that steps had already been taken to convoke the Chambers.

All the generals in active service and in the residence, the aides-de-camp of his Majesty and his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal, as well as all the chiefs and officers of the staff, have taken the oath at the hand of his Majesty. The other officers, in the presence of the troops, who were assembled for the same purpose, took the oath at the hand of the Minister of War. The taking of the oath was preceded by reading the proclamation, which has now been generally published.

In conformity with the circular addressed to the Ministers of religion, public prayers were offered in the churches of every religious persuasion, for the blessing of Divine Providence on the reign of his Majesty King William III. ; the churches were thronged ; and while many tears were shed in memory of the late beloved Monarch, frequent prayers were offered for the happiness of the new King.

A committee has been formed for the purpose of erecting by voluntary contributions a statue in memory of King William II. Sub-committees will be formed throughout the country. The painters of the Netherlands have agreed to adopt a particular badge of mourning. They have addressed the Masters of the Ceremonies, and request that a deputation, chosen from among themselves, may be permitted to attend the funeral.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER PAUL FREDERIC LOUIS (whose portrait we have engraved from a Sketch taken just before his Majesty's departure from London), eldest son of the late King, was born on the 19th of February, 1817, and has, consequently, just entered his 33rd year. He married, in 1839, the Princess Sophia Frederica Matilda, daughter of William I., King of Wurtemburg, by whom he has a son and daughter.

WILLIAM III., KING OF HOLLAND.

THE ROYAL PALACE.

The Hague, the capital of the province of South Holland, seems to have owed its origin to a hunting-seat of the Counts of Holland in the wood Haag, which, however, so early as 1250, became a palace, round which many other houses were soon erected. In the sixteenth century the Hague became the residence of the States-General of the States of Holland, the Stadtholder, and the foreign ambassadors. In the course of the seventeenth century it was gradually enlarged ; and at the commencement of the eighteenth century was the centre of the most important diplomatic negotiations. The prosperity of the Hague was very materially injured by the Revolution in 1795, and afterwards by the Government of Louis Bonaparte, who removed the great public offices, &c. to Utrecht and Amsterdam. The return of the Prince of Orange in 1813 restored it to its former splendour ; it has since become a still more fashionable residence, the presence of the Royal Family always drawing after it a multitude of employés, foreign and domestic. The Hague is now the residence, in alternate years, of the Sovereign ; and the States-General hold their meetings during that residence in the halls appended to the old palace, near the Vyverberg, or Fish-pond Hill, at the upper or northern end of the town, which, of course, is the fashionable quarter.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION—SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

The following is a copy of a minute of the Board of Admiralty respecting the equipment of the North Star, for the purpose of taking out a supply of provisions, &c., for the crews of her Majesty's ships Investigator and Enterprise, employed on an expedition to the Arctic regions. The document has just been laid before Parliament :—

"Admiralty, March 23, 1849.

"The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are under the necessity of laying a supplementary vote for the relief of the Arctic expedition under Sir John Franklin and Sir James Ross, upon the table of the House.

"Their lordships having been apprised by the last letters received from Sir James Ross, that it was his intention to direct the Investigator to land all the supplies that she could spare at Whaler Point, and to proceed to England, if no tidings of the expedition under Sir John Franklin were received by the whale ships now about to sail, leaving the Enterprise to prosecute the search alone, have consulted the highest naval authorities as to the probable consequences of this step. They find it to be the unanimous opinion of those most conversant with the Polar seas, that such a separation of the ships under Sir James Ross would be most perilous to the ship remaining in the ice, and would, probably, neutralise the entire object of the expedition, if Sir John Franklin's party were to be discovered at a time when the Enterprise had nearly exhausted her own stores.

"They have, therefore, determined upon sending out a fresh supply of provisions for both ships, by the North Star, which is now fitting for this purpose at Sheerness, with orders to proceed across Baffin's Bay, and as much farther as practicable in the direction of Lancaster Sound and Barrow's Strait, looking for the Investigator or her boats. In the event of the Investigator not being fallen in with, the commander of the North Star will be directed to land such supplies at such points on the south side of Lancaster Sound, or other places indicated by Sir James Ross, as may be accessible to the North Star, in sufficient time to secure his return across Baffin's Bay before the winter sets in.

"The expense of fitting out the North Star for the ice will be £6385, and the wages of crew, stores, and provisions on board, £6602, making £12,988 in all ; which constitute the supplementary estimate now submitted to the House. But, in addition to this, her Majesty's Government has determined to offer a reward of £20,000, to be given to such private ship, or distributed amongst such private ships, of any country, as may, in the judgment of the Board of Admiralty, have rendered efficient service to Sir John Franklin, his ships, or their crews, and may have contributed, directly, to extricate them from the ice.

"H. G WARD."

AMERICAN PONTOONS FOR INDIA.—The latter end of last week an exhibition of four American pontoons, brought from Chatham, took place at the back of the office of the Master-General of the Ordnance, Pall-mall—the Commander-in-Chief, the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Anglesey, Major-General Sir John Burgoyne, Inspector-General of Fortifications, General Sir Charles J. Napier, Colonel Watson, R.E., &c., were present. These pontoons are exceedingly portable, being made of India-rubber ; each of them forms three curves 18 feet in length and 4 feet 6 inches in width, and, on being required for use, they are filled with air ; the process of inflation is by bellows screwed on at each end of the curves. It takes about five minutes to inflate them, and, when inflated, they form a very buoyant bridge, and are well adapted to transport artillery and troops over a river. Colonel Sir F. Smith, of the Royal Engineer Establishment at Chatham, presented some drawings of the pontoons to his Grace the Duke of Wellington, and entered into an explanation of the properties of these pontoons, and one of them, with three cylinders, was inflated, and a raft formed. Its capability of bearing a heavy weight was tested. The pontoons were ordered to be forwarded immediately to the seat of war in India, and the East India Company intend giving an order for a large supply of these pontoons. Sir H. Smith, who went out as Governor-General to the Cape in 1847, having witnessed at Chatham similar pontoons on the river Medway, was so pleased with them that he took out two with him ; and, in a letter received about a fortnight ago from that gallant officer, he expressed his admiration of them and their usefulness, he having tried them on the Great Fish River.

NAVAL GOOD-SERVICE PENSIONS.—The two vacant good-service pensions have been conferred by the First Lord of the Admiralty on Capt. Edward Lloyd, C.B., F.R.S., and Capt. Sir Eaton Travers, C.B., both officers of long standing and distinguished services.

DISTRICT COMMANDS.—In consequence of the appointment of a general officer to succeed to the vacancy occasioned by the death of Field-Marshal Sir George Nugent, Major-General C. S. Kennedy will be placed upon the list of general officers receiving the unattached pay of twenty-five shillings per diem Major-General Sutherland will embark at Bristol early in April, for the Mauritius, to relieve Lieut.-General Sir Wm. Gomm in the command of the troops in that colony.

PRESENT TO THE 79TH HIGHLANDERS.—The Prince Demidoff has sent to this country, for transmission to Canada, a case of silver plate, as a present from him to the officers of the 79th Highlanders, which regiment is now stationed in that British North American colony.

The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's ship, Ripon, Captain Moresby, arrived with the East India and Mediterranean mails on Wednesday, bringing 118 passengers ; specie, value £30,000 ; and a large cargo ; also the captain and crew of the British barque Town, of Drogheda, which vessel was abandoned, on 30th March, 120 miles E. of Gibraltar.

THE ROYAL PALACE AT THE HAGUE.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. WILLIAM FAGAN.

THE very valuable section of our Parliamentary representatives, familiarly known in Westminster as "the working members," received an accession to their numbers of no inconsiderable worth when the hon. gentleman, whose portrait we present this week, entered the House of Commons. Discriminating in the choice of subjects which he brings before Parliament, painstaking in the judicious selection of his materials, elaborate and calm of manner in the exposition of them, at the same time moderate in his views, and gifted with much good sense, he has, within a comparatively short period, won for himself a highly-respectable position in the ranks of the legislative body.

Although the honourable gentleman's efforts for the amendment of the law in various matters, particularly those affecting mercantile interests, the poorer classes in Ireland, &c., have not uniformly met with the success they merited, he has not been discouraged; but, appreciating the advantages of perseverance, he proceeds on "the even tenor of his way" of usefulness with the confidence of a man who feels that ultimately he will effect his object. Towards the close of last session he brought in a bill of a very useful character, "to make life policies of assurance assignable at law." On that occasion, in explaining the object of the measure, Mr. Fagan said: "Let a life policy be assignable at law by a simple indorsement declaring the time and reason of the transfer, and let the insurance office be placed upon the same footing as a dock company, and be bound to recognise the plenary title of the holder of a policy who presents it with a perfect chain of endorsements."

The passing of a measure of this kind, having for its object the enfranchisement of life policies from obstacles which now impair their value, and are a source of inconvenience to those who hold and to those who grant them, would have been a great boon to the public; but advantage was taken of some details which were considered of an objectionable nature, and the bill was defeated. This session he has again taken up the subject, and has met with more success, as he has got his bill referred to a Select Committee, which was nominated on Thursday evening last.

The question of small debts in Ireland has also engaged his attention this year; and though the measure relating to it, which he brought in a short time ago, was rejected on the second reading on Wednesday week, by a majority only of two, the numbers being 31 and 29, the statement of its purport, as given by himself on the occasion referred to, will show the nature of his exertions in a second sphere of usefulness. The object of the bill, he said, was to assimilate as far as possible the law of Ireland with that of England, so far as the recovery of small debts was concerned. The County Courts Act passed for England in 1846 had given very general satisfaction; and if that enactment was good for England, the same law ought to be extended to Ireland. As an instance of the existing state of the law in Ireland, he might mention that he held in his hand a writ which had been served on a respectable farmer in Waterford for a debt of £4 0s. 9d., and the costs on the back of the writ amounted to £3 10s. He had copied verbatim the 129th clause of the English Act, and had inserted it in the bill which he had submitted to the House; and he saw no reason why a law that was found advantageous to the wise and discreet people of England, should not be extended to Ireland.

MR. FAGAN, M.P. FOR CORK.

During the week just ended he has been again conspicuously before the House, on a question which is felt as a grievance by the Roman Catholics of Ireland—ministers' money. On Tuesday night he brought forward a motion for "a committee of the whole House to consider the law relating to ministers' money in Ireland, for the purpose of repealing it, and finding for it a substitute for the money now levied under that act." The hon. gentleman reminded the House that the subject had been matter of consideration before a select committee of the House of Commons, last session, which, after laboriously examining a number of witnesses, both Roman Catholics and Protestants, both clergy and laity, at length reported in favour of the alteration which it was now his desire to press upon the attention of the House. Since the commencement of the present session, however, when it was known that he had given notice of this motion, he said he had received letters from the clergy, both of the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches, urging him to use his utmost endeavours to obtain such an alteration of the law as would spare the poor the pain of having to pay the tax, and the clergy the pain of having to exact it. He had received two letters since the 31st of January last, from the Rev. John Ellmes, incumbent of St John's, Limerick, pressing him, by every argument, to use what influence he could to have the law changed; and letters to the same effect had reached him from the Franciscan Convent, Clonmel, and from gentlemen of the Roman Catholic persuasion. Thus pressed on either hand, by Protestants and by Roman Catholics, he came forward at present, indulging in the hope that the object of those persons who wished to avoid the unhappy collisions that continually occurred, in consequence of levying a rate on those of one persuasion to support the ministers of another, might be attained, and a substitute found in the funds now in the hands of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for the £15,000, which was at present levied under the title of ministers' money, on eight towns in Ireland.

Here, again, Mr. Fagan was in some degree unsuccessful; for the Government not wishing to give a direct negative to his proposition, Sir George Grey moved "the previous question," which was carried by a majority of 72 to 44, thus getting rid of this subject for the present, without condemning the principle involved in it.

The hon. gentleman is one of the few Irish members who are in favour of the Government proposition of a rate-in-aid.

Mr. William Trant Fagan is a wealthy merchant and Alderman of the City of Cork, which place also he represents in Parliament. He has also filled the office of Mayor in his native city. He is in the prime of life, having been born in Cork in 1801. He was educated in England, at Southall Park, Middlesex, and he has shown some literary ability in his "Life and Times of Daniel O'Connell." The honourable gentleman is a Roman Catholic, and in politics is a Liberal, in favour of Free Trade, and a Repealer. He was first elected to Parliament for the city of Cork in 1847.

PROPORTION OF POVERTY AND HEALTH IN 1847.—In 1817, a sum of £6,910,925 was raised on rateable property of the value of £52,000,000. In 1847 the sum of £8,298,785 was raised on property valued at £67,000,000. Thus, in 1817, the rateable property of the country had to bear a levy of 2s. 8d. in the pound, while in 1847 that levy was reduced to 1s. 7d. Hence, whatever allowance we may make for the stricter administration of the poor-law, or for the reduced price of the necessaries of life, these few figures will show how unfounded is the alarm enter-tained by some, that pauperism is an ever-increasing evil, which must, sooner or later, swallow up all property. To take a contrary view, is it not a striking fact that a property-tax of only 7d. in the pound yielded in 1847 more money than was expended on the whole pauperism of England and Wales?—Sidney's Emigrant's Journal.

On Saturday evening the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress entertained, at dinner, a party of about forty members of the House of Commons, and the sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

The installation of the learned Sheriff Gordon, of Edinburgh, as Lord Rector of Marischal College and University, took place on Friday week.

OPENING OF THE SOUTHERN AND WESTERN RAILWAY.—THE MALLOW STATION.

GREAT SOUTHERN AND WESTERN RAILWAY.

OPENING OF THE LINE TO MALLOW.

THE anniversary of the great Patron Saint of Ireland (March 17) was selected for the partial opening of this extension line of Railway, connecting Mallow with Buttevant, on the main trunk; and, accordingly, the trains, heretofore running between Dublin and Tipperary, en route to Cork, on this day steamed up to the Mallow terminus. It may consequently be supposed that an event fraught with so much importance to the public of Mallow and the surrounding localities, and calculated, as it must be, to affect so materially their future condition and interests, whether considered socially or commercially, would be availed of by them as a fitting one for the exhibition of those characteristics which the production of the novel or the wonderful never fails to call forth. The streets and thoroughfares were crowded by thousands of all grades and classes, througing on to the terminus to behold the great, and, to many of them, the astounding innovation.

The hour named for the arrival of the train from Dublin was two o'clock, long before which every foot of ground in the vicinity of the station-house and terminus had its occupant - the grounds adjacent, which rise to a considerable height, and consequently command an extensive view, being also thronged by hundreds; and it was with much difficulty that even the track itself could be kept clear.

At length two o'clock arrived, as did no train, and the consequence was that disappointment was fast giving place to insubordination. All doubt and uncertainty were however put an end to in a few minutes, as the shrill whistle of the engine broke upon the ear; and immediately all eyes were turned in the direction whence it came. There could be no mistake now, the shrilly piping and curling smoke told of the approach of the expected train; and as the first glimpse of it was caught the cheering was taken up along the line. But, hold! it is not the train, but merely a precursor engine, sent on to announce that the bond fide train was on its way, and might be expected in fifteen minutes.

Within this time the train appeared, and was welcomed with a tremendous cheer and waving of hats. On, on it came, the great engine panting, hissing, screeching, and fuming, whilst the peasantry cheered or stood mute in wonder, occasionally uttering ejaculations of surprise and astonishment. On a nearer approach, the green flag was seen waving in the front, whilst laurel bows and branches were tastefully wreathed over the carriages a goodly train of which, and well filled, were yoked to the engine. Another burst of cheering ran from end to end of the line of spectators; and amidst loud and protracted cheering on came the locomotive, steaming rapidly and steadily up to the terminus, where it was brought to, amid increased acclamation from the multitude.

It appears that the train left Kingsbridge station (Dublin) at a quarter after nine that morning, and stopped at the following places—Sallins, Newbridge, Ballybrophy, Templemore, Thurles, Dundrum, Tipperary Junction, Knockiong, Killmallock, Charleville, and Buttevant. The train arrived at Mallow at half-past two o'clock—thus accomplishing the journey from Dublin to Mallow (a distance of 145 miles) in about five hours, allowing for the many stoppages on the route.

Shortly after the arrival of the train, the gentlemen who journeyed by it were invited to a banquet, got up—considering the shortness of the notice given to Mr. Coudon, proprietor of the Mallow Hotel in excellent style, and admirably served in the hall-room, adjoining the hotel. Covers were laid for 150.

Amongst the many gentlemen who sat down to the banquet, the majority of whom were of the expedition, were Lord Hawarden, Sir W. W. Becher, Bart.; Sir John M'Neill, Mr. George Carr, Chairman of the Board of Directors; Mr. R. M'Donnell, Vice-Chairman; Mr. Brooke, Mr. George Rowe, Mr. Ball, Mr. Naughton, Mr. Hardy, Mr. Hutton, Major Thompson, and Mr. O'Connor, directors; Mr. J. Fagan, M.P.; Captain Smith, Mr. Bianconi, Mr. F. B. Beamish, &c.

Mr. George Carr presided, supported on the right by Lord Hawarden and Major Thompson, and on the left by Sir W. W. Becher and Sir John M'Neill.

After the health of her Majesty had been drunk, Lord Hawarden proposed the health of the Chairman and the Directors of the Great Southern and Western Railway, which was drunk with enthusiasm. The Chairman returned thanks. The health of Mr. Dargan was then drunk; and that gentleman having thanked the company, the party broke up the local gentry repairing to their homes, and the metropolitan to the train, by which they expected to arrive in Dublin by 10 o'clock, it being, when the festivity concluded, close on 5 o'clock.

Our Illustration shows the front of Mallow Station, with the arrival of the opening train from Dublin, conducted by Sir John M'Neill.

THE STANFIELD HALL MURDERS.

NORFOLK ASSIZES.

The Grand Jury having had the bills against Rush laid before them about half-past two o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, returned into court about half an hour afterwards, finding true bills for wilful murder against the prisoner Rush. There are two indictments for wilful murder, and two for assault with intent to murder. Only four witnesses were examined by the grand jury—the cook and the butler at Stanfield Hall, Dr. Dickson, the medical attendant, and Emily Sandford, otherwise the widow James.

Eliza Chesney was brought on the same day into Norwich from Stanfield Hall. She was carried in a swing-cot borne by four men, she being so weak as to be unable to bear the motion of a carriage.

THE TRIAL OF RUSH.

(From our own Reporter.)

NORWICH, Thursday Night.

The trial of James Blomfield Rush, charged with the commission of the murders at Stanfield Hall, commenced this morning, at nine o'clock, in the County Assize Court, before Mr. Baron Rolfe.

The anxiety to obtain admission to the court was intense, and the entrance to the Castle was thronged by many hundred persons from an early hour—not one tithe of whom had the smallest probability of gaining entrance.

The court was opened for the admission of strangers at eight o'clock, when a rush took place which almost beggars description—the competing parties being magistrates for the county, and other magnates, all of whom had previously obtained tickets.

The seats near the bench were occupied, among others, by the Marquis o.

FOOTHILLS, NEAR WYNCHAM.

Deurp, the Earl of Leicester (Lord Lieutenant of the County of Norfolk), the Earl Cadogan, Lord Hastings, Lord Huntingfield, the Lord Bishop of Norwich, the Honourable and Reverend E. Pellew, the Honourable W. Eafus Rous, the High Sheriff of Norfolk, Thomas Preston, Esq. (brother of the late Mr. Jermy), Thomas Beaver, Esq. (nephew of the same gentleman), Archdeacon Collyer, Hon. E. Keppel Coke, M.P., W. Bagge, Esq., M.P., H. Dover, Esq. (Chairman of the Quarter Sessions), Sir Thomas Beaver, Sir John Bolleau, Sir H. Durrant, Hon. Captain Wodehouse, Hon. and Rev. E. Keppel, Hon. and Rev. T. Keppel, Professor Sedgwick, &c.

The learned Judge took his seat on the bench at 9 o'clock precisely, and the prisoner was immediately afterwards introduced in the custody of Mr. Penson, the Governor of the gaol. His entrance excited the greatest possible interest, and every eye was instantly turned towards him. He walked into the dock with an unerring step, and without manifesting any particular emotion. His appearance may be well described as that of a Norfolk gentleman. He is well-looking, and his countenance presents no disagreeable feature rather the reverse. He is of a ruddy complexion, and wears full whiskers, which pass under the chin and encircle the face. His hair appears to be short and thick-set, with a very short neck, his head inclining slightly forward. The contour of his person is altogether very peculiar, and any person having once seen his countenance, and observed his gait, could scarcely fail in identifying him again. He speaks in the voice peculiar to natives of this county.

The counsel for the prosecution were Mr. Serjeant Byles, Mr. Prendergast, and Mr. Evans. The prisoner was totally unbefriended; Messrs. Meadows and Tillett, solicitors, of Norwich, who had occasionally been consulted by him, having ceased to act from the moment he entered the dock, by the prisoner's own request. A law-stationer's clerk was allowed to sit by the prisoner's side, for the purpose of taking notes of the evidence for the use of the accused.

The learned Judge having taken his seat, the indictment charging the prisoner with the murder of Mr. Jermy, Senior, was read by the Marshal of the Court, at the close of which that officer addressed the prisoner thus: How say you? are you guilty of this felony, or not?

The prisoner replied in an unfaltering voice, "Not Guilty."

The coroner's inquisition on the murder of the same gentleman was next read. To this the prisoner also pleaded "Not Guilty."

The Jury having been sworn, Mr. Serjeant Byles opened the case for the prosecution, stating the facts which have already become familiar to the public.

On the special application of the prisoner, all the witnesses in the case were ordered out of court.

Among the witnesses examined, were the architect who had constructed the model, and the surveyor who had executed the plans, produced in court, and Mr. John Cann, clerk to the bench of magistrates, who identified finding the forged documents at Potash Farm, and detailed all those circumstances in connexion with the investigation subsequently to the murder which came within his own knowledge.

James Watson, butler in the service of the late Mr. Jérmy, was likewise examined, who repeated his former testimony at great length; and, in answer to the question as to who he believed the individual was he saw on the night of the murder, he replied, "I believe it was Mr. Rush."

The trial will probably extend over three or four days.

We annex a View of Potash Farm, in the occupation of Rush. It is a red house, near Wymondham, about a mile or less to the left of the front of Stanfield Hall, to which, it is supposed, immediately after the murder, the assassin proceeded, taking the direct course across the fields. On the night of the murder, the only persons besides the accused in the farm at Potash were the woman James and a boy, Solomon Savory, who went to bed between 8 and 9 o'clock on the night of the murder.

It is stated that the Potash Farm was put up to auction about ten years ago, at which time Mr. Jermy, being anxious to purchase the property, commissioned Rush to look over the farm with another person, and to value it. They estimated the value of the farm at £5500, and Mr. Jermy desired the prisoner to attend the sale, and bid that sum. His last expression to Rush, as the latter took leave of him to attend the sale, was, "Mind you buy it for me." Rush attended the sale, and bid £5500 for Mr. Jermy, and £3600 for himself, at which price the Potash Farm was knocked down to him. Mr. Jermy was highly indignant at this piece of what he considered sharp practice on the part of the prisoner, but contented himself with the belief that, as Rush was without capital to pay for his purchase, the farm would come into his (Mr. Jermy's) hands before long. Rush had the coolness to apply to Mr. Jermy to advance him the purchase-money of the estate on mortgage for seven years, which Mr. Jermy, partly from a friendly feeling, and partly, perhaps, from motives to which we have already alluded, consented to do. The sum advanced was increased subsequently, with the interest, to £5500, and the time for paying the principal and interest expired two days after the murder.

The premises at Potash were most minutely searched by the police. Carpenters and masons were employed to remove the wainscot, and examine every place where it was likely that pistols could be secreted. Policemen searched the neighbouring hedgerows and banks, to discover if there were any appearances of the soil having been newly turned. Yet all these exertions were without effect.

A plan of Stanfield Hall, with a perspective view, it will be recollected, was engraved in No. 347 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

STEAM-BOAT EXPLOSION ON THE RIVER.—On Tuesday morning, about nine o'clock, some alarm prevailed among the passengers at London bridge-wharf, in consequence of an explosion on board a steam-vessel, steam-boat No. 8, by which several persons were injured. The steamer left Woolwich shortly before eight, under the charge of Captain Warren, apparently in good working order, with a fair freight of passengers, and proceeded towards London, stopping at the usual piers, and at the time above-named the Watermen reached the London-bridge Pier, where several persons landed. All then seemed quite safe, but just as the gangway was ordered to go ahead a loud explosion was heard, which shook the vessel very much. The passengers and crew were at first alarmed, and stood amazed, for the next moment a large body of fire and steam was seen issuing from the engine-room. The captain, fearing that the lower part of the vessel was on fire, had her made fast, and then immediately adopted steps to release the persons who were engaged below, the engineer and stoker were found to be much injured. The origin of the occurrence is thought to have been that the tube-plate at the end of the boiler burst, which, cone quently, let out the steam and water on to the fire, which, on the furnace doors, and, in a few seconds, the engine-room was completely filled with fire and steam, before the unfortunate men could possibly effect their escape. The engineer and stoker (Williams and Spencer) were taken to St. Thomas's Hospital, where they still remain in a very precarious state. Their faces have been much scalded, and present a fearful appearance. From the skill and attention bestowed by the medical gentlemen of the hospital upon the cases of the two unfortunate men, they have exhibited symptoms of improvement, but it will be some time before they can leave the hospital.

THREATENING LETTERS TO THE QUEEN.—At Windsor, on Monday, John Wardle, remand d from Monday week, was charged before the Mayor and two other magistrates with having sent threatening letters to her Majesty and other parties. The prisoner had first written to her Majesty on Jan. 18, 1848, when he stated that, unless he and his family obtained their rights, her Majesty should die by his hands. This letter was sent down to the Staffordshire police, within whose jurisdiction the prisoner was employed, when he was taken before the magistrates, and charged with writing threatening letters to her Majesty. The prisoner explained that he was in search of work to obtain £5,000 left to his family by the late Duke of Kent. The magistrates sentenced him to three months' confinement in Stafford gaol, in default of his finding bail to keep the peace. On Tuesday he was again presented himself at the magisterial residence of the Dean of Windsor, and told the butler he was determined to see the Queen, and get his due, even if his neck was stretched for it. He was again given into custody, and on searching him, after two inquiries, the case was postponed till Monday, the 17th instant, when the authorities at the Home-Office having been communicated with, Mr. Hayward, of the office of the Solicitor to the Treasury, attended to watch the case, and was about to ask the magistrates to hold the prisoner to bail for using threatening language, when Mr. Pearl, a surgeon, of Windsor, who had examined him, expressed doubts of the prisoner's sanity. Upon this Mr. Hayward declined for a remand, to obtain further evidence on that point. Accordingly the prisoner was again brought up on Monday last, as mentioned above, when the facts having been deposed to, Mr. Payne stated, that he had had an interview of more than an hour's duration with the prisoner, and he was clearly of opinion that he was a dangerous lunatic, whom it was not safe to be at large for a single hour. Upon this evidence being given, Mr. Hayward applied to have the prisoner committed to the county lunatic asylum. The Mayor having asked the prisoner had any answer to give of his conduct, he replied that it would be useless, as he was like a lamb in a den of wolves. After some consideration the bench adjudged the prisoner to be a dangerous lunatic, and sentenced him to be confined in the county lunatic asylum at Littlemore, near Oxford, unless his friends could give security for his safe custody. The prisoner is evidently very illiterate, no two consecutive words being spelt correctly, her Majesty being described as Queen "Victory."

DESTRUCTION OF TEA.—A quantity of tea, lying in one of the bonded establishments of the metropolis, weighing upwards of 20,000 lb., being considered to be not worth the duties, in addition to the enormous rent and charges which have accrued thereon while remaining in the bonded premises, application has been made, and permission obtained from the revenue authorities, for the tea to be at once destroyed. In the case of decayed and useless tea deposited on the premises of the dock companies not being considered of any value for consumption, it is arranged for the destruction to take place on the dock premises, under the superintendence, but in the present instance arrangements were made, and permission obtained, for the tea to be conveyed to the mouth of the river, and cast into the sea, and in that manner to be entirely lost and destroyed.

SURVEY OF THE NEW WORLD.—Her Majesty's ship Rattlesnake, Captain Owen Stanley, was at Cape York in November last, and was to sail for Port Essington and Sydney on the 25 of that month. Captain Stanley had made rapid and very satisfactory progress in the survey of that part of the coast. He tender, the Bramble, Lieut. Commander Yule, was also at Cape York, and would most probably await the arrival of a vessel from Sydney, which was bringing up stock, horses, &c., for the overland expedition, under Mr. Kennedy, expected from Moreton Bay. The inner passage through Torres Straits did not appear to be as much frequented by ships as could be expected. Out of thirty one vessels passing through, twenty-nine had taken the outer route, and left the reports at Booby Island

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 1. Palm Sunday. All Fools' Day.
MONDAY, 2. 2nd Day in Passion Week.
TUESDAY, 3.—Richard, Bishop of Chichester.
WEDNESDAY, 4.—St. Ambrose.
THURSDAY, 5.—Maundy Thursday. Robert Raikes died, aged 70, 1811.
FRIDAY, 6. Good Friday.
SATURDAY, 7. Rumsfelle born, 1483

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 7

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M h m	M h m	M h m	M h m	M h m	M h m	M h m
7 50	8 30	9 15	10 10	11 25	noon	Tide 0 28	0 52	1 20	1 45	2 0	2 15

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Mdlle. LIND.—It is respectfully announced that a SERIES of SIX CONCERTS will be given at HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, comprising the following Operas:—The "Flauto Magico," of Mozart; "Oberon," "Der Freyschutz," and "Euryanthe," of Weber, "La Vestale" and "Fernando Cortez," of Spontini and "Fidelio," of Beethoven.—The FIRST GRAND CLASSICAL CONCERT, with full Orchestra and Chorus, will take place on THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 12, from Mozart's IL FLAUTO MAGICO. Principal Artistes:—Mdlle. Lind, Madame Giuliani, Signor Gardoni, Signor Bevilas, Signor Bartolini (of the Italian Opera, Paris, in first appearance), Signor Gentili, Signor Belletti, Signor Arnoldi, Signor F. Lablache, and Signor Labbetta. Conductor, Mr. Balfe. The Subscribers are respectfully informed that they will have the option of furnishing any number of these Concerts at their season's subscription.—Application for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre, Opera Colonnade.

MESSRS. G. and J. CASE beg to announce that their Annual VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT will take place at the LONDON TAVERN, on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 2nd; for which occasion they have engaged the most eminent talent.—Mdlle. [illegible], reserved seats, 5s.; to be had of Mr. G. CASE, at the Concertina Repository, 27, New Bond-street; and at the principal music-sellers

EXETER HALL.—Mr. WILLEY has the honour to announce to his friends and the public generally, that his BENEFIT CONCERT will take place at EXETER HALL, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, APRIL 18th. Further particulars will be duly announced.

EXETER HALL.—Mr. LAVENU begs leave to announce that a GRAND VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT will be given at EXETER HALL, on THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 5th, on which occasion he will be supported by a numerous and effective force, and will on the same occasion introduce his Locomotive Music, a comic extensive scale, and will on the same occasion introduce his Locomotive Music, a comic [illegible] Concert will commence with a Selection of [illegible] Overture, and other admired pieces. Tickets, 5s. each; Reserved Seats, 7s. 6d. each; and Stalls, 10s. 6d. each. To be had immediately, at the Diorama of "The London Bridge Railway," in the Regent's Park; at the Offices of the Musical Union, 28, Old Bond-street; at the Offices of Mr. Joseph Stammers, [illegible] Bank; and of Mr. Lavenu, 9, Great Marlborough-street, where may be had of Mr. LAVENU, M. JULLIEN'S Regent-street, Mr. [illegible] Hall, and of all Musicsellers

ROBERT-HOUDIN IN LONDON.—EASTER HOLIDAYS. PERFORMANCES EVERY EVENING during the EASTER WEEK, and on Wednesday and Friday Mornings, being positively his Last Performances in this Country.—The celebrated Robert-Houdin begs to announce his FAREWELL PERFORMANCES, which will take place at the St. James's Theatre, during the Easter Week, commencing on MONDAY, April 9th, and terminating on SATURDAY, APRIL the 14th. In order to perpetuate as far as possible memorial of his visit to this country, since his the most popular and the most appreciating opportunities will be exercised on those farewell occasions, whilst the Distributions from the Corne d'Abondance will be made with extended liberality and profusion.—Boxes, 4s. Pit, 2s.; Amphitheatre, 1s. Private Boxes and Stalls may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, and at the Box-office of the Theatre.

THEATRE ROYAL, SADLER'S WELLS.—LOVE'S [illegible] ENTERTAINMENTS. On Monday, April 2, Tuesday, April 3, Wednesday, April 4, and Thursday, April 5, [illegible] Evening, (for the last time this season), his Entertainment, entitled A VOYAGE TO HARROUGH. To be followed by a Comic Characteristic Vocalic Illustration, in the Fantastic Monopticope, entitled A CHRISTMAS PARTY IN FIFE OLDEN TIME; in which Mr. Love will represent, both visibly and invisibly, the host and hostess, the guests composing the party, the servants in attendance, &c. With other Entertainments. Doors open at Half-past Seven; begin at Eight.—Books to be had at the doors price One Shilling.

DRAMATIC READINGS OF SHAKSPERE.—MUSIC HALL, Store-street.—Mr. HENRY NICHOLLS (of the Theatres Royal Manchester and Newcastle) will, on MONDAY EVENING NEXT, give the First of Three Readings of "LEAR and HAMLET," with Illustrative Music. Selections of Principal Characters will be attempted. MONDAY, APRIL 2, 1849, HAMLET; MONDAY, APRIL 9, MACBETH; MONDAY, APRIL 16, KING LEAR. Admission, 2s.; Reserved Seats, 3s. Private Boxes, 10s. and 15s. To commence at Eight precisely.

THE EXHIBITION of the ASSOCIATION for PROMOTING THE FREE EXHIBITION of MODERN ART is now OPEN at the GALLERY, PALL MALL EAST, daily, from Nine until Dusk.—Admission One Shilling, Catalogue Sixpence. BELL SMITH, Hon. Sec.

THE ORIGINAL MISSISSIPPI and MISSOURI, at the EGYPTIAN HALL.—BANVARD'S GREAT PAINTING, extensively known as the "three-mile picture," is exhibited daily, from Ten in the Morning until Seven in the Evening. This is by far the largest painting ever executed by man, and represents more than 3000 miles of American scenery, extending three-quarters of the way round the interior of the Panorama.—Hours of Exhibition every morning, at Half-past Two, and Evening, at Half-past Seven. Doors open half an hour before commencement.—Admission, 1s.; gallery, 1s.

GIGANTIC AMERICAN PANORAMA.—Now open, day and evening, at the GRAND AMERICAN HALL (late Miss Linwood's) Leicester-square, Professor RISLEY'S Original Suspended MOVING PANORAMA of the GULF of MEXICO, WALLS of the MISSISSIPPI, and MISSISSIPPI, painted by J. R. SMITH, Esq., the celebrated American artist; extending over four miles of canvas, and depicting over four thousand miles of American scenery, being the largest and most perfect moving painting in the world. Hours of exhibition: Morning, half-past two, evening, half-past seven. Admission, 1s.; Children under ten, half-price.

EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.—MARIE, the INFANT PIANISTE and VOCALIST, every day: Morning, 3 o'clock; Evening, 7. To appreciate the wonderful [illegible] and [illegible] of this [illegible] Boudoir, by the by, is fitted up in a style of elegance and comfort not to be equalled in London. Reserved Seats, 2s.; Balcony, 1s.; Children and Schools, half-price.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—LAST WEEK but One of the GRAND DISSOLVING VIEWS and MAGIC, by Mr. Shaw, with Illustrations changed every week, daily, at a Quarter to Four, and every Evening at Nine Lecture on Chemistry daily, at a Quarter to Three.—Professor Owen's Lectures on Comparative Anatomy daily, at One o'clock. A View in the Gobi District of California is added to the New Locomotive Views. New Chromotropes. Machinery and Models explained, &c. The Music is directed by Dr. Wallis.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.—The New Catalogue, 1s.

ARCHITECTURAL EXHIBITION.—WILL CLOSE on WEDNESDAY APRIL 4th, the EXHIBITION of DRAWINGS, MODELS, &c., in connexion with ARCHITECTURE. Now open daily, from Eight o'clock at the Gallery of the New Society of Painters in Water Colours, 53, Pall-Mall. Admission FREE; on Saturday One Shilling.—EXHIBITORS are requested to SEND for their Works on THURSDAY, April 5th, between the hours of Eight and Four

ROBERT C. DUDLEY,
WILLIAM W. DEANE, Hon. Secs

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. B. H." Abergele.—We do not remember to have seen the Lithograph in question

"C. S. T." Addorley.—There is no limit as to the time of sending stamped newspapers post free in the United Kingdom.

"Emerald Isle." We cannot enlighten you as to the will.

"A Subscriber."—Apply to the Secretary of the Society at 12, Old Bond-street.

"J. E." Mr. Farrer, of Wardour street, dealer in paintings, Oxford-street

"W. R. P."—Apply to Hullmandel and Co., Lithographers, Great Marlborough-street

"A Constant Reader," and "A. W." Spoonfuls. See replies in our Journal of last week

"T. B. G." is recommended to apply to the proprietors by letter.

"Laura Amelia." The address is Grosvenor-place

"J. D.," Shoreditch.—The servant could not, under the circumstances, enforce his claim.

"S. G. R. M." The marriage would be illegal

"An Inquirer."—The Cherokees, the most civilised of the American Indians, have a written language (each an alphabet of eighty-five characters), derived from the same source as that of the Greeks, Chickasaws, Checktaws, Panagouins, and some other tribes. We hope this explanation will suffice.

"W. B. W." Falmouth.—Thanks.

"R. L. L."—Address, Haymarket Theatre

"A. H.," near Madras.—We shall be glad to receive Sketches of any events of importance

"Bathonia." The natives was a kind of tombrel, used at the Egyptian festivals of Isis.

"S. D. C."—Ink spots may be removed from paper by a strong solution of oxalic acid in water, or by liquid chloride of lime.

"A. A."—Show your print to the Messrs. Evans, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields

"Tom Thomas"—Chile.

"C. P." Longbourn

"An Old Subscriber."—Grease may be removed from paper by placing upon it blotting-paper, and upon that a heated knife

"L. M. F." The word Kaleidoscope is pronounced Kor.

"T. H.," Liverpool, will find the new American Printing-Machine described in the "Year book of Facts," 1849.

"E. H. M." Madrid, is thanked, though we could not avail ourselves of his Sketches

"R. M. L." Apply to Mr. Webster, dealer in coins, 17, Great Russell-street, Covent-garden

"E. B. S." is thanked. We regret that we have not room to print the lines

"Rusticus." Mammagizes.—Read Mackay's "Western World," just published.

"Kenyon," "The subject has not been illustrated in our Journal.

"Ignoramus."—Knowles's "Pronouncing English Dictionary." It would be useless to direct you to the first grammarian of the day (an Archbishop), as he is not in a position to be "consulted."

"J. J."—See Booth's "Principles of English Composition," a sound work.

"A. W.," May Fair.—We have not room for the lines. The best rule is to keep a copy of each contribution for archive

"Yorke."—We will make enquiry at the office, and inform our correspondent.

"A Glasgow Purchaser"—We cannot advise you.

"V. P."—We cannot undertake to ascertain

"A. B." Thorney.—Apply to the New Zealand Company

"O. L." Cambridge.—We should say, not.

"J. P. Dover"

"H. P." Birkenhead.—We could not engrave the scene.

"C. W. J."—We regret that we cannot find room for the lines.

"A. C. G. N. L."—See the account of the Overland Route, in Vol. II. of our Journal

"W. C." Taylor's "Short-hand," improved by Harding.

"Φιλομαθὴς"—Yes

NEW CHURCH AT STANMORE.—We are requested to state that the site for the Church recently founded at Stanmore, in the presence of her Majesty, Queen Adelaide, was most liberally presented by Lieutenant-Colonel Tennent, residing in the village.

NOTICE.—Any of our Agricultural Subscribers can have the edition which leaves London on Friday evening, with the Corn-Market of the same day, by ordering this edition of their news-agent.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1849.

THE rash war recommenced by Charles Albert, in the name of United Italy, but with the real object of elevating the House of Savoy to the Empire of the Peninsula, is already at an end. The King of Sardinia has been signally and completely defeated. His army has been scattered at a blow. He has abdicated the throne, and is now a fugitive, at Paris, or on his way to it. These are startling events, even in these times, when nothing is considered as very extraordinary. The French Government is represented as having concealed all news of which a report might have been unfavourable to the King of Sardinia; so that the public was scarcely prepared for such intelligence as M. Odillon Barrot, in the name of the Government, announced to the French National Assembly on Wednesday afternoon. The announcement was received without either applause or approbation. M. Odillon Barrot stated that, however rapid the denouement had been, it had not been altogether unexpected; and, although in commencing the war the Piedmontese Government had refused to listen to the counsels of France, the French Republic was not the less resolved to protect the integrity of the Piedmontese nation. There scarcely needed such a nonfication. Marshal Radetzsky, on behalf of the Austrian Government, explicitly stated that Austria did not seek for conquest. She desired the possession of her own. She was determined to retain Lombardy against all opposition. The victorious Radetzsky has achieved this object; the ex-King of Sardinia is disposed of, once and for ever; the party with whom he made common cause is defeated, disheartened, and ruined; and Austria, secured from all future aggression in Lombardy, is not likely to attempt the conquest of Piedmont. The words of M. Odillon Barrot amount, therefore, to an empty bravado.

This intelligence is so decisive, that the previous details lose the greater portion of their interest. The proclamation of Marshal Radetzsky in answer to that of the King of Sardinia, on recommencing the war, was a most extraordinary document. He spoke of the King of Sardinia with utter contempt—compared him to a "thief," and took especial care to assert that although he had a respect for the kingly office in general, he had no respect for the individual who held that office in Sardinia. The document, if soldierlike, was scarcely statesmanlike, and had the effect of increasing the popularity of Charles Albert throughout Italy, and of exciting a strong feeling in his favour in France. The forces of Radetzsky and Charles Albert were about equal in point of numbers. The King of Sardinia passed the Ticino, at a place called Buffalora. Marshal Radetzsky passed it from the other side, twelve miles lower down, between Vigevano and Pavia. By this movement the Piedmontese army was, as the Journal des Débats expresses it, cut in two; and General Durando, commanding one of its divisions, was unable to attack the Austrians, as he had been ordered. Both parties claimed the victory in these partial engagements; but there is now no doubt that the victory rested with Radetzsky. The King of Sardinia was at Novara on the 23rd, and Radetzsky's head-quarters, on the same day, were at Pavia. General Durando, accused of treachery, and without understanding with Radetzsky, was tried by court-martial, and shot. A Colonel of Fusiliers was also tried for a conspiracy to deliver up Charles Albert to Radetzsky, and suffered the same fate. On the 24th the two armies met at Novara, and, after a sharp engagement, the Piedmontese gave way, and retreated to the mountains of Biela and Borgo Manero. Marshal Radetzsky then occupied Novara, Vercelli, and Trino; will probably march to Turin, and dictate from that capital the terms of peace.

The partial repeal of the Navigation Laws has been twice recommended in the Speech from the Throne: Ministers, however, have made but small progress with the measure. The bill introduced last session was postponed from time to time, and finally abandoned. The amended bill, introduced at the commencement of the present session, has already suffered more damage from its parents than from the Opposition; and its progress has been marked by a ministerial treatment which will not increase the reputation of the Whigs as men of business. Mr. Labouchere, on introducing the new bill on the 14th of February, announced, as the chief, if not the only real difference between it and the bill abandoned in 1848, to consist in the partial opening of the coasting trade to foreign vessels of above 100 tons burthen. On going into committee on the bill, on Friday last, Mr. Labouchere announced that, on further consideration, and a consultation with the Chairman of the Board of Customs, he had come to the conclusion that, if not absolutely impossible, it would be extremely difficult to frame regulations that would not leave the revenue exposed to the greatest danger, if foreign or British ships were allowed to combine foreign with coasting voyages. It had, therefore, been resolved not to ask the House to relax the existing laws upon this point. The Protectionist party plucked up courage at this announcement, and both friends and foes were of opinion that, as Ministers had had the whole of the recess to think over the matter, it would have been better for their reputation if they had made the necessary inquiries before, instead of after, the introduction of the bill. Englishmen pride themselves on being men of business; and if there is one quality that they prize in a statesman more than any other, with the exception of honesty, it is business talent. Whatever may be the general virtues of the Whigs, it seems clear that aptitude for business does not lie among the number—at least in as far as the sayings and doings of the present Ministry may be considered as proofs of it. The principle of the bill as it now stands is simple and intelligible, and for very shame's sake we suppose the Ministry will stand or fall by it. The bill repeals all the existing Navigation Laws, and opens the trade of Great Britain to the whole world, but reserves the right of making exceptions, should occasion arise. Though at present the Ministerial majority upon the various clauses that have gone through committee seems sufficient to carry the measure through the Lower House, there does not seem to be any very strong confidence that the majority will be decided enough to influence the House of Lords in its favour. Already the warning note has been sounded in the Ministerial journals, that Ministers, if beaten upon it, will appeal to the country; and the threat, in all probability, will not be without its effect upon the temper of the House of Commons.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Monday, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Colonel Bouverie, visited the British Museum. The Queen and Prince Albert honoured the performance of the Philharmonic Concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms, in the evening, with their presence. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness were attended by the Mistress of the Robes, the Viscountess Jocelyn, Lady in Waiting, &c. The Judge Advocate General had an audience of the Queen, and submitted to her Majesty the proceedings of some courts-martial.

On Tuesday her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback during the morning, attended by Colonel Bouverie. Her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured the performances at the Royal Italian Opera House with their presence in the evening. The Royal suite consisted of the Duchess of Sutherland, the Countess of Charlemont, Hon. Miss Dawson, the Marquis of Ormonde, Lord Alfred Paget, and Colonel Bouverie. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty the Queen Dowager in the course of the day at Marlborough House.

On Wednesday Lord John Russell had an audience of the Queen, at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians, attended by the Countess d'Hulst and Major de Moerkerke, visited the Queen during the day. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent also visited her Majesty at Buckingham Palace. The Queen had a dinner party in the evening. The company included her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Baroness de Speth, the Earl and Countess of Charlemont.

HER MAJESTY'S DRAWINGROOM.—On Thursday her Majesty held a drawingroom at St. James's Palace. Her Majesty, the Prince, and the members of the Court arrived at St. James's from Buckingham Palace, at two o'clock. Notwithstanding that the day was very showery, the Drawingroom was very crowded, and the vicinity of the Palace was thronged with sight-seekers.

THE EX-ROYAL FAMILY OF FRANCE.—The Count and Countess de Neuilly are about to leave Claremont for a short period, and proceed to St Leonard's-on-Sea, the air of that watering-place having been recommended for the ex-Queen, whose health, although much better than it has been for some time past, it is still very delicate. The Prince de Joinville, the Duke de Nemours, and the Duke d'Aumale, with their consorts and youthful families, are all staying at Claremont. The Royal exiles take frequent exercise, but confine themselves chiefly to the Claremont domain and its immediate neighbourhood. The ex-King and Queen occasionally receive visits from distinguished French noblemen, and on the arrival of our own aristocracy at Claremont are very frequent. The suite of the ex-Royal Family at present consists of General Dumas, General Count Pelant, the Count d'Houdot, and the Marquis de Dolomieux. The Count de Jarnac is in frequent attendance on the illustrious exiles.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Normanby left on Wednesday, for Paris.

The Earl of Jersey has left town to join the distinguished circle visiting the Duke of Rutland, at Belvoir Castle, during the races at Croxton Park.

THE COUNTESS OF JERSEY'S SOIRÉE.—The Countess of Jersey had a soirée on Tuesday night, at the family residence in Berkeley-square. The reception was preceded by a select dinner-party, to which Count Pahlen the Countess of Lichfield and Lady Harriet Anson, Viscount Canthope, and Eddesbury, Lord Castleton, and the Right Hon. R. Stuart Wortley were invited. Among the visitors at the evening party were the members of the Diplomatic Corps; Viscountess Palmerston, Viscount and Viscountess Neville, Viscountess Hardinge and Hon. Miss Hardinge, &c.

The late Governor of Gibraltar, General Sir Robert S. Wilson, arrived in town on Wednesday, vâ France, after having completed six years' service on that station.

The Queen Dowager of Sardinia, Maria Christina, widow of the King Charles Felix, who recently died at Savona, leaves a considerable fortune. She appointed for her universal legatees the Prince Royal the Duke of Savoy-Carignan and the Duke of Genoa, sons of Charles Albert. She has left an important legacy to the children of Louis Philippe, her nephews. This legacy principally consists of English and French funds, and a castle in the environs of Annecy, in Savoy. The deceased was sister of the consort of Louis Philippe, Marie Amélie

The Marchioness of Lansdowne, accompanied by Sir Charles Lemon, Bart., paid a visit to the schools of the Home and Colonial School Society on Monday last. They arrived at half-past two, and heard a series of lessons in the preparatory school, also in the infant and juvenile schools, and to a class of teachers in training. The Bishop of Cashel, Mr. Lowth, and other visitors, were also present.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

ROYAL LEAMINGTON STEEPLE-CHASES.—MONDAY

THE ROYAL LEAMINGTON HUNT STEEPLE-CHASE of 100 guineas.

Lord Strathmore's Rat-trap	..	..	(Owner) 1
Mr. Cartwright's Justice to England	..	..	(Capt. Peel) 2

Won by ten lengths.

THE GRAND ANNUAL SWEEPSTAKES of 25 sov each, with 100 added.

Mr. W. Taylor's Victim, 11st 2lb	..	..	(Taylor) 1
Captain W. Peel's Proceed, 11st 0lb	..	..	(Owner) 2

Won by half a length.

FREE HANDICAP of 5 sovs each, and 30 added

Mr. Baker's Israelite, 10st 6lb	..	..	(Cunningham) 1
Capt. Fraser's Kilkenny, 9st 10lb	..	..	(Holman) 2

Won cleverly.

FREE HANDICAP HURDLE RACE of 5 sovs each, and 30 added.

Mr. Frost's Yard-Arm, 10st 4lb	..	..	(Archer) 1
Mr. Carew named Fugitive, 10st 4lb	..	..	(Magee) 2

MATCH, 100 sovs, three miles.—Grimaldi, 10st, received forfeit from Lucy Long, 11st.

NORTHAMPTON AND PYTCHLEY HUNT RACES.—TUESDAY.

GREAT NORTHAMPTONSHIRE STAKES of 25 sovs each, with 100 added.

Sir J. Hawley's Fernhill, 4 yrs, 6st 8lb	..	..	(Pearl) 1
Mr. Gregory's Loup Garou, 5 yrs, 7st 5lb	..	..	(Thomson, jun) 2

HER MAJESTY'S PLATE of 100 guineas. Two miles.

Mr. R. Heseltine's The Quiver, 3 yrs, 6st 10lb	..	..	(Penn) 1
Mr. Eyke's The Model, 3 yrs, 6st 5lb	..	..	(Kitchener) 2

WEDNESDAY.

The Northamptonshire Cup Stakes of 10 sovs each, the winner to be sold for £500.

Mr. Melham's Priestess, 3 yrs, 6st 5lb	..	..	(Arnold) 1
Mr. Osborne's Pity-the-blind, 3 yrs, 6st 7lb	..	..	(Osborne) 2

Handicap Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, 5 ft, and 50 added

Mr. Rob's Collingwood, 6 yrs, 9st 2lb	..	..	(Nat) 1
Mr. Harrison's Miss Burns, aged, 7st 10lb	..	..	(A. Day) 2

TATTERSALL'S

THURSDAY.—So few members had returned from Northampton, that business was almost at a stand-still; our quotations, therefore, are in most instances nominal. In the Chester Cup, Berrill (for the Newmarket and Handicap) and Loup-garou (Chester Cup) were the only horses backed for any money. Latest prices:—

NEWMARKET HANDICAP. 2 yr. 1 agst Berrill. 1
METROPOLITAN HANDICAP
7 to 1 agst Legar (t)	10 to 1 agst Fera	12 to 1 agst Executor
10 to 1 — Lucia	12 to 1 — Loup-garou
CHESTER CUP.
20 to 1 agst Dea's.	25 to 1 agst Inheritress	40 to 1 agst Clermont (t)
25 to 1 — Consuk (t)	33 to 1 — Loup-garou (t)
DERBY.
3 to 1 agst Flying Dutchman	13 to 8 agst Nunnykirk	13 to 1 agst Honeycomb

LOUIS PHILIPPE'S RACING STUD.—The whole of Louis Philippe's magnificent stud, comprising about sixty brood mares and entire horses, is about to be sold by public auction at Versailles. The day of sale is fixed for the 2d of April, and very considerable interest has been excited on both sides of the Channel by the announcement. The horses to be sold include Orangbre from the stables at Versailles, Meudon, and St. Cloud, and among the animals are several of the purest Arabian breed. Several of them were presented to the late King by the Pasha of Egypt, the Imaum of Muscat, and the Bey of Tunis. The pedigrees, as set forth in the catalogue, will be found most interesting to sporting readers.

MR. MUNTZ, M.P.

To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

Ley Hall, near Birmingham, March 26, 1849.

I have read your remarks upon me in your last paper, and with one exception, certainly I have no right to complain; but I cannot allow the following extract to pass unnoticed:—

"He is a zealous advocate of the views of the Birmingham school, whose doctrine is that an unregulated paper currency should be the medium of monetary circulation."

It is but fair to the Birmingham men to say, that, although many of them advocate inconvertible paper money, I never heard one of them advocate unregulated paper currency. But, for myself, I never advocated any currency which was not payable on demand in the precious metals. The only difference between Sir R. Peel and myself upon the question is, that he proposes to convert the bank notes into gold at the rate of £3 17s. 10½d. per ounce, and that I propose to convert them into gold at £5 per ounce. I contend that with free trade, and gold at £3 17s. 10½d. per ounce, which is the same value as existed before the French war, we shall have prices as low as in 1775; wheat averaging then less than 40s. per quarter; but we shall have six times as many taxes to pay, and three times as much rent. But if we raised the nominal value of gold to £6 per ounce, by converting our notes at that rate, wheat would average 60s. per quarter, and with all other articles bear a price in proportion to our taxation and rental, without prejudice to our foreign trade; as our high scale of nominal prices would be exactly counterbalanced by the altered rate of the exchanges, which the increased nominal value of our coins would produce.

Yours respectfully, G. F. MUNTZ.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

GOVERNMENT AID TO IRISH RAILWAYS.

A deputation of Irish members of Parliament had an interview with Lord J Russell, the Earl of Clarendon, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on Tuesday, at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury, in Downing-street. The Earl of Glengall, Lord de Freyne, Mr Robert Ferguson, Sir Lucius O'Brien, Sir W. Verner, the Lord Mayor of Dublin, Mr. James Fagan, Mr. W. Fagan, &c., were amongst its members

In reply to Sir Lucius O'Brien, who introduced the subject,

Lord John Russell stated that it was the intention of Government to lay before Parliament a plan which was not as yet fully developed, to promote the completion of the main trunk of railway extending to the western district, and that the railway known as the Midland Great Western would occupy the first attention of the Government, with a view to carry it out; and that they had come to the determination that public assistance should be rendered to that railway, which would open some of the districts most in need of improvement, and where it was most desirable to encourage the influx of capital. A plan similar to this had been pursued last year with respect to the Southern Railway, with the happiest effect, and it was shortly to be expected that the important city of Cork would, in consequence, be opened to all the advantages of railway communication Applications had been made from some of the northern lines, but he considered that they came under the principles he had first stated, and that they were in a condition to go into the market and obtain funds on their own credit. It was to be considered that the public revenue was not in a condition to afford greater assistance at the present moment. There were two other subjects which had engaged the attention of Government, as equal in importance to railways, and which, with a view to the relief of present distress, they were disposed to prosecute. He alluded to the deepening of rivers and water-courses, commonly known as arterial drainage; and for the second, the extension of the loans for land improvement. For this latter object it was known that a million and a half had already been voted by Parliament about £500,000 of which had been applied; but to most the numerous applications which the Board of Works had been unable to supply, they proposed to Parliament that a further sum should be voted.

Sir Lucius O'Brien asked if it would be within any reasonable time that the matter would be brought before Parliament?

Lord John Russell replied, that as soon as the views of the Cabinet had been sufficiently matured, the plan should be stated in the House of Commons.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—His Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured the society with a visit, on the Saturday last, and expressed himself much gratified with the progress that had been made since last year in the specimens of metal casting and bronzes. He was also much pleased with the specimens of silks and lace; but particularly with the paper-hangings. His Royal Highness, however, regretted the absence of good border papers, as some of the most beautiful effects are produced by a elegant border on a flat panel. On leaving the society's house, the Prince expressed a wish to send in some additional specimens for exhibition, and these have since been received.

THE LATE KING OF THE NETHERLANDS.—A most impressive discourse was delivered on Sunday morning, by the Rev. Dr. Geble, at the Dutch London Church, Austin-friars, on the occasion of the sudden and lamented death of his late Majesty, the King of the Netherlands. The church was hung with black cloth, and the majority of the congregation appeared in mourning. Great surprise, however, was expressed, that neither the Netherlands Minister nor any member of the Dutch Legation or Consulate attended.

ARBORICULTURE BY THE BANK OF ENGLAND.—On Saturday, a temporary wooden building, occupying the entire site of the Bank garden, in the south-west angle, was opened for the public drawing and private bill offices during the alterations and improvements in that part of the establishment now in progress. Orders having been given that the trees—amongst which there are several fine elm and sycamore, and shrubs—were not to be destroyed, they are all enclosed within the building. The warmth of the place assisting the process of vegetation, they are already putting forth leaves and buds.

INTRODUCTION OF HOBHOUSE'S ACT INTO PADDINGTON PARISH.—The poll upon the question whether the parish shall still be governed under Sturges Bourne's Act, or the more popular parochial enactment that bears the name of Hobhouse, resulted on Saturday as follows: For Hobhouse's Act, 1999; for Bourne's Act, 1204: majority for the former, 795. The above majority is, however, useless. The Act requires that it should be 2409—that is, 10 over with Sturges Bourne's Act, the majority must be two-thirds and one over.

ST. GEORGE'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, SOUTHWARK.—On Tuesday night a "Spiritual Retreat," or mission, which has been held in this church from the preceding Sunday week, under the direction of the Rev. Fathers Furlong, Lockhart (one of the Oxford converts), and Rinolfi, Fathers of the Order of Charity, terminated with a ceremony of the most interesting character, and one peculiar to the Roman Catholic religion, called "a renewal of the Baptismal Vows." The sacred edifice was densely crowded by a congregation amounting to between 3000 to 4000, who were attended to witness and take part in the ceremony. At half-past seven o'clock the Rev. Father Furlong, dressed in the sable habit of his order, ascended the pulpit, and delivered an eloquent address on the duties and obligations imposed upon Christians on the occasion of baptism. After which, the Rev. J. Cotter, one of the clergymen of the church, who occupied an elevated position, about the middle of the church, read from the Bible the first three commandments. The reverend father then briefly discoursed upon the nature and character of these Commandments; when the Rev. J. Cotter read the subsequent seven Commandments, which he also eloquently enforced upon the attention of the congregation by the Rev. Father Furlong. In the meantime the sacred Host was exposed to the view of the congregation from the steps of the chancel, the clear shining light from the whole of the congregation replying to the several questions put by the clergymen at baptism, and which on this occasion were put by the Rev. Father Furlong. Th Benediction followed, and thus terminated the ceremony. During the "Retreat" three discourses were daily delivered by the Fathers, one in the morning, and two in the evening, and at each the church was constantly crowded; and in the course of it the Right Rev. Dr. Wiseman furnished a series of discourses on that important dogma of the Catholic religion, "the real Presence."

REMOVAL OF SMITHFIELD MARKET.—On Monday afternoon, a public meeting was held at the London Tavern, for the purpose of taking into consideration the most effective measures to be adopted for the removal of Smithfield Cattle Market. A committee was formed to carry out the objects of the assembly, and the meeting adjourned.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM.—An account, officially prepared, of the income and expenditure of the British Museum for the year 1848, of the estimated charges and expenses for the year ending the 25th of March, 1850, and of the sum necessary to discharge the same, gives the following results: Expenditure from Christmas, 1847, to Christmas, 1848, £49,845 2s. 11d.; estimated charge from Lady-day, 1849, to Lady-day, 1850, £44,646; total amount of all receipts from Christmas, 1847, to Christmas, 1848, £53,999 11s. 6d.; cash in hand, £4154 18s. 7d. Total number of persons admitted to visit the Museum in the year 1848, 897,585. Number of visits made to the reading-rooms for the purpose of study and research, 65,867. Number of visits by artists and students to the galleries of sculpture for the purpose of study, 3636. The number of visits made in the print room, 5813. The number of fines received for new catalogue amounts to 47,123

STRIKE OF TRADES.—The metropolitan boot and shoe makers are now levying a weekly contribution from such of the trade as are in employ, to raise a fund to maintain a strike against the West-end houses for advance of wages. The journeymen tailors of the metropolis are also actively organising, to oppose the ruinously low prices paid by the show and ticket shops to workmen

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—On Wednesday morning a great loss of property took place by fire on the premises of Mr. Taylor, bookseller, Waterloo-place, near the Strand. The flames being discovered by the police, no time was lost in obtaining assistance, and a few minutes elapsed before the Strand and street engines and firemen arrived, speedily followed by others. The engines were vigorously worked by those present, and by six o'clock all danger had ceased. On examination the fire was found to have originated from a stovepipe having ignited the flooring, and must have been smouldering the whole night

BIRTHS AND DEATHS, &c.—The number of deaths during the week ending Saturday, March 24, were 1048. The births during the same period were 1445. This return continues to exhibit a satisfactory state of the public health. The deaths during the week were 1200 towards the end of the year, and fallen in the last week to 1048, or 121 less than the average. The mortality from epidemics, with the exception of hooping-cough, is little more than the average, and has fallen 20 per cent. within the period of a month. The mortality caused by small-pox and measles is still unusually low; that from scarlatina is now little more than the average. Diarrhœa has declined; and the deaths from cholera are only 19, 9 of which occurred in one workhouse and two hospitals; three in one family. Scarlatina and typhus were each fatal to 40 persons, which is rather less than the average for the latter disease. Inflammation of the lungs and air-passages, and pulmonary consumption, do not prevail fatally at the present time the aggregate deaths in the week from these diseases were only 260, whereas the average is 325. Three are recorded as deaths from intemperance, and had been the subjects of inquests. A woman, of 62 years, whose occupation was unknown, died in Park-street, Dorset-square, of "exhaustion, from having denied herself the common necessaries of life."

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—A favourable condition of the atmosphere may be esteemed, perhaps, the principal cause of the recent improvement in the health of London. The mean height of the barometer in the week was 29.661 inches; on Saturday 30 in. Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. The mean daily temperature ranged from 42 deg. on Monday to 46 deg. on Saturday. The weekly mean was 40 deg. 8 min. The greatest observed differences between the dew point temperature and air temperature were on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Saturday, when they were respectively 14 deg. 1 min., 10 deg. 1 min., and 15 deg. 4 min. This denotes dryness of the atmosphere. The wind blew for the most part from the north and east.

CONCILIATION HALL.—On Tuesday the furniture of Conciliation Hall was sold by auction, and the goods sold fetched high prices.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

His Excellency Count de Revel, for a long time Resident Minister of Sardinia at the Court of St. James's, has been compelled on his return to Turin, after his recal, to enter the ranks of the Garde Mobile as a private. So is the account made of the energies of a man who, for twenty years, has proved himself an able diplomatist. The fact speaks volumes for the present unhappy state of Italy.

Baron Ward, an equerry of his Royal Highness the Duke of Parma, arrived in town on Tuesday evening, the bearer of official despatches announcing that the Duke abdicates in favour of the Hereditary Prince of Parma, at present residing in England.

Mr. Macaulay announced, last week, on the occasion of his being presented with the freedom of Glasgow, that he has withdrawn from political life.

The Directors have commenced lowering the brow of Holborn-hill opposite Hatton garden, where it was peculiarly steep and dangerous. The road at that point has been sunk 18 inches, and will be continued on a gradual incline to Fetter-lane.

At the battle of Moodkee, a European serving in the Sikh army was surrounded at the capture of one of the enemy's guns. He lifted up his hands and cried, "Spare me! for I am one of the old 36th." He was immediately shot down. This circumstance corresponds with the report that there are three men of that regiment with a detachment of Afghans in the Sikh camp of the Jam-mu.

Orders have been received from the Admiralty, at the Royal Naval Rendezvous, Tower-hill, and the Perseus, receiving ship, off the Tower, to enter lads of fourteen, who have been already two years at sea, apprentices to the Royal Navy for periods of five years

Mr. James Douglas, chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Company, has been appointed Governor of the proposed settlement of Vancouver's Island. The arrangement is only a temporary one.

The Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel preached last Sunday forenoon for the first time since his secession, in the National Scotch Church, Regent-street, in place of the Rev. Rev James Hamilton, the minister of the church, who was too unwell to officiate.

It is understood that the Austrian Cabinet has proposed to the English and French Governments to convoke a congress of the powers which signed the treaties of 1815, for the discussion of the entire European question

The amount of gold recently received by various mercantile houses in London from California is, in the aggregate, rather more than £40,000

Sir W. Heathcote has intimated to his tenants in the neighbourhood of Winchester, that, at the next rent-day, which falls on the first Monday in May, he intends making a reduction of 25 per cent. on all their rents

A bill to indemnify such persons in the United Kingdom as have omitted to qualify themselves for offices and employments by taking and subscribing the oaths or assurances respectively appointed to be by such persons taken and prescribed, has been introduced by Mr. Parker and Mr. Cornwall Lewis. The object of the measure is to extend the time of taking the required oaths or assurances until the 26th of April.

The house of O'Connell, in Merrion-square, Dublin, will soon be offered for sale; and the library of the deceased Agitator is also to be sold by auction very soon, according to the Dublin World.

Mr. Dillon, the political fugitive, has been called to the American bar by a special order. Mrs. Mitchel and her five children are going to the Cape of Good Hope, to live near her husband.

A letter from the Pope, detailing his trials and afflictions, addressed to the President of Mexico, has been read in Congress, where it produced a lively sensation.

The Spanish Bishops have resolved to subscribe one-tenth of their income this year for the use of the Pope

The Right Rev. Dr. Wiseman has forwarded to the Cardinal Secretary of State at Rome the sum of £1320, collected in the London district for the Sovereign Pontiff

The Protestant Episcopal Church of America has a missionary Bishop (Dr. W. J. Boone) in China, who is styled "Bishop of Amoy."

The vessel Oscar, of Norway, has arrived in the Thames from Drobach, with a cargo of 360 tons weight of ice, the production of the place. This is the first importation of ice from Norway during the present year, and, with the exception of an arrival some time since from Prussia, is the first from any of the foreign states

Lord Camoys has invented a syphon for drawing off the milk from beneath the surface of the cream, and thus completely separating the two liquids by the simplest means, and with the least possible trouble

The Highland capital appears to be in an unusually thriving condition. The Inverness Journal is about to make the third page, and the prospectus of a new paper, to be called the Inverness Express, is issued, which professes decidedly Liberal principles

Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to grant a donation of £50 towards the support of the National Benevolent Institution, which is the oldest and most extensive of our pension societies.

The Lord Mayor of London, during his early years were spent in the service of the Royal Navy, has consented to take the chair at the anniversary festival of the Royal Naval School, in May

A number of persons of humble circumstances, natives of Germany, arrived during the week in one of the steamers from the Continent, with the intention of immediately embarking in one of the vessels about to proceed to New York, and which is specially engaged to convey these German emigrants to the United States of America.

Mr. Twisleton, the Chief Poor-Law Commissioner in Ireland, has resigned his office.

Mrs. Bryan (whose donation of £100 towards the Pope's collection is mentioned in the Freeman's Journal) is the relict of the late Colonel Bryan, of Ukansinore Castle, in the county Kilkenny, and sister to the Countess of Carnewsbury.

M. Bin de Bourdon, a well-known Legitimist member of the French National Assembly, died last week, in Paris, of cholera morbus. M. Bin de Bourdon was for thirty years a member of the Chamber of Deputies.

A perfect tornado occurred at Gibraltar on the 11th inst., which did much damage to houses, blew down many fine trees on the Alameda, and in the bay greatly perilled the shipping. The Sidon and another steamer had one an anchor broken, and another a chain cable. Its force was so great that large branches of trees were whirled about, and strewed the ground so as to render the roads dangerous and impassable.

A further clearance of timber from the Stowe domain is about to be made. No less than one thousand oak trees are now offered for sale by private contract

The Archbishop of Paris has handed 60,000f. to the Pope's Nuncio, being the first instalment of the collection made in the churches of Paris for his Holiness

Large quantities of fine salmon are included in the supplies of fish at present brought by the steamers from Holland. The Dutch steamer Bazarier, within the last few days, brought nearly 200 packages of fish of various kinds from Rotterdam, including salmon taken on the Dutch coast. Some of the salmon just imported weigh nearly 40 lb. each, and are of fine quality.

The principal leaders of the ultra-Republicans have left Rome and accepted some mission abroad. Even the popular agitator Ciserracchio has proceeded to Tuscany under the pretext of fraternizing with the Tuscans. The greatest anarchy prevails at Rome.

The French expedition, intended for the Roman States, is ready to sail the moment the Austrians shall set their foot on the Pontifical territory. It consists of 15,000 men.

The Brechin Advertiser says:—"Lord Panmure recently offered to Prince Albert the privilege of shooting over an extensive part of his Lordship's Highland domains, which offer his Royal Highness has been pleased to accept.

A notice has been issued from the General Post-office, stating that on and after the 1st of April next, the following offices will be opened for the issue and payment of money orders:—Harrogate, Brecknockshire, Llanwrst, Denbighshire; Newhaven, Sussex; Wandsworth, Surrey.

Sir Charles Napier left Paris on Monday for Marseilles.

Upwards of eighty men, mechanics and labourers, employed in H. M.'s Dockyard, Pembroke, have received notice that their services will not be required after the 1st of the ensuing month. The throwing of so many hands out of work will in a small town be most seriously felt, not only by the men themselves and their families, but by the townspeople generally

During the night of Sunday last, the office of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, Queen-street, Hull, was broken open; the clerk, who sleeps in the office, secured by cords, about as abstracted, and the books and papers partially burnt. The clerk is in custody, and has been remanded on suspicion

Let appears, from a return moved for by Mr. C. Lewis, that the loans advanced to turnpike trusts by the Exchequer-bill Loan Commissioners, from 1817 to 1846 amounted to £305,100, and that the amount of principal repaid is £5,287, leaving a balance of principal unpaid amounting to £131,154, and of interest due and unpaid amounting to £20,813.

The medical journals report 142 cases of cholera in the hospitals on Saturday, of which 76 were fatal.

The order of the General Board of Health, dated the 15th of January last, and applicable to the Parochial Board of Glasgow, has been revoked, in consequence of cholera having entirely subsided there

The Privy Council order of the 28th of September, 1848, for the prevention of epidemic disease, under authority of the act of last session, has been renewed for six months.

A person named Vaïsse has published an address to the National Assembly of France, in which he states that he has discovered an infallible mode to extinguish pauperism, and that he will explain his system to the representatives of the people, provided they will allow him three sittings of one hour.

M. de Bassano, the son of Napoleon's former minister, has been appointed French Chargé d'Affaires at Frankfort.

M. Saunpayo, a nephew of General Cubières, has been named principal secretary to the French embassy at Stutgard.

"THE INEXORABLE."—PAINTED BY J. SANT.—IN THE EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

"THE INEXORABLE."

THIS charming scene of coquetry is from the pencil of Mr. Sant, and his only contribution to the present Exhibition at the British Institution. The little lover is pressing his suit warmly—nay, "sighing like a furnace." Phillis sits upon the mossy bank, "inexorable;" she will have none of it, and the rejected rose lies at her feet, betokening her lover's fate. The picture is very cleverly painted; the old costume is quaint and characteristic, and the coiffure very old-maidish. The shady nook, or bower, in which this little drama of love is being enacted, is very nicely executed. The picture is, altogether, a very successful work.

WRECK OF "THE FORTH."

We have been favoured with the following by a Correspondent:—

Royal Mail Steam-ship Dee, Mobile, Feb. 21, 1849.

SIR,—Being at Mobile on the 1st of February last, on our road to Vera Cruz and Tampico, we heard a report of a large steamer (flying British colours) on the Alacranes reef; and apprehending that the vessel might be the Forth, Lieut. Davies, Admiralty agent, authorised the Dee to deviate from the plan of routes, and sight the Alacranes on our way to Vera Cruz. We shaped our course accordingly, and at daybreak on the 4th of February sighted a large steamer on the rocks, apparently high and dry. As we neared her, we saw that her mizen-mast was standing, her funnel over the port side, and apparently parting amidships.

We bore up for her, and found to our sorrow the Forth a total wreck. We came-to about three miles to the eastward of her and sent a boat on board, to ascertain if anything remained worth saving. We now distinctly saw people at work on board, who proved to be, as we supposed, wreckers.

In about an hour the boat returned; and this being three weeks after she struck, the wreckers had made clean work of her. Nothing remained but the machinery, and that so bent about as to be of no service whatever, even if it could be got out of her.

The captain determined to run round to the south side of the reef, under the lee of Perez Island, and anchor, seeing two vessels lying there at anchor.

We anchored at half-past one. The gig was manned and sent on shore, myself making one of the party, having a particular desire to set foot on shore, where a dear brother met with his untimely end. We found, from the account of the wreckers, that she struck on the morning of the 14th of January. Just before daylight. Not a soul was lost, and, barring a few bruises, no one sustained injury.

The captain and crew left on the 16th for Campeachy. The Admiralty agent went on to Vera Cruz, where we took him on board, with his servant.

I enclose you a rough sketch of the exact position in which the Forth lay, bearing from the ship W. by S., distant three miles, with the small isle of Perez, and the wreckers lying at anchor, in the distance.

I can vouch for the correctness of the sketch, and, being nearly a calm, no breakers fifty feet high, as generally represented in case of a wreck, but a gentle ripple spiring the foam up her side in a white line.—I remain, &c.,

ALFRED VANDELL, Midshipman on board the Dee.

WRECK OF THE "FORTH" STEAMER, ON THE ALACRANES ROCKS.—(FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

THE ASIATICUS RARIOTES IN FLOWER, AT EALING PARK.

MADAME GIULIANI, OF HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

ASIATICUS RARIOTES, IN FLOWER.

This noble exotic is in the possession of Mrs. Lawrence, of Ealing Park, to whom it was presented by Viscount Hardinge, on his return from India. It was then but eleven inches in height, and had but eleven leaves; it is now nine feet and a half in height, and forty-nine feet in circumference, with five bunches of flowers, and promise of more. Their colour is of the most gorgeous scarlet, tipped with orange.

This is the first time the Asiaticus rariotes has flowered in this country. His Grace the Duke of Devonshire possessed a specimen of this rare plant for nine years, but it did not flower.

MADAME GIULIANI.

Madame Giuliani, whose Portrait we give our readers this week, was born in France, at Bordeaux, the daughter of a merchant of that great commercial city. From the earliest age having displayed an ear and a great taste for music; and later vocal power of no ordinary compass having been revealed in her, her parents, at her urgent entreaty, consented to her going to study at the Conservatoire, in Paris. Her education hardly accomplished, the irremediable illness of Falcon having left a most serious void at the Académie de Musique, Mdme. Giuliani was amongst the young talents resorted to by the management in its tribulation. Shortly after their appearance, as is generally known, the management fell into the hands of an impresario, who would have but one ruling exclusive prima donna in his establishment. Madame Giuliani had but time to display talents of great future promise. She left the Académie, and appeared at the principal theatres in France and in Belgium. Desirous of visiting the fatherland of lyrical art, Madame Giuliani, who had in the meantime married a Dutch merchant, visited Paris, on her way to Italy, at the end of 1847. She was recommended to the great composer, Verdi, in order to obtain from him a recommendation to the principal theatres of Italy. Verdi, desirous to ascertain the extent of her claims to eulogy and recommendation, asked her to sing before him. He was so delighted by her voice, that he persuaded her to remain in Paris, and induced the new lessees of the Académie de Musique to engage her purposely to sing the part of the heroine in his opera of "Jerusalem," on the eve of being produced on the national lyrical stage of France. We have before us, at this moment, all the feuilletons of the first journals of France, which gave accounts of the appearance of Madame Giuliani; and there is not one, from that penned by the witty Janin to the critique of the sharp-sighted Florentino, which is not written in the highest terms of eulogy; with the exception of that laughing philosopher Théophile Gautier, in the Presse, who, whilst doing ample justice to her talents, criticises her dress. Her success in "Jerusalem" led to her engagement at Her Majesty's Theatre; and the English press has now confirmed the opinion of its Gallic contemporary.

THE FIRST THROB OF THE LONDON SEASON.

Imperceptibly slow, but surely as the course of nature—as soon as we begin to find that weaned not light candles before dinner, and discover (upon occasions of unwonted rising for an early train) that the sun is up before the shopkeepers, fighting a hard battle through the morning fogs, who are not yet accustomed to him, and strive to hold out against him like hazy minds unwilling to let a new light break in upon them—as soon as this time arrives, the suspended animation of London returns, and the great heart of the metropolis pulsates with the first beating of its reviving existence.

Not that it has been altogether lifeless. A million souls have grubbed on, somehow or another, through the dirty winter, but they were not supposed to be in a proper state of being. They were rather regarded—or, indeed, regarded themselves—as silkworms in a cocoon, dormice in a bank, or any other hybernating living thing. Some there were, to be sure, and these were the majority whose occupations kept them awake, and lively, and in constant commune with their fellows: but many others did not care to be seen abroad, and would not allow themselves to be found at home, until such a time as hares supposed to be mad were sold cheap at the poulterer's, from the popular notion of their lunacy: and fur-shops announced sales at an awful sacrifice: and the black and stunted shrubs in the squares put forth small grimy knobs which were understood to contain future foliage—a facetious fruiterer, handed down from one family to the next, with the keys of the inclosure, wherein the children played at hunt and La Grace, and the governesses regarded the iron railings almost like the bars of a cage; and, now and then, daring girls rode out on night, with their maids, and must some one not allowed to visit at the house, whilst the elders of their establishment were dosing themselves into a notion that they were amused at a heavy play, or a dull concert, or plodding long whist in Harley-street.

THE LONDON SEASON.—REGENT-STREET.

The commencement of the London season is not marked in the almanack. It does not depend upon those incomprehensible entries of Sol into certain signs of the zodiac on which have, for so many years, served the honest country man in a veneration for that great man, "Francis Moore, Physician," who is, by them, alone supposed to have a mind capable of grappling with these mystic symbols. Neither has the weather anything to do with it. Many seasons may be dried up with the cutting north-east wind, or turned into shallow canals of slush, making London look like a muddy Venice, but the commencement of the season is not affected thereby. There is no rule for it to come on, so it apparently takes its own. Part ament meets, to be sure, and members begin to get their tongues into training by talking up their time: Mario gets ready sooner than he was expected: a play makes a great hit at one of the theatres, and a long list of the fashionables who nightly attend its representation is paragraphed in the papers: somebody of a bold and festive disposition in the leading circle gives a large party; whispers of levees and drawing-rooms are promulgated; and the season is said to have commenced

I do not know whether "they manage these things better abroad." Here, I must confess, however, it does seem odd, that what the first glow of spring is causing the buds into light and life, and the first clear blue skies are giving joy to the pure and healthy country; whilst the long cold nights and the flooded dreary lanes that might have been so well escaped in London have become retrospections, and, further on, whilst the leafy month of June brings its deep shadows upon the teeming earth; and the glancing sunbeams shoot through the foliage to green on the mossy turf beneath; and the rills, no longer swoln and discoloured by the rains, tumble like liquid emerald with a splash and gurgle, musical when all sounds, down their courses—it does seem odd, I say, that it is the very period with its long, long days and bright mornings, and ruddy twilight, that "the world" selects for its sojourn and festivity in whilting, dusty, baking London.

Yet a country life is not necessary to know how many months are going on. No sooner do the crockery hedgehogs filled with crocuses begin to shoot forth their green quills within doors, than the barrows appear without with their penny roots just sprouting, like double headed tapeworms, and the first bunches of violets in Regent street, with which the flower-girls infest the carriages that begin to be seen about again as they stop at the shops; and then the primroses from warm sheltered banks about Hampstead and Hornsey, where they may be even blossomed all through the winter. Out and away from the thick of the smoke, at the far end of the Parks for instance, the trees open their buds and the new grass springs over, and the cheap vegetable stalls do not intrude on the fashionable thoroughfares, but affect narrow back streets and concealed markets close by, can scarcely hold the varieties of early salads and cresses that line them. With them, also, as if they grew in a similar manner, spring up shoals of little dogcarts of whom as many as one man can keep together with strings, and by carrying them to tempt the ladies with; and even these dirty little carts by choking themselves round lamp-posts, tying themselves together in a knot, fighting with small dogs of opposition merchants, or doggedly refusing to go from what site they can accomplish, whenever the display is needed.

And now begins the desperation of the ready-made garment vendors for both sexes—as the stock of heavy winter fashions still hangs on hand. They know that in a week or two, the gaudy-lettered tickets which hang in the unuformed spectator that such or such a vestment is "Quite New," "The Present Style," or "Direct from Paris," will not be believed in; and they fear the result of putting them by until the next winter, when, for aught they can tell, the ladies may be wearing rough pilot coats, and the men thick tweed stoles. Almost as strange things have happened. So their property is converted, for the occasion, into a bankrupt's stock: all the things are tumbled pell-mell into the window to give an idea of reckless disregard of value and unlim ted number, and a placard, with "No reasonable offer refused" written on it, tempts the country people for on that dies of the season, chiefly. An advertising card flourish. The same lavish sacrifice extends to bonnets; shawls, also, are offered under the same ruinous circumstances; and even last year's patterns of country are announced, as though our new Brussells, put down last April, was already passee, and not proper for good society, but only fit to be cut up for back parlours in Camden Town and Lambeth. You all these changes do not produce the old Polonbe effects that might be expected. Whether they are bought "for next to nothing," or not, all the old stock disappears for good, some Saturday night. Where the things go to we cannot say, but they never appear again; and on the following Monday morning all the latest fashions are resplendent in the windows, as if the whole establishment had been one vast kaleidoscope, and a turn had shaken all its component parts, in an instant, into new forms and combinations.

The next arrival is that of the wonders—marvellous exhibitions from all parts of the world giants, living skeletons, sea-serpents, and learned ladies. Judging from the quantity that come from America, that country must be one vast show, abounding in curiosities at every turn. No matter from what remote corner of the earth they may be journeyed, or when they arrive, the Egyptian Hall or the Cosmorama finds them a ready lodging, and they arrive in town just in time for "the Season." This is, however, not all. In company with the monstrosities of distant lands, the Show-men themselves arrive, or, more properly speaking, the best representation of them that can be conceived. Mr. Barford revives the jungle powers of the agent of the "Learned Pig," the Signor of fitting an, at our will, wheresoever we wish to go, brings the desired locality to us, with such aid alone as Mr. Selous affords him. You miss all the disagreeables of travel: all the long dreary roads in France, and sea-sickness, dangers, and uncomfortable weather, all the countless perp.exities that "being away from home" induces; and in a few seconds from Leicester-square, with no more trouble than going up a common hill, yourself at the Rigi Kulm itself, with Switzerland like a map at your feet. Another minute, and you are in the silent Forum of Pompeii, with the Bay of Naples and Vesuvius before you; and again, sinking the time and expense of roads and diligences and steam-boats, to the trouble of a few more stairs and passages, you have got to the noble Place de la Concorde, in Paris, which shews us more forcibly every time we look at it, what Trafalgar-square might be, but is not. The magnificent panorama of all these pictorial fac-similes is vivid; and it remains to a certain extent. One can hardly believe, when the noise, and daylight glare, and bustle of Cranbourne-street is once more experienced, that you have all this while been encircled by the busy shops and traffic of London.

The foliage is not yet out in the Parks, but, one by one, the best known frequenters and equipages appear. The private boxes at the theatres, also, present a better style of occupants to the gaze of the audience—not the eacmonpany people, who hang their shawls and bonnets in the remote corner before they advance to the front, and then stand up and look round the house, and make a great to-do in drawing and withdrawing the curtains, and disposing their playbill with a pin on the front cushion; but nice-looking persons, who have taken the box properly at the office or the librairie, and only enter and sit down, placing their lorgnette and bouquet with quiet ease where they ought to be, and appearing as if they were all about everything, and were accustomed to it. This does do not dress particularly for the theatre; it is only in the public boxes you see the artificial flowers, and gold bands, and perhaps even little feathers in the heads of the visitors.

Anon the bouquets become larger and cheaper; and the natural season and the artificial one for a time progress together, until the latter leaves the former behind, like a steamer just starting with the last bell ringing, and the paddles side by side. We mean that, owing to the increasing vitality of the metropol.s, when it is March in the agricultural districts it is June in Covent-Garden. Then the plants come out in the open air, in the shape of the green and the variegrown bulbs of the glasses, but nurtured exotics, possessing the wonderful property of living only so long as they are in the baskets on the heads of the vendors. Day after day, the scarcity of families from the country at the principal hotels are chronicled in the papers, still increasing, until one begins to wonder where they can all be accommodated if they stay another mass in Dayeven though the hotels were all turned to barracks—without presenting that disturbed, not to say uncomfortable, state of existence peculiar to the inmates of Noah's Ark. Hotels and coffee-houses both possess great additional resources more after they are quite full: indeed, landlords must have studied packing their inmates from the original makers of the toys just quoted, with the exception that when the animal inhabitants of the former are packed in the ark, no power of contrivance yet known has ever succeeded in getting it all back again

It is not for the patricians alone, however, that the Season comes on. The first fine Sunday sends its thousands out of London in all directions, by rail and river. It is true, the real Season, rather than the artificial one, induces the outbreak in such manner, but the artificial one affects the trade and trade which enables the tradesman to go down to his country estate almost directly beneath the tradesman who supplies his establishment; who, in turn, can pay his assistants and workpeople: and they take advantage of the fine weather for their holiday. Besides, in whatever circle of life birth or circumstances may have thrown a cluster, windows are lighted up at night, parties in full swing, and the Season is at its height in London. Not only in London, indeed: Greenwich and Richmond the Trafalgar and the Star and Garter—profit alike by it. Epsom, Hampton, and Ascot benefit as well, when the printing-presses of Dorling, Lundon, and Wetton come again into work. The season is fed, too, at many quiet road and river-side inns may, far off and away from the smoke of town altogether, it produces bustle and traffic in the fat pastures of the grazing counties; and its effects are perceived even in the distant rocky lobster deeps of rude Norway.

But our business is at present only with its commencement. Its other features—its gaities and brilliancy, and its decline and end—have before formed subjects for writing and illustration in this journal. We therefore bring our paper to a close, only reminding those to whom the season brings important changes, intrigues, engagements, and interests, that the ball is off, and that it may have been thinking of "making their game," they had better do so but one season in the year (of London life), and that is equivalent to a dozen—as much in its events as in its wear and tear of the same face of time passed in the tranquil realities of the country.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured the second concert on Monday evening with their presence. The directors of the society received the Queen at the entrance of the Hanover Square Rooms, and conducted her Majesty and the Prince Consort to the Royal box arranged in front of the orchestra. The National Anthem was played by the band on the entrance of the Royal amateurs, who, both on their arrival and departure, were loyally cheered by the numerous and fashionable company when filled the room. The Duke of Wellington was in the Royal box.

The first part of the scheme comprised the overtures of "Anacreon," by Cherubini, and "Der Freyschütz," by Weber; the B flat symphony, No. 4, of Beethoven; and the airs of "Il mio tesoro," by Mozart, and "In terra ci desserem," by Handel, sung by Miss Dolby. The second part was occupied solely with Mendelssohn's music to Racine's "Athalie," which was repeated by command.

The first portion was a concert, of itself sufficient, both in quantity and quality, to satisfy any moderate musical appetite. Two such fine overtures, and such a majestic symphony, interpreted as they were with musical excellence, would have left no room for monotony and fatigue, as were inevitably entailed by the execution of a work which is not at all adapted for the concert-room. Had there been a selection containing with the overture, and finale to the duo and trio, the Chorale, No. 3, and ending with the march, perhaps the feeling would not have been so dreary and dull at the end of the concert; but the long accompanied recitatives and dialogues are almost intolerable. Thus, there was the advantage this time of the declamation of Mr. Barkley, who recited impressively the verses which Mr. Bartholomew has written as an argument, as a translation, be it understood, of Racine's tragedy; and thus there was more clearness and unity in the ensemble than on the execution at the first concert; but still the work was composed by Mendelssohn for a stage purpose, and can no more be rendered effective for a concert-room, than the incantation music of "Der Freyschutz," the market chorus of "Masaniello," or the "Conjuration" scene of the "Huguenots" action being indispensably necessary. The orchestral accompaniments and choral singing, albeit very efficiently done, were absolutely stunning in such a limited space: so far the Exeter Hall execution of "Athalie" will have the advantage of a larger space. Miss A. Williams particularly distinguished herself in the singing of the solos, and she was well seconded by Miss M. Williams and Mrs. Noble: the trio by the three artistes was finely executed.

The overtures were played with the utmost skill and energy—the finer parts came out with all the fire of the players as clear as chrystal—no delicate point was lost in the midst of the most complicated passages. The symphony was also rendered with a fine appreciation of its manifold beauties. The lovely adagio one of the most delightful of melodious inspirations, so replete with passionate feeling and tenderness—was finely executed by the band. The air which was nicely hit off; and the fiery finale was gone through with the most untiring spirit. Costa conducted his forces as if they were but one instrument. Mario was a little shaky in the "Il mio tesoro," but in the melody of Mercadante sung with delicious purity of tone and impassioned feeling, and was encored by her Majesty, who remained until the last note of the concert.

The third concert will be on the 16th of April.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

The 111th anniversary festival, celebrated at Freemasons' Hall, passed off with the greatest spirit. The galleries were filled with ladies, and the attendance was numerous. The Earl of Cawdor, F.R.S., was the President of the day, and made neat and effective speeches on behalf of the admirable institution, and was well seconded by the Rev. D. C. Delafosse, A.M., and Mr. Horsley, the latter proposing the Chairman's health. At these festivals, oratory, however, plays but a secondary part; it is music which is the staple commodity of the evening after the banquet, and the programme was very attractive. "Non nobis Domine" Dr. Cocke's "Amen;" Mr. Horsley's glee, "By Celia's arbour;" Macfarren's "I pine for love" and "Bacchanal;" Jackson's chorus with "God save the National Anthem; Sir H. R. Bishop's round, "When the wind is still," and Sedgwick's "Hand Robin Hood!" with the marches composed for the late Haydn and Mozart, were all capitally executed. The solo singing comprised the veteran Braham, in the "Bay of Biscay;" Mr. Sims Reeves, in Beethoven's "Adelaida," accompanied by Mr. Cipriani Potter, and rapturously encored: a very pretty composition of Mr. H. Phillips. "Rule Britannia," the blind flower-girl's song in Bulwer's "Last Days of Pompeii," charmingly sung by Miss Dolby, and encored; and Kalliwoda's song, "Home of Love," sung by Miss E. Lyon, the clairvoyant somnambulist, well played by Lazarus, also demanded twice. The solo instrumentalists were Thalberg, who played two pianoforte fantasias on themes from "La Donna del Lago" and "Masaniello;" and Hoyrah, who performed Dr. Arne's "Soldier tired," on the trumpet, with wonderful skill, and was encored.

The donations amounted to £1,000, of which the firm of Broadwood gave £50; Cocks and family, £30; the noble chairman, £10; the Earl of Westmorland, W. Dickson, Esq., Colonel Curling, J. Hastings, Q.C., M.D., Beneke, and Miss Thomson, £20 each; Mr. Cipriani Potter, £25; Mr. Lover, £5; Professor Taylor, one guinea, &c. The late Miss Caroline Frank, niece of Dr. Boyce, has just left £1000 to the Society. Amongst the contributions are Handel for the benefit of Gloucester Hospital, £100; Mr. Hullah, £25; Mr. Goss, £21 guineas, &c. The amount expended in 1848 in charitable purposes was upwards of £200. Mr. Parry's health, as Hon. Treasurer, for his indefatigable exertions on behalf of the society, was drunk with enthusiasm.

MUSICAL UNION

The fifth season began on Tuesday evening, at Willis's Rooms. Prince Albert is the Patron, the Duke of Cambridge President, and the Earl of Westmorland Vice-President of this association of the aristocratic classes, the affairs being managed by a committee of gentlemen, with Mr. Ella as secretary, and Mr. Smouth being Chairman. Mr Ella is the manager of the society, which he originated, and which he has conducted with much tact. There are eight matinées during the season, and the programme of each is confined chiefly to classical chamber compositions and brilliant instrumental solos. The subscription list this year is strong, as was proved by Tuesday's fashionable attendance. The selection of executants, Sainton and Deloffre being first and second violin, Tolbecque and Hughes being the violas, Piatti violoncello, and Herr Otto Goldschmidt piano. The last-mentioned professor is new to the musical circle: he was a pupil of Mendelssohn. He conquered the mechanical difficulties of the trio with ease and precision, and he proved himself to be an intellectual pi—

MUSICAL EVENTS.—It is with infinite regret that we announce the cessation of these concerts of the venerable institution for the present season. At a meeting at the Queen's rooms, Prince Albert and the Earl of Cawdor being present, the directors resolved, as the subscription was so small, it would be more expedient not to give the concerts this year.

CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MATINÉE.—Sterndale Bennett gave his third and last performance on Tuesday evening, at the Hanover Rooms. There was a numerous assemblage of amateurs. Mr. Bennett, with J. Banister (violin) and Lidel (violoncello), played the scherzo in Haydn's Trio in Mi mol's trio in E flat, op. 93. With Mr Lidel, Mr. Bennett also executed, with the finest taste and discrimination, Beethoven's Sonata in F, op. 5, for piano and violoncello. A new pianoforte trio, for the benefit of Mr. Reeves, on the 18th of April. It's own works, with some gleanings from Mendelssohn's compositions, were performed by Mr. Bennett. Miss Dolby and Mr. Ferrari sang vocal pieces by the former gentleman. The concert was brought to a close with Haydn's and "The May Dew," very charmingly. We hope that Mr. Bennett may be induced to renew his pianoforte performances. He is one of our most accomplished pianists, and as a composer has talent of the first rank.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—The nineteenth of the London Wednesday Concerts attracted a numerous audience at Exeter Hall. Thalberg was the principal instrumentalist, and played his "Home, sweet Home" fantasia with his electrical effect. He is about to depart for Vienna, but will return to London in May. Mr. Collins played a violin solo. Miss Hassan, Misses Birch, Nelson, Poole, Messrs. Mrs. A. Reeves, Mems. Wilkinson, Lockier, Travers, T. Williams, Master Sloman and Reeves were the vocalists. There will be no concert next Wednesday, but the twentieth entertainment will take place on the 11th of April: and the twenty-first, for the benefit of Mr. Reeves, on the 18th of April.—As Mr. Lucas's second musical evening on Wednesday, the quartets executed by Sainton and Hargrove, Hall and Lucas, were No. 1 of Mozart's, No. 59 of Haydn, and No. 13 of Beethoven. Madame Duicken performed a pianoforte sonata by Mendelssohn.—The performance of Mendelssohn's music to "Athalie" by the sacred Harmonic Society, and the "Hymn of Praise" by the same composer, day night, conducted by Costa, will be noticed in our next Number.—Miss and Mr. John Day give this day (Saturday) the first of a series of —To-night, the last performances at Her Majesty's Theatre at the Royal Italian Opera, before Easter.—Next week, being Passion Week, there will be, at Exeter Hall, three performances of sacred music: the first, on Monday, by the London Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Mr. Surman, when Haydn's "Creation" will be performed; Miss Birch, Miss Thornton, Messrs. C. Braham, Lediler, and Lawler, singing the solos; and signora Grisi, Jenny Bord, from Venice, will sing the "Holy, holy," of Handel, and a composition by the Chevalier Neukomm.—On Tuesday Mdlle. Lind will sing in Haydn's "Creation," and Handel's "I let the bright Seraphim," the process of which concert will be appropriated to the Royal Society of Musicians, the Choral Fund, the Royal Society of Female Musicians, and the Governesses' Institution. Messrs. Lockey, Whitworth, and Machin, with Benedict as conductor, will assist in the "Creation."—On Wednesday, the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa, will perform Handel's oratorio of the "Messiah," with the Misses Birch and Dolby, Messrs. Reeves and Phillips.—Mr. Henry Russell and Mr. Barker give their vocal entertainments next week at the Olympic, Surrey, and Marylebone Theatres.—The fourth concert of the Musical Amateur Society will take place on Wednesday.—The committee of the Birmingham Musical Festival are engaged in making arrangements for the September meeting; Costa has received carte blanche as conductor to form the orchestra. Mr. Reeves has been engaged as principal tenor. The celebrated Strauss, with his Viennese band, is expected in town in a few days for the season.—Mdlle. Nau has been attracting crowded houses in the Concert Theatre. She appeared on Friday in Lucia. Miss Lucas and Mr. Chas. Braham, on Thursday night, played Polly and Captain Macheath in Gay's "Beggar's Opera," for the first time.—Mr. Beuler, the comic song writer, gave his annual concert on Wednesday, at the Princess's Rooms; and on the same evening, at the Hanover Rooms, Messrs. Scates and Sedgwick gave a Concertina entertainment, the chief item in which was the "Semiramide" overture, on eighteen concertinas: Reginald, Case, E. Blagrove, &c. Below included among the players.—Nicolai, the Chapel Master at Berlin, has lately produced, with success, a comic opera, the libretto of which is taken from Shakespeare's "Merry Wives of Windsor."—The Italian Opera season in Paris will close to-night (the 31st).

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Those musical amateurs whose most agreeable associations of reminiscence are with Cimarosa and Paesiello, with Rossini, Bellini, and Donizetti, can never approve of the generality of the music of the reigning Italian school, as imbued as it is with the exaggeration of the modern French and German schools of the "lower Empire." But exceptions must be made, and particularly in favour of the last work of the best composer of modern Italy—"Ernani." The libretto of this opera is admirable. Victor Hugo, whilst attempting tragedy, wrote a startling melodrama, whose exaggeration is beautifully veiled by its musical envelope. Verdi's lyrical enthusiasm has been fired by the language—the ... nest, onward purpose of the libretto; and an opera has been pro... which never allows the attention to slumber, or the interest to flag, whilst soft subdued strains raise them in general relief to ear from the fiercer harmony which characterises this Italian composer. Once more, therefore, on Saturday last, the opera of "Ernani" was beheld with pleasure in the 5th of June of Her Majesty's Theatre. On the occasion of Madame Giulini and Signor Bordas made their first appearance in England. The first to come forward was Signor Bordas, as Ernani. He has earned considerable reputation at San Carlo, at La Pergola, and at the Italian last season, is a young man, of 24 years of age, with a handsome countenance, and a good stage figure—gifts which he turns to the utmost advantage, which is graceful and impassioned. His trepidation at first entrance was painfully marked, so that at one moment he missed his intonation, and at another he forced his notes to husky utterance; but he recovered himself, and his singing became, in the duet of the second act, soft and sweet; whilst they assumed power and peculiar distinctness of utterance, with telling effect, in the last scenes of the opera. His style of delivery is that of the most approved school of young artists, which time soon corrects. Madame Giulani enacted the Donna Sol of Victor Hugo. Her appearance is full of suavity and elegance. Her voice has a remarkable range the stretch of two octaves and a note she accomplished with ease: her lower notes appear to have been acquired to suit the fashion of the day, her natural range is in the highest range of the voice. She is par excellence, a high soprano, with tones alternately swift and penetrating. Her singing of the first cavatina, "Ernani, involarmi" at once established her in the good graces of the audience, and to the last she sustained her position triumphantly. Beloti was destined, in the part of Silva, to mark the extraordinary improvement in volume of voice and in science which the great artist has made since last season. Never since he first appeared in "Ernani" has he failed to receive a loud encore in his first aria, "Infelici! se in credevi!" but on Saturday last his applause was enthusiastic; and on the Tuesday following, singing a portion of the part of the King as well as his own, he revealed all his newly-acquired treasures of song to the audience. The great basso, Coletti, summoned, in consequence of the indisposition of Gardoni, from Paris, assumed his part with singular fidelity on Tuesday. Dignity—dramatic energy, admirably regulated—volume of voice, modulated to every shade of passion and measured according to the solo, trio, duet, or concerted piece he was singing, such were the great qualities with which this noble artist constantly delighted the audience. The part of the King was written for a bass voice; Coletti sang it in a tone of voice and in science which the great artist has made sure desired. Mrs. Yates's personation of Mrs. Butts was extremely clever—the malapropisms, warm-heartedness, and mother mess of the character were given with great point and effect. Harley's pompous and bustling manner kept the audience in perpetual good temper. The other characters were Benjamin Bats, Mr Grunby; Mr. Deputy Flopins, Mr. Cooke; and Mr. Deputy Butts, Mr Matthews. Messrs. Roxby and Meadows were the lovers; and Misses Marshall and Howard, the young ladies. Their united efforts ensured the success of the piece. The approbation at the fall of the curtain was very loud and general. The mise-en-scene by the river-side was so well managed, that we almost felt its interruption as a personal grievance.

THE FREE EXHIBITION OF MODERN ART.

THE third Free Exhibition of Modern Art opened on Monday last, at the Gallery of the Association, at Hyde Park Corner, (now known by many as the site of the old Chinese Exhibition. This Association was established in 1847, and the first Exhibition was opened at the Egyptian Hall; the second was at Hyde-Park Corner; and neither, we confess, gave any great promise of the well-regulated Exhibition which we see this year. The first was rather a hurried affair, in order that a year might not be lost; and the second was done on a very enormous scale, of allowing every exhibitor to crowd as many square feet of wall for the arrangement of his own works after his own manner. As may be readily imagined, the Exhibition, though fair to the exhibitors at first sight, was highly injurious to them, and very unfair to the visitors; for the Gallery, by this disinterested kind of arrangement, was made a very motley affair to the visitor—the whole Gallery wearing the appearance of anything but a very harmonious disposal of places, subjects, sizes, pictures, and certainly very little of colour in the whole display. The Association this year has deducted its error; and here we have a very pleasing Exhibition, where works are arranged so near to the level of the eye, that beauties and defects are equally well seen.

The Association consists of a committee of 20, and the Committee of Management. This committee consists of the following individuals:—Messrs. S. S. Lander, R.S.A., W. Oliver (Treasurer), R. W. Buss, E. J. Niemann, T. S. Robins, A. W. Williams, T. C. Dibdin, R. R. M'Ian, J. Peel, J. F. Paumore, C. Dukes, W. J. Hiwes, R. Sayers, J. G. Middleton, J. G. A. Duvall, Bell Smith (Hon. Sec.), W. J. Lukeing, A. Corbould, S. R. Percy, P. W. Elen, H. Barraud, E. Corbould, G. A. Williams, W. P. Salter, J. G. Waller

This is not a bad list, and the Committee, we may remark, instead of imitating the Royal Academy, in selecting a committee number of officers, has contented itself with adding the names of its banker and honorary solicitor

The Gallery contains 331 works of art, contributed by 138 different exhibitors, and the catalogue possesses this striking feature over other catalogues, that, to each work of art (if not already sold) the price is appended. Of the 331 works, there are only thirteen priced at a figure above £99; the highest is £105.

There are several ambitious pictures in the collection, but the general run of subject is of a humble character. Landscapes, of course, abound; and some very well composed, at least, are very carefully painted. The wheat artist in the Association is unquestionably Mr. R. S. Lauder, whose "Christ teaching Humility" (a finished study for a larger picture) is very fine. The drawing is very well sustained throughout, and conceived on higher principles of art than is commonly to be seen among our living British artists. He has, also, the best idea of a portrait, though frequently too dark (not as Tullen was dark), and now and then hard, which Sir Joshua never was. His "Portrait of a Gentleman" (No 54) is a well-considered figure; and his small full-length of the late Mr. Dancaut, the painter, a very characteristic memorial of an artist who died too early for Scottish art. Mr. J. E. Lauder is not quite up to his cousin; but he is clever. Mr. E. A. Goodall's large picture of the "Funeral of Henry VII., as seen from the ambulatory by Edward the Third's Tomb," is a picture of merit, true to the architecture of the Abbey; and, but in a very few points, true to the manners and costume of the age. We wish we could say as much for Mr. E. Corbould's "Old Rostrife at Knightsbridge," though the careful observer will find much to commend in it, and the artist should certainly not pass it by too readily.

The visitor will find of coarse many glaring imitations of, or cantos from, successful living artists. The landscape-painters commit sad piracy on Mr. Creswick's inimitable manner; and Mr. Leslie, Mr. Uwins, Mr. F. Stone, and Mr. F. Goodall have been poached upon pretty freely by some of the younger exhibitors. No man grew great by imitation. He who sails by others maps can make no new discoveries. But painting is more of an imitative art than poetry is; and we must make, as we do, every excuse for the younger fry, who, as soon as they feel their way and get past their early idolatry, will begin no doubt to think and paint for themselves.

Mr. Caxton's "Morning Prayers—the Free Seat" is better than his usual manner, with higher feeling in it and warmer colour. Mr. Kidd is as humorous as ever. "Noon at Undercliff, Isle of Wight" (No. 42), by Mr. Alfred W. Williams, has great merit, but somewhat hard in its sky line. Mr. S. R. Percy's "Rugged Pastures" is a well-chosen subject, and far from lacking skill in its treatment, though somewhat hard. "The Interior of St. Peter's, at Rome," by Mr. G. B. Moore, is a carefully and well-coloured picture, the figures well grouped, and the scene as it should be, very imposing. Mr. Wright's "Interior of Inner a Day at Hampton Court" is true to nature, but wants nothing but warmth of colour to make it a good picture. Mr. Cobbet's "Peep at Windsor Castle from the Terrace" is sunny and warm, and withal a picture to be looked at with pleasure. "Scene on the Cliffs—French Coast" a composition of like pleasing character. Mr. Lacy's "Rebecca returning from the Well" is a careful study of a female figure, and assures us his name is known. The little circular landscapes by Mr. A. Gilbert, "Mid-day, a scene from Nature," is as sweet a little picture as any in the whole room. The willows are well rendered, and keep from the sky; not as painters too often point them, as if tied to the sky. "Porto Ferrajo, Isle of Elba," by Mr. T. S. Robins, is something between Mr. Chambers and Mr. Stanfield. Mr. Pasmore's "Summer's Afternoon" may be forgiven its yellow tone, for its numerous other beauties; and Mr. Hulme's "Shady Brook," though sinning too much in the way of imitation, is far from an every-day work of art. The price of Mr. Hulme's picture is £30, a Creswick of the same size and character would sell for £60 at the least.

We look to that we have been pleased with this exhibition. The lover of art should certainly make a point of visiting it. We are not at the present day, we are glad to be reassured, without a very numerous race of young and rapidly rising artists.

BURFORD'S PANORAMA OF THE RIGI KULM.

THE Panorama of the Rigi Kulm, just opened in Leicester-square, is one of the most interesting we have yet seen, as much from the number of localities renowned in the legends of Switzerland visible from the top of this famous mountain, as from the beauty of the painting, and the extreme fidelity of the detail. Mr. Burford has copied nature with most singular success: it is not, however, until the eye has rested upon the Panorama for half a minute or so, that the immense accustomed to the perception of extreme height; and the vast tract of Switzerland then appears like a coloured map at the feet of the spectator As a lady near us observed, it makes one giddy to look down so far. An uninterrupted circumference of at least three hundred miles is embraced, extending to the Jura on the west, the mountains of the Grisons on the east, the St. Gothard on the south, and the country beyond the Rhine on the north. Seventeen lakes are distinctly seen, those of Lucerne, Zurich, Zug, Sempach, and Lowertz being amongst the principal; and amongst the innumerable peaks of the mountains, we can discover, in addition to those named, almost every known point in Switzerland.

The impressions made by the first glimpse of this view, which is caught from the platform of the Rigi Staffel—a little inn some distance below the Kulm, or summit, and marked .31 in the catalogue—are never to be forgotten. Fenimore Cooper thus speaks of them; and the quotation might have been inserted with good effect in the pamphlet just alluded to. He says:—"For myself I can fairly say, that, the occasion of a total eclipse of the sun excepted, I never felt so deep a sentiment of admiration and awe, as at that exquisite moment. So greatly did reality exceed the pictures we had formed, that the surprise was as complete as if nothing had been expected. The first effect was really bewildering, leaving behind it a vague sensation that the eye had strangely assembled the rarest elements of scenery, which were floating there by, without order, in pure wantonness."

The most prominent feature, and at the same time the most painful one, in the view from the Rigi, is the remains of the Rossberg mountain, which one top (from the coping strata of which it is formed being loosened by the land-springs) slipped down into the valley below, in the autumn of 1806. The vast mass covered seven thousand acres of fruitful land, including the pretty village of Goldau, with its four hundred and fifty inhabitants. No escape was possible; all were buried alive; and a barren rocky tract alone marks the site of the once beautiful valley

Other interesting points are those connected with the history of William Tell The "travelling schoolmaster" connected with this personage, however, has of late somewhat tempered down from the extreme paucity of any data respecting his career; indeed, his actual existence has been at times doubted by great authorities, and the tales of Gessler, the storm on the lake, and the apple-shooting only regarded as pretty fictions.

The atmosphere of the painting is remarkable; and this gradation of that, in the extreme distance, managed with consummate skill. A fine effect is also produced by the representation of the mists floating over the lakes—as clever as it is truthful. In conclusion, we cannot do better than cordially recommend this Panorama to the patronage of our readers. Those who have been on the Rigi will be pleased to pick out the different objects without a catalogue; and those who have not will obtain a singularly clear notion of the unrivalled view obtained from it.

PANORAMA OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

IN North America, Art as well as Nature rejoices in the vast and wonderful. Not long since, we noticed the exhibition of a Panoramic Painting, by Banvard, three miles in length! Now, we have to record the production of a similar work extending over four miles of canvas! The scene of the latter is Mr. J. H. Smith (associated in its exhibition with Professor Risley), who, on Saturday last, gave a private view of the picture at the Great American Hall (late Mass Lunwood's), Leicester-square.

The work is termed "a gigantic moving panorama of the Mississippi River," and it is stated to depict an extent of nearly 4000 miles from the Falls of St Anthony to the Gulf of Mexico—and running through nine States of the Union This is the second picture Mr Smith has painted of the scenery of "the great father of waters," as the Mississippi is called. The first picture was exhibited at Boston in 1840, and destroyed by fire; but the artist fortunately preserved his drawings, and from them, with additions, has executed the present work. It has been finished some months, but, owing to a disagreement in contract, it has been involved in a lawsuit, which has only just been compromised.

THE PANORAMA is divided into Three Sections, commencing with the Corn Region, from the Falls of St Anthony to the mouth of the Ohio This is the most varied portion of the work executed; the skies and the atmospheric effects are very artistical y painted; and, in this respect, the entire picture has the advantage of its contemporaries, which, on the other hand, appears more rigidly accurate We have, in this first section, hills, forts, lakes, islands, prairies, towns, rapids, levees, bluffs, towns, and settlements, far too numerous for us to specify one of the most novel points is, perhaps, Joe Smith's Mormon city and great Temple, which, "if paid for, would have cost above half a million of dollars."

The Second Section, the Cotton Region, stretches from the mouth of the Ohio to Natchez; and the Third Section, the Sugar Region, reaches from Natchez to the Balize, Gulf of Mexico

The picture is well stored with incidents, such as steamers snagged and sunk, or burnt to the water's edge with terrible sacrifice of life Of these, the explosion of the Ben Sherrod steamer is a scene of fearful reality The longitudinal section of a first-class steamer cleverly shows its internal economy and arrangement. The scenery of the banks is well executed; and the entire picture, notwithstanding its extreme length, will doubtless prove very attractive.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"W. W. C."—1. In Problem No. 266, the last move of the solution should be—K. P to K 2 3d. The mate you propose are legal, but not satisfactory: because, when the White K takes the Pawn, Black may play P to K B 4th, and thus escape. 2. The solution of No. 268 is—1. Q takes K R P (ch); 2. R to Q Kt 8th; and then, play as Black pleases. When Chess dinners, and meat with the B.

"LEX."—A plurality of Queens is not a modern innovation, as some writers assert. In the time of Louis XIII., 1635, a Pawn reaching the last line assumed at once the power of a Queen

"F. R. S."—B. agree with you that the Chess-playing community are much indebted to the committee, &c., of the Brighton Chess Club, for promoting the late match Many of the games in it are admirable, and will serve to delight and instruct the lovers of Chess all over the world. You will be gratified to learn that the two winners are to meet again in three. In the last, two moves, of the Black King, for his first move, play to Q 3d, we very much doubt whether mate can be given at all The Enigma has since been shewn to us upon the same being finished; but, as in the case of a match contest, a game begun with the pieces misplaced is always better stopped when the error is discovered, and, the men being set right, commenced again. 2. We referred to a Problem with those initials attached, the MS of which we destroyed 3. Will you have the goodness to give the number of the Enigma, as, your letter not being dated, the description is too vague?

"F. W. M."—The author of the 8 move Problem is ingenious, but, unfortunately, it can be solved in four moves, thus:—1. Kt to K Q B 6th (ch) 2. K takes B (discovd. ch.) 3. Kt to Q B 7th (disc. ch.) 4. Q takes B—Mate In like manner, that in six moves may be done in three. In the last, two moves, of the Black King, for his first move, play to Q 3d, we very much doubt whether mate can be given at all The Enigma has since been shewn to us upon the same being finished; but, as in the case of a match contest, a game begun with the pieces misplaced is always better stopped when the error is discovered, and, the men being set right, commenced again. 2. We referred to a Problem with those initials attached, the MS of which we destroyed 3. Will you have the goodness to give the number of the Enigma, as, your letter not being dated, the description is too vague?

"F. W. M."—The author of the 8 move Problem is ingenious, but, unfortunately, it can be solved in four moves, thus:—1. Kt to K Q B 6th (ch) 2. K takes B (discovd. ch.) 3. Kt to Q B 7th (disc. ch.) 4. Q takes B—Mate In like manner, that in six moves may be done in three. In the last, two moves, of the Black King, for his first move, play to Q 3d, we very much doubt whether mate can be given at all The Enigma has since been shewn to us upon the same being finished; but, as in the case of a match contest, a game begun with the pieces misplaced is always better stopped when the error is discovered, and, the men being set right, commenced again. 2. We referred to a Problem with those initials attached, the MS of which we destroyed 3. Will you have the goodness to give the number of the Enigma, as, your letter not being dated, the description is too vague?

"A. J. H."—1. According to the strict letter of the law, five moves having been played, either party could claim upon the game being finished; but, as in all cases of match contests, a game begun with the pieces misplaced is always better stopped when the error is discovered, and, the men being set right, commenced again. 2. We referred to a Problem with those initials attached, the MS of which we destroyed 3. Will you have the goodness to give the number of the Enigma, as, your letter not being dated, the description is too vague?

"A. J. H."—1. According to the strict letter of the law, five moves having been played, either party could claim upon the game being finished; but, as in all cases of match contests, a game begun with the pieces misplaced is always better stopped when the error is discovered, and, the men being set right, commenced again. 2. We referred to a Problem with those initials attached, the MS of which we destroyed 3. Will you have the goodness to give the number of the Enigma, as, your letter not being dated, the description is too vague?

"F. W. M."—The author of the 8 move Problem is ingenious, but, unfortunately, it can be solved in four moves, thus:—1. Kt to K Q B 6th (ch) 2. K takes B (discovd. ch.) 3. Kt to Q B 7th (disc. ch.) 4. Q takes B—Mate In like manner, that in six moves may be done in three. In the last, two moves, of the Black King, for his first move, play to Q 3d, we very much doubt whether mate can be given at all The Enigma has since been shewn to us upon the same being finished; but, as in the case of a match contest, a game begun with the pieces misplaced is always better stopped when the error is discovered, and, the men being set right, commenced again. 2. We referred to a Problem with those initials attached, the MS of which we destroyed 3. Will you have the goodness to give the number of the Enigma, as, your letter not being dated, the description is too vague?

"F. W. M."—The author of the 8 move Problem is ingenious, but, unfortunately, it can be solved in four moves, thus:—1. Kt to K Q B 6th (ch) 2. K takes B (discovd. ch.) 3. Kt to Q B 7th (disc. ch.) 4. Q takes B—Mate In like manner, that in six moves may be done in three. In the last, two moves, of the Black King, for his first move, play to Q 3d, we very much doubt whether mate can be given at all The Enigma has since been shewn to us upon the same being finished; but, as in the case of a match contest, a game begun with the pieces misplaced is always better stopped when the error is discovered, and, the men being set right, commenced again. 2. We referred to a Problem with those initials attached, the MS of which we destroyed 3. Will you have the goodness to give the number of the Enigma, as, your letter not being dated, the description is too vague?

"LEX."—A plurality of Queens is not a modern innovation, as some writers assert. In the time of Louis XIII., 1635, a Pawn reaching the last line assumed at once the power of a Queen

"F. R. S."—B. *agree with you that the Chess-playing community are much indebted to the committee, &c., of the Brighton Chess Club, for promoting the late match Many of the games in it are admirable, and will serve to delight and instruct the lovers of Chess all over the world. You will be gratified to learn that the two winners are to meet again fourteen years, but there are three or four of twenty-two and twenty-three years. Of this number about one-third are free cases, admitted by election of the subscribers; and these patients are entirely clothed and provided for at the expense of the Charity. The other inmates are charged at graduated scales, according to the scale of accommodation and attendance. The periods of childhood and infancy are preferred as most favourable for attempts to remedy the original want or deficiency of mental power, in which Idiocy consists. The plan of the premises comprises a large suite of apartments, used as a school-room: here we inspected the copy-books of some of the pupils, in which the rate of improvement was very gratifying. Upon a large slab of slate, placed en chemi, some rudely-formed circles and lines were the first attempts of other patients, yet any approach to occupation, however slight, is beneficial. Attempts at singing are at all times desirable; and upon another swing slate we noticed a large music score: before dinner, too, a blessing is chanted daily by the patients generally. Helplessness is one of the foremost afflictions of Idiocy; and to remedy this, has been introduced the teaching of patients, in classes of six in number, to undress themselves, as for bed, and to dress, article by article. The dormitories in the upper stories of the house are patterns of order and cleanliness; in one of the beds lay a cretin, presenting one of the worst forms of idiocy.

"OPHELIA."—PAINTED BY H. LE JEUNE.—IN THE EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

In consequence of the Royal visit on Tuesday, the patients enjoyed a "half-holiday." We accordingly found them in their large playground in the rear of the mansion: here, some were swinging, and taking other gymnastic exercises; and a numerous company were under drill practice, marching to the beat of a large drum, in the dramatic amusement of playing at soldiers. The lads were quiet and orderly, and evidently affectionately attached to their superintendents; more than one of the boys entreated us to join in their play.

By the courtesy of Dr Forman, the Resident Physician and Superintendent of the Asylum, we hastily inspected the General Register of Cases, stating the physical and mental condition of the patients on their admission. One of them is of a family of thirteen children, twelve of whom have died more or less imbecile. Another case presents a remarkable instance of hereditary predisposition to idiocy, from the grand-parents downward. It is lamentable to see many of the cases in the Register traceable to the highly-reprehensible practice of servants frightening children, and nurses drugging their young charges with Godfrey's Cordial and other narcotic nostrums. The rattling of curtains, and the stalking of sheet-ghosts, employed to terrify children into obedience, are productive of incalculable mischief, and cannot be too severely condemned.

The first anniversary dinner was held on Wednesday, at the London Tavern, when a highly-respectable party assembled; Dr. Lushington presiding, in the absence of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, who was prevented by indisposition from taking the chair, and whose health was drank after dinner, amidst much cheering. Among the company were—Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P., Mr. M. T. Smith, M.P., Mr. Heywood, M.P., Dr. de Mussy (the Count de Neuilly's physician), Dr. Conolly, the Rev. Drs. Holloway and Reed, Messrs. Twining, Tottie, Wire, &c. The chairman, in commending the institution to public support, remarked, that all he wished was that those who were not acquainted with its admirable operations would do as Prince Albert had done on the previous day—go to Highgate and personally inspect the establishment. And Dr. Conolly (one of the Physicians to the Charity) observed, that, in some instances, the improvement effected in a few months had been so great that he could hardly recognise the unfortunate creatures whom he had seen at their own homes before their admission. Lord Dudley Stuart mentioned that, among the various charities to which he had the pleasure of subscribing, he found none where the applications for his vote were so urgent and so many as in the case of this institution; but Dr. Reed was compelled to announce that, of the 195 candidates for the next election, the funds will only allow ten to be received. An urgent appeal for greater pecuniary means, pressed very forcibly by the chairman, and supported by other gentlemen, was answered by contributions, in the course of the evening, amounting to £736; the list of subscribers including, besides gentlemen present, the Duke of Cambridge, Baron Rothschild, Messrs. Rothschild, Mr. Baines, M.P., Miss Lushington, &c.

THE ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS, PARK HOUSE, HIGHGATE.

"OPHELIA."

THIS is one of Mr. Le Jeune's two contributions to the Exhibition at the British Institution. He has portrayed poor Ophelia beside the glassy stream:—

> "There on the pendent boughs her coronet weeds
> Clambering to hang, an envious sliver broke,
> When down her weedy trophies and herself
> Fell in the weeping brook."

The picture is painted with freedom; and the composition gracefully tells the touching episode in the masterpiece of our great dramatic Bard.

JOSEPH COUNT RADETZSKY.

THE career of this veteran soldier, who has just gained a decisive victory over the forces of Charles Albert, King of Sardinia, presents a succession of services extending over a period o nearly threescore years and ten.

Radetzsky was born at Trebnitz, in Bohemia, in the year 1766; and, singularly enough, under the sign of Sagittarius. His birth, as also his early years, marked out his future destinies. The boy Radetzsky chose for playthings a spear and shield, mounted his hobby-horse, and drilled his young comrades when a child. At a very early age, he was observed to listen anxiously to the tales of the heroic deeds of Eugène, Marlborough, and Frederick; and his youthful mind revelled in descriptions of fortresses and battle-fields. An excellent horseman, stalwart grenadier, nothing delighted him more than military manœuvres. With such predilections his profession was soon decided. He commenced his military career on the 1st of August, 1781, as a cadet in a regiment of cuirassiers. He left his home on the 24th of June, on the anniversary of which he gained the splendid victory of Custozza, in 1848. How changed is Austria from that time! Then, the watchword was liberty, as it is now. At that time it was used by the Emperor Joseph, who was, however, too far in advance of his age. At his death, the people of Austria fell back into the same state of lethargy from which he had roused them, till the revolutionary storm of 1848 awakened them again into activity.

FIELD-MARSHAL RADETZSKY.

The Marshal's early youth was passed during the first period: he supported Austria during all the convulsions in that long epoch. The young cadet made rapid progress. In 1788 he was an Ensign; and a year afterwards, was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant. This post he held for seven years, when he was appointed Captain, and afterwards Major, in 1796. About that time he married Frances, Countess of Strassholdt. In 1800 he obtained the Colonelcy of the regiment of Albert Cuirassiers; and, in 1801, the rank of a Major-General. The year 1809 proved a most successful one. He fought with great distinction under Archduke Charles at Agran and Erlingen, and the sword with which in the past year he vindicated the honour of German arms in Italy, he then wielded, animated with the glory of defending his Fatherland against the French.

Five days after the battle of Erlingen, on the 27th of May, Radetzsky received the appointment of Field-Marshal, Lieutenant, and Chief of a regiment of Hussars. He gained fresh laurels in the battles of 1813, 1814, and 1815; and displayed great valour, especially at Kulm, Leipzig, and Brienne, became a General of Cavalry in 1829; and, after being successively Governor of Ofen, Olmütz, and Lemberg, was, in 1822, appointed Commander-General in the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom.

The victory just achieved by Radetzsky, and his present position, will be found detailed elsewhere in our present Number.

The accompanying portrait of the Marshal is from a fine print just received from the Continent.

Among the intelligence received during the past week, it is stated that Radetzsky had seized the celebrated Iron Crown of Lombardy, which was deposited in the Cathedral of Monza. This famed symbol of kingship is a broad circle of gold, set with large rubies, emeralds, and sapphires, and was deposited in an ornamented cross placed over an altar, closely shut up within folding-doors of gilt brass. The Crown is kept in an octagonal aperture in the centre of the cross. It is composed of six equal pieces of beaten gold, joined together by close hinges; and the jewels and embossed gold ornaments are set in a ground of blue and gold enamel, interesting as exhibiting an exact resemblance to the workmanship of the enamelled part of a gold ornament now in the Ashmolean Museum, which once be-longed to King Alfred. But, for those who have an appetite for relics, the most important part of this Crown is a narrow iron rim, which is attached to the inside of it all round. The rim is about three-eighths of an inch broad, and a tenth of an inch thick, made out of one of the nails used in the Crucifixion. The Crown is said to have been presented to Constantine by his mother; and the sacred iron rim, from which it has its name, was to protect him in battle. And, although this iron has now been exposed more than fifteen hundred years, there is not a speck of rust upon it.

THE IRON CROWN OF LOMBARDY.

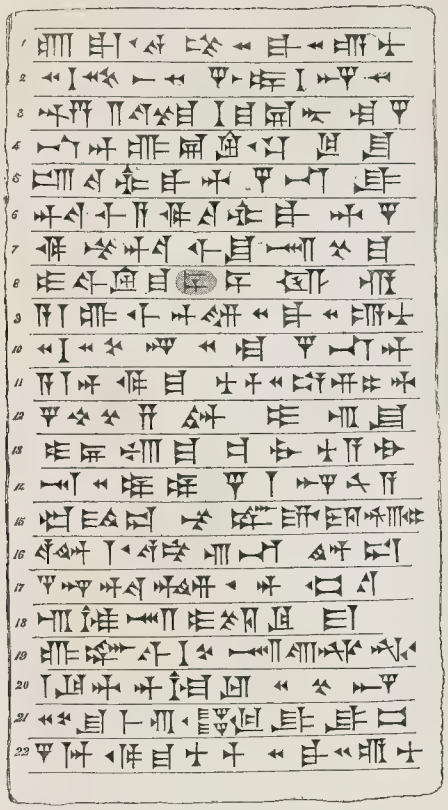
THE NIMROUD SCULPTURES, JUST RECEIVED AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.



ARROW-HEADED INSCRIPTION.

WINGED FIGURE. (No. 13)

SINCE our article of 16th December last, describing the large collection of Scriptural Antiquities which had then arrived from Nineveh, a farther portion of the discoveries have reached this country; and, in fulfilment of our promise to furnish the fullest information respecting these important remains, we take the earliest opportunity of continuing our notices. Lively as was the curiosity excited by Mr. Layard's excavations, the interest in the subject is even still increasing, if we may judge from the eagerness with which Mr. Layard's "Narrative" has been devoured, and by the learned speculations and discussions which have originated in various quarters. This fresh importation is likely to stimulate those who are already engaged in researches, as it possesses many points of novelty, and most of the remains are in such perfect preservation as to satisfy every observer. It consists of one sitting statue, a large cuneiform inscription, and fifteen friezes, representing divinities and other figures of colossal dimensions; several battle scenes and processions; and many minor fragments, such as painted bricks, which formed the cornice above the slabs, the ornaments being handsome rosette and Greek designs, some bricks semi-cylindrical in shape, and some having cuneiform characters stamped upon them, whilst on others the characters are painted.

That which we shall place first in our catalogue, as of great importance to the learned student, is the Slab (size 6 feet 3 inches by 4 feet 8 inches), containing the inscription, consisting of 22 lines of arrow-head character, each character being 2½ inches long, and most sharply and beautifully engraved. Although we ourselves are unable to construe this inscription, there are so many now engaged in studying this division cuneiform writing, that we do not hesitate to insert it here, as it will thus meet the eye of many who may not be able to obtain a correct copy of the original without difficulty; and may excite curiosity and induce examination and comparison in others who, perhaps, would never, otherwise, have turned their attention to the subject. We vouch for the perfect accuracy of our copy, and merely add that the erasure in the eighth line is no error of ours, but exists in the original; the repetition of the same combination of characters being evidently a mistake, thus erased on revision by the sculptor.

No. 2, upper portion of a colossal Frieze, 5 feet 10 inches by 4 feet, containing the King drinking, attended by his cupbearer. Around the usual truncated cap peculiar to the King is passed a diadem, tied by a fillet, the extremities of which are decorated with the winged bull. The border of his sleeve is embroidered with the honeysuckle and pine cone ornament, and round the neck of his robe is wrought the winged bull and antelopes, separated by honeysuckle. Two daggers are placed in his sash; he holds his bow in his left hand, and in his right the cup which he is raising to his lips, the ordinary ear-rings and rosette bracelets complete his attire. The eunuch resembles those already so fully described in our former papers, the only point worthy of remark being the fly flap, the handle of which is terminated by the head of an animal, most highly finished.

No. 3 represents a colossal figure of the King (7 feet 2½ inches by 4 feet 8½ inches), and is so remarkable in every way for the extraordinary handling and minute finish of the sculpture, and for the perfect state in which it has been preserved to us during so many thousand years, that we shall describe it in detail, as it will be of considerable service in examining other friezes that have suffered more from time or travel. The King appears to be walking, supported by a long staff held in his right hand, his left resting on the hilt of his sword. The upper part of his truncated cap and the cone on the top of it are both closely studded with gems; and his diadem is elaborately ornamented, and tied behind with fillets having three tassels at the extremities. His hair and beard are arranged in more than ordinarily numerous minute curls, executed with a finish quite astonishing, most curiously illustrating in this ancient portrait a characteristic that has lived through so many ages in the East, the operations of the dyeing and dressing of the beard being of the first importance amongst the modern Persians. The decorations upon his robes appear to be symbolical and legendary, for the breast and sleeves of his tunic are embroidered with the sacred tree, and the hems of the sleeves are further adorned with a border of the star butting at the honeysuckle. The lower part of his robe is bordered by a fringe, and above the fringe is wrought a procession of the King receiving, and his attendants introducing, prisoners. His mantle is fringed, and the hems are embroidered with the lotus and pine alternately intertwined, and with the human-headed lion, the bull, and the sacred tree. He has tassoled cords round his waist; the extremities of his armlets are terminated by exquisitely-carved bulls' heads; his bracelets consist of numerous small chains united by rosette clasps; his sandals are adorned with pearls; and the point of his highly-decorated scabbard has two tufted lions intertwined in a death struggle, all beautifully executed and highly characteristic of the animals

THE KING CROSSING OR PASSING DOWN THE RIVER, A CONTINUATION OF THE SLAB ENGRAVED IN NO. 348 OF THE "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."

No. 4, Frieze 5 (6 feet 8 inches by 4 feet). This frieze represents a battle scene and rout of the enemy, the front part being on some other slab. Two of the King's aids-of-camp wearing the conical cap with two feathers, are pursuing a fugitive whose horse has fallen, behind them is a falling figure; and flying overhead is a vulture carrying the entrails of the dead in his beak

No. 5 (size 7 feet 11 inches by 3 feet), another representation of the rout and flight of the enemy by horse and foot, with the dead and dying on the ground. The King's troops are headed by an eunuch and his companion shield-bearer, both on horseback; and immediately following them are two bearded horsemen discharging arrows at the flying infantry of the enemy. The shield-bearers have their shields slung behind them, and are holding the reins of the horses of the fighting companions, and the manner in which they manage the animals is true. The foot soldiers, wearing the beard and conical cap, and armed with bow, mace, and sword, follow in military order. Under the horse of the eunuch lies a beardless body, and suspended from the wounded breast of another horseman is the corpse of one of the vanquished. Before the foremost horseman is a foot soldier already wounded, endeavouring to screen himself with his hand. The bows, quivers, and arms of the dead and dying are scattered over the ground; and above the combatants hovers the ominous bird of prey.

No. 6 (size 7 feet 3 inches by 3 feet), the Eunuch warrior in battle. The chief officer is represented in his war chariot with three horses, and accompanied by his charioteer. Highly decorated quivers are suspended at the side of his chariot, to which also is fixed his spear, and his bossed shield hangs at the back. The breast-plate and tunic of the Eunuch are much ornamented, and the cuffs are bound round his left arm to strengthen it when using his bow, from which he is in the act of discharging an arrow. Behind the chief, seated with their backs turned towards it, are seen the enemy, one standing, discharging his arrows upwards, and the other kneeling, also using the bow. Before the horses, a man, who has already been wounded by arrows, is seen, who raises his bow in the left hand, attempts to arrest the progress of the horses, while another, also in retreat, turns to discharge an arrow at those in the chariot; and in front is one of the King's foot soldiers wounding his enemy in the back with a sword. Above he has driven back upon his knees. Behind those last is a raised mound or earthwork, upon which two are contending upon their knees, the victor retaining his sword and wicker shield, which he holds between himself and the vanquished adversary, whose bow and quiver have fallen. Above and below are men falling pierced by arrows, and the battle-field is strewed with the arms of the slain. The bird of prey hovers over all. The King's charioteer is usually seen wear the conical cap—the enemy the simple fillet.

No. 7 (size 7 feet by 3 feet). The direction of the figures in this frieze is reversed; they face to the left, instead of to the right. The King's beardless officer in his chariot, accompanied by his charioteer, is pursuing the canary of the enemy into a river. Four horsemen are represented in active flight, but one attempts to aid a foot soldier who has been struck down, and who is stretching out his hand imploring for succour; whilst another of the foremost of the fugitives seizes the opportunity to turn and discharge his arrows at the pursuers; and under the horses of the chariot is a wounded man endeavouring to withdraw the arrows with which he has been pierced in the side and in the thigh

No. 8 (size 8 feet by 3 feet), the Return of the Conquerors—women upon the walls of a battlemented city or palace watching the triumphal procession of the victorious army. As the walls of the city extend entirely across the frieze, there is little doubt that only a portion of the subject is represented. Four battlemented towers are seen; and beneath the battlements are circular decorations, which lead us to suppose that the external walls of a palace, rather than of a city, are intended to be portrayed—a surmise further supported by the appearance of the women, who always occupy the upper stories in Oriental buildings Upon the walls are several women considerably disposed to embonpoint: they have the hair flowing over the shoulders, but confined round the head by a fillet; and their dress consists of a simple robe restrained round the waist by a sash: their attitudes are various, the first having her arms elevated and palms open, the Eastern posture in pronouncing a blessing upon her hands simularly open, but her arms more advanced; whilst the third, who stands by herself, has only one hand raised. The actions of the two obviously younger females are far more lively and expressive of interest in what is passing: but without the head of one being turned towards her companion, whose head is raised as if in the act of speak; a fourth stately procession of females. In this manner the chariots drawn by two horses: the first, led by a groom, contains the chief standard-bearer with his standard—an armed figure discharging an arrow from his bow, and standing upon a horse or bull (for the animal is not sufficiently clear to render it difficult to distinguish which). The second chariot has no leading groom, though it conveys a standard-bearer, the cousin of whose standard has been unfortunately defaced by the chisel. The dress of the men in these chariots, the accoutrements of the chariots and horses, have all been described in our earlier articles

No. 9 (size 11 feet by 3 feet). Procession conveying tribute and prisoners to the great King after his victorious return. This procession is led by two officers of importance, clad in long, fringed, and embroidered robes; swords, with richly decorated scabbards and belts, are suspended over their shoulders; and sandals are on their feet. The one is bearded; the other an eunuch, who wears a piece of embroidered lace behind his head-dress. Both officers have their hands crossed in that peculiarly Eastern attitude of respect remarked upon in previous articles. A double bale of embroidered stuffs is placed above, but not resting on their hands, indicating that they are not supported in the manner, but carried by meaner hands. Next come two officers, similar in all particulars, except that the head of the eunuch has no covering, and that he is situated on the left hand of the bearded figure. Both officers are accompanied by groups of heads, representing probably ebony, or other precious woods—a part of the spoil. Succeeding these is a single eunuch, clothed like the others, and having two tusks of an elephant above his head. Next to him are two officers who have no hat to introducing the personage who follows him, evidently a prisoner of distinction, and probably, from his decorated diadem, the sovereign of the newly-conquered race. This prisoner is therefore followed by two officers unarmed by a cord, held in the left hand of a soldier of large stature, who seems driving him on with his clenched right hand: "I give him a charge to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to bring them down [take the spoil of the spoiler] (Isaiah, c. 10, v. 6) The appearance of this fallen ruler, thus humiliating forced into the presence of his conqueror by his barbarous conductor, strongly excites our compassion; and his whole attitude brings to our mind the passage in Isaiah, describing the manner in which Agag approached Saul after the defeat of the Amalekites: "And Agag came unto him delicately" (1 Samuel, c. 15, v. 32.) Above the head of the Prince are two square baskets, and over that of the soldier a semicircular two-handled basket. Next succeeds a eunuch wearing sandals, but in other respects clothed like the first prisoner, whose cloth dress he evidently has above his head is a small semicircular basket, and his arms are bound together, and secured to the two bareboned and inferior prisoners wearing the short tunic and the filleted round the head. The cord is round both their arms and secures them to one another is held by a second soldier of gigantic stature in the left hand, which likewise holds his bow, the right hand being raised in the act of striking with the staff which he holds in his grasp. Both these large soldiers wear the high conical cap, tunic midway down the leg, and quiver slung at their backs, their bows being on their left hands

No. 10 (size 7 feet 8inches by 3 feet), the King Crossing the Euphrates down the River

This slab is a continuation of one in the last important, which we copied for the information of our readers, and, as this concluding portion is yet more striking, and continues the subject, we have thought it desirable to introduce it amongst our present Illustrations. It may be remembered that the former frieze represented several animals swimming, pursued by mounted archers; horses also swimming, and guided by their grooms or riders; and boats, conveying war-chariots, arms, and domestic furniture. This fresh frieze shows us the King in his fully-equipped war-chariot, which has two charioteers, the centre of a long boat, with high prow and stern. The vessel is steered by a stalwart naked man, with a long paddle; it is propelled by three rowers; and its progress further accelerated by two men towing on the shore, or in the water, one of the stream. The King seems magnificently dressed: his three daggers in his girdle. His sword by his side, in his left hand his bow, and in his right two arrows before him stands one of his principal beardless officers, supporting with his left hand to the enemy, who, we may imagine, occupy the opposite shore. Behind the King is another eunuch, in long fringed robes, and bearing the usual arms; his left hand holding the bow, and his right his mace. Standing in the stern of the vessel is a man who holds the long reins of four horses which are swimming—behind the stern of two seem more to resemble galloping, and another is starting back. One naked man is swimming, supported by the skin which he is inflating. We will here point out, as peculiarly deserving of note, that the King is represented in every transaction of the day, as may, therefore, readily learn which is the most important part of every representation, whether of the battle or of the chase, by observing the position of the mighty one

No. 11 (size 4 feet 10 inches by 4 feet 3 inches), continues the subject of another frieze in the last importation, representing the evacuation of a city. The first portion contained a city with two war-engines, in front of which appeared to be a herald, whilst from a side gate issued a car, conducted by women, a child, and domestic utensils. Only a portion of the car was visible. On the present slab we have the front portion of the car; and immediately before it another similar car, laden with goods, and conducted by females, and drawn by oxen. Other unyoked oxen are seen in front; and a tree indicates the nature of the country which surrounds the city. Facing the herald, in the upper portion of the preceding slab, are two scribes recording the spoil; whilst a herdsman is driving away flocks of sheep, rams, and goats. In front of all are two men carrying off plunder, but of what nature the obliterations of time do not allow us to discover.

No. 12 is a fragment upon which is represented the winged emblem of the divinity in front of the King, who has wings upon his shoulders, suspended round his neck, comprising the moon, two stars, and the three-horned cap. A winged divinity, with the three-horned cap, follows the King. The whole of the remaining frieze represented winged divinities of colossal dimensions, the most curious of which we hold to be so important that we have selected it for our third illustration.

No. 13, slab (7 feet 9 inches by 4 feet 6 inches).—This frieze exhibits a young man habited in a long fringed robe, fitting close to the upper part of his figure. Secured to his waist by tasseled cords is a species of train formed of five rows of feather-shaped fringes, and round his waist is a broad girdle in which are placed three daggers. He wears sandals, armlets, rosette bracelets, and earrings; and round his throat is a necklace, and a cord and tassels. Upon his head is the two-horned cap; and in addition to the ordinary crisply curled hair, is a long bunch, likewise curled, and bound with cords and tassels. His right hand and arm are raised, and the left is extended, holding a wreath of small and large flowers placed alternately. The most remarkable features, however, in this sculpture are the representations of two large and two raised and very dropsical and fat suspended from his neck are two bands, from the upper of which depend ornaments consisting of rosettes surrounded by a ring; and from the lower, four stars likewise enclosed in rings. This bund horn head-dress and the star-like ornaments suggest some connexion with the worship of the Assyrian Venus, Mylitta, or Astarte. Another remarkable circumstance in these figures are the characters, avoiding, however, the left wing and part of the right, which are left unbored

No. 14 (size, 7 feet 7 inches by 5 feet 5 inches), figure of Nisroch, facing the reverse way to the last. He has here the eagle head and two wings, but the pine cone in his upraised right hand, and the left hangs down holding the square basket. The form of his robes was fully described in our first article, but the sheus of his garments in the present example being symbolically ornamented are deserving of more particular notice. On one sash is delineated the pine cone and lotus border; on another the chief ornament is composed of a fight battle between Nisr and the human-headed lion, in which the former is victorious. Nisr on this embroidered representation has four wings. The extravagant development of the muscles of the arms and legs is likewise remarkable, and not, in our opinion, arise in any unskilful or conceit of the sculptor, but is merely typical of strength—power. and we are imagine that the pine cone has some similar signification, as the Assyrians and many other powerful nations acknowledged in Holy Writ to cedars. (Ezekiel, c. 31 and 17; 2 Kings, 14; Amos, .

No. 15 (size of slab 7 feet 3 inches, by 4 feet 4½ inches). Divinity with two wings, as distinguished for its high preservation and delicate finish, as the figure of the King before described. This figure faces towards the left, and his upraised left hand holds a flower, and his right is extended in front of the body of the fallow-deer. His dress differs in no respect, as regards the shape, from that of the other divinities; but the mantle and robe are richly ornamented, fringed, and tasseled, and his beautifully curled hair is confined by a fillet with a rosette-formed ornament in front

No. 16 (size of slab 7 feet 8½ inches by 4 feet 2 inches). This divinity has two wings; his dress resembles that of the last, but has the addition of roses or rosettes upon his head. He holds a goat on his left arm, and in his upraised right hand he holds an ear of wheat. He faces towards the right.

No. 17 is a sitting statue in female form, and has small breasts. It presents no remarkable feature to describe

Amongst the sculptured bricks, there is one containing a most interesting impression, in addition to that of the King, namely, that of the foot of a weasel, which had run over the recent brick before it had left the hand of the fabricator; thus transmitting to us a specimen, for which neither the Zoological or Geological departments of the British Museum might contend with the Antiquarian.

THE GREAT ROSSE TELESCOPE, AND THE NEBULAR THEORY.

A most interesting lecture was given on Friday evening (last week), at the Royal Institution, on the Nebular Theory, by the Rev. Professor Baden Powell, who has just obtained great celebrity by his profound researches in astronomical and mathematical sciences. The very great advance made in the former of these during the last few years, principally through the means of Lord Rosse's telescope, has rendered it much more popular than it formerly was; and the lecturer commenced by observing that in any allusion he was about to make respecting the discoveries made by that gigantic instrument, he should entirely confine himself to what Lord Rosse had actually published, leaving out of view altogether that which rested on mere assertion only. After alluding to the well-known fact of the Milky Way consisting of an infinite number of stars, he proceeded to state that the late Sir William Herschel observed a multitude of nebulæ, some few of which he thought might be broken up, or resolved, examined by telescopes of low power, they have all the appearance of masses of luminous vapour; but when instruments of a higher power are directed towards them, they show themselves principally to be masses of brilliant stars, revolving round a common centre, and consequently each nebula forms a complete solar system. Nevertheless, even with such a telescope as that constructed by Lord Rosse, very large portions of the luminous matter still remain; and the Professor was of opinion that if the telescope power could be increased to an almost indefinite amount, there would yet remain masses of nebulæ unresolved. After alluding briefly to the well-known theory of Laplace, the lecturer concluded by passing some just strictures on the folly of those who considered it impious to make inquiries into subjects of this description; because, the more intimate our knowledge of the mode in which the Deity employed by the Great First Cause, the more would he appreciate and worship the beneficence and wisdom of the Almighty Ruler.

The lecture was illustrated by some admirable diagrams, executed by Professor Smyth, and was listened to with admiration by one of the most numerous audiences we have seen.

The president of the evening was Admiral Sir Edward Codrington.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

There has been an increased demand for money during the present month, the discount houses, in many instances, taking to some extent. At present, however, no improvement in the rate can be anticipated, from the large amount still remaining unemployed at the Bank of England—viz. £14,000,000.

Consols, on Monday, opened with some buoyancy, at 91 to ¾, but sales for money soon after caused a decline to 91. The same operation occurred on Tuesday. Consols opened at 91¼, and closed at 91 to ¼. On Wednesday, 91¼ to ⅜. Yesterday transactions were few and of limited amount, Consols opening at 91¼ to ⅜, and, after remaining at that quotation during the day, closed at the same. The Three per Cents. Reduced, the New Three per Cents. Annuities, the Bank Stock, and Long Annuities, remain unaltered.

The Foreign Market has been the scene of much activity during the past week, confined, however, principally to Peruvian, Mexican, and Buenos Ayres stock. Peruvian, on Monday, suddenly advanced from 63¾ to 66, closing that evening at 66. Realisation on Tuesday, however, caused a decline to 65, whilst a about the current value now. Mexican, on Monday, opened at 30¾; advanced on Tuesday, to 31¾; but on Wednesday declined ¼ per cent, in consequence of the non-arrival of the Sea has made large sale transactions in the present week. On Thursday prices ranged from 30¾ to 31¾, the vessel still remaining unreported. Buenos Ayres have been quiet at 40, 40½, with a little lower. Portuguese have not been much dealt in. Dutch Stock has recovered the decline consequent on the death of the King of Holland. Prices at the close of the week were fluctuating as follows:—Belgian Five per Cents., 103¾; Ditto, Four per Cents., 103¼ Ditto, Three per Cents., 71¾; Ditto, Account, 31¼; Peruvian Bonds, Six per Cents., 65; Portuguese Four per Cents., 27¾; Ditto, Account, 28; Spanish Five per Cents., 1840, 19½; Ditto, Passive, 5¼; Ditto, Deferred, 13¼; Ditto, Account, 30¾; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cent., 82¾; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 53

Shares continue very dull, with a downward tendency. All speculation appears to have ceased, on this description of security. The closing prices of the week are, for Aberdeen, 15¾; Ditto, Preference, 2¼; Boston, Stamford, and Birmingham, 5; Caledonian, 22¼ Ditto, New, £10 Preference, 11¼; Chester and Holyhead, 18; Eastern Counties, 8¼; Ditto, New, Guaranteed 5 per cent., 11¼; Ditto, Extension, 5 per cent., No. 4, 2 p; East Lancashire, New Quarters, 4¾; Great Northern, 11¾; Great Western, 91¼; Ditto, 4 Shares, 19; Ditto, New £17, 12; Lancaster and Carlisle, 34; Ditto, Third, 2¼; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 66; Ditto, New, Guaranteed 6 per cent., 11¾; Leeds and Bradford, 98¾; London and Blackwall, 6; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 36¾; Ditto, Pref., 6 per Cent., 51; London and North-Western, 131¾; Ditto, New Quarters, 13; London and South-Western, 35½; Ditto, New Scrip, 1846, Pref., 7 per Cent on Deposit, and 5 per Cent. on Calls, 5¾; Midland, 75¾; Ditto, 250 Shares, 16; Norfolk, New £20, 3¾; North British, 14¾; Ditto, Quarters, 8¼; Ditto, Thirds, 4¾; North Staffordshire, 13½; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 50¼; South Devon, 16¾; South-Eastern, 23¾; Ditto, Scrip, No. 4, 7; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 23¾; Ditto, Original New Quarters, 23¾; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, 16¾; Ditto, G.N.E. Preference, 6; York and North Midland, 44; Ditto, New, 20; Ditto, Extension, 8; East Kent Railway, 2; Boulogne and Amiens, 8¾; Central of France (Or Vierzon), 11¾; East Indian, 3¾; Luxembourg, 4; Northern of France, 11; Paris and Orleans, 33¾; Paris and Rouen, 20¾; Rouen and Havre, 11¾, Tours and Nantes, .

THE ORLEANS FAMILY.—Two vessels arrived, during the week, at one of the wharves adjacent to London-bridge, from Eu; one, the Gustave, having 203 cases, and the other, the Pelle d'Ile, having 38 packages on board, stated to contain merchandise, and consigned to order. These numerous packages contain a quantity of valuables and other property of the ex-Royal family of France, which were saved at the period of the Revolution from pillage or destruction; and arrangements have been made for them to be safely deposited under the care of the authorities until they are cleared and removed to their delivery to their illustrious owner, on their arrival in this country, as his private property.

THE MARKETS.

THE INCREASE nearly all any English wheat has come to hand for our market this week, coastwise or by land carriage. On the whole, the demand has ruled steady, at full rates of currency. Large quantities of foreign wheat have arrived. Fine dry parcels have sold at late figures. But the middling and out-of-condition kinds have ruled heavy. The sale for barley has been depressed, at barely stationary prices. Malt has sold slowly, but without alteration in value. An immense quantity of foreign oats has come in, owing to which the rate has ruled exceedingly dull, and many samples have ruled the turn in favour of the buyers. In beans we have no alteration to notice; but grey and maple peas have been cheaper to purchase. Indian corn, meal and flour as last advised.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 35s to 47s; ditto, white, 44s to —; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, —s to —s; ditto, white, 44s to 49s; rye, 30s to 32s, grinding barley, 24s to 26s; malting ditto, 28s to 30s. Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 50s to 56s; brown ditto, 47s to 52s. Kingston and Ware, 56s to 59s; Chevalier, 59s to 63s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 19s; potato ditto, 19s to 23s; Youghal and Cork, black, 16s to 18s; ditto, white, 16s to 20s; Sligo and Limerick, —s to —s; grey peas, 1s to 3s; maple, 34s to 39s; white, 36s to 40s; beans, 32s to 37s per quarter. Town-made flour, 37s to 42s; Suffolk, 34s to 36s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 34s to 36s per 280 lbs.—Foreign. Dantz., red wheat, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, 4s to —s. per quarter. Flour, American, 23s to 27s per barrel; Baltic, 24s to 28s barrel.

The Seed Market. Only a moderate business has been transacted in seeds this week.

Linseed, English, sowing, 50s to 52s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 43s to 45s; Bombay, 38s to 39s per quarter; Coriander, 9s to 10s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 6s to 14s; white ditto, 8s to 12s 6d. Tares, 4s 6d to 8s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £20 to £23 per last; foreign, £18 to £20 per last. Canary-seed, 42s to 45s per qr. Hempseed, 32s to 34s per qr. Carraway-seed, £45 to £46 per cwt. Coriander ditto, 20s to 24s per cwt. Rapecake, £4 10s per ton. Cotton-cake, —s to —s; Linseed ditto, 8s to —s per ton. Canary-seed, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s; rye, —s to —s; tares, —s to —s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household do, 5d to 6d per 4lb loaf.

The Potato Market Average. Wheat, 44s 9d; barley, 28s 10d; oats, 17s 1d; rye, 36s 6d; beans, 32s 9d; peas, 31s 6d.

The Gas Works' Average.—Wheat, 45s 8d; barley, 29s 8d; oats, 17s 8d; rye, 36s 5d; beans, 33s 1d; peas, 32s 1d.

Prices of Bread in Foreign Corn. Wheat, 1s 9d; barley, 1s 0d; oats, 1s 2d; rye, 1s 0d; beans, 1s 9d; peas, 1s 9d.

Flour.—Owing to the heavy imports the market privately is far from active, and prices are very difficult to support. The public sales have gone off slowly.

Sugar.—Raw as well as refined goods have been in limited request this week, and the quotations have receded from 6d to 1s per cwt. Brown lumps have sold at 49s 6d, and fair grocery, 50s to 51s per cwt.

Coffee.—All kinds have ruled dull, and prices have been with difficulty supported.

Rice.—This article is slow sale, at 12s to 13s per cwt, duty paid.

Provisions.—The demand for Dutch butter is to a very limited state, at barely last week's quotations. Irish qualities are heavy sale, at 74s to 76s per cwt. Bacon, the demand, 50s to 54s; the Limerick, 50s to 52s per cwt. A fair business is doing in the middling qualities of Irish butter, at from 54s to 56s per cwt. Carlow, Clonmel, and Waterford, 58s to 60s; Cork, 64s to 66s, Limerick, 54s to 58s; Waterford, 50s to 52s; and Sligo, 50s to 52s per cwt. Pork heavy sale, at drooping prices. New milk Cheese, 54s to 56s, middling ditto, 52s to 90s, old 90s to 70s per cwt. Irish, 4s to 52s per dozen. Lard, the best Irish hocks is firm, at an advance of ½s per cwt. Rapeseeds are a dull sale; Waterford admitted, 34s to 37s; heavy, 32s to 33s, Limerick, small, 30s to 32s; and heavy, 28s to 30s per cwt. Irish hale middles are more in request, at full prices. Waterford 5 addened lard firm, at 56s to 58s per cwt.

Tallow.—Our market is heavy, and prices have declined 2s the per cwt for P Y on the spot, and 6d to 9d to 0s. 0s for forward delivery; town tallow, 45s 6d to 45s 9d per cwt. net cash.

Oils.—Only a limited business is passing in this market. In prices, however, we have no material alteration to notice.

Coals.—Carr's Hartley, 15s 6d; Holywell Main, 14s; New Pontelli, 13s 6d; Hilda, 14s 3d; Hetton, 15s; Russell, 15s 3d; and Lyons, 15s per ton.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £1 12s to £4 0s; clover ditto, £3 10s to £5 0s; and straw, £1 8s to £1 16s per load.

Spirits.—Jamaica rum, brandy, and corn spirits are in steady request, at full prices. In other articles, very few sales have taken place.

Hops.—Really fine hops are scarce, and quite as dear In other kinds very little sales have transpired.

Wool.—The market generally is firm, but we have no improvement to note in value.

Provisions.—The best qualities are ranging from 120s to 140s per ton, with a steady demand. The arrivals from abroad continue large.

Smithfield.—Fresh beasts have commanded a steady sale, at full prices. In other kinds of fat stock comparatively little business has been transacted.

Beef, from 2s 6d to 3s 4d; mutton, 2s 10d to 4s 4d; lamb, 5s 6d to 6s 8d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d; and pork, 2s 10d to 3s 8d per 8lb. by the carcase.

ROBERT HERBERT.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

FRIDAY, MARCH 23.

FOREIGN OFFICE, MARCH 2.

It is hereby notified that Viscount Palmerston, her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received a despatch from her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen, stating that he had received from the Danish Minister a notice that all the ports of Holstein and Schleswick, with the exception of Ise and Eyder, will be blockaded on and after the 27th of the present month. The notice is as follows.—"The Minister of the Navy hereby makes known that all the ports of Holstein and Schleswick, from the mouth of the Eyder to Polakrak Hill, from the 27th of this month, be blockaded, excepting, of course, the islands of Ais and Rose, and such ships of war as are actually under the flag of the Confederation. The blockade will be raised for every place resuming under the Government and special notice will be given whenever such places are occupied from the blockade." The Minister of the Navy at Copenhagen, the 9th of March, 1849."

(L. S.) (Signed) "ZAHRTMANN."

DOWNING STREET, MARCH ...

Lieut. Alexander Anson has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of Sir George William Anderson, Knt., Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Island of Mauritius and its dependencies, to be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the Third Class, or Companions of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.

WAR-OFFICE, MARCH 23.

Scots Fusilier Guards: Ensign and Lieut Lord B T M Cecil to be Lieutenant and Captain vice Sir A K Macdonald, H Montagu to be Ensign and Lieutenant vice Lord B Cecil.

2nd Second Lieut E Howard, to be First Lieutenant vice ... Brownlow to be Second Lieutenant vice Howard. Ensign Sir Kenneth ... to be Lieutenant, vice Pechell. P Kennedy to be Ensign, vice Veitch. 27th ... to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Johnstone. 38th Lieut S Wilson to be Captain, vice T ... Hill. Lieut R Barnston to be Captain, vice Abbott, Ensign R H Shaw to be Lieutenant, vice Barnston; R H Martin to be Lieutenant, vice Shaw. Ensign Hon Edward ... to be Lieutenant, vice Ensign C F Dundas to be Lieutenant, vice Jackson, Serg Major F Halky to be Ensign, vice Hamilton. 44th Lieut W Fennant to be Captain, vice Lieut-Colonel Fennant; A F Moore to be Ensign, vice Barchard. 60th Surgeon A Alexander to be Surgeon, vice Bell. 61st Ensign W Hall to be Lieutenant, vice Swanshawe, G D Hague to be Ensign, vice Butler 69th: Lieut E G Byam to be Captain, vice Peebles. Ensign J S P Clarke to be Lieutenant, vice Byam. F Barker to be Ensign, vice Lieut Captain J H Cox to be Captain, vice G T George. 78th: Surgeon A C Webster to be Surgeon, vice Alexander Bell. 84th Lieut M C Johnston to be Captain, vice ... Hamilton. 94th: Lieut R Nicholls to be Captain, vice ... Ensign W J Best to be Lieutenant, vice Mercer. H ... to be Ensign, vice Best. 97th: Lieut H G ... to be Captain, vice Hamilton, Ensign F W Despard to be Lieutenant, vice Gall; ... to be Ensign, vice Despard.

BRevet.—Capt W H Kenny, half-pay 61st (Staff Officer of Pensioners), to have the rank of Major in the New Zealand; Ensign ... P Kennedy, of the 38th Regiment of Foot, to have the local rank of Major in the Island of Mauritius.

BANKRUPTS

A MORE, Cambridgeshire, grocer. G CORRIE, Rowling-street, Westminster, engineer J PEACHEY, Maiden Borough, Surrey, cheesemonger. J WILLIAMS, Wimpole, Cambridgeshire, builder. T F TAYLOR, Dorchester, Manchester-square, milliner G ... ... WARNETT, Bungshell-street, account-book manufacturer F G PACO ... ...

NEW BOOKS, &c.

Now Ready, New Edition for 1849, thoroughly Revised,

PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE,

Including Biographical Accounts of Princes, Peers, Peeresses, Bishops, Baronets, Privy Councillors, Knights of every Order, London the Court of Session, and all persons styled Lord, Lady, or Honour able, &c. &c. &c.

Corrected, by the Nobility, and authenticated, in every case prior 10s. 6d.—WHITAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

In the press, and will be published in April,

CHINA AND THE CHINESE, their Religion, from the OPIUM TRADE; with a glance at our Religious, Moral, and Commercial Intercourse with the Country.

London: Wm. S. Orr and Co., Amen-corner, and 147, Strand.

THE SEA-SERPENT.

Just published, price 6d.,

AN ESSAY on the Credibility of the Existence of the HORSE, SEA-SERPENT, and other ANIMONYMITIES, with 3 Illustrations.

London, WILLIAM TEGG and Co., Pancras-lane, Cheapside.

Just published,

THE INUNDATION, a Newfoundland Dog surrounded by the advancing waters of an Inundation. From the original by C. F. KLORUP, Esq. Engraved in the highest style of mezzotint, by T. W. DAVEY. Dimensions, exclusive of margin, 24 inches by 20 inches. Artist's proofs £5 5s.; proofs before letters £3 3s.; prints £2 2s.

London, ACKERMANN and Co., Strand, by appointment to her Majesty the Queen, H R H Prince Albert, H R H the Duchess of Kent, and the Royal Family.

Just published, price 6s., with Illustrations and Embarkmonuts,

THE ANGLO-SAXON, Part II. to be con-

AN Easter Offering. 3. Gregory the Great. 4. Bishop Aidan of Lindisfarne. 5. St. Giles. 7. The Rookeries of London. 8. Unpublished Verses by Evelyn, author of "Sylva." 9. Christendom. 10. Anglo-Saxon Guthalacia. 11. Old England and the Politics of the Day. 12. English Brothers. 13. Presentiments. 14. Tales of Anglo-Saxon Times. 15. A Prophecy of the Great Revolution. 16. Emigration. 17. Statistics. 18. The Month. 19. Literature. 20. Diseases and Weather. 21. The Horse. 22. Consolation. 23. Gems-women. 24. Armorial Bearings of the Royal Family. 25. The Saxon Period.

Part I., Containing a Map of the Mouth, coloured to show the Anglo-Saxon Settlements, an Anglo-Saxon Calendar, &c.

LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

Ready 30th of the present month, 6d.

THE ART OF ETCHING ON COPPER.

By ALFRED ASHLEY. Illustrated with Fourteen Etchings, by the Author. Elegantly bound in a Cover designed by OWEN JONES.

In the press, and will be published in April,

THE ANGLO-SAXON, Part II. to be continued Monthly, price 6d. each Part.

A favourable opportunity is taken to invite communications and the attention given by her Majesty and her Royal Consort to the healthful Art, and attempt to illustrate it by a Periodical.

The use of technical terms is avoided, and rules for the Art laid down with the most clearness and simplicity.

London: J. and D. A. DARLING, Bishopsgate-street.

LITTLE JENNY LINN'S TWO BALLADS, "The Lonely Rose," composed by H. F. Baltz; and "Take this Late," composed by John Benedict, written by E. Fitzball. These are the only English ballads sung by Miss. Jenny Lind

Published by CRAMER, BEALE, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

Also just Published, Two Duets sung by the Misses Williams—"The Myrtle Flower," composed by M. W. Balfe, and "Love's Approach," composed by W. V. Wallace.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS. -Mr. GEORGE BARKER will sing his favourite Song, "THE OLD HOUSE AND THE OLD TREE," written by FANNY LACY, in his Ballad Entertainment at the above Rooms.—Published by 328 and COCKERAM, 48, Albemarle-street, where may be had "The Jovial Four," price 3s., sung with immense success by Mr. Lacy; and also the whole of the Music to "The Lays of the Foresters or Songs of Merry Men," by Mr. Barker.

Bracknell.

"COURTING'S VERY VERY CHARMING." The Words by J. W. Lake, the Music by G. Hewett, price 2s. "MY WIFE is a WOMAN of MIND," the Words by H. Mayhew, the Music by J. Hewett, price 2s.—Mr. Hewett has been most successful in these songs: whenever he sings them he is sure to encore—quite a sensation the encore is generally dull and quaint, to which the composer has done ample justice by adapting appropriate and suitable melodies.

London, DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

THE GOOD TIMES COME AT LAST [illegible] Words and Music of a golden mountain, and the Nectar of the Gods, by one of the Gentlemen of the Guadan House, with a Descriptive Lithographic Title or the Journey to and from the same Golden Region. Price 2s. 6d. Published by DUFF and COCKERAD, 48, Albemarle-street, where may be had the "Jovial Four," sung by Mr. Lafter; the "Lays of the Foresters or Songs of Merry Men," sung by Mr. Barker

THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, WYCH-STREET, STRAND, DESTROYED BY FIRE, ON THURSDAY, MARCH 29.

THE FIRE BRIGADE.—THE ENGINES.

THE FIRE BRIGADE.—SCALING-LADDERS, HOSE, ETC.

TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, BY FIRE.

ONE of the most alarming and destructive conflagrations that has occurred in the metropolis for several years broke out on Thursday evening, about half-past five o'clock, and resulted in the entire demolition of the Olympic Theatre, and the partial destruction of upwards of a dozen other buildings.

The flames were first seen from the outside of the theatre by a constable, who lodged at a house in Wych-street, the back windows of which overlooked the theatre. As he was passing up stairs he noticed a dense body of smoke pouring from the roof.

Messengers were instantly dispatched in all directions for the engines, but before sufficient time had elapsed for one engine to reach the scene, the whole of the roof, gallery, and boxes, were in a general body of flames; and so intense did the heat become that six or seven houses in Craven-buildings, with the Pavilion Tavern, in Newcastle-street, and several other houses, caught fire simultaneously. The scene by this time was one of great confusion. The inmates of the premises surrounding the theatre were to be seen rushing out with their children in their arms, and carrying with them what little property they could lay their hands upon.

Numerous engines soon arrived, and not a moment was lost in setting them to work; but, notwithstanding that the supply of water was most abundant, and nearly a dozen engines were in full operation, the flames continued to spread most fiercely in various directions. The firemen mounted the roofs of the houses not on fire, and by that means were enabled to extinguish the flames in the Pavilion Tavern, and also to keep them from spreading further in the direction of Craven-buildings, although it was several hours before the fire in those last-named premises was wholly extinguished.

The main body of fire in the theatre continued to blaze until a fearful crash was heard, caused by the falling of the gallery and boxes. This had hardly subsided when the roof fell in.

By eight o'clock the fire was so far got under as to allay all fear of any further extension.

The following particulars connected with the origin of the fire were stated to our reporter by a gentleman connected with the theatre. Mr. Sterling, the stage manager, whilst standing on the stage, had his attention directed to the curtain, and saw flames running up the lining. He immediately called the carpenters together, and told them to cut the leech lines. The men mounted the wings, and having divided the cords, the curtain partially fell, but the lines still remaining on the other side of the curtain the flames mounted upwards into the machinery, and very soon they extended to the lawn coverings of the boxes and gallery, so that in less than five minutes every part of the theatre was fired. At the time of the outbreak, the gasman was trying the lights on the P. O. of the wings, and it is supposed that he must have accidentally occasioned the mischief.

The theatre was insured in the County Fire-office; but nothing belonging to Mr. Davidson, the lessee, or any of the actors was insured.

The houses burned in Craven-buildings were on the Craven estate, which is insured in the Westminster Fire-office; but most of the inhabitants who have been deprived of their furniture, &c., were uninsured. The amount of property destroyed must be considerable, as nearly a dozen of the contiguous premises are partially consumed, and the furniture of the several occupants materially damaged.

To give an idea of the rapidity of the catastrophe, a Correspondent states that he was passing the Theatre at twenty minutes before five o'clock, at which time there was, externally, no appearance of fire; and within half an hour he witnessed, from the parapet of a house in the Strand, the falling in of the Theatre roof.

The exertions of the Fire Brigade were unwearied; but their efforts to save the property were unavailing.

We subjoin a brief Sketch of the history of the Theatre.

The Olympic Theatre, originally the Olympic Pavilion, was situated in Wych-street, Strand, on the site of Drury house, built by Sir William Drury, an able commander in the Irish wars, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, whence Drury-lane. In the next century it was possessed by Earl Craven, by whom it was rebuilt. It was next a public-house, bearing the sign of the Queen of Bohemia's Head, the Earl's admired mistress. In 1806, the house was taken down, and the ground purchased by Mr Philip Astley, of the Amphitheatre, Westminster Bridge-road, who built thereon the present theatre, for horsemanship, &c., and called it the Olympic Pavilion, the performances being similar to those at the Amphitheatre. Astley sold it to Mr. Elliston, whose proprietorship of the Olympic was the most successful scene in his enterprising life. Here he produced "Rochester," founded on a celebrated French anecdote in the life of Henry V., subsequently adapted at Covent-Garden as "Charles the Second." At the Olympic, Mr. Elliston played Rochester, and Mrs. Edwin the Countess of Lovelaugh, for nearly one hundred successive nights, and drew almost all the rank and fashion of London to a theatre that had previously been considered low. Added to this was the advantage of a regular drama, and a company from the patent houses: and such was the tide of fortune at the Olympic and Sans Pareil Theatres at this period, that the managers of Drury-lane and Covent-garden memorialised the Lord Chamberlain on the grievance. Mr. Elliston's splendid success enabled him to embark into the fluctuations of Drury-lane Theatre, and the Olympic was let for a time. In 1822-23, it was under the management of Mr. Egerton, and the spirited performances of Mrs. Egerton, in melodramas, proved very fortunate. It then fell into the hands of a succession of speculators, till it was purchased of the assignees of Mr. Elliston by the late Mr. John Scott.

At length, the theatre was let to Madame Vestris, under whose tasteful management it proved a very profitable speculation; the tide of popularity once more set in towards the Olympic, its success reminding one of the good-fortune of Elliston upon the same spot. At length, Madame Vestris relinquished her tenancy, and removed to Covent Garden Theatre. Since this period, the Olympic has been let to parties far too numerous for us to chronicle. The lesseeship and management of Mr. Davidson have, it is understood, been successful. His tenancy was fast drawing to a close, and the performances advertised for Thursday (the evening of the fire) were "for the Benefit of Mr Bender, and the Last Night but One of the Season."

The exterior of the theatre was the least sightly of all the London theatres, and for inconvenience of situation it was unmatched. The Engraving shows the principal frontage, in Wych-street. The interior was circular in plan, with one entire circle of boxes, and half-tiers level with the gallery, and the usual private and stage boxes; and the pit was spacious.

Many favourites of the public have gained their popularity at the Olympic. In the list we find Elliston and Mrs. Edwin, Oxberry, Pearman, Keeley, Fitzwilliam, and Power: all prior to Madame Vestris's occupation. Miss Foote, Liston, and, we believe, Mrs. Orger, last played here: and Mr. Charles Mathews here made his first appearance upon any stage. Mr. Farren was also one of the Vestris company; and, we believe, he had just concluded an agreement to become lessee of the theatre for a term. Mr. Charles Kean and Miss Ellen Tree have also played here; and, among the latest events in the history of the theatre, is the début of Mr. Gustavus Brooke, in the higher walk of the drama.

LONDON: Printed and Published: at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, March 31 1849.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 365.—Vol. XIV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1849. [Sixpence.

FORCE AND ALMS.

The Irish difficulty is still the all-engrossing question. After protracted debates, the Ministers have carried the second reading of their Rate in Aid Bill. This, however, is but small progress. It is doubtful whether the rate will be half collected. It is not at all doubtful that its collection and distribution can do no permanent good. It is intended as a temporary expedient. It, and its parent Poor-Law, may be the means of keeping life, for a few days, or weeks, or even months, in the bodies of a few hundred thousands of starving, wretched, and almost hopeless people; but there its efficacy will end. The old sore will remain; the old cry will be raised; the old evil will be as rampant as ever. Yet we do not blame the Ministry for insisting upon their measure. A stringent Poor-Law was essential in Ireland. It was equally essential that a rate in aid of the bankrupt unions should be levied upon Irish property, or paid out of the Consolidated Fund. The Government took the wiser course, in affixing the liability upon Irish property; and in preventing the wealthy districts of Ireland from remaining alike isolated from the misery of Connaught, and from the burdens of Middlesex.

But it is beginning to be perceived that such measures, necessary as they may be, are insufficient of themselves. A light is breaking upon the dense darkness that formerly enveloped the question. Although every one will agree with Lord John Russell, that there is no specific by which the evils of generations are to be cured all at once, and by which prosperity is to appear as the result of Parliamentary wisdom and administrative genius, yet, at the same time, it is felt that a beginning must be made; and that something else is necessary, as Mr. Bright expresses it, than "force and alms" for the regeneration of a country in the unhappy position of Ireland. Force and alms are alike costly. They both eat up capital. They are necessary, and therefore good, as temporary expedients, to control a lawless and to feed a starving people; but here their efficacy ends. The true problem for solution is, how to make the lawles permanently contented and peaceable, and how to transform the starving and dependent consumers into well-fed and self-sustaining producers. Lord John Russell knows of no means to work the problem. He will see that the peace be kept, and that the poor-rate be distributed. His chief if not sole reliance is upon soldiers and policemen on the one hand, and upon charity on the other. It was these, he said, which wrought the prosperity of England. It was these which saved Scotland from the present fate of Ireland. But his Lordship's words are too curious to be epitomised:—"Queen Elizabeth and her counsellors," said he, "proposed some legislative measures by which they conceived that the prosperity of England would be secured for ever. One of their measures was to punish all malefactors with great severity, and they reduced the country to a state of peace and order. Having done this, they likewise passed measures providing for the relief of the infirm and impotent poor, and for affording work to the idle and sturdy. These measures were nothing more than force and alms; yet under these laws England rose to a high station among the powers of Europe: she sent forth men of extraordinary capacity to traverse the ocean and visit the most distant shores, and under them the genius of Bacon and of Milton burst forth. Yet this was done, not by any specific scheme, but by establishing order and providing relief for the destitute, thus taking security against the aggressions upon property and assaults upon persons which formerly prevailed, and ensuring to every man the opportunity of safely pursuing his occupation and enjoying the fruits of his own labour."

We wonder that a statesman of the literary tastes of Lord John Russell should have omitted to state, while he was upon this subject, that under these laws of "force and alms," a greater than Bacon and Milton was not produced. He should at least have told us that Shakspeare preceded the Poor-law, and that there was no necessary connexion between his immortal works and the 43rd of Elizabeth. He was equally emphatic in the case of Scotland. The prosperity of that part of this country he conceived to be owing to similar causes. "Religious persecution," said he, "had disturbed, almost destroyed, that country in the reign of Charles the Second. After the Revolution, measures were taken by which, without extending the same right of relief as existed in England—and which was not so much required in a thinly-peopled country—provision was made for the support of the poor, for bringing under subjection to the law the ill-doers who had been accupied in rapine and murder, and for the better education and improvement of the people at large. In consequence of those simple measures, Scotland, in the course of twenty or thirty years, presented a totally different aspect. Trade and industry began to flourish; agriculture, which had been almost entirely neglected, soon enriched every valley with its fruits; and Scotland then commenced that social progress which she has ever since continued."

T. THOMPSON, ESQ. REV. T. SINNET. REV. R. AINSLIE. REV. J. SHORE. SIR CULLING EARDLEY, BART. REV. MR. STODDART. REV. H. HINTON

DEPUTATION TO THE REV. MR. SHORE, IN ST. THOMAS'S GAOL, EXETER.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

It is a pity that this Lord-ship did not complete this Scottish picture by introducing a couple of philosophical and literary personages into the foreground, as companions to his Bacon and Milton. The names of Adam Smith and Walter Scott would have been equally appropriate to the occasion. But such is the wisdom of Lord John Russell! Such are the examples which history gives him for his guidance in the present state of Ireland! The case of that country would indeed be hopeless, if no other remedies were brought to bear upon its calamities, and if no other remedies were suggested for its regeneration. But, leaving these pruriencies for such, with all due deference to Lord John, we must consider them—we must concede that "Force and Alms," or, in other words, security for person and property, and a good Poor-Law, might have produced beneficial results in Ireland, if they had existed from the days of Queen Elizabeth, or even from those of Charles the Second. They would, in all probability, have prevented the social disease under which Connaught and Munster are now suffering. But it is worse than idle to rely upon and recommend them as remedies after the disease has been created. Fresh air, exercise, and temperance will keep a man in health; but will they cure him in an atrophy? Or would he be a wise physician who should prescribe them as sole cures to a patient in a fit of apoplexy? If Lord John Russell really imagines that "Force and Alms" are to elevate the character of the Irish people, they are no-profound men of extraordinary capacity, who shall traverse oceans and visit the most distant shores—that they are to bring forth the Bacon and the Miltons of Connaught or—what is more to the purpose, that they are to enable the people to feed themselves by the wages of their honest industry, we must express our conviction that the sooner he hides himself in the elegant retirement of his country seat, the better for his future fame.

In striking contrast with what Mr. Monsell called the "cheerless and hopeless speech" of Lord John Russell, was the speech of Sir Robert Peel. We expressed in our last our hope that the right hon Baronet would gain courage, and state the details of his plan for the regeneration of Ireland with a little more explicitness. He has done so; and both in and out of Parliament—in the press and in society—in Great Britain and in Ireland, there is a general feeling of satisfaction at the boldness, the wisdom, and the completeness of the remedies he has suggested. There is a growing conviction that, sooner or later, the great outlines which he has drawn must be filled up; and that, in or out of office, the mastermind of the most distinguished of modern statesmen must rule the present destinies of Ireland. We consider that that time cannot be far distant. As Mr. Horsman truly remarked, Ireland was never in a more favourable state for comprehensive legislation than she is now. "Weak, prostrate, helpless, she is ready to accept any legislation they choose to impose on her. She makes no resistance. For the first time in a century there is no political agitation, no religious rancour, no agrarian outrage. In Parliament circumstances are equally favourable. There is no party opposition to thwart the Government in any measures they have to recommend; and all parties in the House have shown themselves unanimous to come forward to strengthen the hands of the Executive." But the present Government is obviously unequal to the emergency. It neglects its opportunity "Force and alms," and a grant for a railroad, are all they propose. The "force and the alms," as everybody knows, must of themselves be both costly and unproductive. The railway, to be constructed with the aid of £500,000 proposed by the ministry, will probably absorb 30 shillings out of the money will find its way into the pockets of engineers, surveyors, and landed proprietors, and only one-third into the mouths of the labouring population. Such is all that Lord John Russell says he can do. For the rest, he relies upon Providence and the principle of laissez faire, which is a principle that in all questions, except those of comm rce, we hold to be not only unwise but wicked. Sir R. Peel, however, has rendered it impossible for Lord John Russell or any other minister to adhere to the laissez faire system. He has spoken, and his words will produce facts in due season. He has sketched his plan, and either his own hand or that of others will attempt to carry it into execution. A solvent proprietary, a judicious emigration, a stringent Poor-Law, a cultivation of waste lands, an introduction of productive capital, security for life and property: these are what Sir Robert Peel proposes—not one at a time, but simultaneously. The first-mentioned is the key of the dilemma. It will open the door to all the rest. Without such a proprietary, all our laws and all our alms will be unavailing for the elevation or the relief of the people. Under the system of laissez faire, the soil of Ireland might perhaps become a wilderness. Under the system recommended by Sir Robert Peel—which is the very reverse of lassez faire—there is, at all events, something like a reasonable hope that Ireland may become, with time and the blessing of Heaven, as happy, as peaceable, and as prosperous as any other portion of the kingdom. The plan may not be perfect, and it may be difficult to carry it into effect. It can, nevertheless, the merit of largeness and fitness; and the difficulties in the way, though they may be great, are far from insuperable. Sir Robert Peel has already received the gratitude of men of all parties for its enunciation. He will, if successful in carrying it, or causing it to be carried into effect, receive that dearer reward, which he is known to covet—the appreciation of posterity.

THE REVEREND MR. SHORE.

The case of Mr. Shore is receiving a far great share of public notice than either he or his friends anticipated. Large public meetings in different parts of the country, and deputations visiting him in prison, are a kind of honour which the Queen's Bench has not been known often if not ever to confer. And there is also a Lord Chancellor proceedings which have been instituted against him will accelerate the passing of bills to remove all pains, penalties, and disabilities from men of the clergy of the Church of England who may wish to quit her communion. The cause and the manner of Mr. Shore's secession differ from every other case which has come within our knowledge. He says that he has conscientious opinions differing from those of the Church by whose doctrine and discipline he remained bound for upwards of fifteen years, and is therefore compelled by his conscience no longer to continue either a minister or a member of it.

By his secession, Mr. Shore has done no more than has been done by many other persons. Several of the most distinguished converts have been initiated Roman clergymen of the Church have, we know, joined the Church of Rome, and have been received among its ministers, and Bishops have remained, silent Others have become deserting ministers, and no more has been known of them, than they have altogether laid aside their clerical functions and have embarked in trade. Against the latter, indeed, no penal steps can be taken, as they are beyond the reach of ecclesiastical authority. The law is singular: a clergyman may cease from performing the duties pertaining to him, become, in all outward appearance, a layman, may turn shopkeeper, boatbuilder, lawyer, or coachman, and may be many years, and no lesson can be known to prevent him. After leaving the Church, he continues to read prayers and to preach the gospel; his ecclesiastical power may limit duty is brought against him, and he may be punished, because at present, by the law of the land, once being a priest he must ever remain one. Holy orders are, at present, indelible, and, as the case of Mr. Shore and Bishop Hatfield proves, cannot be annulled by the Archbishop of Canterbury, or even by the Queen and Parliament. Mr. Shore is separated from the Church of Rome on every ground. Let the law pass, and the churches of England and Ireland receive all such as become few clergymen, perhaps, will take advantage of it, and few laymen would, then, remain under the influence of doctrines to which they do not give their assent, and reluctantly submissive to a discipline against which they would fain rebel, and the scriptural foundation of which they deny. If the present law does not make hypocrites, it certainly may be said to have a tendency to foster hypocrisy; and the Church of England is now done in part ranks but the sincere adherents to her belief, and the cheerful supporters of her discipline. But all others have full liberty to depart

The case of Mr Shore is briefly this. He was ordained a priest in October, 1829. In the year 1841, the Duke of Somerset, who possesses considerable property in the parish of Berry Pomeroy, struck with the want of church accommodation for the large population in the neighbourhood, erected a chapel in a district called Ridge Town, separated from Totnes by the river Dart. This chapel was removed at first to be a free-seating will, the Church of England. The Bishop of Exeter inspected it, approved of the arrangements, and consented to license it for divine service according to the rites and ceremonies of that church. The chapel was not consecrated, from some demur on the part of the Duke, but in every other respect it was fitted for divine worship and was licensed in November, 1841, and in the following April, 1842, Mr Shore was also licensed as the minister of This chapel is in the parish of Berry Pomeroy, and, according to the then existing legal law, was a chapel of ease to the mother church, and the appointment of the minister vested in the incumbent of the parish. During the life of the gentleman who appointed him, and during the incumbency of the successor, Mr. Shore still continued the minister of the chapel A new incumbent came, whose nomination was necessary to secure the emoluments of Mr Shore in his office. A refusal was given to renew the appointment, and from that time, according to law, Mr Shore could no longer perform any clerical duties within the chapel, nor in the diocese without the express consent of the Bishop Upon this refusal being made known to the Duke of Somerset, he abandoned all intention of having the chapel consecrated; and has since, under the provisions of the Act passed 52 Geo. III., directed the chapel, on the 15th February, 1844, to be registered as a place of religious worship for Protestant Dissenters, which registration took place on the 26th day of the same month. Mr. Shore continued to perform service there, reading the church prayers and services with some unimportant alterations. It should be borne in mind that, at this time, Mr. Shore had no other available step to take to relieve himself from the liabilities and duties of a priest of the Church of England.

On the 15th of March, in the same year, a monition was served upon Mr Shore, prohibiting him, a minister of the Church of England, from performing divine worship in an unconsecrated building. Mr. Shore, in order to render this monition of no effect, and to free himself, as he imagined, from the power of the Bishop of Exeter, did, three days after wards, namely, on the 18th of March, before a magistrate of Totnes, take and subscribe the several oaths and declarations which were necessary to qualify him for becoming a dissenting minister. The Bishop of Exeter, acting upon the legal indissolubility of holy orders, found steps to silence Mr. Shore. It would be tedious to report the various stages of the different proceedings against him; suffice it to state the several appeals which he made to higher courts from the sentence of the ever, before it to say, that the original judgment against him was in every instance confirmed. According to the present law, therefore, Mr. Shore was evidently in the wrong. The Bishop of Exeter acted upon it as he, and for the costs incurred Mr Shore is now in prison. These costs, of course, have been considerably increased by the successive appeals of Mr. Shore, and by the various motives entailed by the different actors in this unhappy scene we have nothing to do. We have to enable our readers to form their own opinion, simply stating the facts of the case. The law under which Mr. Shore suffers still exists; before the present session closes, it will, in all probability, be in her modified or repealed, and there will be no longer a cause for the heart burnings and painful feelings which have been so powerfully excited

THE DEPUTATION.

On the 28th ult., a large meeting was held at the Subscription Rooms, Exeter. Mr Culling E Eardley was in the chair; and the meeting was addressed by the Revs. George Gould, Binney, Bouzeur Wray, Saville (Church of England), John Bratrowe, J. H. Hinton, A. M.; G. M. Stoddart, A.M., R. Cross, and Geo Atkinson, of Torquay; W. F. Wundant (Mr. Shore's solicitor), Thomas Thompson, and Latimer, Esqrs. A deputation, consisting of Sir C. E. Eardley, Bart., Rev. Messrs Binney, Stoddart, Hinton, Angell, and Bean, also waited on Mr. Shore in gaol. After joining in religious exercises with him, they left him to the solitude of his cell, and came forth to advocate his cause DEPUTATION OF IRISH MEMBERS TO LORD CLARENDON.—MR. DUFFY'S CASE.

On Monday afternoon, a deputation of gentlemen connected with the representation of Ireland, and headed by Sir Lucius O'Brien, waited, by appointment, on Lord Clarendon, at the Irish Office, Great Queen-street, Westminster, for the purpose of presenting to his Excellency, as the representative in Ireland of her gracious Majesty the Queen, a memorial, signed by two-six members of Parliament, requesting him to consider the case of Charles Gavan Duffy, lately tried for a political offence in Ireland, and to order that all further proceedings against the prisoner might be stayed

Among the members of the deputation were Mr. J. Scully, Mr W. Fagan, Mr. D. Ivers, and Mr. Cresseh Morgan.

Sir Lucius O'Brien having announced for the comparatively small number of members present, by the absence of the others, the object of the deputation proceeded to state the principal points of the memorial. It represented that [illegible] private had been given by unimpeachable parties at the trial. That he had already suffered severe and close imprisonment, and had, consequently, been most seriously injured in health, besides undergoing the entire loss of a considerable property. That, even if guilty of the offence imputed to him, he had been most severely punished. That the publications charged against him were written during a period of great political excitement throughout Europe, which had now ceased; and that they extended in all over a period of but a few weeks. The memorial further stated that it was opposed to a wise and humane administration of the law to institute a second prosecution for the same offence. That this proposition he alone further discovered; and he saw the right it right to observe that he could not say so believing Mr. Duffy guilty of the offence laid to his charge.

Lord Clarendon commended in severe and unusual terms of the memorial, and designated its presentation as an improper, if not an unprecedented, course. He was surprised that twenty-six members of Parliament could be found to sign such a document, especially when there was no doubt of Mr. Duffy's guilt. Several of those whose signatures were appended to that memorial had not many months ago expressed to him their sense of the danger with existed at the period of Mr. Duffy's arrest, and required the protection of the Government against an appreh ded outbreak. Granting the prayer of the memorial would be an extremely bad precedent, and one which he could not sanction.

Mr O'Flaherty frankly admitted that, had he been of the same opinion with Sir Lucius O'Brien as to the guilt of Mr. Duffy, his signature certainly should not have been attached to the memorial. Nor would he have been there to present it to his Excellency. Mr. Duffy to have been found guilty of great imprudence in his acts and writings, he considered him innocent of the crime laid to his charge. Mr. Duffy should also be borne in mind, had already suffered much, both in health and property; and in his (Mr O'Flaherty's) opinion, a time had arrived when the clemency of the Government might be exercised with advantage to the political prisoner

Lord Clarendon said the deputation appeared altogether to overlook the material fact that Mr. Duffy had been found guilty

Mr. O'Flaherty expressed his surprise at this statement. It was the first time he had heard that Mr. Duffy's guilt was established.

Lord Clarendon observed that Mr. Duffy's guilt was proved by the fact that eleven out of twelve of the jurors unanimously found a true bill, and by their finding in a verdict of guilty. Only one juror held out, or Mr. Duffy would have been acquitted.

Mr O'Flaherty repeated that he had not been aware there was any evidence of Mr. Duffy having been found guilty, but his Excellency having stated otherwise, he was bound to believe his assertion. He now, however, wished to remark that the opinion of the seven men, to whom Lord Clarendon referred, could not be considered as a constitutional verdict of guilty

Lord Clarendon again commented on the presentation of the memorial, declaring it to be an unprecedented proceeding, and calculated to prevent the ends of justice from being satisfied.

Mr. O'Flaherty, while he regretted that his Excellency should have construed the deputation, would not enter further into the matter than to claim his right, as a member of Parliament, to place the grievances and the opinions of his constituents before the executive power of the country. Those opinions were in favour of the course suggested in the memorial.

Mr Scully adverted to the important and striking fact that the memorial for Mr. Duffy's pardon and enlargement with bail was signed by a third part of the honored Lord Clarendon that a petition on the same subject, numerously and respectably signed by the inhabitants of Dublin and other parts of Ireland, was on its way to London, and would be presented to his Excellency in a few days. With regard to the mode in which Mr. Duffy's prosecution was conducted, he believed it to have been at precedented

Lord Clarendon. So was the offence

Mr. Scully continued to observe, that the long imprisonment Mr. Duffy had already endured, and his loss of property, was a severe punishment. Taking into consideration the peaceable state of the country, he thought clemency might now be extended, while it danger to the administration of justice

Mr Fagan followed in a similar strain, and forcibly urged that the prayer of the memorial should be granted.

Mr Devereux approved of all Mr O'Flaherty had said, and added that had he been Mr Duffy's friend, he would not have found any deputation.

Lord Clarendon said he would let the deputation have his answer in writing. The deputation retired

THE FORCES IN IRELAND.—On the 1st inst. there were serving in Ireland 60 cavalry regiments, 26 battalions or regiments of infantry, and 9 depôts of infantry regiments, the service companies of which are now in the colonies. The amount of this force is in round numbers 49,700 rank and files. As to 15 s regiment, now at Fermoy, is to proceed to India, this will reduce the available force to the extent of 1100 officers and men. There are also three depôts (of 77th, 83rd, and 94th) in addition to the above number, which is understood to be the three depôts in question will arrive in Chatham by the middle of April, to be disembodied.

PEMBROKE DOCKYARD.—Information was given on Saturday by the Captain Superintendent, that he had received instructions from the Admiralty to suspend the intended discharge of workmen until further orders.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

THE EASTER HOLIDAYS CHEAP LOCOMOTION.—More than the usual facilities are afforded this Easter for holiday excursions by railway. The London and North-Western have issued tickets to all places on their lines, available from last Thursday until Easter Monday. The Brighton and South-Eastern have issued tickets at a single fare each way, to all places on their line, for Easter Monday and Tuesday, together with day tickets available for returning on any day between Good Friday and the following Wednesday. The South-Western have made similar arrangements. Trains are to run every five minutes until midnight on the Greenwich Railway during the fair. Excursions, on the same day between the North-Western lines, are also projected to Paris, with others by railways in the provinces, at less than the usual rates

RATING OF RAILWAY PROPERTY.—An extremely important decision [illegible] has come to on Monday last, at the Notts Quarter Sessions, [illegible] M.P. in the chair. The Midland Company have recently [illegible] to Mansfield, it has, of course, been stated to the relief of the poor in all the parishes through which it passes. The principal on which this has been done has been to take the whole sum received throughout the Midland lines, and, after deducting the whole expenses, to divide the surplus by 450 (the number of miles of railroad open), and thus to ascertain the average sum upon per mile. In the parish of Basford, for instance, the length of railway is a mile and three-quarters, and the rateable value would be £2500. On the other hand, the company contend that the receipts from the parish itself should be calculated; that the expenses should be subtracted, and that the sum remaining should be rated. The question therefore, appeared against the ratings of the overseers of the different parishes on the Mansfield line, and brought down Mr. Matthew Davenport Hill, Q.C., special y to conduct their case. With him Mr. Wansey was associated. The case of Basford on y was gone into, as all the others would be affected by the decision of the bench in that. The arguments were very lengthy; but, at their conclusion, the Court, after a short deliberation, confirmed the rate.

OPENING OF THE LIVERPOOL, ORMSKIRK, AND PRESTON RAILWAY.—The important section of the East Lancashire Railway was opened to the public on Monday, by which the communication between Liverpool and Preston has been reduced from 38 to 25 miles Whilst this line will afford to the public advantages as regards the traffic between Liverpool and Preston, it will, at the same time, absorb a portion of the traffic at present enjoyed by the Lancashire and North-Western by way of Parks de and Wigan to Preston. The great reduction in distance and fares, however, by way of the East Lancashire section, must necessarily command for that line the principal share of traffic.

AUDIT OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS.—On Monday the Committee of the House of Lords issued their first report. They Lordships state that they feel it to be their duty in the first instance, as in the case of the North Wales it; alway, not only because the proceedings of the House in the enforcement of its own orders have been suspended pending the proceedings, but because the tendency of those proceedings is to make a recommendation for the change of law on a special case of the nature of that upon which they are called to adjudicate. But though it exhibits practices which unprejudiced and honourable men cannot hesitate to condemn, it is also calculated to suggest most important alterations of the law under which such abuses have been allowed to exist for a considerable time without exposure and punishment. The committee goes at length into the transactions of the North Wa es Railway Company, which, the committee submit, present a train of circumstances strikingly characteristic of the unjustifiable manner in which its affairs have been conducted, and describing one or more of them as illegal and indefensible. They complain of the contradictory character of the evidence, point attention to the fatal consequences that may flow from the unauthorized distribution of funds in hand, to the illegal and extraordinary loan transactions of the company, and conclude by stating that while they are unwilling to ground their general recommendations upon an example of this highly discreditable character, they will proceed diligently in the investigation in which they are engaged

MR. HUDSON AND THE INVESTIGATION AT YORK.—The committee has declined its labours. Some difference of opinion existed among its members as to whether they should publish the evidence adduced before them entire or merely their report upon it. Ultimately, they resolved on the former course

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE

The only features of interest this week in the news from Paris is the arrival in that city of the King of Sardinia, Charles Albert, and the close of the State trials at Bourges. Charles Albert arrived in Paris on Tuesday, from Bourges, where he had left his son Prince Victor Emanuel to represent him at the funeral of the ex-King of Naples. He was met at the barrier by Marshal Bugeaud, Governor of Paris, on the ground that it is illegal for a General on active service as Commander of the troops of the line to hold an appointment as Commander of the National Guards. The Marshal did not deny that the appointment was irregular, but justified it on the ground of circumstances, promising that it should be rectified as soon as this could be done with safety; but this did not prevent the Opposition from persisting in the objection.

A banquet given on Monday by the ex-Delegates of the Luxembourg, collected 1400 guests at the Barriere de Sèvres. Several Mountain representatives attended, amongst whom were observed MM. Joly, Felix Pyat, and Pierre Leroux. After the company entered the banquet-hall, the [illegible] history of Police of Vaugirard, assisted by the peace-officers, demanded admission; but having been refused, he took a note of his refusal, and withdrew.

M Gemlier, on speaking to the first toast, "the Revolution," passed a warm eulogium on Louis Blanc and Albert, and censured the acts of the present Government. He was led to applaud by cries of "Down with the guillotine!" "Death to tyrants!" "Down with the political scaffold!" in allusion to the execution of the murderers of Gourmont.

The canal toasts were given, and the meeting separated

The 6th Regiment of Artillery in Paris has been ordered to quit the capital, although no report of serious disturbance was created at Soultac, in the department of the Lot, on the 26th ult., by a number of Socialists who had form a an illegal club; but having been dispersed by the police, they paraded the town, crying, "Vive Robespierre!" "Vive Blanqui!" "Vive la Montagne!" "Vive Barbès!" "Vive la Guillotine!"

ITALIAN STATES.

PIEDMONT. We announced last week the abdication of King Charles Albert, and the retirement to Novara, on the 24th ult., in favour of his eldest son, who has ascended the throne under the title of Victor Emanuel

The young King was born in 1820. In 1842 he married the daughter of the Archduke Reynier, the former Viceroy of Milan, who had himself married the sister of Charles Albert. The consequence of this connexion is that the ex-Empress Ferdinand, first and second cousin to the present Emperor Francis Joseph.

The battle of Novara, which has been attended with such important political results, was fought at the very gates of that town. The Sardinian army only comprised five divisions out of the nine which composed it at the beginning, including the division of the advanced guard detached at Castel San Giovanni, on the road to Piacenza, which, as we have said, had suffered most on the 21st in the combats of Mortara, Gerbetto, and Vigevano. Independently of the loss in action, numbers had dispersed. The troops had been harassed by marching and countermarching for three days previously. The state's state of affairs the king and general Chrzanowski wished to obtain a few days to enable the army to enjoy some repose, and give time for reinforcements to come up. They were the more anxious, to avoid fighting, as the Austrian army was very close, and were not disposed to lose much time in profiting by their first advantages and their numerous superiority. Under such circumstances it became absolutely necessary to accept battle, and the Piedmontese therefore drew up under the walls of Novara. The disposition of the Piedmontese army appears to have been the very best under the circumstances. It occupied the Monte Rosa ground which extends between the road of Mortara and that of Vercelli, with its left (towards the road of Mortara) resting on a place called La Bicocca, and its right (towards the road of Vercelli) on the village of Cortenova, and its rear flank (protected by a canal. The centre rested on a farm house, named La Citadella. The principal point of the battle was La Bicocca, to the right of the Piedmontese; because, if this position was taken, the centre and the left wing would be separated between the canal and the town, which is not fortified. Marshal Radetzsky, therefore, directed the principal attacks on the left wing, while at the same time he charged the centre, which the Piedmontese on La Citadella was taken and retaken several times. On this occasion the Piedmontese troops displayed the utmost bravery but unfortunately La Bicocca was not defended with the same tenacity, and the loss of this position decided the fate of the day—the Piedmontese battalions falling back on each other within a very narrow space. The battle, which does honour to the vanquished, lasted more than seven hours, and was prolonged till the night, against a very superior force, especially in cavalry and artillery.

Arrangements to pursue the Piedmontese were about being taken, when flags of truce arrived demanding an armistice. The next morning a second conference took place, between the new King (Victor Emanuel) and the Marshal, which results in the armistice now below.

The loss on both sides was great, but that of the Piedmontese was much more serious than on the side of the Austrians. The field of battle was covered with dead bodies, and the hospitals at Novara are crowded with the wounded. Amongst the killed and wounded are many gallant officers, as well as superior officers of the army.

The terms of the armistice agreed to between the King and Radetzsky are as follow:—

"Armistice concluded between His Majesty the King of Sardinia, Victor Emmanuel, and Field-Marshal Radetzsky, on the 24th, after the abdication of Charles Albert.

"The King of Sardinia gives a solemn and positive assurance that he will conclude, as far as it may be consistent with his honour, a treaty of peace on the following bases. Article 1. The King of Sardinia shall disband ten infantry corps, corps 6 of Hungarians, Poles, and Lombards, his Majesty being at liberty to retain in his service any officers of those corps he pleases. Article 2. Count Radetzsky shall apply to his Majesty the Emperor to grant an entire amnesty to the Hungarians, Poles, and Lombard soldiers, and officers of his Imperial Majesty. Article 3. The King of Sardinia shall keep 18,000 infantry and 2000 cavalry to occupy the territory comprised between the Po, the Ticino, and Sesia, and one half of the garrison of the fortress of Alessandria, to be formed of Austrian troops. That occupation shall neither interfere with the civil and judiciary administration of the province of Novara. 3000 Austrians shall compose one half of the garrison of the city and citadel of Alessandria, and as many Piedmontese shall occupy the other half. The Austrians are to have a free communication between Alessandria and Lomellina, through Valenza. A mixed military commission shall be appointed to provide for the maintenance of the Austrian troops. The Sardinian troops shall evacuate the duchies of Modena, Piacenza, and Tuscany, that is, the territories which, previous to the war, did not belong to Piedmont. Article 4. It being impossible for one half of the Austrian garrison of Alessandria to reach before three or four days, their admission into the fortress shall only be gradually effected by the Sardinian Government. Article 5. The entire fleet shall quit the Adriatic, with all the steamers, within a delay of fifteen days, and the Piedmontese, now at Venice, shall be ordered back to their country within the same delay. Article 6. Count Radetzsky promises to conclude a prompt and durable peace, and to reduce the army to the former peace standing. Article 7. The King of Sardinia regards as inviolable all the conditions above stipulated. Article 8. Both parties shall send plenipotentiaries to Piedmont, that may be fixed for the conclusion of a definitive treaty of peace. Article 9 The peace shall be concluded independently of the stipulations of the present armistice. Article 10. If peace was not concluded, the cessation of the armistice shall be announced ten days previous to the resumption of hostilities. Article 11. All prisoners of war shall be immediately returned by both parties. Article 12. All the Austrians, who have already crossed the Sesia, shall re-enter the above-mentioned limits

"(Signed) CHRZANOWSKY and RADETZSKY."

On the 26th the new King received the deputation of the Chamber of Deputies. His manner towards them was extremely courteous. But to their warlike and patriotic sentiments, he merely replied, that it was impossible for him, without an army, to undertake new hostilities, and, consequently, to break the armistice. Amongst other remarks of the King, one was as follows: "Gentlemen, find me a single soldier who will go to battle, and I will be the second to march."

On the 29th, a Royal decree, appointing the new Cabinet as follows, was published:—M. Delalanay, President of the Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs; M. Pinelli, Minister of the Interior, M. de Margherita, of Justice and Ecclesiastical Affairs, M. Morozzo della Rocca, of War and Marine; M. Majnoni, of Finance; M. Galvagno, of Public Works, Agriculture, and Commerce; M. Mameli, of Public Instruction. Abbé Vincenzo Gobierti was attached to the Cabinet, without any appointment, and was to direct, ad interim, the Ministry of Public Instruction.

On the same day, the two Chambers met at the Palace Madama, where the new King took the oaths to the Constitution.

The King having retired, M. Pinelli, Minister of the Interior, communicated to the Assembly a Royal decree, dissolving the Parliament during a few days, in order to afford the Ministry time to inquire into the real situation of affairs, and make it known to the Chambers.

The Abbé Gioberti was, immediately after the formation of the Ministry, sent on a special mission to Paris, where he arrived on Tuesday last. It is stated that the object of his mission is to procure an arrangement of the affair of Savoy, as agreed upon between Marshal Radetzsky and the new King of Sardinia, by means of a confederation of all the Italian States

The following are understood to be the definitive bases of the treaty offered by the Cabinet of Vienna to Piedmont:

"An offensive and defensive alliance with Austria: a contribution of 100,000,000 of francs, in exchange for which the Duchies of Parma and Piacenza are to be annexed to Piedmont; an unconditional amnesty in favour of the Lombards and Venetians; an Italian Congress to organize a Confederation of all the Italian States, under the patronage of Austria, of which Lombardy is to be the seat, the votes of each are to be divided as follows—Lombardy and Venice, 10 votes; Naples, 10; Piedmont, 10; Rome, 6; Tuscany, 3; Modena, 2. The remainder of Europe and the Grand Duchy of Tuscany; the Lombardo Venetian Kingdom to form a separate Government, with a liberal constitution, and connected by bonds of fraternity with the other states of the monarchy."

On the 31st a Royal decree was published, dissolving the Chamber.

ROME AND TUSCANY. The result of the battle of Novara was not known at Rome or at Florence on the 27th ult. The papers in that country, estimated the collective forces which were on the most contemptible scale, and even the journals declaim against the apathy of the Republicans.

NAPLES AND SICILY. The Sicilians are making strenuous exertions to offer the most energetic resistance to the Neapolitan forces. It was thought that hostilities would be commenced on the 25th ult.

PRUSSIA.

The deputation of the Frankfort Assembly, bringing the official notification of the election of the King of Prussia to the Imperial Crown of Germany, arrived at Berlin on Monday evening. It was accompanied by deputations from Coblentz, Bonn, and other towns, which joined the Frankfort members at Cologne.

In both Chambers, on the day, an address to the King was moved, praying his Majesty not to refuse the proffered crown.

The King arrived in Berlin on the same evening. He was to receive the Frankfort deputation early on Tuesday. It was expected to be answer which would be an acceptance of the dignity, qualified by a reservation of the right of any of the other Powers to join or accept the Union, as intimated in the declaration of Count Brandenburg

THE GERMAN CONFEDERATION.

FRANKFORT.—The National Assembly, on the 28th ult., elected the King of Prussia Emperor of the Germans. The process of election was as follows:—Tappended on each individual member by name. In pursuance of the answer of the German Prince whom he (the member called upon) wished to see at the head of the empire. The votes were given amidst the deepest silence; some members declined to vote; they did not object to the Prince; and others (the Prince of Waldbourg Zeil) protested that he was not an elector. Votes were given by 328 members. The stumping up showed that 290 votes had been given for his Majesty the King of Prussia, who was thus, according to the provisions of the Constitution which has been enacted by Parliament, elected to the dignity of an Emperor of Germany

The number of members who refused to vote on the division was 248. When the news of the choice of the Assembly spread out of doors the bells were rung, and the air was filled with the cheers of the people. A deputation of twenty-four members, with the Speaker of the House, set out next day for Berlin to offer the Imperial Crown of Germany to the King of Prussia.

On the same day (29th) the Archduke John addressed the Assembly on the empire, in an address to the President and Bureau of the central power, and to the President ad interim of the Ministerial Council, gave his resignation in the following terms:—"I am induced by extel g circumstances to resign my dignity as Regent of the empire, and I request you to make known this my resolution to the National Assembly." The President ventured to entreat his Highness to reconsider the matter, and to revoke the order which he had given them. His Imperial Highness received his remonstrance very graciously, and desired an hour for deliberation, at the close of which he sent the following note to the ministerial President ad interim:—

"Dear Baron Von Gagern,—During the hour which has elapsed since I saw you, I have thoroughly weighed the subject under discussion, and, after due deliberation, see no reason to change my opinion. I enclose the protocol, and request that, as soon as ever it can be done, without detriment to the public peace and welfare of Germany, you will consider that I have retired from my duties.

(Signed) "ARCHDUKE JOHN."

This letter was accompanied by an intimation from his Royal Highness to the Minister ad interim to conduct the public business with plenary power and responsibility.

The Frankfort Journal contains a protest, signed by many of the members, against the election of the King of Prussia as Emperor of Germany, which they consider will be detrimental, not only to the formation of a General Assembly treaty for Germany, but will cause a complete alteration in the relation now subsisting between Germany and Austria.

AUSTRIA.

The intelligence from Vienna this week is not of much interest. Herr Schwarzer, formerly Minister of Public Works, and editor of the now suspended Allgemeine Oesterreichische Zeitung, has been condemned, by court-martial, to forty-eight hours' imprisonment in the House of Correction, for having inserted an inflammatory article in his journal.

Count Stadion has called on the municipal council to form a committee for paving the way to the introduction of his new bill for the regulation of communes, and considering what modifications therein may be required by the peculiar circumstances of Vienna. In order, however, to prevent too great a delay, every thing has been left to the municipal council, which has thought would suit the capital.

The creation of a gouvernorate for the whole of Austria is definitively settled.

It is calculated that the construction of the projected forts around Vienna will cost four millions of florins, which will be partly covered by the sale of some national property within the so called lines of the above capital.

HUNGARY.

The news from the seat of war is, as usual, meagre.

From Transylvania we learn that the ten or fifteen thousand Russians who had been de-troyed by Bem have been replaced by a whole army of forty thousand Russians, which has entered Transylvania [illegible]. In order to take refuge in the Vallachs, where he is recruiting and [illegible]. In vain, however, does he show energy when the Magyar colours. It is now stated that the Russians will also send an army of 60,000 men into Galicia

Field Marshal Weldon left Vienna on the 30th ult., in order to command the bombardment of Comorn.

According to Pesth papers, imposing masses of insurrents had on recited again [illegible] and it is stated that there would probably be a decisive contest in that direction.

A sanguinary battle had taken place at St. Miklos, not far from Pesth. It is positively stated, that the Imperialists, after a long struggle, and with a large quantity of cannon was captured by the Hungarian hussars. Inflammatory placards had been posted in Pesth, announcing the speedy return of the Hungarians

[illegible] who is at Cagliari, is in good health, and will be up-ed to the [illegible] army, which is said to be from 40 000 to 50,000 strong, whereas he has not more than 20 000 m.n. The Imperialists are pressed to complete action, as well by the season of the year as by the number of troops they are obliged to keep at the sieges of the fortress of K morn

The bombardment still continues; and we are informed that the guns f the besieged, since the 27th, have replied but feebly, which gives reason to suppose that they have been dismounted. People say that the dense smoke at the pitch fires and other combustibles which have been thrown into the town have nearly suffocated the unfortunate inhabitants. As a large [illegible] train was sent from here a few days since, it is probable that a breach will be made, and a storm attempted. Scaling ladders have already been prepared. It must not be supposed, however, that, should the Austrian troops succeed in getting possession of one part of the fortress the matter is at an end, for the great strength of the place consists in its internal arrangements, by means of which the fortress is actually formed of half-a-dozen fortified places, one totally independent of the other.

UNITED STATES.

Advices have been received during the week both by the New World, which arrived on Monday, with dates from New York to the 10th ult., and by the Caledonia, which arrived on Tuesday, with accounts from Boston to the 10th ult. by the Sir Robert Peel, which arrived on Tuesday with accounts from Boston to the 20th ult. By these we have (what our last accounts had left uncertain) the exact list of the present cabinet, as confirmed, "executive session" by the United States Senate, viz.:—General Taylor's Cabinet—Mr. John M. Clayton, of Delaware, Secretary of State; Mr. William M Meredith, of Pennsylvania, Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. William Ballard Preston, of Virginia, Secretary of the Navy; Mr. George W. Crawford, of Georgia, Secretary of War; Mr. Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, Secretary of the Home Department; Mr. Jacob Collamer, of Vermont, Postmaster General; Mr. Reverdy Johnson, of Maryland, Attorney General.

The diplomatic corps had been formally received by the President at his residence. The senior Foreign Minister, General de Alvear, was spokesman on the occasion. The proceedings were mutually kind and gratifying.

It is understood that the new, or "Home Department" of the Government at Washington, of which Mr. Ewing is the head, will consist of a secretary, salary 3000 dollars a year, and a chief clerk at 2000 dollars. All the subordinate officers will be taken from the other departments, [illegible] ther with the bureaus to which they are attached, and the business of which will be transferred to the Home Secretary. The executive departments of the new Government were being gradually filled up. General Taylor had resorted to the old Washington mode of appointments: all applications and suggestions were referred to the first place to the heads of departments, who reported to the Cabinet—the President reserving to himself the ultimate power of decision after taking the opinion of his Ministers. There is undoubtedly less of precipitate bestowal observable than on the late occasion, on the advent of a new Government; still the changes do go far enough down among subordinates to warrant a suspicion that official rewards to active canvassers have not altogether ceased.

Considerable excitement has been created at Boston, New York, and Washington, by Mr Labouchère's statement of what had passed between him and Mr. Webster relative to mutual relaxations of their respective navigation laws, England and America. It would appear that but little of reciprocity of feeling will greet the concessions which are contemplated by the British Government, in the Senate, Mr Webster moved for copies of the instructions sent to the American Minister in London, and declined to enter upon the merits of the question. but it appears evident from the tone of his remarks that the British Government, as applied to this particular interest, will not want the support of his great influence and talent.

Congress was in session—the Senate was merely sitting in its executive capacity, and undertook no legislative business.

One of the most remarkable features of the intell gence brought by those arrivals is a letter from Henry Clay, on the subject of negro emancipation in Kentucky He declares unequivocally that the time has come when a beginning must be made with a view to abolish negro slavery in the state. He proposes a plan by which he recommends a gradual emancipation of negro slavery in Kentucky. His chief points are, that all slaves born after the year 1850 or 1860, as the Legislature may decide, shall be free at the age of 25 years, but liable to be hired out by the State for three years, in order to raise a sufficient sum to pay their expenses of colonisation in Africa There are several minor points and regulations, which will apply with all their severity to Kentucky as to every state, but, mainly not to the more southern states, where, whether the negroes be hereafter bond or free, they must be kept at home and not colonised in Africa or elsewhere, otherwise the cultivation of cotton, rice, sugar, and even tobacco, would probably be abandoned. We doubt much, however, whether emancipation will be allowed to proceed at so slow a pace as Mr. Clay proposes. The confession that it is inevitable, would of itself give the first impetus to a movement, the power and velocity of which defies calculation beforehand

From California the advices are still of the most encouraging nature. Mr. A. Miller, recently arrived from that country, estimated the collection of thirty millions of dollars for the first year's operations. In the meantime adventurers were flocking to this new gold country in numbers. The steamer California had arrived at Acapulco from Panama, with 340 passengers, for Monterey in California, and soon San Francisco about the end of February last. All occupation, save gold digging, had been abandoned, and the working of land in California for farming purposes completely neglected.

The cholera is again at the New York quarantine, brought thither by emigrant ships from Europe. Two vessels have lost every a hundred, another 40, and several from ten to twenty each John B. Dillon, recently from Ireland, where he had been charged with political offences, was admitted and recognised a few days ago, at Albany, as a member and counsellor of the New York bar.

CANADA.

Accounts and Washington mention that an émeute had taken place in Canada. But official accounts which have arrived are silent on the matter According to them some disturbance prevailed, but no actual outbreak had occurred. Private letters are of a similar character. The cause of the disaffection was the dissatisfaction of the ultra-Loyalists with the indemnity bill, which goes to compensate liberals for losses incurred in the rebellion some ten years ago.

We regret to observe that "ship-fever" is again rife in British emigrant vessels. The Montreal Gazette says: "The ships Cambria and Thames, lately arrived in the United States from England have had great numbers of their passengers by ship-fever. The Cambria had 120 pas-engers; seventy eight deaths have occurred, and fifty-two are now sick on board. The Thames had 343 passengers, seventy-six of whom are sick, and three have died on the passage. There are now over 700 sick in the hospital at the quarantine, lying two in a bed, and the increase of seventy-six will make it very difficult to find accommodation such as the sick require." Such intelligence in Canada has been remarkably

WEST INDIES

The intelligence brought at the close of last week (to [illegible] [illegible]tion) by the packet Dee is now pretty plainly to what an anarchical state the island pretty generally is reduced. In our colonies, as in other countries, the affairs of an important dependency of our empire. The condition of things we refer to exists in Jamaica, from which we have accounts to the 22nd of Feb., and by which we learn that

The Retrenchment Bill, which had been enacted by the House of Assembly, for reducing the expenditure of the island about £40,000, by taking off the salaries of the several public officers to the amount from 15 to 33 1/3, was rejected by the hon. Board of Council on the 8th of February. The House had previously pledged itself to raise no revenue beyond the 18th of February, unless the measure of retrenchment originally called for by the country was allowed to become the law of the island. The rejection of the bill by the Council, therefore, again placed the two branches in opposition to each other, and his Excellency the Governor had recourse to the fifth prorogation allowed by the past few months. A new session being commenced, the supplies became again an "open question," and the session of the House which had been prematurely styled the "King's House party," in the absence of the country members, contrived to pass a resolution pledging the revenue to the 1st of October ensuing. But the "Constitutionalists" were not to be thus foiled, and were determined that those who would not submit to a reduction in their incomes should, at all events, be subjected to temporary inconvenience by being kept out of their salaries a quarter or for a time. Accordingly, a majority of the House, feeling in honour bound to adhere to the resolution of the "clique," notwithstanding they could have put it aside by their superior numbers, did pass the principal revenue Bill—the Import Duty Bill—up to the 1st of October; but they inserted in it an "appropriation" clause, which prevented the Receiver-General from paying any claims on him except such as the bill enumerated, and they were—the gracious department, the house of Assembly, the police, and other essentials to the maintenance of social order. This bill then passed the Council, and awaits the Governor's assent, and now the law. The House also passed a bill raising a revenue by a duty on rum, for consumed in the island, and appropriating the amount arising therefrom to the redemption of the island notes, which had become at present depreciated, being at a very low discount. This bill the hon. Board of Council unanimously rejected, and thus deprived the island of a revenue of about £30,000

The entire working of the present house is indignant at the Council; and the House, by a majority of 29 to 9, passed a resolution declaring their want of confidence in the Board of Council as at present constituted. The "nine" were the "King's House party." A majority of the House have also resolved that they will cease to pass any more money or other bills. It was, therefore not unlikely that another prorogation would take place. The Governor, it was thought, would not venture to dissolve them, for the sake of the King's House men. There seemed little doubt that, so long as five or six salaried gentlemen have a negative power the power of placing their vote on 47 of the people's representatives in Jamaica will continue to suffer as she does at present.

The island was very healthy, and the weather particularly pleasant.

The Jamaica markets had not undergone any great change since the departure of the previous packet.

We learn from Hayti that the expedition which had been got up by the Haytian Government against the Spanish portion of the island had marched into the attack, and were repulsed, with a large number of the black soldiers killed, and many taken prisoners by the Dominicans. We are not informed of the name of the General who commanded the Haytian forces, but the President Soulouque was so angry at the result of the expedition, that he had determined to get up another such force, and take the command himself—a step which it was thought would be fatal to his ascendancy, and that a good opportunity would be afforded to the enemies to strike him a blow as one of the first victims to his despotism and moral ed-lo molestation of the people of the Dominican Republic The difficulties between the American Consul at Aux Cayes and the authorities there appeared to be settled. Forty-six Frenchmen were under guards having been put on for some time

Mr. Barclay, the new Governor of British Guiana, had arrived at Demerara, and was well received. His carriage was exhibited as to the probable nature of the measures for the rel ef of the colony

The weather in the West Indies generally was fine, and the crops promising

INDIA.—DEFEAT OF THE SIKHS.

Intelligence, in antic pation of the accounts of the Overland Mail, has been received during the week. The dates are Bombay, March 4; Calcutta, Feb. 19; and Lord Gough's camp, Feb 25

The news has brought is of a satisfactory character. Lord Gough defeated the Sikhs with great loss on the 21st of February. The details are not given, and the news had only reached Bombay just before the departure of the Mail.

In our Number of March 24 we brought our summary of the events of the war down to the 3rd Feb., both with respect to Moolraj and the movements of Sir Chief's camp. We resume at that date, with the movement of troops under General Whish from Moultan, after the fall of that place, to reinforce Lord Gough. On their way they were stopped for a little, receiving submission from Narain Singh, who occupied the fort of Chunnote, with a garrison of 2000 men, who gave themselves up as prisoners. He had here been shut up for some weeks by Sheik Emamoodeen, described at the time of his withdrawal from Moultan to watch his movements. Various letters of importance had been detected in the possession of Moolraj and in particular, of very recent date, from Dost Mahomed, counselling him in meeting, and giving assurance that assistance was at hand. From the beginning of the second week in February the Commander-in-Chief continued engaged in fortifying the position he had taken up at the time of the battle of Chillianwallah, on the 13th January. A battery judiciously advanced uncomfortably near the Sikhs caused them to shift their position on the 9th, which was followed by a slight alteration in our arrangements the following day. The Sikhs seemed then to have resolved on a new order of defensive operations, they advanced their outposts, entrenching as they went, till they threatened to outflank us and get into our rear. Their object appeared to be to force our troops to attack them behind their field-works and beyond the protection of our own.

On the 16th a general movement was observed amongst them, and on the following day they were found to have struck their camp and evacuated all their works. The rumour now ran that they had retired in safety across the Jhelum without our observing them. The erroneousness of this position speedily appeared; and on the 18th Lord Gough first heard, that, instead of retiring before him, the great body of the Sikh army had passed him, and taken possession of the town of Goojerat, some seventeen miles in his rear; that their irregulars were crossing the Chenaub, and threatening Wuzeerabad. Lord Gough then, on the 19th, left a strong force to watch the enemy's movements on the 20th, and after a march of from twelve to seventeen miles, reached the neighbourhood of Sadoolapore, upon which Shere Singh had withdrawn after his engagement with Brigadier-General Mark. Whilst encamped here he had arrived at Ramnuggur, on the 18th, with Markham's brigade. Here he found her Majesty's 53rd, three regiments of Native Infantry, and two of Irregular Horse. He was joined, on the 19th, by Hervey's brigade; a force at that time of large being thus brought up to nearly 12,000 men, while Brigadier-General Dundas's command, expected on the 20th, would give 4000 more. On the 14th, General Whish being informed that 500 of the Sikhs had crossed the Chenaub, and ordered two 9-pounder guns with a regiment of irregular horse to proceed up the bank of the river. On the 15th they were followed by H. M. 53rd, the 12th L, 1st and 12th Irregular Cavalry, and two horse artillery guns. They reached Wuzeerabad late in the afternoon, but found that the insurgents had retired; 4000 of them were said to be posted on the further end of the river, whither our troops proposed immediately to cross. On the 16th, General Whish himself, with a strong body of men, moved up to Hurree-ke-Puttun, ten miles up the river, and midway between Wuzeerabad and Wuzeerabad. Here there was a bridge of boats. On the 16th, our army advanced to within four miles of the enemy's position, and found Shere Singh engaged in entrenching himself: he had in all about 20,000 men on whom he could depend: while the force under Lord Gough at that time mustered no more than 18,000 effective soldiers, with 70 or 80 guns, under his own immediate command. Our army was encamped on an open plain studded with villages

The disposition of the other British forces was as follows:—On the 18th Colonel Byrne was to be encamped with his force of cavalry, and infantry; Brigadier Markham close on the right rear of the Commander-in-Chief, with artillery and artillery; and General Whish ready to move up the Ramnuggur force, including the 24th regiment N.I. and the Bombay division, thus presenting the means of a successful combined movement.

It was under those circumstances the engagement was fought on the 21st of February, which terminated in a glorious victory, as announced in the following official document:—

"NOTIFICATION—POLITICAL DEPARTMENT.

"FORT WILLIAM, CASTLE, MARCH 3.

"The Right Honourable the Governor in Council has the gratification of publishing for general information the following notification by the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India, announcing the total rout of the Sikh army under Rajah Shere Singh, on the 21st ult., by the forces under the command of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

"A salute of 21 guns will be fired at every principal military station in this Presidency on receipt of this notification.

"By order of the Right Honourable the Governor in Council,

"A. MALET, Chief secretary."

"NOTIFICATION.—FOREIGN DEPARTMENT

"CAMP, FEROZEPORE, FEB. 23.

"The Governor-General has the gratification of communicating to the Presidency in Council, and notifying for public information, that he has this day received a despatch from Major Mackeson, C.B., Agent to the Governor-General, with the Commander-in-Chief, conveying the intelligence that the forces under his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, on the 21st inst., attacked and routed the Sikh army in the neighbourhood of Goojerat.

"2. The enemy was beaten at every point, and retreated in disorder, leaving in the hands of the British troops, by whom he was pursued, a great portion of his artillery, his ammunition, and his whole of his standing camp.

"3. The official despatches of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will be published as soon as they are received.

"4. The Governor-General announces that a salute of 21 guns shall be fired at every principal station of the army on the receipt of this notification.

"By order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India,

"H. M. ELLIOT,

"Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General.

(True copy.) "A. MALET, Chief Secretary

Major Lawrence had obtained unlimited leave from Shere Singh's camp on parole. He reached Lord Gough's army on the 17th, and Lahore on the 19th, whence he was about proceeding to join Lord Dalhousie at Ferozepore. He brought a message from Shere Singh to the effect that all the prisoners would be returned to us immediately. The Resident at Lahore has caused a proclamation issued by Sir F. Currie on the 16th November, to be republished, promising pardon for the past to all who will lay down their arms, and ensuring the feudatories of the Crown that they will be allowed to retain their lands. Moolraj will, it is said, be confined in the fortress of Govindgur. Lord Dalhousie continues at Ferozepore, anxiously watching the progress of affairs.

THE WAR IN THE PUNJAUB.

The accompanying Engravings illustrate the progress of the late conflict in India, from sketches by parties actively engaged. In two of the scenes is shown the Encampment of a Bengal Native Infantry Regiment, on its route towards the north-western frontier; and destined to form part of the large army assembled from different parts of the Bengal and Bombay Presidencies, with a view first to crush the rising insurrection in the Punjaub; and, secondly, with the intention of permanently annexing and retaining that country, by distributing strong garrisons throughout its fertile. Although the mode of travelling in India cannot be now-a-days considered altogether new to readers in England, yet the detail of circumstances which give much of the interest and life to a picture of the kind is not, we think, so generally known as to make a slight sketch and description of it out of place at the present time. Towns in India not being adapted to the billeting of troops, as they are in England, a regiment (or any number of regiments), when marching, invariably take, tents with them, which are always kept in readiness in the magazine of each regiment. On a short notice, by daily's week, although sometimes not more than two days, a regiment may be ordered towards a certain station; or perhaps to take the field, on service. So sudden an order would put persons unaccustomed to the manners of Indian life into great difficulties, perhaps inextricable, but the natives are passive, and the knowledge of this, together with its almost daily occurrence, makes the Indian officer and soldier, both European and native, always prepared to receive, without murmur or objection, a mandate of this nature. The officers' wives are, of course, left behind, together with all baggage considered by the commanding officer as calculated to delay the progress of the regiment, the march is performed by daily stages of twelve or fourteen miles; and the encampment is formed in the vicinity of some town or village, where provisions can be procured. The march commences at two or three o'clock in the morning, so as to enable the regiment to reach its ground a short time after sunrise.

Along the great north-western, or grand trunk road, reaching from Calcutta to Delhi (and upon which it is the intention of Government, it seems, to form the proposed railroad), travelling is very easy; the road is as hard and well made as, probably, any macadamised road in England, and the regular encamping grounds are well supplied with the necessaries for marching; but beyond Delhi the difficulties commence, and it seems almost hopeless to expect the great trunk road to be extended to the north-western frontier, in consequence of the gravel which is used to harden the road being very difficult to procure beyond that place. The states also through which the road passes being but lately brought under submission to the British Government, provisions, &c. are frequently with difficulty procurable. The sepoy, however, is contented with the simplest necessaries, such as unleavened bread, and a description of pulse called dal and pure water. With this primitive fare he will never refuse to march anywhere, or require any cumbrous commissariat to fit him for the field. Although we may say that the sepoy is attached to us as a mercenary, by inquiry into the circumstances under which he is led to enter our service, we find that his interest, his connexions, and his prospects are as firmly bound up in his allegiance and good faith towards his employer as that of any other soldier. Besides feeling himself to be an object of respect as a soldier in the eyes of his countrymen, of which he knows the full value, he has learnt from constant experience in the field to consider himself as immeasurably superior to any of the undisciplined forces of the native states which surround his possessions. He values his discipline, and is as jealous of the reputation of his corps as can well be imagined. The peculiar advantages which he gains by enlisting are more than could be mentioned here for understood at once. With regard to being frequently in the possession of unassessed land, the protection of his relations living under native governments, pensions to his family when he is killed in action or dying on service, &c., he is put on a footing far superior to any other service he has ever witnessed.

THE WAR IN INDIA.

ENCAMPMENT OF BENGAL NATIVE INFANTRY.

In one of the accompanying scenes is shown what may be termed the economy of the Encampment; and in the other are the camels and their kalis, or driver; a khansiger, or table attendant of an officer, standing near the tent; a native cooking his dinner; coolies, or porters, carrying chairs; a hackery, or cart of the country, loaded with baggage; two officers, &c.

THE FORT GOVINDGHUR, FROM THE CITY OF AMRITZIR.

FORT GOVINDGHUR.

We have been favoured by a Correspondent with the Sketch of this important Fort, the capture of which (until the arrival of news this week) seemed little known.

In a letter from India, dated 18th January, 1849, the writer says:—

"I send you a view of Govindghur, the strongest place in the Punjaub; the sketch was taken by an officer at present garrisoning it. We took the place by surprise, before the Sikhs had made up their minds what to do, or we should have had tough work to have got it. The Sikhs are awfully disgusted at our having got it, as they have a saying, 'Who gets Govindghur, wins.'"

It will be seen, by the intelligence just received, that the above Fort is intended for the prison-house of Moolraj.

This fort is situated in Umritsir, or Amritsir, a city of the Punjaub, nearly half-way between the rivers Bees and Ravee. According to Baron Von Hügel, it is a larger place than Lahore, and the wealthiest and most commercial place in Northern India. The huge fortress, Govindghur, is its most striking object. It was built by Runjeet Sing, in 1809, ostensibly to protect the pilgrims to Amritsir, but in reality to overawe their vast and dangerous assembly. Its great height and heavy batteries, rising one above the other, give it a very imposing appearance. It contained, at the time of Hügel's visit, the treasure of Runjeet Singh, computed to amount to £30,000,000 sterling, a sum which there is good reason to believe greatly exaggerated. Here is also the mint of the Sikh Government.

ENCAMPMENT OF BENGAL NATIVE INFANTRY.

LOUIS KOSSUTH.

This extraordinary man, who occupies so prominent a position in the present struggle between the Austrians and Hungarians, was, about ten years since, an obscure barrister, who was the accredited correspondent and agent for several Deputies of the Hungarian Diet. Being a very industrious man, several magnates interested themselves in his behalf, and assisted him in the publication of a journal containing a report of the sessions of the Diet. The Government, however, in spite of the law of Hungary, and in spite of the protests of the Diet, forbade the publication of the entire debates, and maintained here, as elsewhere in the Austrian dominions, a strict censorship. Metternich, it is true, allowed the Austrian journals to give a condensed account of the session; Kossuth, however, established his paper, and, by the aid and co-operation of the several Secretaries of the Diet, was enabled to give the debate entire. In order to evade the law, which forbade the report being printed at the printing-press, it was lithographed, and thus published. This plan was, however, soon stopped by the Austrian Government; and Kossuth then reported the debates, and had them copied out by innumerable secretaries, and thus circulated in manuscript over the whole of Hungary. "It is extraordinary," says Mr. Paget, in his "Travels in Hungary," published in 1839, "that none of our newspapers, greedy as they are for information, should ever have given any report of these debates; nor, indeed, ever have had a correspondent in Presburg; as for trusting to one in Vienna, it would be as reasonable to expect news of Poland in St. Petersburgh: none can be more ignorant of what takes place in Hungary than the Viennese."

Kossuth continued his system of manuscript publication even after the prohibition of the Imperial Diet, and then reported the provincial sessions, in which the most bitter and violent speeches were made by the leading speakers; separation from Austria, and the establishment of a Republic, being their leading topics. For the publication of one of these diatribes, Kossuth was, at length, arrested, and thrown into prison. On this affair Mr. Paget gives the following piquant note:—

"If is one of the privileges of the Hungarian noble, that he cannot be imprisoned before trial, except in case of high treason; but, in spite of this, M. Kossuth has been deprived of his liberty. I believe his chief guilt, in the eyes of the Government, was his having circulated in MS., in the same manner as he formerly gave publicity to the transactions of the Diet, reports of the county meetings in various parts of Hungary. The additional strength which this plan would have conferred on the municipal or popular power, by the union and combination it would have produced, is immense, and probably alarmed the higher powers. Kossuth is accused of having reported the proceedings of the meetings incorrectly; and he answers, that, not having been present, he only copied what was reported to him. The whole proceedings in this case are considered as arbitrary and unjust in the highest degree, and have excited the greatest indignation throughout the country. Government wished to make the lawyers employed to defend Kossuth promise not to divulge the circumstances of the trial: not a single member of the bar could be found so base as to obey their behests. Kossuth has been condemned to four years' imprisonment, in addition to two years passed in prison previously to trial!" (1839.)

KOSSUTH, THE HUNGARIAN LEADER.

Kossuth's bitterness was, of course, naturally increased by this unjust process; nor was it diminished when, in consequence of an amnesty, he was liberated from prison. He was next elected a member of the Diet, and had thus an opportunity of expressing his hatred of the Government which had so grossly injured him. Mr. Paget speaks of him as a young man of considerable promise, who, in the debate, was content with two or three sentences, declaring strongly his opinion, and the side on which he should vote. The Hungarian opposition was, at this time, exerting itself to establish a friendly understanding with the Viennese Cabinet, and solicited the mediation of the Palatine to effect this object. The project was successful; and Kossuth was all but neglected by the magnates, who were jealous of his superior abilities; but he maintained his place amongst the leaders of the opposition.

In March, last year, when the Revolution broke out at Vienna, Kossuth was at the height of popularity in his own country; and since that time has display'ed in the conflict great eloquence, and incredible energy and resolution, which almost amounted to foolhardiness. We find the following instance of his strategy related by the Viennese Correspondent of the Times:—

"It must be acknowledged that Kossuth, however deficient he may be in principle, does not want for cunning. A trick he has just played off is a masterpiece of craft and impudence. When the news of the annulling of his bank notes was brought to Debrecztn, Kossuth immediately put the messenger under lock and key, in order to make sure of his discretion. He then announced, in his official organ, the Kossing, that a despatch, which had just arrived, informed him that the Austrian National Bank, being without all credit, had been obliged to suspend its payments. Placards to this effect were also posted up. A great panic was the result, and Austrian notes to the amount of 2,000,000 are said to have been exchanged for Hungarian notes at a loss of 5 per cent. The same joke was attempted at Pesth, and the Hungarian paper rose some 10 or 15 per cent. for a few hours; but the arrest of two or three of the trumpeters of the false report soon put an end to the affair."

We learn by intelligence received yesterday week from Pesth, that Kossuth was in great force in the neighbourhood of Szegedin; and, doubtlessly, a decisive battle would already have taken place had not a tremendous fall of snow made all the roads impassable. The Imperial army, which is divided into six corps, was concentrated near Telegyhaz, Kecskemet and Körss. The reserve was at Cregled.

According to the Debreczin paper, Kosling, Kossuth has given decorations to Dembinsky, Kiss, and Vetter; the order is called "Louis Kossuth Cross." The name, by the way, is pronounced Koshüt.

Metallic Produce of Russia.—The following is a statement of the aggregate of the metallic produce of the Russian empire for the year 1848, from the official documents:—Gold amounted to 1936 poods; platina, 14 poods; silver, 1192 poods; copper, 284,589 poods; wrought iron, 8,313,673 poods; and salt, 34,733,808 poods. Taking the pood at 36lb. avoirdupois, and measuring the gold by the English standard of fineness, the production of the year would amount to £3,944,832, or, allowing for the fraction which the pood is more than 36lb avoirdupois, to rather upwards of £4,000,000 sterling. The production of silver is comparatively insignificant, but taking it at 5s. 6d. per ounce, it would amount to about £188,000. The production of the Russian mines possesses the more interest at present, inasmuch as a parallel may soon be drawn between them and that of the Californian "El Dorado."

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister.—The Ven. George Wilkins, D.D., Archdeacon of Nottingham, with a view to ascertain the sentiments of the clergy in his archdeaconry upon this vexata quæstio, has been at considerable pains to obtain the individual opinion of each priest and deacon within his jurisdiction. The results of his inquiries establishes the fact that fully two-thirds are strongly opposed to the enactment now pending on the subject. The Venerable Archdeacon has embodied this piece of information in a petition which he has transmitted to Lord Lincoln for presentation in the House of Commons.

THE FORTRESS OF KOMORN, ON THE DANUBE.

THE FORTRESS OF KOMORN.

This celebrated post, which has now been under siege by the Austrians several weeks, is the first place of any importance on the banks of the Danube, between Presburg and Pesth, and is situated at the junction of the Danube and Waag, or rather the Danube and its northern branch which receives the Waag. Defended on two sides by the Danube and the Waag, and inclosed by strong walls, Komorn boasts the honour of being a virgin fortress, in testimony of which it bears a small statue of a maiden on its walls. The place is named Komorn, which means "Come to-morrow," or, as a fast man might say, "Call again to-morrow," from its never having been taken.

From the news received yesterday week, we learn that the operations against Komorn were carried on with energy. The Ost-Deutsche Post informs us "that the Fortress is uninterruptedly bombarded. That it is absolutely necessary, before anything can be effected against the Fortress, to take the outworks, which it is expected will speedily be the case, as more troops and siege artillery have been sent off from Vienna."

The Viennese Correspondent of the Times states that everything constructe by the Austrian troops during the night, is regularly destroyed by the cannon of the besieged in the morning. A deserter from the Fortress is said to have declared that, out of 200 bombs which had been directed against the Fortress, only one had produced any effect upon it, the others having fallen into the town." If I had time, or, like a certain British senator, a pounds shillings and pence talent (adds the writer), I could perhaps inform you what this Fortress is likely to cost Austria per day, at 18l. c. m. (£1 16s.) per bomb.

The accompanying View is from a Sketch by her Grace the Duchess of M——, which has been most obligingly forwarded for our columns.

Soon after passing Komorn, the flat is agreeably broken by a low range of hills, following the north branch of the river for a considerable distance, and celebrated for the excellence of their wines. Neszmély, a small but insignificant village, grows the most esteemed. The Nesszmiller is one of the highest-flavoured as well as most costly wines of Hungary.

STONELEIGH ABBEY.

This spacious mansion, the property of Lord Leigh, is situate in one of the most luxuriant and picturesque portions of the county of Warwick, about three miles from Kenilworth. The river Avon is here of noble width; and the estate is richly wooded. Originally, it was the site of an Abbey of Cistercian Monks; but the present mansion was built, in handsome style, about a century since, after designs by Smith of Warwick. Considerable alterations have since been made, and the handsome bridge erected across the river is stated to have cost £18,000. This bridge is an object of interest, from the incredible statements made as to its erection, which have been the subject of a trial at Warwick Assizes, and a notice of which we subjoin.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

THE STONELEIGH ABBEY CASE.—THE QUEEN v. GRIFFIN.—LIBEL.

This case was commenced on Saturday last, before Chief Justice Wilde and a Special Jury, at Warwick.

Lord Leigh, residing at, and the proprietor of, the Stoneleigh Abbey estates, in the county of Warwick, indicted the defendant Griffin, an attorney resident at Leamington, for a series of libels upon himself and his mother, the Lady Julia Leigh.

From the statement of counsel it appeared that there had been various claimants of the Leigh Peerage, one of whom, Henry Leigh, in 1843, with a band of between thirty and forty people, marched from Coventry to Stoneleigh, and in the absence of the noble owner broke open the house and kept possession for some hours. For this daring deed they were prosecuted by Lord Leigh, and convicted at the winter assizes held before Mr. Baron Parke, and many of them were imprisoned, some for two years, others for eighteen months; and some, being poor people, who had been deluded into the making that attack, were discharged upon entering into their own recognisances. Shortly after that Mr. Griffin, the defendant, appeared upon the scene, and stated he had received a communication from a person named Barnett, that many murders and other atrocious crimes had been committed at Stoneleigh, with which he had since charged Lord Leigh and his mother. He concerted with one Barnett, in May of 1848, to make an application to the magistrates for a warrant against Lord Leigh on a charge of murder, and to search parts of a bridge at Stoneleigh for the remains of dead bodies. It was so truly ridiculous the magistrates refused to grant the application; and Lord Leigh, finding Barnett was a convicted felon, took proceedings against him, but while on the very circuit in which the bill was to have been preferred, Barnett died, or was said to have died. The learned counsel read the deposition of Barnett as taken before the magistrate; it was at great length. We give the principal points

Richard Barnett deposed to being a stone-mason, aged 52. In 1814 worked at the Abbey. Lady Leigh (meaning Mrs. Leigh) directed the alterations. Remembered Pound, Smith, Wilcox, Shaw, Billings, Forbes, Munro, Wood, and Blissett. They worked at the abbey. Pound and Smith were dead. They were buried under a stone at one of the abutments of Stoneleigh Bridge, he believed. They were never seen after. Saw their bodies in the old coal-house when he was working at the Abbey in 1814. Wilcox had the key and gave it to him, and he went in about eleven o'clock in the morning. Had worked with them many a day, and ought to know them. About twelve one night they were brought to the bridge in a cart by Sprawson (a servant in the family). They were sewn up in a sack apiece. They were put in the abutment. Pointed out the place on the model of the bridge in court. Mr. Jones, Lady Julia Leigh, and Lord Leigh were present. Billings and Forbes were killed under the stone, and they were there then. Were killed before Pound and Smith were buried. He had hold of the guide rope. Was not far off. They were killed by a stone in the abutment. Pointed out the place on the model. It was in the night. Billy Wood and Alick Munro were present. Munro held the winch line. Mr. Jones, Lady Julia Leigh, and Lord Leigh gave orders. They all three at once said, "Let go;" and he had hold of the guide rope and went up into the air with it. They loosed the winch, and down went the stone and killed the men. It was never removed; it weighed a ton and a half. Pattison worked there that night; they built over them that night one course of stones." The deposition of Barnet then stated he took nine plates off the coffins in the family vault in Stoneleigh church, in 1811; there were there at the time, Mr. Leigh, Mr. Jones, Mr. Roberts, the parson, Mr. Harris, of the Red House, Lady Julia Leigh, and Jonathan Soden. William Blissett worked at the getting out the bridge foundations; saw him buried, at twelve at night, in Stoneleigh church-yard. He was shot by Hay, the keeper, about six at night. Then, "Mr. Jones and Lady Leigh were there when the body was removed."

It was to put an end to the calumnies thus directed against him that Lord Leigh brought the present indictment.

The trial extended over Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, when the case for the defence having been brought to a close, the learned Judge summed up, and the jury retired to consider their verdict, which had not arrived when we went to press.

STONELEIGH ABBEY AND BRIDGE.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 8.—Easter Sunday.
MONDAY, 9.—Easter Monday.
TUESDAY, 10.—Easter Tuesday.
WEDNESDAY, 11. Day breaks at 4h. 32m.
THURSDAY, 12. Quakers' Address presented to James II.
FRIDAY, 13.—Swallows and martens are usually seen for the first time.
SATURDAY, 14. Bishop Fortescue died, 1806.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 14

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
2 38	3 2	3 50	4 16	4 33	4 59	5 16	5 40	6 0	6 25	6 45	7 9	7 30	7 54	8 16	8 40

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE. -First Appearance of Mdlle. PAROLI. First Appearance, this Season of Signor ARAGHE. The Nobility, Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed that this Theatre will RE-OPEN on TUESDAY NEXT, APRIL 10th, when will be performed Bellini's Opera of NORMA Norma, Mdlle Parodi (her first appearance in England), Adalgisa, Mdme Grisbaldi; Pollione, Signor Gardoni, and Oroveso, Signor Lablache. (Her first appearance this season.) To conclude with the admired Ballet, entitled L'ORDALIE A QUATRE; the principal parts by Mdlle Dorothée Grahn, Mdlle Maria Taglioni, Mdlle Marie Taglioni, Mdlle Rosati, Mdlle Carlotta Grisi, Mdlle Emilie Bozzacchi, Mdlle Adeline Plunkett, Mdlle Rosetti, Mdlle Louise Taglioni, Mdlle Cerrito, Mdlle Duvernay, Mdlle Carlotta Grahn, Mdlle Maria Taglioni, Mdlle Adele Dumilâtre, Mdlle Fanny Cerrito, Mdlle Julia Grahn, Mdlle Rosetta, Mdlle Louise Taglioni

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Tuesday evening, the Queen and Prince Albert honoured the performance at Exeter-Hall with their presence. The Royal suite consisted of the Duchess of Sutherland, the Countess of Charlemont, Hon. Miss Stanley, Hon. Miss Dawson, the Lord Chamberlain, the Duke of the Scots in the Throne, the Earl of Morelon, Sir Frederick Stovin, Colonel Buckley, and Colonel Seymour.

The Duchess of Kent paid a visit to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, at Kew. Her Royal Highness afterwards proceeded to Frogmore House.

Her Majesty will hold a Levee at St. James's Palace, on Wednesday, the 2d of May next, at two o'clock.

Her Majesty will hold Drawing-Rooms, at St. James's Palace, on the following days, at two o'clock:

Thursday, 26th April instant.

Saturday, 19th May next, to celebrate her Majesty's birthday.

Thursday, 31st May next.

N.B.—The Knights of the several Orders are to appear in their Collars, at the Drawing Room, on the 19th May next.

DEPARTURE OF THE COURT TO WINDSOR.

On Wednesday afternoon, at three o'clock, the Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, the Princess Alice, the Princess Helena, and the Princess Louisa, and attended by the Royal suite, left town for Windsor Castle. The august party occupied five carriages and four, and was escorted from Buckingham Palace to the Great Western Railway terminus by a party of Light Dragoons.

The Queen and Prince Albert, attended by the Hon. Miss Dawson, Colonel Buckley, and Colonel Seymour, honoured Mr. Landseer with a visit at his studio, in St. John's Wood, on Tuesday.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE.

Mr. G. Howson, B.A. has been elected to a fellowship of Christ College, on the Finch and Bames foundation.

CAIUS COLLEGE.—The Rev. J. T. Walker, M.A., and the Rev. J. R. Crowford, M.A., have been elected Senior Fellows. The Rev. J. M. Croker, M.A., to a Stokes fellowship. The Rev. W. W. Hunt, M.A., and the Rev. W. S. Cobell, M.A., to Frankland Fellowships. A. G. Day, Esq., B.A., and J. H. Beardman, Esq., B.A., to Walley Fellowships; and J. Lamb, Esq., B.A., and B. B. Ramsay, Esq., to Pase Fellowship.

HEBREW SCHOLARSHIPS.—The examination for the Tyrwhitt's Hebrew Scholarships will commence on the second Wednesday in May next; and candidates are to send in their names to St. Peter's College Lodge, on or before the 1st of May.

OXFORD

Congregations will be holden for granting graces and conferring degrees on the following days in the ensuing Term: Wednesday, April 18; Thursday, April 26; Thursday, May 10; Wednesday, May 16; Saturday, May 26.

Mr. Charles Lewis Dart, B.A., of Exeter College, and Mr. Thos. H. R. Shand, B.A., of Brazen-nose, have been elected to the Johnson Scholarships; the former in the theological, the latter in the mathematical.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE SCHOOL.—The Lord Bishop of Winchester has decided against an appeal made to him to render the school of this College a free grammar-school.

ST. MARY HALL.—The Dyke Scholarship has been given to Mr. John Hutchings, a native of the county of Somerset.

The Lasby Scholarship at Magdalen Hall has been awarded to Mr. W. W. Russell, commoner of Queen's College. Mr. John Hutchings, from Somersetshire, has been elected to the Dyke Scholarship at St. Mary Hall. Mr. D. B. Binney, commoner of Worcester College, has been elected to the vacant Bible clerkship at Wadham College.

BISHOPRICK OF DOWN AND CONNOR.—This see, so long void by the death of Dr. Mant, has been filled up by the appointment of the Rev. R. Knox, Prebendary of St. Maughlin's, in the diocese of Limerick, and Chancellor of the diocese of Ardfert

The Rev. David Anderson, formerly Vice-Principal of St. Bees College, and at present Perpetual Curate of All Saints, Derby, has, upon the recommendation of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, been appointed by her Majesty to the newly-created bishoprick of Prince Rupert's Land, including the whole of the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company. It is understood that Mr. Anderson and Mr. Smith, the bishop elect of Victoria, will be consecrated in Canterbury Cathedral on Ascension Day

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS

ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY.—At the annual general meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society, on Friday, Sir John F. W. Herschel, bart., presented to the body a finely executed marble bust of their late President, Francis Baily, D.C.L. (the gift of Miss Baily, his only surviving sister), with an appropriate address, which appears in the Society's Transactions for Feb 1849.

ABOLITION OF BURIALS IN TOWNS.—On Wednesday night a public meeting was held at the Whittington Club-house, in the Strand, to advocate the immediate suppression of burials in cities and large towns. Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart, M.P., presided, in the absence of Mr. Bond Cabbell, M.P., whose ill state of health prevented his attendance. The Chairman, Mr. Mackinnon, M.P., Mr. G. A. Walker, Mr. J. Abel Smith, M.P., and Mr. George Thompson, M.P., were the principal speakers. The first resolution, which was a protest against the practice of burial in vaults, under any circumstances, also stated that the attention of Parliament ought to be immediately directed to the way in which 600,000 bodies, the annual mortality of the United Kingdom, were disposed of, and that the constant exposure to the air of human remains must, in the present state of the public health, be highly prevented. This resolution was moved by Mr. Mackinnon, M.P., seconded by Mr. G. A. Walker, and carried nem. con. The second resolution referred to the report of a committee of the House of Commons in 1843, condemning in strong terms the practice of interment in large towns, as leading to the desecration of the repose of the dead, and being highly injurious to the health and morals of the living; and to the affirmation of those views by a majority of the House itself in 1845, finally expressing the opinion of the meeting that some general act was required for the establishment of cemeteries in suitable localities, as an act of justice to the nation. This resolution, with the third, agreeing to the form of a petition to Parliament, was supported by several speakers, who all agreed that some measure should not be too soon adopted by the Government for the suppression of an abomination from which the whole community suffered more or less.

RETURNING OFFICERS.—The following gentlemen have been appointed the returning officers for the metropolitan boroughs for 1849-50.—For Marylebone: Capes Tompkin, Esq., 50, Doughty-street. For Finsbury: J. H. Bykett, Esq., 9, Chancery-lane. For Tower Hamlets: Henry Child, Esq., St. Swithin's-lane

FIRE NEAR THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.—Tuesday morning, about eight o'clock, a fire, which caused considerable alarm in the city, but fortunately was not attended with much destruction of property broke out in the premises of Messrs. Cowling Sanders, and Nicholls, hatters, &c., 22, Birchin-lane. The engines of the Brigade and West of England quickly attended, and the flames were soon extinguished. The origin of the fire is unknown.

NOVELTIES FOR EASTER.—Of the many new Views will be introduced at the Diorama, Regent's Park; when, also, the Chinese Junk, at Blackwall, will be re-opened. There will be several new views shown at the Cosmorama, in Regent-street; when, also, a very elaborate model of the Cathedral at Cologne, by F. Bruckmann, will be first opened. Brunetti's model of Ancient Jerusalem will likewise be shown at 107, Regent-street. The two long pictures of the Rhine and Bierfreh's Panorama of the Eight Days of Kulm are, likewi-e, novelties; and the picture exhibitions at the Suffolk-street Gallery, the Hyde Park Gallery, and the British Institution, are of like attraction. The Society of Arts exhibition of recent British manufactures will be open during the holidays to those who have not tickets, for the charge of twopence each.

GREEN PEAS AND NEW POTATOES.—Messrs. Keelling and Hunt, of Monument-yard, a few days since, received a consignment of those earliest luxuries from Lisbon, which were of excellent quality SERIOUS FIRE AND EXPLOSION IN SOUTHWARK.—On Monday evening, about six o'clock, a fire broke out in the oil and colour warehouse belonging to Mr. Tillyard, No. 28, Great Suffolk-street, nearly adjoining the Grapes Music hall, Southwark. As might be anticipated from the combustible nature of the stock, the flames raged with tremendous fury, until, reaching the place where a large quantity of gunpowder was stored, a terrific explosion took place, by which the whole of the building was shortly destroyed. Many persons were thrown down by the concussion, and some received serious injury from the falling bricks and materials. Fortunately no lives were lost, although Mr. Tillyard's children, when rescued at an early period from the burning house, had their clothes in flames. A number of the adjoining houses were injured by the explosion. The fire was completely extinguished by nine o'clock.

SUICIDE AND DEATHS IN THE MET ROPOLIS.—The number of births in the week ending March 31 were—Males, 799; females, 822; total, 1621. Deaths: Males, 619, females, 623; total, 1241. The number of deaths is 72 more than the weekly average of the season, which is the result, however, of a accumulation of coroner's cases registered together at the end of the quarter. There were only 4 deaths from cholera.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean height of the barometer was under 30 in. every day of the week. The mean temperature of the week was 40 deg. 8 sec.

A HANDSOME PAINTED EASTERN WINDOW has been put up in St John's Church, Woolwich, in memory of the late and first incumbent, who came to a violent and melancholy end, some ten months ago, by a railway collision, at Swindon.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY

IRELAND.—Lord Monteagle, the Earl Fitzwilliam, and the Marquis of Abercorn took the opportunity of the presentation of petitions to express their approval of Sir Peel's plan for the permanent improvement of the social condition of Ireland.

NORTH OF ITALY.

Lord BROUGHAM inquired if the report were true that the Government had recommended the Polish General with the unpronounceable name to the King of Sardinia? It appeared that that General had been employed by the Queen ment in a confidential capacity

The Earl of ABERDEEN charged the Government with very culpable partiality in their conduct towards Sardinia, in comparison with their bearing towards Austria. He hoped the mediation had proceeded without the interference of England

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE denied that the Polish General had been recommended by the British Government to Sardinia, and repelled the charge of unfair partiality in their mediation between Sardinia and Austria

The Earl of ELLESMERE expressed himself that the Government would not suffer any infringement of the territory of Piedmont.

The Earl of ABERDEEN remarked that there was little danger of that, because Austria herself evinced all intention or desire of despoiling Piedmont

The conversation then dropped

On the motion of the Marquis of CLANRICARDE, the Recovery of Wages (Ireland) Bill and the Protection of Justices (Ireland) Bill were read a second time

The Mutiny Bill, the Marine Mutiny Bill, and the Indemnity Bill were read a third time and passed, on the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE.

On the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, the Petty Sessions Bill passed through Committee And adjourned

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

NOTICES AND QUESTIONS.

Mr. B. OSBORNE gave notice that, after Easter, he would move a Committee of the whole House to consider the temporalities of the Irish Church.

Sir W. MOLESWORTH gave notice of a motion, after Easter, on the subject of the colonial policy of the British empire.

In answer to questions from Mr. Hume, Lord PALMERSTON stated that he had no reason to suppose that Austria had any intention or disposition to require the cession of any portion of the Piedmontese territory.

To Mr. Ewart, the noble Lord replied that there were fair prospects of the resumption of British commerce in La Plata

In answer to Mr. ANSTEY, Lord PALMERSTON stated that the Government had the best reasons for believing that the Russian Government had made no demand upon Turkey for permission for the Russian squadron to pass out of the Black Sea into the Mediterranean.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Lord J. RUSSELL moved that on Thursday, the 19th instant, and on every subsequent alternate Thursday till the end of the session, orders of the day shall have precedence of notices of motion. May it please you, the noble Lord added that course he proposed with respect to public business. He hoped the report of the Navigation Bill would be received on Wednesday, or, at all events, immediately after the recess, and he therefore fixed the 23rd for the third reading. The Oaths (the Jew) Bill he would set down for Monday, the 30th inst. He trusted that the second reading of the Rate in Aid Bill would be agreed to that night; but, as the £100,000 vote on the security of the rate would give rise to considerable discussion, he would postpone his motion for the advance to Monday, the 16th

Mr HUME objected to the proposal to give up each alternate Thursday to the Government at so early a period of the session, and threatened a division, but did not persist

Lord J. RUSSELL's motion was therefore agreed to

The House went into committee of supply, and some votes on account of civil services and civil contingencies were taken.

RATE IN AID.—ADJOURNED DEBATE

The adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading of the Rate in Aid Bill, and on Mr. G. A. Hamilton's amendment thereto, was resumed by Mr Herbert. The hon. member supported the rate in aid, because its necessity for some such contribution was imperatively and immediately required, and no other made less objectionable had been submitted to the House. He regretted that the Government had not prepared some large plan for the permanent amelioration of the social condition of Ireland. He admired the scheme sketched by Sir R. Peel, but he thought it was rather vague, and took an impracticable shape.

The Marquis of GRANBY censured as weak, vacillating, and unsatisfactory the conduct of the Government in respect to this measure.

Mr C. S. FORTESCUE could not support the Government on this occasion, because he considered the rate in aid indefensible, and contrary to the spirit of the Poor-law. He was favourable to an Irish income-tax, provided it was levied on Irish purposes.

Mr. DISRAELI having condemned the proposition of the Government, and criticised the exposition of the right hon. Baronet, presented to the House by Mr Herbert in the proposal for an Income Tax for Ireland; and he would accompany that measure by such a diminution of the area of taxation as would give the requisite employment now stopped, and, by a stringent Poor Law, would prepare the way for the encouragement of private enterprise, under the shadow and protection of imperial resources such encouragement as was proposed by the late lamented Lord George Bentinck, whose plan for the construction of railways was taken up bit by bit by the Government.

Lord J. RUSSELL denied that the rate in aid was the "comprehensive plan" submitted by the right hon. Baronet opposite (Sir R. Peel). It was presented only as a temporary cure for an acute evil, without any pretence to the character of an ultimate or a permanent remedy. He promised that, should the Irish members make a case for the imposition of an income tax on Ireland, they might have it. With respect to the commission suggested by Sir R. Peel, the noble Lord said he had much doubt about its practicability It should either have compulsory powers, or it should only work on the voluntary principle; and he did not think either project would work. The case of Ulster had been cited as a precedent. But, in the case of Ulster, the lands were in the hands of the Crown, and there were no people on them; whereas, in the case of Ireland at present, the lands were not in the hands of Parliament, and the people were located on them. He could not understand how the right hon. Baronet's scheme could be carried out But he thought the committee might be done to facilitate the transmission of property: and he had heard with pleasure the right hon Baronet's suggestions relative to the doing away with the cumbrous and too carefully-framed rules of the Court of Chancery, and he hoped to be able to amend the act of last year. With respect to the reproductive works in Ireland, it was the intention of the Government to propose an amount for railways, for arterial drainage, and for land improvements in the extent of a million pounds sterling. He would not, however, call on the House to affirm the principle of the bill, which is that Ireland should contribute her share to relieve the distress

The debate on the motion of Mr J. O'CONNELL was adjourned

Mr. GREY obtained leave to bring in a bill for promoting the public health in Scotland

Mr. SOLICITOR-GENERAL obtained leave to bring in a bill for facilitating and [illegible]

Adjourned at half past twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Royal Assent (by Commission) was given to the following bills: The Mutiny Bill, the Marine Mutiny Bill, the Indemnity Bill, the Larceny Acts Amendment Bill, and Wadely's Divorce Bill. The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Mulgrave, and Lord Wharncliffe.

The Spirits (Ireland) Bill was read a second time, on the motion of the Marquis of CLANRICARDE.

The Report of the Petty Sessions Bill was received, Lord CAMPBELL having announced that he had made the amendments in it suggested by the Earl of Malmesbury and Lord Stanley

The Recovery of Wages (Ireland) Bill and the Protection of Justices (Ireland) Bill passed through committee

Lord BROUGHAM again impressed on the Government the duty of abstaining from interference in the affairs of Sardinia and Austria

On the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, their Lordships adjourned, for the Easter recess, to Thursday, the 19th instant.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY

RATE IN AID.—ADJOURNED DEBATE

The adjourned debate was resumed by Mr. J. O'CONNELL, who objected to the bill, because he thought a rate in aid would break down the poorer ratepayers, and thus very largely swell the ranks of pauperism. The hon. member was unprepared to propose his vote for the rate on the ground that it would give a temporary relief to the starving people.

After a long discussion, the House divided—For the second reading of the bill, 191; against it, 138: majority for the Government, 53.

Mr. P. SCRROPE moved for leave to bring in a bill to promote the employment of labour in Ireland by a proportionate exemption from poor-rate.—Mr. A. STAFFORD seconded the motion.—After a short discussion, the House divided—For bringing in the bill, 108; against it, 15: majority, 93.—Leave was given to bring in the bill, which was read a first time

Mr. LOCKE moved for leave to bring in a bill to secure to the public on Sundays a limited and reasonable use of all railways which convey passengers on other days of the week. Mr. FORBES opposed the motion, and, after a short debate, the House divided For leave to bring in the bill, 58; against it, 39: majority, 38. Leave was then given to bring in the bill, which was read a first time

Mr. GREY obtained leave to bring in a bill to establish county financial boards for the administration of county rates and expenditure in England and Wales. The bill was read a first time.

Sir G. GREY, in the absence of Lord J. RUSSELL, moved for leave to bring in a bill to amend the acts relating to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England. The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a first time.

Adjourned at two o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

THE EASTER HOLIDAYS.—Lord J. RUSSELL moved the adjournment of the House for the Easter recess, from its rising, to Monday, the 16th inst.—Mr. HUME took that occasion to bring under consideration the general discontent of our colonies, which he attributed in a great degree to the misconduct of the Colonial Secretary. Lord J. RUSSELL contended that, taken in the aggregate, our colonies could not be said to be discontented, and he referred to Canada, the Cape, Australia, and New Zealand, as instances that the sweeping charge made by Mr Hume could not be sustained As to the sugar colonies, if they were dissatisfied, their dissatisfaction could not be attributed to the conduct of Lord Grey, their complaints arose from the measures adopted by Parliament, and not from the administration of the Colonial Secretary.—After a short conversation, Lord J. Russell's motion was agreed to.

The Attachments, Courts of Record (Ireland) Bill, the Passengers Bill, and the Friendly Societies Bill, were severally read a second time.

The Debtors at Bank Rent Relief Bill and the Superiors' Remedies Bill went through committee

Mr ROUNDELL PALMER obtained leave to bring in a bill to authorise, in certain cases, the partition or sale of real estate personally held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common Leave was also given to the Lord Advocate to bring in a bill to make more effectual provision for regulating the police of towns and populous places in Scotland, and for paving, draining, cleansing, lighting, and improving the same.

The House adjourned to Monday, the 16th instant.

COUNTRY NEWS.

NORTH HANTS ELECTION.—PROTECTIONIST SCHISM.—On Saturday the nomination took place at Winchester Sir John Walter Pollen proposed Mr Melville Portal as a fit and proper person to represent the county in Parliament (ringing cheers and hisses), as a supporter of the Ministry, and of the landed interest; Sir John add ng, that Mr. Portal was no Tamford man, but a true Protectionist. Mr William Lutley Sclater seconded the nomination Mr. Bawlings, of Whitchurch, a large tenant-farmer, then came forward to propose Mr. William Shaw, chairman of the London Farmers' Club (cheers and hisses), describing him as a Protectionist—as being personally known to many of the farmers present as one of their own body, who had identified himself with them for twenty years as the legitimate farmers' friend. The candidates severally addressed the electors, and a show of hands was taken, which was in favour of Mr. Shaw. A poll was demanded by Sir J. Pollen, which closed on Wednesday, with the following numbers: For Portal, 1199; for Shaw, 868: majority for Portal, 331.

MELANCHOLY SUICIDE OF THE VICAR OF PRESCOT.—It is with regret that we have to announce the recent suicide, last week, of the Rev. Mr. Chapman, the lately-appointed Vicar of Prescot. The rev. gentleman, who was about thirty years of age, was staying at the time of the dreadful occurrence (Thursday) with a sister at St. Albans. He had only been appointed to the vicarage of Prescot about three months. His health, we believe, was indifferent, and the thought of the heavy charge (from the extent of the parish) which he had undertaken, acting upon a conscientious and over-sensitive mind, depressed his spirits, and led to the commission of the rash act. The suicide was effected by cutting his throat. The appointment to Prescot rests, we believe, with King's College, Cambridge.

REPRESENTATION OF SHEFFIELD.—On Monday meetings of both sections of the Liberal party were held in Sheffield, to select a representative in the room of H. G. Ward, Esq., who has been appointed Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, and at each it was resolved to support John Arthur Roebuck, Esq. At a meeting of the ultra-Liberal party, which included many of the friends of Sir Culling Eardley, the support which it was agreed should be given to Mr. Roebuck, was coupled with the conditions to be drawn by the mover of Nonconformist delegates at the last election of the Ward, namely, opposition to further religious endowment—support of free trade—economical reform—and a gradual and safe extension of the suffrage, to which was added a new condition in favour of the ballot.

IRELAND.

The preferment of the Rev. R. Knox, of the diocese of Limerick, to the vacant see of Down and Connor has just been announced to the Irish public. Mr Knox is Prebendary of St. Maughlin's, in the diocese of Limerick, and Chancellor of the diocese of Ardfert and Aghadoe. He is a man of liberal opinions, of the purest life and morals, mild and conciliatory in his manner and bearing—having lived on terms of the truest Christian charity with the brethren of the Roman Catholic and Presbyterian churches. Mr Knox is for the compiler of the "Ecclesiastic Index" bearing his name, and is not an unread man in many of the episcopal duties, having for many years administered the affairs of the diocese of Limerick during the illness and absence of the Bishop.

TRIAL OF MR. DUFFY.—All the necessary preparations are in progress for another experiment of trial by jury. Summonses have been served on the city jurors, and Mr. Duffy is to be again arraigned at the opening of the commission, on this day (Saturday)

REDUCTION OF RENTS.—The Meath tenantry of the Marquis of Headfort have solicited his Lordship to meet them at the court-house of Kells, in order that they may lay before him such a statement of the hardships they are suffering from the gravous weight of rates and taxes as may induce him to make a reduction of rents commensurate with the losses they have sustained, and in accordance with the present depressed state of agriculture.

SIR ROBERT'S PLAN.—The right hon. Baronet's scheme for the regeneration of Ireland forms the all-engrossing topic of conversation throughout the country—nothing else is spoken or thought of. The project is favourably received by a majority of the Irish people

THE CRISIS.—Four baronies in the county of Cork are suddenly left without a high constable to collect the rates. The offices have been thrown up in utter disgust, and no one can be found willing to undertake a duty which is felt to be worse than useless

The county of Cork Grand Jury have petitioned Parliament in favour of a bc. duty on foreign corn, the revenue to be applied to the support of the poor in Ireland whenever the rate shall exceed 3s. in the pound.

The cholera has nearly disappeared in Limerick, and confidence is being quickly restored.

Jenny Lind having declined to accept a testimonial which the inhabitants of Worcester proposed to present to her, in token of the admiration which her notle and disinterested generosity had excited in giving a concert for the benefit of the Worcester Infirmary, it has been determined the amount of the subscription shall be given, as a mark of gratitude to her, to the Worcester Dispensary and Orphanage Institution

LOSS OF THE STEAM SHIP "FORTH."—An investigation into the late melancholy loss of the steam-ship Forth, on the Alacranes reef, bound to Southampton, on Saturday. The tribunal was composed of the following gentlemen, who constituted an inquiry committee of the company: Captain Sargeant, of the East India Company, as Elder Brother of Trinity-house, Chairman; Capt Maugles, a managing director, Vice-Chairman; Captain Nolan, an Elder Brother of Trinity house; Captain Barton, R.N., the company's superintendent at Southampton; Captain R. N. Chappell, R.N. secretary of the company; Captain Wish, R.N., auditor of the company; likewise the commanders of three of the company's ships in port, Lieutenant P. Hass, R.N., of the Avon, Lieutenant Senior officer and commander of the steamer's fleet, Captain William Allen, of the Dee; and Captain W. Vincent, of the Severn. The whole tenour of the evidence (to which a patient and careful hearing of four hours was given by the committee) demonstrated that the loss of this fine steamer arose from—I, an error in the reckoning, which, however, ought to have been counteracted by different observations and attention to the sounding lead; 2, a violation of the company's regulations in regard to frequent soundings, as before alluded to; and, 3, by the taking from his post of one of the look-out men. As the most explicit instructions on these are laid down in the company's volume of regulations published for the information and guidance of their officers, the resolution arrived at, after deliberation, was, that a laxity of discipline in relation to the duties of the navigation of the ship caused her misfortune to be wrongly computed, and her total destruction consequently followed. The decision arrived at by the committee was—that it would be their painful duty to recommend to the Court of Directors the dismissal of Captain Sturdee and the chief officer from the company's service; that the second officer should be reduced to the grade of third officer for one voyage, and that the third officer should be reduced to the grade of fourth officer for one year.

THE RETURN VISIT TO PARIS.

IF will, doubtless, be recollected, that, a short time since, a considerable number of the French National Guards visited our metropolis; when parties of them inspected several of our public establishments, at which they were received in the most courteous manner. Several of the Guards also waited upon the Lord Mayor, at the Mansion House, and a medallic commemoration of his Lordship's hospitable reception of the visitors has since appeared, by a distinguished French artist. The Hon. Artillery Company likewise gave the Guards a fraternal welcome. A return visit was proposed, but no arrangements were made for the occasion. The proceedings seem, however, to have suggested what was at first termed a Petit Retour Visit; the time fixed was Easter, and Thursday was the day named for the departure of the Visitors. Nearly 200 persons are stated to have availed themselves of the opportunity. Not are we able to explain to our readers, that, notwithstanding the considerable number of the visitors, the whole affair could not be considered otherwise than as a holiday excursion, and should not be regarded as a national demonstration. The French Guards came to London as a "National" body; and this may read some persons in imagining the late Royal return to France as of a similar character; such, however, is not the case, though we do not for a m ment question the amount of excellent feeling which our countrymen will exhibit in their visit to the French capital. Their reception by the French authorities at Boulogne has been very gratifying; and, as it presents some beautiful display of French feeling, we have illustrated two of its most attractive scenes in the engravings page; these are the landing, and a sort of banquet known as the "Vin d'Honneur," which consisted in the authorities and visitors interchanging bumpers of champagne

On Thursday morning a train left the South-Eastern Railway London station at half-past five o'clock, with nearly 300 visitors, who arrived at Boulogne at 12 o'clock, and were received by the Mayor and other authorities, and left Boulogne for Paris at two o'clock, much gratified with their welcome.

THE RETURN VISIT TO PARIS.

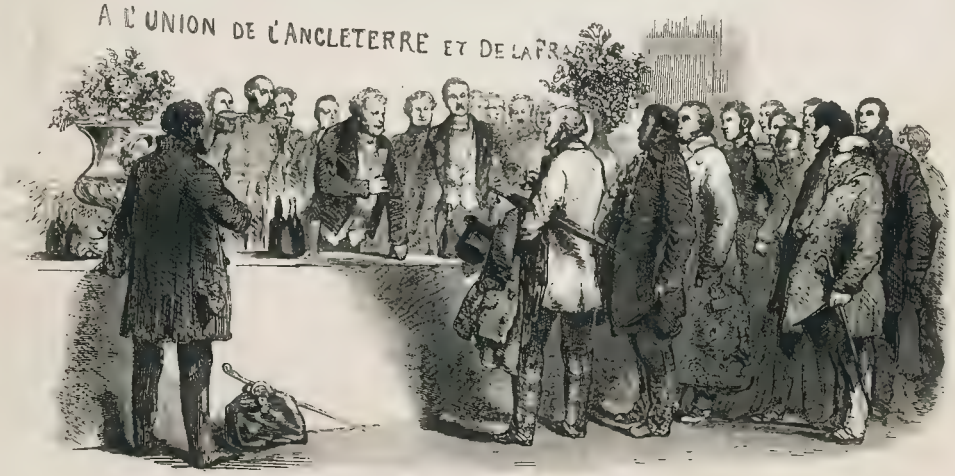
THE LANDING AT BOULOGNE.

THE LANDING.

The preparations for the reception of the visitors were very striking. On the bay were National Guards in arms, forming a circle in front of the Custom House. Behind the line of Guards were the artillery firing salutes. The windows of the neighbouring houses were crowded with spectators.

THE "VIN D'HONNEUR."

This was the ceremony of welcome. The visitors were received in an apartment, where, at a long table, were stationed gentlemen officiating as waiters; the Mayor of Boulogne being in the middle, and holding a glass of champagne in his hand, addressed the company. The English visitors were in their travelling dress; some in the uniform of the Artillery Company, some with cloaks carpet-bags, &c. The apartment was decorated with festoons of foliage, as wel as the arch outside, upon which was inscribed, "To the union of England and France," with flags of both nations The table was covered with baskets o flowers, fruits, bottles of champagne, silver vases &c. and had a very handsome appearance.



THE "VIN D'HONNEUR."

EXTERIOR OF THE COURT AT NORWICH.

THE STANFIELD HALL MURDERS.

The interest which is generally exhibited respecting this extraordinary trial calls for a more lengthened notice of the evidence of the chief witness, Emily Sandford, than that which we gave briefly in our Postscript of last week.

The witness was examined on Friday (week). She said, in reference to the document which she had copied and signed for Rush, and the discovery of which fixed the probability of motive for the alleged charge—I was living in London about twelve months ago. It is two years since I became acquainted with the prisoner Rush. About a year ago I left London to live with him at Stanfield Hall Farm. After living with him there some time I went back to London—about the beginning of February, 1848—where we lived together, at lodgings, in 3, Milne-street, Islington. I went under the name of James. I remember persons of the name of Thomas Jermy, Larner, and Richard Reed coming there in October last. A writing was produced at that meeting. It is the same as that which is now before me. It is dated October 3—that is the day I wrote it. (The paper was the agreement respecting the farms found in the secret drawer.) I wrote it before they came, from a copy given to me by Mr. Rush. The paper he gave me was in his handwriting. He told me to copy it. The men came about six o'clock in the evening, and before that time I looked over the paper. It remained on the table when they came. I saw them all put their signatures to it. (Here she became rather faint, and leant back in the box. The prisoner: "Get her a footstool." She came round, however, and the examination proceeded, but the witness was in tears the greater part of the time.) After they were gone Mr. Rush asked me to sign it, and I did so. Mr. Rush said, that Larner and Jermy should go down to Felmingham to the farm. * * * Mr. Rush was to pay their expenses in going down. As I understood, Jermy and Larner were cousins. I never saw them after. Next day but one—that is, October 5. I came from London by Mr. Rush's directions. * * * He asked me to copy some papers and produced them. After he left me I began to copy, and next morning he called and told me that I need not trouble to do it. I cannot say whether the paper was destroyed or not. Mr Rush returned from London on Saturday morning, and we breakfasted together, after which I went to Mrs. Stacey's by his desire. He went home, and I cannot say how soon after he called for me there. When he came he said he had some writing to occupy my time, and produced a paper to copy from. He also showed me some paper on which to write, and which was stamped. I did as he directed, and we dined together afterwards. After making the first copy he wanted me to make another of the same paper, which I did. That also was on a stamp. He took both copies away with him. The Sunday after that he came again and showed me one of the pieces of stamped paper. (Here the witness leant back weeping and quite overcome. Her emotion appeared to be caused by a hurried glance which she took at the prisoner.) On showing me the papers, he said, "I want you to put your name to that you wrote for me the other day." I think he produced both the copies I made.—The prisoner here interrupted, when

The Judge said, Had anything been added since you wrote the papers?—Witness: I observed that the words "I. Jermy" had been added. (Sensation

INTERIOR OF THE COURT-HOUSE, DURING THE TRIAL OF RUSH.—EXAMINATION OF ELIZA CHESTNEY.

PLAN OF THE STANFIELD HALL ESTATE.

EXPLANATION.

- Dwelling-Houses.
- Roads, Paths, &c.
- Out-buildings
- Ponds, Water-courses, &c.
- Parish Boundaries.
- Private Boundaries
- Gates.

DISTANCES

From Stanfield Hall to Gore's Farm-house 40 yards
From Stanfield Hall to Potash Farm-house 1760 yards
From Stanfield Hall to Norwich or Ketteringham Lodge 2 miles 2 furlongs
From Stanfield Hall to the boundary of Potash Farm 724 yards.
From the boundary of Stanfield Hall estate to the Potash Farm-house, 854 yards.
From Stanfield Hall to Potash Farm-house 1089 yards
From Stanfield Hall to Potash Farm-house by Norwich or Ketteringham Lodge, 1 mile 5 furlongs 16 yards
From Stanfield Hall to Potash Farm-house, by Wymondham Lodge, 2 miles 2 furlongs 4 yards.

...e asked me to write my name and the word "witness" after it; which I did He left me about four o'clock. I remarked to Mr. Rush that the paper was flared on the day we went to Stanfield, and that he made me a witness though I did not go in. We had some words about it; and he said he did not wish to make me a witness. He told me that the papers were only copies. I wrote on Monday a letter to him on the subject, but I can't say that he has destroyed it, or has said so to me

* * * * * * *

In the letter I wrote I complained that it would be swearing falsely to be a witness. He came next day, and was very angry at me for writing, saying it was very indiscreet to write about such matters, and asking me if I had a copy of the letter. I went to look, and found one in pencil, which I gave him, and he tore it up. Nothing more passed between us on the subject, and he left me the same evening

* * * * * * *

After dinner Mr. Rush told me I had better take my walk, saying he had a little writing to do. I returned in about half an hour, and found a great many papers on the table. After I had put off my things, he asked me to put my name in two of the papers I had written for him, which are those now produced. He said, "Put your signature to these, and the word 'witness,'" holding the papers, as he said so, only open at the bottom. After I had written my name, he signed the papers also. When I signed, I could not see the words "Isaac Jermy," which I now observe on one of the papers. It was not there when I copied it. On signing the other, I think I observed the words "Isaac Jermy." Mr. Rush did not sign it after me, as he did with the first paper.

Her evidence relative to the night of the murder was as follows:—

On the Tuesday we had tea about six o'clock. I had been preparing for the concert; but a few minutes before dinner Mr. Rush came up-stairs, brought his gun, and fired it off. He went out shortly before tea, and at tea he said he was not well. We had a great deal of conversation. He asked me if I was much disappointed at not going to the concert? and I said, "No, not in the least, if you are unwell." He said that we should go next morning instead. During the conversation he said he should go out that night again.

Mr Prendergast: What did you say?—Witness: I objected to his going, and said I was sure there was something more than vexation.

Mr Prendergast: What did he say then.? Witness; He said there was something worse; he would not let me know then, but he would tell me another time.

Mr. Prendergast: What followed?—Witness: He asked how many times he had been out? and I said five or six times.

Mr. Prendergast: What did he say then?—Witness: That he should only have two or three more times to go out, and then he should succeed.

Mr. Prendergast: What had you been reading then?—Witness: The Scottish history, which I read sometimes, and sometimes he.

Prisoner: Ask her what I did say?

Mr Prendergast: What did he say?—Witness: He asked if I recollected the anecdote of Bruce; he sure edied the seventh time. He thought he should too, and he would try again that night.

Mr. Prendergast: What were his words? Witness: "Do you recollect Bruce watching the spider? It made several attempts to spring to the wall. It tried six times and failed; on the seventh it succeeded." The Scottish chief succeeded, and he thought he should succeed.

Prisoner: I complain that counsel below are interfering. I want to know if there are more than three counsel The Judge: There are not

Witness: Seeing his eyes fixed on me, I asked him why he looked at me so; and he cried. He left about half-past seven o'clock. I went up-stairs during the afternoon, and there were the remains of a fire in his bedroom. I went up the first time and the bedroom door was shut, which was unusual. The fire was quite out in the evening when he went out. I was in the parlour at the time, and he was in his bedroom a quarter of an hour before going. I heard him also go to the keeping room, but did not see him. I then heard him go right through the back premises, which are not connected with the parlour side of the house. He desired me to fasten the front door up till he returned. Being alone I remained in the parlour. It was nine or half-past nine when he returned, and I heard him rattle at the porch door. I went and asked "Who is there?" He said, "It's only me; open the door." I undid the bolt, went into the parlour, and said, "It's undone."

Mr. Prendergast: Did you say anything to him?—Witness. When he came in he went past up-stairs, and I asked him if he would have a light The parlour door was closed at the time. He said, "No, go to bed." I remained a few minutes in the parlour, and he came down into the room.

Mr. Prendergast: How was he, so far as his dress? Witness: He had neither coat nor shoes on. I could tell by the noise that he wore shoes when he went out.

Mr. Prendergast: What state was he in?—Witness: He appeared very excited, and looked pale and agitated.

Mr. Prendergast. What did he say to you?—Witness: He told me to take the fire off and come to bed. I asked him what was the matter—had anything happened?

Mr. Prendergast: What did he say? Witness: "No; nothing. If you hear any inquiries for me, say I was out only ten minutes." (Sensation.) I then threw water on the fire, and went up-stairs to his bed-room, the door of which I just opened, and went in about a yard. I said, "Which room shall I go in to sleep?" He said, "Here;" and immediately after, "No; in your own."

Mr. Prendergast: When he said that, did he remain where he was?—Witness: No; he walked towards me, and said, "You want your dress unfastened." Since I had been at Potash we had always slept in the same bed. I went into my own room then.

Mr Prendergast: Did you observe, when you went into his room, if there was a fire? Witness. Yes; there was a fire burning brightly. I had lighted none before he came home. When I was in my room, I heard him go down stairs, and come back again very shortly. When I retired, he appeared to look himself in. When I got into bed I bolted my door inside.

Mr. Prendergast: Were you disturbed in the night?—Witness: Yes, about 2 some one came and knocked. I asked, who was there? and he said, 'It's only me; I came to wish you good night; undo your door."

Mr Prendergast: How did you observe him, then?—Witness: He came inside and was talking a great deal. He said, "You must go firm. If any one asks you how long I was out last night, you must say only ten minutes."

Mr Prendergast: What did you say?—Witness: I asked him what had happened" and he answered, "Nothing; you may hear of something in the morning" (Sensation.)

Mr Prendergast: What state were you in?—Witness: I was trembling, and said I felt cold; to which he replied, "You appear as if you had the ague." He then went and brought his great coat from the room, and laid it on the table. There was a great deal said that night.

Mr. Prendergast: Did you make any observation to him?—Witness: I asked him several times for God's sake what he had done, and why his hand trembled? But he repeated "Nothing."

Mr Prendergast: Did he say anything besides?—Witness: He said his poor mother would be ruined. He hoped God would bless me, for I had done nothing wrong.

Mr. Prendergast: Do you remember a peculiar pair of boots which Mr. Rush was in the habit of wearing?—Witness: Yes, a pair open at the side, with a loop behind to pull them up. I have seen them drying repeatedly next morning as if they had been worn the day before. I had seen them last on Saturday" but not since.

Mr Prendergast: Some days before this, do you remember Mr. Rush showing you a closet in the parlour?—Witness: Yes. He showed me where he kept his papers that were valuable. No one, he said, knew the place but his poor mother. He took up one of the planks, and showed me how to raise it by a chisel in case of fire The closet in his bedroom he always kept locked.

The prisoner here quietly requested that one of the blinds should be raised, as the sun was shining on his papers and dazzling his eyes. It was done.

Mr Prendergast: Did Mr. Rush ask you any questions at breakfast next day? Witness: He said, "You know I had my slippers on last night;" and I answered, "No, I don't."

The cloak was here produced, and the witness identified it as belonging to the prisoner. It was made in London, and was kept in his room.

SATURDAY.

This morning the prisoner Rush resumed the cross-examination of Emily Sandford (alias the widow James), in a rambling series of interrogations, which only elicited a confused, unconnected mass of matter, having little bearing upon the immediate features.

The only other witness of consequence examined was William Frederick Howe, who said: I was a clerk to Mr. Waugh, solicitor, Bedford-row

The prisoner applied that this witness might be postponed till Monday morning, as he never heard of his being a witness till the learned gentleman opened his case.

The Judge said all he could say was, that the cross-examination might be put off till Monday.

The examination then proceeded: I met Mr. Rush in 1847, in Catherine-street, Strand, London We were having some refreshment in a house kept by a man named Josep, when a fighting man came in. Mr. Rush asked me who he was. I told him his name was Samuel Simmonds The prisoner took up a glass of claret before him, and said, "If I could strike like him, I would knock Jimmy down like a bullock." Very early in 1848 he called at Mr. Waugh's office. There was an act on then going on between Rush and Jermy, in which Mr Waugh was concerned for Rush. The action was one of ejectment. When Rush called, Mr. Waugh was out, and I left the office with him, and we were walking down Jamesstreet We were talking about the ejectment.

Mr. Prendergast: What did he say?—Witness: There was one remarkable expression he used.

Mr Prendergast: What was it?—Witness: He said "It will not be long before I serve him with an ejectment to the other world," or "before he has an ejectment for the other world." I am not sure which.

Mr. Prendergast: Of whom was he speaking then?—Witness: Of Mr Jermy. I frequently talked with the prisoner on the subject of this action—his expressions were unfriendly to Mr. Jermy.

The Judge: Do you wish to postpone the cross-examination?

The Prisoner. Certainly, my lord.

The Judge. I should have thought it would need no cross-examination at all.

MONDAY.

Mr. Baron Rolfe took his seat on the bench at a quarter before nine o'clock. Rush immediately was placed in the dock, bringing, as before, a vast quantity of papers with him. He looked very well.

Mr Baron Rolfe intimated to the prisoner that he had received two notes with respect to the witness Howe. It was very improper to write to a judge whilst trying a prisoner. He had handed the letters to the counsel for the prosecution.

Rush made no observation, but requested that he might be permitted to postpone his cross-examination of the witness for a short time, as he had just received a letter with respect to him.

At a subsequent period of the day, William Frederick Howe, whose examination in chief took place on Saturday, was cross-examined by the Prisoner, but material was elicited.

The other evidence adduced during the day was not of any special interest.

JUDGMENT

The case for the prosecution having closed on the preceding night, the defence was opened this morning, the learned Judge taking his seat on the bench at nine o'clock precisely.

A great deal of curiosity as to the line of defence that would be adopted was prevalent.

The exterior of the Court was more than usually thronged by spectators from an early hour, and those parties who had the privilege of the entrée were punctual in taking their seats.

The Earl of Leicester, the Hon. E. K Iprel Coke, M.P., Lord Hastings, the Bishop of Norwich, and many other influential gentl men resident in the county, occupied places on the magisterial seats

In the interior of the c art, at its opening, carpenters were engaged in covering with wood-work the iron spikes which surrounded the prisoner's dock. This precaution was taken in consequence of the prisoner having been extremely violent during the night, and, as a further precaution, those who were sitting on each side of the dock were warned not to place any dangerous instruments within his reach, such as penknives, &c.

Whilst in his cell, instead of preparing his defence, the prisoner uttered the most violent denunciations against all those who had taken any part in the case against him. On entering the court, however, he appeared calm; but he had all the appearance of having passed a sleepless and restless night.

Soon after entering the dock, the prisoner applied for leave to ask a few more questions from the witness Howe, which the Judge reluctantly granted. The questions, however, had not much relevancy to the case. The prisoner then, at five minutes past nine, commenced his defence when he read from a very voluminous brief. He asserted his entire innocence of the fearful charge against him. He referred to his solicitor, relating to the affairs of his children, in respect of whom he was executor under a will. Under these circumstances, he called upon the Judge to assist him as far as he could consistently with the ends of Justice.

We give some extracts from the defence, which was of a most rambling confused character, the prisoner sometimes reading from a written paper, at others addressing the Court orally

In alluding to his own conduct of the case, he observed. I am quite aware of the inconvenience arising from admissions made during the cross-examination of the principal witness (Emily Sandford), and also of some of the others; but as she has done such grievous wrong to herself in departing from the truth, I have fully made up my mind to abide by the truth in time to come. I have made some inconvenient admissions, although I was directed by my solicitor not to admit anything but the truth against me. I hope and trust in God, gentlemen, that you will make use of such evidence against me as may be necessary to strain the ends of justice. And although you may find that I had knowledge of something serious happening at Stanfield Hall, I say at once that I am innocent of the horrid charge made against me. On the 18th of January last I wrote a letter for the information of my solicitor, giving him information as to how I had come to the knowledge that something serious had taken place at Sir Field Hall on the night of the murder. By the way, I had every reason to think, on account of the way that Jermy and myself had been given for the last eighteen months, that I should be suspected of the murder: and what I meant I took to avoid such suspicion. (Here the prisoner became confused, and paused for about a minute.)

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

THIBETAN SHEEP, AT THE GARDENS OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY, REGENT'S-PARK.

THIBETAN SHEEP

AT THE GARDENS OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY, REGENT'S PARK.

MORECROFT was the first traveller, we believe, who noticed the peculiar race of sheep inhabiting the Transhimalayan district of Ladak. Subsequent observations having confirmed his opinion as to the quality of their flesh and wool, the Hon. East India Company have imported a flock which originally consisted of fourteen sheep and ewes, but which was increased by the birth of six lambs during the passage. The whole flock has been sent, for a short time, to the Gardens of the Zoological Society, previous to their distribution among the landed proprietors of those possessions are best adapted by soil and climate for naturalizing this mountain variety in the British Islands. His Royal Highness Prince Albert has been pleased to receive four of these sheep, probably destined for Balmoral; and we have heard that the remainder are to be presented to certain noblemen distinguished by their interest in agriculture, but whose names it would at present be premature to disclose.

We are happy to avail ourselves of this opportunity afforded to our artist of presenting to our readers a characteristic sketch of these animals, to which the remoteness of their origin, and the great difficulty of transporting them, attach a general interest, independent of that which they must necessarily possess in the eyes of the breeder, who will perceive in them the possible germ of an improved stock in our own hill races. We are informed that the flock was obtained in the first instance, and transmitted to Calcutta by Captain Cunningham, the Hon. Company's Commissioner on the Thibet frontier.

Specimens have also been given to the Duke of Richmond, the Duke of Buccleuch, and Mr. Talbot, of Margham, who all take a great interest in the experiment.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

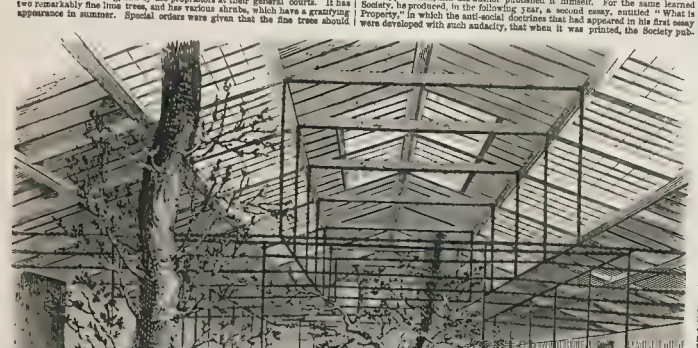
THE temporary office, represented in the Engraving, has just been constructed in a substantial manner, for the purpose of affording accommodation to the drawing-office, whilst the old office is undergoing such alterations and improvements as the continued increase of business requires. The present total of private deposits in the Bank of England amounts to £10,000,000 sterling, and all the multifarious transactions connected with such a vast mass of business, will take place for the present in the above temporary building, which is on a garden formerly the churchyard of St Christopher-le-Stocks, the site of which entire parish was, many years since, absorbed in some additional accommodation requisite for the Bank.

The garden is viewed from the beautiful apartment occupied by the Directors at their weekly meeting, and by the proprietors at their general courts. It has two remarkably fine lime trees, and has various shrubs, which have a gratifying appearance in summer. Special orders were given that the fine trees should not be injured; and so rigorously has this order been carried out, that the building has been erected without damage to a single branch, though the trunks of some of the branches in the temporary office.

The increased heat of the interior of the building has caused these branches to put forth their leaves earlier than usual; and thus the business of the office appears to be carried on in an exotic arboretum.

Curiously enough, this is the second time that the trees have thus been inclosed, as about fifteen years ago a temporary office was built in a similar situation, and the trees escaped without injury.

Under this building are deposited the remains of a gentleman of the name of Sheldrake, for years actuary at the Bank of England, to whom the Bank Directors allowed burial at the request of his relatives; as, from his extraordinary height, they feared that in any other situation some second John Hunter would secure the skeleton, to place beside the giant of O'Brien, in the Royal College of Surgeons.



TEMPORARY DRAWING-OFFICE AT THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

M. PROUDHON.

THE recent career of this political visionary has strangely exemplified the boa sent so often applicable to his countrymen: "On danse sur un volcan." M. Proudhon's paper, Le Peuple, "has been lately almost daily seized and confiscated for seditious and incendiary language, said the Paris Correspondent last week; and, in Thursday's latest news from Paris, we have the following paragraph:—"Le Peuple, M. Proudhon's journal, has been again seized, and is to be prosecuted for a libel on the President of the Republic." All this is, undoubtedly, the indignant outpouring of Proudhon's Socialistic wrath at his recent defeat in what his entire course shows to have been the main object of his existence.

Proudhon was born in 1809, of parents in humble circumstances, at Besançon, the birthplace, by the way, of Fourier; and where Proudhon began life as a compositor in a printing-office. This printing-office he afterwards occupied on his own account; but some years since, he quitted Besançon for an engagement in a mercantile house at Lyons. In his youth he was much attached to metaphysics, philosophy, and theology, studies, but little connected, become familiar with questions of banking, and finance, and general trade. In 1839, whilst still residing at Besançon, he produced his first work, an essay "On the Celebration of the Sabbath," the Academy of Besançon having offered a prize for the best memoir on that subject; but, as Proudhon's memoir contained opinions on social points to which the Academy could not subscribe, it did not gain their approbation, and the author published it himself. For the same learned Society, he produced, in the following year, a second essay, entitled "What is Property," in which the anti-social doctrines that had appeared in his first essay were developed with such audacity, that when it was printed, the Society publicly disclaimed all connexion with it. The book, however, became widely known; and, being read in some circles of Paris, it apprised people there of an eccentric paradox-dealing thing at Besançon, whilst the attention of the Minister of Justice having been called to it, the author narrowly escaped prosecution as an enemy of public order. The impression made by this treatise was renewed, from time to time, by subsequent works from the same pen, including a "Second Memoir on Property;" a pamphlet entitled "A Warning to Proprietors;" a volume "On the Creation of Order in Humanity," published in 1843; and a large work published in 1846, named "Economic Contradictions, or the Philosophy of Misery," besides tracts on "Credit and Currency," and on the "Competition between Canals and Railways." It was only a month or two before the Revolution of 1848 that Proudhon, then about 39 years of age, went to reside at Paris, presenting himself to persons who had already known him through his books, as a man of spare and somewhat peculiar figure, with severe brunette visage, and wearing spectacles.

"To give an idea of Proudhon to those who have not seen any of his writings is impossible," says the writer of a very able paper in the North British Review, No. 20. "To say that he is a Socialist, or even that he is the most daring and profound of Socialists, is to call up a notion very insufficient. Of an intellect that one would call enormous, plying a remorseless logic, flinging into literature a plainness of speech quite unusual, and paying deference to hard any man or sect that he names, one regards him at first as a great scornful misanthropist dealing blows out of sheer hate. Even then, however, one admits his gifts as a writer—the terrible energy of his style, the almost blasting eloquence that bursts up amid his algebraic reasonings, the resistless force with which he makes the French language go down to depths that it rarely seems to reach. At length, through some characteristic passage, one sees him better, and recognises in him a man whose mood is that of fierce and universal intolerance. Not as a smooth-tongued flatterer does he come before the people, with the French baldersdash in his mouth of gloire, honneur, &c., but as a task-master with a whip of scorpions. That crime is punishable and retribution just; that work is obligatory; that marriage is holy, and all unchastity an offence against nature; that a lie is a murder of the intelligence; that law is not the expression of will, either individual or general, but the dictamen of conscience applied by reason; that he who provokes to debauch by word or witness is infamous; and that he who denies God, is frantic—such are the sayings that Proudhon seems to vet in and recur to, careless whether or not, to use one of his own expressions, his readers may find the medicine too harsh, the beverage too bitter. Though he marches, therefore, in the same general direction as the Socialists, it is in a character quite his own, and with a disposition ever and anon to knock one of them down. Cassidière, for example, loving him, as he says, extremely, yet cannot but lament very much that waywardness which leads him, in his fits of despondency, 'to turn round on his own supporters, and to treat men as if they were nine-pins.' On many points, Proudhon is at one with the Economists.'

M. PROUDHON.

With all this show of moral strictness as a theorist, however, Proudhon's heresies of general doctrine are more stupendous, more subversive of the fabric of society, than the paradoxes of all other writers, altogether. The most startling of these heresies is M. Proudhon's explanation of the misery that is in the world, which he affects to trace to that peculiar modification of the sentiment of justice that constitutes the idea of Property. "The vice of Property, this notion that a man can, in any circumstances whatever, truly say of a thing, 'This is mine,' this belief that any individuals can possess a right to a single atom of the earth's substance or its produce beyond that varying fraction that would remain to him if the whole sum to be shared were perpetually divided afresh by the whole number of those that were to share it—this idea, this notion, this belief Proudhon undertakes to prove to be fallacious, unjust, null, disastrous, and damnable," in his "Qu'est-ce que la Propriété?" and the horrible formula in which he has expressed, and, as it were, summed up, for practical purposes, all his various notions, is, probably, familiar to the reader—"Property is Robbery: La Propriété c'est le Vol."

"Although," says the North British reviewer, "the main doctrine of Proudhon is directly antagonistic to the creed of the St. Simonians, denouncing that proportionality in material respects which they consecrate; although the same doctrine is also repugnant to the creed of the Fourierists, who, moreover, would repudiate Proudhon's notions respecting property as vehemently as he would scorn theirs respecting co-operation; and although, finally, even the Communists, with whom he agrees on the great point of equality of condition, find no favour with this eccentric apostle of anarchy, but are rather assailed by him whenever they cross his path; yet, the general nature of his speculations is such, that he takes rank fairly enough in that temporary coalition of the three sects known by the name of the Socialists. Nay, more, one can see that, for several years before his appearance in public life, his doctrines must have been insinuating themselves, through his books, into the general mass of Socialistic opinion, and affecting, more or less, the language of all the sects that have been named, but particularly of the Communists."

It was only, however, after his arrival in Paris that Proudhon became fully known. Immediately after the Revolution, his hand might be recognised in the Représentant du Peuple; and in the Club de la Révolution, seated beside Barbès, Leroux, and Thoré, might be seen the figure of the anarchist with spectacles: whilst such already was his prominence, that he was one of the Socialist or democratic leaders named at the election as candidate for the Department of the Seine, though he was not among the five members returned. At the election in June, he was, however, more fortunate, being one of the three leading Socialists named, and the unfortunate issue of the 23d of June; and once more unhappy Paris was plunged into Revolution. Under the presidency of Cavaignac, the Assembly [illegible] its sittings; but, apart from the proceedings instituted in relation to the insurrection, the only discussion of much interest was that on the proposition of Proudhon that the State should appropriate, partly by way of tax, and partly by way of credit, a third part of all the rental of France, when the act passed by a majority of 691 to 54, and a third part of all the interest due on capital. This attempt, a attempt of the anarchist to carry his theories into actual practice, was [illegible] negative. There, on the 31st of July, gave in [illegible] and on the 5th of August, after [illegible] a speech of [illegible] in which he [illegible] the Assembly [illegible] Socialists and the Socialists too, and other things, he was met with a vote declaring his opinions to be odious by 696 to 187. Their only representative [illegible] Proudhon has been caricatured in the illustrated newspapers, in the striking series of Jerome Paturot," and upon the Parisian stage, and thus has Socialism descended to become the established subject of public derision and of general hate.

The Rev W Stow, who has lately been preferred to the Incumbency of Dilton Marsh, Wilts, from his curacy in Sherborne, has just received numerous marks of the esteem in which he is held by all classes. His congregations at Sherborne and Castleton have presented him with a magnificent figure clock, white marble and mat gilt, standing, with its shade and pedestal, upwards of two feet in height. He has also been presented with a Sagster's Polyglot Bible, and his lady with a handsome silver flower vase, the gift of the factory girls.

OPENING OF THE SOUTH DEVON RAILWAY AT PLYMOUTH.

OPENING OF THE SOUTH DEVON RAILWAY.

On Monday, this new line of railway was opened with great éclat at Plymouth the Mayor and Corporation honouring the directors with their company in the ceremony. Our Artist has portrayed the gay scene—the Station gaily dressed with evergreens and numerous flags, and the entire scene presenting a festal spectacle of great beauty. In the distance are seen Mount Edgecumbe, and the Battery, and the hill of Stonehouse

ST. PETER'S NEW CHURCH, CHELTENHAM.

This Church, erected mainly by public subscription, and appropriated almost entirely to the free use of the poor, was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of the diocese, on Thursday morning, the 22nd inst.: after the services a collection was made to the amount of £88.

The edifice is from the design of Mr. S. W. Daukes: it is in the Norman-Romanesque style, and consists of a chancel, and north and south transepts, with a central circular tower and lantern. There is an organ-chamber on the north, and sacristy on the south, abutting on the chancel, which terminates with a semicircular groined apse, pierced with five narrow single-light windows, filled with stained glass, by Gibbs, of Camden Town. The organ-room is screened from the chancel and north transept by stone parclosts. There is a north-west porch to the nave, having a richly-sculptured entrance: and at the north-west angle of the nave is an ornamental and characteristic bell-turret. We have, for reasons we are about to explain, engraved the beautiful interior of this Church.

INTERIOR OF THE NEW CHURCH OF ST. PETER, AT CHELTENHAM.

The principal feature consists in the construction of the large central circular tower, open the entire height (about ninety feet), which, with its elegant triforium, produces internally an imposing effect. The tower appears to spring from the apices of the four large semicircular arches, but in reality is supported by the domed spandrils, the weight on the arches being counterbalanced by the mass of masonry forming the exterior angles as brosches from the square to the octagon, and from the octagon to the circle, the whole weight resting, of course, upon the four massive corner pillars. The roofs, which are open, are constructed with common rafters and principals, having semicircular blades resting on carved stone corbels. The Chancel, which is elevated on six steps, and paved with encaustic tiles, is fitted up with a massive oak communion-table, elevated on a foot pace of encaustic tiles, a handsome copy of the Glastonbury monastic chair being placed stall-wise on each side of it. The communion rails are massive, and at the same time afford an excellent imitation of Norman oak carving. The pulpit, of Painswick stone, is placed at the north-east angle of the tower, and is quadrilateral, having sunk arcading on three of its sides. The reading-desk, similar in form, is executed in oak, and placed on the south-east angle of the tower. The font (which is the gift of a private party) stands immediately on the left hand as the Church is entered by the north porch, and is, with the exception of the designs on the panels, a copy of that in Lincoln Cathedral.

The whole of the Church is fitted up with suitable open benches of stained deal and will accommodate 1000 persons.

Besides the font, which was a free gift to the Church, we must here mention that the porch was given by Mr. J. Simmonds, the churchwarden; and the communion table and chairs, by Messrs. Urch and Seabright. The communion plate, the pulpit-hangings, and other articles of furniture, as well as, we believe, some portions of the ornamental work of the Church itself, were also presented by different individuals

To the builder, Mr. Thomas Haines, great praise is due for the manner in which the work has been executed throughout his contract.

CRUCIFIX IN CARCLIFF TOR, DERBYSHIRE.

This interesting relic of bygone ages is but little known. It is sculptured in good relief, in the red-grit rock, of which a small cave is composed in the side of Carcliff Tor, near the lowly village of Rowsley, in Derbyshire. The Crucifix, which is about four feet in height, is sculptured in a recess on the right hand as you enter the cave; and by its side is a niche, of rude workmanship, intended most probably as a receptacle for a lamp. The features of the effigy are defaced, and the legs broken below the knees, but in other respects the figure is little damaged. It has been supposed that the cave in which this Crucifix is carved was the abode of an anchorite, or a place of pilgrimage.

CRUCIFIX IN CARCLIFF TOR, DERBYSHIRE.

Telegraphing in the United States.—The President's inaugural address was telegraphed from Philadelphia to St. Louis, commencing operations at fifty-five minutes past twelve o'clock on the day of its delivery. It was received at St Louis by one o'clock, and at Galena it arrived still earlier. The address was published on the afternoon of its delivery in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, St. John's, New Brunswick, Portland, St. Louis, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Louisville, Richmond, Albany, Galena, and the following morning in New Orleans. The news from England by the Canada mail steamer was published in Philadelphia a day and a quarter before that steamer reached Boston, and more than two days before her mails were received in Philadelphia. It was forwarded by express from Halifax to St. John's, New Brunswick, and telegraphed thence to Philadelphia, from which city it was sent south to New Orleans, and west to St. Louis, and even Galena, which places it reached the same day

The Earl of Carlisle has signified his intention of presiding over the tenth anniversary festival of King's College Hospital, on the 19th proximo, when it is anticipated an effort will be made to speed the intended enlargement of the institution and to liquidate a debt of nearly £400, incurred last year, in consequence of a deficiency in the income.

CONDITION OF THE ENGLISH, WHO HAVE HAD NO REVOLUTION.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS*)*

SIR,—Before I refer to Socialism and Communism in France, it will be desirable to remind your readers of the condition of the English, amongst whom these systems have not found much favour. Just prior to the first French Revolution a process the reverse of dividing and subdividing the soil commenced in England. Coupled with the application of steam to manufacturing purposes, and the rapid extension of the cotton manufacture by the inventions of Arkwright and Crompton, between the years 1780 and 1790, the consolidation of farms was begun. It was no chance change, but the necessary consequence of a great increase of employment and wealth in the manufacturing districts, which attracted both hands and capital from the land, and compelled economise and to consolidate about as much machinery, like the manufactures. To this that practicable, small farms were in almost every part of the kingdom combined into one or more large farms. I only state a fact, and enter not into the vexed question whether large or small farms be on the whole, and under the circumstances, the more advantageous for individuals and the State. It is, however, remarkable, with the increase of manufactures and the consolidation of farms, towards the close of the last century, England made rapid strides in wealth and prosperity; and at that period much sore was shaken by the tempest that rose in France and raged over the Continent, her people at one firm, and resisted all temptation to change by violence the Government and property. Had they not been prosperous, had they been as generally poor as the French, it may be doubted, though no proof can be offered for the opinion, whether England would not have been revolutionized like France. Our opulent middle classes, our prosperous artisans and well-paid labourers, who were then conspicuous for their loyalty and attachment to the church, were the safeguards of the altar and the throne.

In France property was changed, and the revolutionary state assumed a control over it. In England property was respected; and, though the State made large, very large, contributions, and still was neither seized nor subjected to the control of the State. The two countries carried on for many years a long war with each other, similarly exhausting and expensive for both, but more expensive for England than France. At its conclusion, however, though a considerable degradation of our labouring classes must be admitted as a consequence of the war and our monetary policy, the condition of the bulk of people was much superior to that of the French; and many years since, that superiority has become more marked. To deny the existence here of a great multitude of paupers and of men who work for small wages, and have nothing else—to declare the existence of great power and great distress, and to assert that necessary or a remedy for them, would be absurd; but, accompanying comparative poverty and distress, there is a large and ever-increasing middle class in the possession of all the physical enjoyments that opulence can bestow. Such a numerous class, still comparatively very small in France, constitutes one great distinction between society here and there. Property has been respected in England, and a numerous, powerful, wealthy, and intelligent middle class has multiplied very much, giving to the whole society a predominance in wealth, the equal of which exists nowhere in Europe. It has been created, and continues to exist, with the beggars of poor Italy, the beggars of Germany and Switzerland are opulent persons; and it may be said down as a general rule, of which the poor in our country are an illustration, that in proportion as the standard of living is high, the lowest class of all will be raised in comfort. Tried, the more, by a rigorous standard of opulence, as mainly established by the wealth of the middle classes, the poor of England are prop stionably better off than the poor of any other country of

Of the general physical well-being of our people, as contra-distinguished from the French, I need quote no other proof than the quantity of bread and meat consumed on an average by each person in the two countries, mentioned in my last communication. The Englishman consumes 20 ounces of bread, and 6 of meat, per day; the Frenchman 10 ounces of the former, and of the latter. It would be perfectly easy, by referring to tables of imports and exports, by comparing the carriages, railways, and ships of the two nations, to bring out in a prominent manner the general fact of the greater wealth of England than of France; but I am not compiling a statistical work, nor would your space allow of the comparison in detail. I must presume, therefore, that the superiority of England in this respect is too notorious to require, for your readers, detail. But I must call their attention to the fact, that, in conjunct on with the admitted superiority, a great respect for property has been combined among us, and that the number of persons has been accompanied by its more equal diffusion, and an approximation to a true system of fraternity, which our annals have rarely tried to bring about by violent political change.

Without referring back to the time when the Conqueror first seated the whole of England amongst his captains, or to the period immediately after the Reformation, when the temporal mendicants nourished by the alms of the Church were forced on notice by losing their support, and were swept off the face of the earth or the gallows, or to the later period of the Revolution, when their great numbers suggested the idea of re-inducting slavery as the only cure for pauperism, the limited number of beggars at that period in England was 1,620,000, or, in proportion to the population, two and a half times as large as the largest mass of the present day; without entering into those gulfs of misery and horror which spread forth without minding your readers, that, at no very remote per od, the habitations of the people might be described as consisting of two classes, vast castles and hovels, such as still remain at Aston Hall and Compton Wynyates, and hovels of very mean houses, such as may yet be seen in our ancient towns and cities. Within the memory of many old people, and within only recent historica records, open, in fact, to the observation of every man, large house accommodation for the bulk of the community has been amazingly improved, and hovels and mean houses have been changed for roomy and more comfortable dwellings, villas, and mansions. England is now almost one town, and London is the capital of all there branch away long rows and streets of elegant houses, numerous villas with their gardens and pleasure grounds, and splendid mansions with their parks, established by persons comparatively of small fortune; the number of more labourers in any cultivated, the number of more labourers in other arts has not much augmented, the number of mere manual labourers in other arts has not much augmented, the number of engineers, artists, professional men of all descriptions with manufacturers, and persons living at their ease on the profit of their capital or on the interest of money, supported by, and connected amongst them, the products of our machinery, has increased most astonishingly. A more glorious picture, in fact, of vast opulence, pretty equally diffused over a large space, can be seen from the top of Primrose Hill—I speak of the opulence diffused over England—than is to be seen in any part of the world.

The enjoyment of all the individuals of the middle classes is pretty equal. Their houses, their furniture, their dresses are all made pretty much alike; and, in substantial comfort, equally warmed apartments, equally good nourishment and clothing, all the middle classes, including the bulk of the artizans, are on a equal. Comfortable broad cloth, flannel, and cotton constitute in the main the dresses of all; the poor procure them, and the rich can have no better clothing. Their utensils, their knives, their drinking-vessels may differ in g ld and silver, and ornaments, but they are generally made of similar materials, and there is no important difference between the most common and the richest cut glass, between the most costly china and ordinary earthenware. Both are equally useful. All the people, in fact, pretty much in the same manner. The rich can command nothing superior to the steamboats and the railroad, and the poorest are carried by the same vehicles. The most opulent can have neither palaces or a little more spacious accommodation, but they arrive at their journey's end at the same moment with the rest. Our progress, under an respect for property, has been to raise all, as we have seen the bulk of them to be, to a level with or to the highest, the best, and the latest stage of improvement. It has placed all on that level, and, as yet, the more opulent have reached none higher and better. Our neighbours, under their notions of equality, have sought, in the main state, of dividing it by law, downwards or towards Socialism and Communism, the original and the lowest level; and their system tends to degrade all and keep all in that condition of equal poverty and destitution.

I think I have said enough to direct the attention of your readers to the phenomena which are the proper elements of a good judgment, and to enable them to convince themselves that property stands the comparison of the rest of the French Revolution has been very rapid towards an equality of condition, on a higher level, which our neighbours have sought, but have not attained, by their political constitution. That true fraternity has at the same time extended itself through the community, and is extending, is proved by our care for the poor, by the general attention paid to their health, by the efforts to prevent their education, and to check crime, treating criminals with kindness, and assuaging every misery that falls on the lowest of men. Equality is not complete, nor is brotherhood or real kindness and affection, but both have become much more remarkable features of English society, with its growth of opulence and respect for property than of French society, with its comparative decay and its forcible seizure and division of property.

Though my letter is already long, I must notice another remarkable feature common to our own country and the United States. There, even more than here, the state refrains from interfering with private wealth; there, even more than here, the right of property is respected both by individuals and the Government; and there, as well as here, private enterprise has adorned and improved the community beyond all that has been done for the people by the Governments of Europe. Our steam-boats plying on rivers and crossing the ocean—our railroads and railways—are as the off-spring of private enterprise; they do not exist in the United States, where, also, gigantic works, shaming the proudest achievements of the present States, have been executed by private enterprise. Thus the Croton aqueduct, for supplying New York with water, the whole world can boast nothing superior; thus the exploration of the continent, at the expense of Jacob Astor, hereby records no more public enterprise, but the seem likely now to be surpassed by the exertions of Mr. Aspinall, who, at his own cost, and by means of a fortune acquired in steam navigation, is to unite a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama, the Atlantic and the Pacific—consolidate, sir, by saying that, to nourish enterprise, to increase and diffuse wealth, to prize its equality and traffic by, and to raise all men to a higher and a higher state of civilization, we must scrupulously cherish in all a respect for private property, and equal support the governments which, upon appropriate and by taxation, so protect as of serving the people; and declaimers, who, betraying themselves wise in ignorance, would rouse the industrious and the idle to an equality of destitution and of suffering. I am, &c.,

T. H.*

MUSIC.

MDLLE. LIND'S CONCERT AT EXETER HALL.

The Concert given by Mdlle. Lind at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday night, was fully and fashionably attended. Her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured the performance with their presence. The principal novelty was the "National Anthem" being performed Mdlle. Lind singing the first verse simply and effectually. In the reserved seats, the Duke of Wellington, accompanied by the Marchioness of Douro and Miss Burdett Coutts, was recognised and much cheered. Benedict was the conductor, and had collected a very superb orchestra of about 180 performers, with Sainton as first violin, Lindley as first violon., and Howell as first double bass. There were also Romaniel, Lucas, Phillips, Hausmann, Blagrove, Hill, Hughes, Nadand, Tolbergue, Barret, G. Cooke, Bentham, Prospero, Cioffi, Harper, Williams, Jarrett, Platt, and other distinguished instrumentalists.

The choral strength was likewise selected from the professional bodies and the London Sacred Harmonic Society. Altogether there was an effective ensemble, and the execution of the Coronation Anthem of Handel, "Zadoc, the Priest," at once proved that there was quality as well as quantity. This piece was followed by Handel's bravura song, from "Samson," "Let the bright seraphim," cleverly sung by Mdlle. Lind, with the trumpet accompaniment superbly played by T. Harper, Junior. But it was reserved for Haydn's "Creation" to develop the great powers of Mdlle. Lind in the sacred school; and in the "Elijah" of Mendelssohn, she made a great impression on her auditory. She sustained the whole of the music allotted to the soprano in the "Creation;" and she did this with surpassing force, for at the conclusion she sang with much more effect than at the commencement. Her first solo was "The marvellous work." The air is admirably adapted for her exquisite upper notes, and she ascended to the C in alt, and sustained it melodiously in tune. Her next display was in the air "With verdure clad," which she has sung at the concerts of Mme. Dulcken and Balfe. It is not so conveniently noted for her register as the other portions of the oratorio; but she sang it with a delicate appreciation of the composer's intentions. In the second part she and the air "On mighty pens," and a magnificent reading she gave of this elegant inspiration. She introduced a novel effect, by the holding note on the first syllable of the word "con-ing;" nothing could be more captivating than the new reading, which Mdlle. Lind has himself would have been enchanted. Her vocalisation in this air illustrated the words, "From every bush and grove resound the nightingale's delightful notes." The remainder of the soprano parts in the concerted pieces was sung by Miss Dolby in a commanding part. By these with bliss," and the "Graceful consort," that Mdlle. Lind crowned her assembly, evening's exertions by an extraordinary achievement, especially in the sustained passages of a most trying and exhausting character, and tenderness that won immense plaudits from the auditory. Mdlle. Lind has sung in this oratorio at the Festival at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1846, of which the late Mendelssohn was the conductor. After hearing her on that occasion, she was excellent, and may serve as a mode, even to our native singers.

The proceeds of this concert, after deducting the expenses, it is calculated, will be upwards of £700 to the Royal Society of Musicians, the Chorus Fund, the Society of Female Musicians, and the Governess' Institution; for it was for the benefit of those admirable institutions that Mdlle. Lind has afforded her gratuitous services. We have no doubt she is highly gratifying to her feelings to find that the musical public has so liberally responded to her charitable appeal.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Mendelssohn's music to Racine's "Athalie," as performed with the ample resources of the Sacred Harmonic Society, at Exeter Hall, was heard to infinitely greater advantage than in the rooms of the Philharmonic society, at the Hanover Rooms, a locality too limited in size to admit of a colossal choral and extended orchestra. In the design of the composer was more palpable by the increased choral and instrumental forces to execute his work, and the effect of the whole was impressive and massive. The solo singers were Mrs. Noble, Miss A. and Miss M. Williams. The overture and march, the two "Hebrew feat that love thee," and the duo "Ever blessed child;" the choruses "O Saul," "Behold Zion, behold," "Depart, depart," "Lord, let us hear thy voice," produced a great effect. Mr. Vandenhoff recited Mr. Bartholomew's illustrative verses of Racine's tragedy with dignity and feeling. Prior to the "Athalie," the "Hymn of Praise" of Mendelssohn was repeated. The night's programme, conducted by Costa, was a great

On Wednesday night there was a remarkably fine performance of Handel's "Messiah," according to the annual custom of the society in the holy week. Sir Hall was received in every part, and the audience seemed to be attuned to with reverential feelings of delight and admiration. Miss Birch and Miss Dolby, Sims Reeves and Phillips, sang the soli, and were most successful in their exertions. Miss Birch at the head of the English singers—the sacred school. Miss Dolby's lovely voice is heard to the greatest advantage in the "Messiah;" and Reeves's breadth of style and physical power tell amazingly in the music of the Schallhoff, the eminent composer and pianist, will arrive in London for the season, on the 31st inst.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—On the Monday night the London Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Surman, performed Haydn's "Creation." Miss Birch singing the soprano part, and Miss Thornton, Messrs. C. Braham, Lefler, and Lawler, being the other singers, with Sloman, of the Surrey, who sang most effectively.—On the same evening, Messrs. G. and J. Case gave a concert at London Tavern.—The "Tancredi" overture was executed by the band conducted by Mr. Lavenu, the composer and conductor.—The third concert of the Amateur Musical Society was given on Wednesday.—On Thursday Mr. Lavenu, the composer and conductor, gave a concert at Hanover on the same principle as the London Wednesday Concerts, of which, in fact, it was a continuation.—Friday, the 6th, was the anniversary of the death of the composer Bellini, who expired at the age of 33.—Next Monday will be the first concert of the Choral Harmonists.—On Wednesday will be Mr. Lucas's third and last Musical Evening; and the 20th of the London Concerts, at Exeter Hall.—On Thursday next at Sir George Smart's, the Jubilee Singers, by which Mdlle Lind won sing. All the music in Mozart's "Flauto Magico" will be performed on this occasion, and Lablache will make his first appearance this season.

THE THEATRES.

Although the theatres have not been allowed to be open for dramatic performances this week, yet none or two have been hired by different caterers for medley entertainments, which have been tolerably well attended. It is certainly curious, that whilst an actor is prohibited from speaking the language of Shakspere, in "Othello," he may back in the same parts for two evenings and sing "Oh! dat Tucker," with a banjo; thus, whilst he may not speak the line "Take comfort, sare, and hope a better day," he may lyrically inform his hearers that "There's a good time coming." In fact, he may make as many jokes as he pleases, and indulge in fireworks, but he must not act. Hence concerts, reverses, and cheap public halls have formed the entertainments, and engaged the unemployed orchestras, of the week during the evening; this week is to say, the daytime being taken up with rehearsals and preparations for the Easter pieces, so that the performers themselves have comparatively no holiday.

Every year, as our old story-books relate, and the fairy story of the Countess D'Anois, or the popular legends of the History of England become "used up," the ingenuity of the burlesque writers is more and more taxed to find a subject, in fact we expect that a burlesque will at last be done over again, unless a return be made to the old style of Easter entertainments, which were usually dramas of a supernatural school, got up at a much expenditure. This is however, not very likely to occur. The public taste has gone ahead, and nothing but the high-pressure like, in effects or dialogue, will now pay. The taste for burlesque, which must be somewhat above mere broad farce, and below the legitimate footsteps of the day, has long been on the increase, to the injury of the ineffective and coarser jokes of a pantomime. As subjects fail, we shall not be surprised to find these entertainments taking the form of the French revues, in which there is no definite plot, but a rapid succession of jokes, allusions, and comments, all having the remarkable point of the year for their basis. The last of these extravaganzas, "Le Roi des Halles," is very successful.

Giving precedence to antiquity, we find that the Messrs. Brough have chosen "The Sphynx" for the title of the burlesque at the Haymarket. Mr. and Mrs. Keeley, Mr. James Bland, Miss Reynolds, and Miss P. Horton will play the principal characters; and if, as we learn, the first-named gentleman pe forms the old Egyptian monster, we can imagine that something especially droll is in store for us.

"The Seven Champions of Christendom," by Mr. Planché, will be the LYCEUM novelty; and the names of Mr. and Mrs. Keeley, Les Blanchis, and Oliver, as the Lord Mayor. Some curious optical effects will illustrate a dream, in the course of the piece; and the progress of the pageant, from the first meeting of the conspirators, to the execution on Tower-hill, will be set forth with remarkable historical accuracy.

The graphic story of "Nouveldin and the Lamp" has been dramatised by Mr. Edwards for the PRINCESS'S theatre. It is remarkable that this charming tale has never been before chosen by the burlesque writers. Miss Emma Stanley appears in the piece, and Miss Ainsworth is to fair Princess Rosebud. Mr. Harley, we are glad to find, has a King, or Sultan, or Caliph, or some Eastern Monarch, allotted to him. This gentleman is our most rising burlesque actor, in Mr. Bland's line. Mr. Oxberry is also in the cast.

The ADELPHI presents no novelty, but "The Enchanted Isle," revived for the nonce, with "The Hop-Pickers," and the new farce, makes a sufficiently attractive bill.

At the SURREY, the old pantomime of "Mother Goose" will be revived, under the direction of Mr. T. Mathews, who will play the Gloom. We think the last time this harlequinade was performed was some twenty years ago, when it was reproduced at Sadler's Wells Theatre, with the younger Grimaldi. We are curious to see how as this will now be taken when of our systems of pantomime have decreased, or really improved, since the old school.

No particular novelties are announced at the other theatres, with the exception of an equestrian entertainment at ASTLEY'S. The closing of DRURY-LANE and the reformation of the OLYMPIC have two important gaps in the list of the holiday amusements. We hear that the former house is about to be opened for one night only, to be given for the benefit of the distressed of the other

Some very beautiful additions in the way of works of art, have lately been at the COLOSSEUM; and the CYCLORAMA is daily attended by multitudes of strangers. Perhaps the illusion of combined pictorial and mechanical effect was never carried to great perfection than in this exquisite exhibition. From the rising of the sun, in the first view of Helen Castle, to the gloom and terror of the earthquake—the shifting sea, and the wild, masterly noises—the self-lighting of the bells, and the crashing of the falling buildings—everything is represented with the most marvellous truthfulness. There is not, indeed, all the exhibitions of London at present open, one so really interesting, so eminently deserving of public support, during the holidays.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

THE twenty-fifth annual Exhibition of the Society of British Artists, Suffolk street, has this advantage over preceding exhibitions—that there are fewer pictures than before in the five rooms constituting the collection. The exhibition of 1847 was composed of 717 works of art; the exhibition of 1848 of 800, and the present exhibition of 650. Yet the rooms are full, and every picture is as well seen as if the artist had sent his works to the free exhibition at Hyde Park Corner.

Thirty of the thirty-three members composing the incorporated Society of British Artists are contributors to the present exhibition; and the number of artists (without the pale of the Society) who have pictures in the Society's rooms is 292. Viewed as a whole, the present exhibition certainly is not an advance on former years; nor is it below the level of the usual run of the Society's Exhibitions. Individual artists are improving; but in point of general merit the exhibition is stationary.

The principal places in the great room of the Society are occupied as follows Over the fire-place, in the centre of the room, on your left as you enter, the hanging committee has placed one of Mr. Eyre's most excusable landscapes, "Wreck Ashore." On the centre of the opposite side is Mr. Herring's last and best picture, "Market Gardeners," well supported by Mr. Harleston on one side and by Mr. C. Baxter on the other. In the place of honour, on the side to your right as you enter, is Mr. J. W. Allen's noble landscape, "The Bourne-side, Pass, Cumberland;" and facing it is "The Judgment of Paris," by Mr. Sant. The committee are certainly not agreed in selecting the best pictures for the best places. The works we have named are certainly not to be surpassed by any other works of the same painters, or by any other artists contributing to the present Exhibition.

The President, Mr. Harlstone, has a fine feeling for his art, but, too frequently, a very indifferent eye for colour, and a careless execution. His picture of a Reversion in Expectancy" is a poor weak imitation of Murillo's humbler manner. His "Preparing for the Festa"—a young and lovely woman decking herself at a glass—is the work of a lady-artist so high an excellence as he has, as yet, been able to carry it. His portrait of "The Lady of Captain Lyndock Gardiner" is simple in its arrangement, with a nice air of the inborn lady about it, and is pleasingly coloured. His "Daughter of Lord and Lady Crofton" with a fawn, deserves a word of approbation.

The Vice-President, Mr. Pyne, has not, as heretofore, confined his skill chiefly on one large picture, but has distributed it over six comparatively small pictures. Nor has he gone to the Rhine, or the sunnier regions of Italy, for his subjects, as before; but has found them at home, and worked up his recollections of scenes he has sought for in the vales of Usk—"Old Paper-Mill, Berkshire," reminds one of Mr. Lee; his "Wreck Ashore," of Mr. Turner; while his "Oberwiesel, on the Rhine," is true to his own light, graceful, and unborrowed pencil.

The large view of "The Pass of Borrowdale, Cumberland," by Mr. J. W. Allen, is a noble landscape, carrying the eye into the depths and mid-ground of the picture. Mr. Allen's poetry an ample range of the best description of English scenery. Some of his smaller contributions (he has twelve works in all) are conceived and executed in a spirit and finish akin to his large performance.

"The Wayfarer," an oval picture, by Mr. C. Baxter, is exquisitely finished. This should have been a picture of half the size. It is not a mere half length.

Mr. Boddington has certainly made a stride in his art: his "Quiet Spot, North Wales," with its lovely ferns and its rich sunny effect on the tops of the hills, is one of the very best pictures in the whole Exhibition. No. 382, by the same artist—"A Shady Stream, North Wales" much inferior to the "Quiet Spot."

Mr. Vandenhoff is another artist who has made an advance. His "Scene in Portelet Bay, Jersey. Dead Calm after a Storm" exhibits all the fine mention of a landscape painter in so exciting a subject fit for his pencil, and all the decision of a practised and experienced artist.

Mr. Herring's "Market Gardeners" is the best grouped and the best painted picture we have seen from his hand. The texture of the animals bequal to Edwin Landseer.

We will not conscientiously praise Mr. Salter his Etty-like efforts in the present Exhibition. His nude figures, as a rule, but we cannot catch expression, and at times he has but a barren idea of female beauty.

Mr. Anthony is less absolutely yellow than hitherto; but his eccentricities are the same, and he wants the merit of being accustomed to them.

Among the successful contributors who are not members, the first place is due to Mr. Neale, for his picture from Pope—"My wife this day put on first her French gown, called a sack, which becomes her very well." The picture of Pepys and his wife are not very like, but the whole composition is good, while the details, in point of selection and execution, show an eye attentive to the incidents of Art. Another non-member, Mr. T. Rooke, has a picture from Burns with some nice painting about it; while a third non-member, Mr. D. Field, has caught Mr. Lance asleep, and stolen his composition, and sometimes of his skill as well.

The best work of art in the Water-Colour Room is "Faith"—young females at a cross—by Mr. W. Hopkins. It is not unlike Mr. Topham's well-known manner.

FASHIONS FOR APRIL

THE pious traditions of the past are engulfed in the revolutionary convulsions which shake France. Formerly, at this period, the dressmakers were opened only for concerts of sacred music, whilst this year balls and the most splendid receptions have taken the place of abstinence. In one point of view—the fashions we cannot regret it, since this deviation from the ordinary rule enables us to describe the new organizes of the season. The beautiful and soft tints of Lyons, with long designs, make magnificent toilettes for dinners and concerts. The dresses, with very full skirts, are trimmed with lace, and bows of ribbons, forming aprons. The most beautiful of these aprons is that, descending from the bodice to the top of the hem. The berthe and the sleeves are also ornamented with ribbon. Glacé silks, blue shot with amber, maize shot with blue, and pink shot with amber, are the most in vogue, and are the most recherché. Glacé dresses are more transparent than ever; the trimmings, whether of flowers, ribbons, or blond, are of the richest description. Those trimmed with silk, or ribbons, with gold or silver, have a very rich appearance; but, by reason of their dazzling elegance, they are scarcely worn except in the most aristocratic circles. Silk nets, jupons, and dresses of white gauze, with silk, or coloured trimmings, are displayed in the elegance of the ornaments, and choice of natural flowers, which are worn more than ever, although these trimmings have the disadvantage of soon fading. The most elegant Parisiennes cannot exclusively adopt them.

The cold weather during the last few weeks has constrained nearly all the ladies to resume the winter dress in the evening. A great variety of embroidered muslins, trimmed round the bottom with Valenciennes ornaments the interior of the dress. The sleeves are made pretty nearly the same—tight, and cut in the side, so as to show a muslin or net under-sleeve.

Flowers are in distinct favour, and the edges pinked are very much in vogue. Trimmings des chicor ies decoupées are also very pretty and much worn. Silk dresses thus trimmed are in beautiful novelty.

The bonnets have a wide shape, nearly closing under the chin; the thick bands of feathers placed very low on the side is very at cal Drawn-silk bonnets, round the face, with little ruches of light blond, placed round them, and on the poke, the interior of which is also trimmed with ruches, very becoming to the face. Tie-can bonnets, ornamented with small bunches of myrtle or rose-coloured silk, will be very much worn; for more ordinary bonnets, dark plaid ribbons are used. Velvet bonnets will be in a great measure discarded. Primroses, snow balls, violets, and the small roses are placed in drooping groups on the side of bonnets bebelais, when feathers are not worn

PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY'S FARM SCHOOL.—His Royal Highness Prince ALBERT has appointed Monday, the 9th of the present month, for the opening of the New Farm School for the reformation of criminal and vagrant children, and for the laying of the foundation-stone of the chapel and additional lodging required. His Royal Highness will be received by a numerous committee of noblemen and gentlemen, who have consented to act as stewards of a public breakfast, to take place, after the ceremony, in the grounds of the school, which is situated at Redgrave-hall, near Reigate, Surrey. Among the distinguished individuals who will receive the Prince, will be his Grace the Duke of Richmond, the Marquis of Westminster, the Earls of Carlisle, Chichester, and Harrowby, Lord Ashley, Earl Somers, the Bishops of Norwich and Winchester, the Lord Mayor, W. Gladstone, Esq., &c.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Prince Albert, attended by Colonel Seymour, Equerry in Waiting, went, on Monday, to Kew, and visited the Duke of Cambridge.

The Queen, attended by the Countess of Charlemont, Lady in Waiting, and Colonel Buckley, Equerry in Waiting, visited the Queen Dowager, on Monday, at Marlborough-house, and the Duchess of Gloucester, at Gloucester-house.

Mr. Henry George Ward, M.P., Secretary to the Admiralty, has been appointed by her Majesty Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands.

Lieutenant-Colonel Jebb, R.E., Surveyor of Prisons; Captain D. O'Brien, Inspector of Prisons; and Mr. Voules, Superintendent of the Hulks, are nominated to form the Board of Superintendence of the Government Prisons and the Hulks, but without entailing any additional expense, or requiring any further powers from the Legislature beyond those already in existence.

The following appointments in the Order of the Bath have just been announced: Sir George Grey, Bart., appointed by the Queen a Grand Cross of the Civil Order of the Bath; and Colonel Edward Macnaghten, one of the Deputy Inspectors General of the Constabulary in Ireland, appointed a Companion of the Civil Order.

Messrs. James Davidson, Charles T. Allison, and C. Humfries have been appointed Legislative Councillors in New Brunswick.

The monument now in progress in the studio of Mr. E. W. Wyon, to be erected by the subscription of his friends in the memory of the late T. S. Conke, Esq., composer, will shortly be completed, and is to be placed over his grave in Kensal-green Cemetery. The design, illustrative of his art, is classical, though unpretending.

Lord and Lady John Russell, with the rest of her Majesty's Ministers and their ladies, have accepted invitations from the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress to a grand banquet on Wednesday, the 25th instant, and cards have been issued to a distinguished circle of the nobility to meet them.

The Cape of Good Hope papers state that the Queen has been graciously pleased, at the solicitation of Sir Harry Smith, to confer on Smith's gallant suppression of the insurrection at Boom Plaats, an allowance from the civil list of £500 a year.

All post-office money orders issued during the month of January last, which have not been presented for payment on Saturday last, have become lapsed orders, and fresh orders must be issued, and a fresh commission charged, before they can be cashed.

The Edinburgh papers mention, last week, that two swallows were observed, on Monday afternoon, winging their way up the valley of the Leven. It is certainly a most unusual thing to see these welcome and beautiful little visitors in Scotland in the month of March.

The quantity of tin exported from Penzance, including Marazion, in the year 1848, was 1871 cwt. 2qrs.; from St. Ives, including Hayle 1740 cwt.—total, 3711 cwt. 2qrs. The total quantity exported from the year 1847 was 5594 cwt.

Letters can be forwarded by the North Star to the officers and crews of the ships on the Arctic expedition, if sent to the Admiralty during the present month.

An official account, just published, of all ordnance stores returned from that department to any contractor in the year 1848, for the purpose of being sent to Sicily, gives the following result:—Ten 32-pounders, of 8½ feet and 48 cwt.; four 32 pounders, of 6 feet, and 23½ cwt., returned to Messrs. Hood.

The following papers were issued from the Parliamentary Offices during the week: Return of alterations in the Spanish Tariff; Lords' amendments to the Out door Paupers Bill; Trade and Navigat on return; Exports of the; Accounts of Ordnance stores warranted for the purpose of being sent to Sicily.

On Tuesday evening, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress entertained at dinner the Master, Wardens, and Court of Assistants of the Fruiterers' Company and about forty gentlemen of the ward of Farringdon Without.

The annual election of a Governor and Deputy-Governor of the Bank of Ireland took place during the week, in Dublin, when J. M'Donnell and J. Barlow, Esqs., the Governor and Deputy-Governor of last year, were re-elected.

At Tavistock, on Saturday night, an old woman, sixty-eight years of age, called Mary Sprague, was sitting before a fire with a boy, eight years of age, whom, by some means, the boy set himself on fire. The old woman, in endeavouring to extinguish it, set herself on fire, and they were both enveloped in flame. Assistance was speedily rendered, but the little boy survived only a few hours, and the woman remains in a dangerous state.

George Howe, condemned at the York assizes for the murder of his child, at Yarm, was executed on Saturday last, at noon. He seemed to be penitent, but re denied firmly his commission of the deed of which he had been found guilty.

A fish merchant, named Prince, on Sunday, mortally stabbed a man at Ditchingham, on Norfolk, from motives of revenge.

M. Brofferio, the most violent agitator of the war party at Turin, who fled so shamefully when the loss of the battle of Novara was announced in that capital, has arrived at Lyons.

Sir Charles Napier, General-in-Chief of the Indian army, has arrived at Marseilles. He was to have embarked on the 31st for Leghorn, where a steam frigate was waiting to convey him to Malta and Alexandria.

The deaths from the London week-returns of last week were rather smaller than that of the previous week, being 497,028 lb

A Royal charter of incorporation has been granted to the College of Preceptors.

In the United States, the intense frosts of the winter and early spring have this year extended so far south, that nearly all the orange and lemon-trees in Florida and Louisiana have been killed by it. Even at Havana, in the tropics, pony le have complained of cold weather

The river Hudson opened for navigation on the 19th ult. From the south and west it tracts of the Union there is the usual list of casualties attending upon the breaking up of the frost. The Mississippi has made a breach in the Most-ripp banks above New Orleans, which had done much damage to cotton and sugar plantations, and appeared at one time to threaten that city with an inundation.

In navigating the Mississippi, the steamer A. Fulton, with a valuable cargo, sank lately, near St. Louis, and three of her passengers were drowned. And the steamer Woodsman exploded on the 3rd ult., at Boston Saras: in persons are supposed to have been drowned; twenty-five were dreadfully scalded.

The steamboat Conway, with 5000 bales of cotton on board, was burned a few days prior to the last accounts from New York, near Natchez Several lives were lost.

A dreadful murder has been perpetrated at New Orleans by Mr. J Bradley, who killed a Miss Daby with a bowie knife, and then attempted to destroy himself.

The schooner Iris, which left Malta on the 11th ult. for Cork or Falmouth, very deeply laden with grain from Galatz, foundered at sea on the 14th ult. The crew and passengers took to their boats, and hoisted signals of distress, which being seen by the barque Sandnest and the brig James, they bore down and picked them up, thus saving every life, which otherwise would probably have perished

A bill to alter and amend the law relating to proceedings by attachments in Courts of Record in the city of Dublin and other boroughs in Ireland has been prepared by Mr. Reynolds and Mr. R. M. Fox. The main provisions of the bill are as follows: No person is to proceed by way of attachment against goods. No person is to attach the goods of a defendant to the amount of a special bail. That in all cases where the cause of action shall amount to £10 the plaintiff shall proceed by way of process.

The hunting season of the counties of Kents, Dorset, and Berks has now, in most parts, been brought to a close; the increase, we have been informed, has, generally speaking, been a large one, exceeding the common average of any of the last three seasons

A bill to make better provisions for the certifying the tables of contributions and payments of friendly societies, and for ascertaining from time to time the solvency of such societies, has been proposed by Mr. Sotheron and Mr. Adderley

Father Mathew will sail from Liverpool for the United States in the course of next month.

The subscription opened by the Committee of the Rue de Poitiers, Paris, for the Anti-Socialist Propaganda, produced a sum of 108,000 francs during the first three days. The influence of subscribers was, perhaps, still greater on the fourth day

The President of the French Republic paid a visit to the Marchioness of Londonderry, at the Hotel Meurice, Paris.

The Trent, West India mail packet, lately lost seven men from yellow fever on her trip to the Spanish Main Proudhon, the head of the Socialists at Paris, is said to have appealed against the judgment convicting him, schay with a view of enabling him to escape to England, whither, it is asserted, he means to proceed.

A female slave of Dr. James, residing near Wentworth, North Carolina, has murdered her master's daughter, and a favourite slave boy, because Dr. James had threatened to sell her for some misdemeanour.

From the Havana we have intelligence to the end of February last. The quarantine regulations had been removed, and vessels from Europe, with clean bills of health, were admitted without detention.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert have just become the patrons of the United Benefit Society, recently established at Windsor, for the benefit of the labouring classes of the town and its vicinity. Her Majesty and the Prince have caused to be transmitted, in aid of its funds, the liberal donation of £100. and have also become annual subscribers of £5

Prince Albert, it is now decided, will proceed to Brocklesby, by way of Rugby and Lincoln, on the 17th instant, to pay the first shoot of the Grimsby Dukes on the 19th, and return to London by way of Boston. His Royal Highness will be presented with an address from the corporation of Boston, at Brocklesby, on the 17th.

At Thrapston assi, at the Gloucester Assizes, Ann Magaret Thomas was found guilty before Mr. Baron Platt, of having, on the 3d of March last, murdered her mistress, Miss Jefferis, by beating her on the head with a stone. Miss Lovekin, passed sentence of death on the prisoner, who fell down in a fainting fit, and was carried out of court.

CHESS.

 Our answers to Correspondents, and several Games, are unavoidably deferred.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 271.

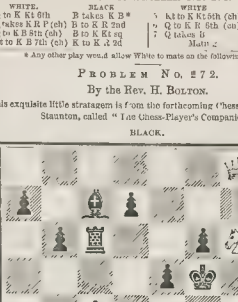
WHITE.	BLACK	WHITE	BLACK.
1. Q to K Kt 6th	B takes K B *	5. Kt to K 8th (ch)	K to K sq
2. Queens K R P (ch)	B to K R 2nd	6. Q to K R 8th (ch)	B to K R 2d
3. Q to K R 8th (ch)	B to K sq	7. Q takes B
4. Kt to K B 7th (ch)	K to K 3d	Mate.

* Any other play would allow White to mate on the following move.

PROBLEM NO. 272.

By the Rev. H. BOLTON.

This exquisite little stratagem is from the forthcoming Chess Treatise by Mr. Staunton, called "The Chess-Player's Companion."



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The current week has been barren of sporting news; our present task, therefore, is simply to inform our readers how they may amuse themselves during the Easter holidays. The turfites will commence their regular campaign on Monday at Newmarket, where they may be compiled up to Friday. The principal events to come off will be, the Newmarket Handicap, on Tuesday (on which occasion there will be a special train to and fro); the Column Stakes, on Wednesday, for which Tadmor and the Sister to Arkwright are expected to show; the 100 Sovs. Stakes, on Thursday, wherein the crack Nunnykirk is engaged; and the Port, on Friday. The meeting promises to be avery good The Steeple-chase meetings on Monday will include York, Leominster, and Kenilworth; on Tuesday, Lon Green (Lewisham), Riddermarket, and Ditcdale; besides several in Ireland. Wrestling, foot-racing, and other seasonable sports, as usual, and in all parts of the metropolis as well as in the province.

TATTERSALL'S.

THURSDAY.—Another great movement in the Derby betting occurred on Tuesday. Vanguard, a moderate animal accordingly to public running, was backed for an enormous amount, and, in the very considerable, has sprung to 100 to 60; he is said to have done wonders in private. Which also becomes a pet; nevertheless the two favourites are very strong in the market, and Honeycomb is backed for "lumps" of money. Cotheran and Do the-Boys rose in favour for the Metropolitan Handicap, and are likely to be still better favourites. The general betting was flat.

NEWMARKET HANDICAP
10 to 8 against Long Garon	8 to 1 against Phalerion (t)
9 to 1 ——— Queen's Gift	10 to 1 against Cockermouth
SUMMER HANDICAP (T.Y.O.)
6 to 4 against Loup Garou	7 to 1 against Hackamore
METROPOLITAN HANDICAP
6 to 1 against Lazar	10 to 1 against Fernhill
7 to 1 ——— Cameron (t)	12 to 1 ——— Lacca
8 to 1 ——— Do-the-boys (t)	15 to 1 ——— Bridge
CRY.
20 to 1 against Uncle C (t)	20 to 1 against Loup Garou (t)
No takers backed
DERBY.
5 to 1 against Flying Dutchman	9 to 1 against Annyrack
5 to 1 ——— Tadmor	12 to 1 ——— Mount Sorrel
	100 to 6 ——— Vanguard

25 to 1 against Vatican
33 to 1 ——— Lacca

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Animated by the cheering news from India, Consols, on Monday, opened buoyantly at 93¾ to ¾, afterwards touching 94¼. The public, however, proving sellers, thus bringing money stock into the market, added to realising on the part of the speculators, produced a decline to ¼. On Tuesday a slight further reaction occurred, Consols opened at 94, but afterwards closing at 94. Another decline occurred on Wednesday, prices receding to ¼; to ¾; which was followed on Thursday by Consols opening at 93½ to ¾, and closing at 93½. The temporary advance on Monday, succeeded by the gradual decline since, is tolerable evidence that the rise was only speculative; the public, by selling, proving the want of confidence in the pecuniary state of European affairs This was remarked in the financial article of last week, attention being at the same time directed to the state of affairs in Schleswig-Holstein. India Bonds, being the floating security paying the largest interest, continue to be in demand, and have advanced also 18 Sterling Exchequer Bills, although paying only three-halfpence per £100 per diem, have also improved, being sought as an investment of a temporary character by those who do not believe in the present price of Consols. The closing prices of the week for the Scotch Bonds, 5 per cents, 1 xchequer Bills, 44 to 46; India Bonds, 44 to 48 Bank Stock closed

The only topic of any interest in the Foreign Market during the week has been the following announcement by the agents of the Mexican Government—

"The Undersigned give notice that they are ready to advance to the holders of bonds of the consolidated debt of Mexico of 1846 the amount of three-fourth parts of the half yearly dividend of £2 10s. per cent., which became due on the said bonds on the 1st of January, 1847, on the deposit of the warrants or coupons for the said dividend, changing the bonds there of interest to that date, and at the rate of four per cent. per annum, until the time at which the said half yearly dividend may be paid.—JOHN SCHNEIDER &c. &c."

This announcement improved the price of the Stock only ¼ per cent, it being uncertain how long the £37,000 required to compete the payment of the first half year's over-due dividend may be coming to hand. On Wednesday, the quotation receded to 31, and it was since declined to 30¾. Spanish Stock has been teavy, at a decline of about ¼ per cent Dutch Stock is also dull, with a downward tendency In the other securities there have been no fluctuations of importance, as the following list will show: Mexican, 30¼ to ¾; Chilian, 91; Equador, 3¾; Portuguese, 38¾; Spanish Five per Cents, 16¾; and Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 56¾.

Shares close with rather more firmness, the traffic of the dividend-paying lines being generally on the increase. The, added to the lessening of expenses, by diminishing the unnecessary number of trains, will tend to improve the value of the several Stocks. The closing quotations of the week are for Aberdeen, 17¾; Ditto, Preference, —; Boston, Stamford, and Birmingham, —; Caledonian, 84¾ 4¾; Ditto, New, £10, Preference, 11¾; Chester and Holyhead, Preference, 13; Eastern Counties, 9¾; Ditto, Extension, No. 1, 2pm; East Lancashire, New, 13¾; Great Northern, 11; Ditto, Ditto, Haves's, A, Deferred, 4¾; Ditto, Extension, 1¾; Great North of England, 234; Great Western, 94; Ditto, Quarters, 95; Ditto, New, 1¾; Lancaster and Carlisle, Thirds, 103; Leeds & Bradford, 100; London and Blackwall, 5¾; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 86¾; Ditto, New, £5, Forfeited, 6¾; London and North-Western, 134¾; Ditto, New, Quarters, 11¾; Ditto, Fifths, 5¾; London and South-Western, 30¼; Do. New, 1848, 5¾; Midland, 76¾; Do. £50, 16¾; Do., Birmingham and Derby, —¾; North Staffordshire, 13¾ 14; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 20¾; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, Class B, 4¾; South Staffordshire, 3¾; South Eastern, Ditto Registered, No. 4, 7; Ditto Scrip, No. 4, 7¾; York, Newcastle and Berwick, 24¾; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, —; Ditto, G N I Purchase, —¾; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 4¾; Ditto, Preference, —¾; Ditto, Scrip, —¾; Newport, Abergavenny, and Hereford, —; Northern and Eastern, —; Royston and Hitchin, —; Shrewsbury and Wrexham, 1¾.

Mr. John Anderson, of Tarbolton, Ayrshire, Robert Gardner, of Birkenhead, Cheshire, and Robert Kent, was examined, pursuant to the Act 5 and 6 Victoria, cap. 116, before the Chief Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, on Wednesday. He was only 7 years of age, and appeared to meet his fate without regret.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE.—The arrivals of fine fall wheat for our market this week have been very moderate. Selected samples of both red and white have moved off readily at full prices in other kinds very little doing. Nearly 20 000 quarters of foreign wheat have come in. This large supply has produced a slow inquiry for all kinds, yet the quotations have ruled about as formerly. Malting barley has sold at full currencies; grinding and distilling sorts as last advised. In oats little or nothing doing at Monday's rates. The late business in flour of mills has produced a heavy inquiry for that grade at to per quarter less money. Bread, peas, beans, and Indian corn, as last week. [illegible] Wheat, Essex and Kent, white, 42s to 45s; ditto, red, 40s to 43s; Lincoln and Yorkshire, red, 40s to 43s; ditto, white, 42s to 45s; Northumberland and Scotch, white, 42s to 45s; ditto, red, 40s to 43s; rye, 28s to 30s; barley, grinding, 22s to 24s; ditto, distilling, 25s to 26s; malting, 28s to 30s; Lincolnshire feed oats, 18s to 19s; potato ditto, 22s to 24s; Yorkshire and Cork, blackbirt, and Scotch ditto, 20s to 21s; Dutch and Friesland ditto, 18s to 19s; tick beans, new, 27s to 30s; ditto, old, —s to —s; grey peas, 28s to 31s; maple, 34s to 37s; white, 34s to 36s; flour, 38s to 40s per quarter. Town-made flour, 37s to 40s; Suffolk, 35s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 34s to 36s, per 280 lbs.—Foreign. Dantzig red wheat, —s to —s; white —s to —s; Marianopoli, —s to —s; Polish, —s to —s; Pomeranian, —s to —s; Rostock, —s to —s; Danish and Holstein, —s to —s; Petersburgh, —s to —s; Archangel, —s to —s; Taganrog, —s to —s; Egyptian, —s to —s; Salonica, —s to —s; Smyrna, —s to —s; Trieste, —s to —s; Leghorn, —s to —s; Genoa, —s to —s; Nice, —s to —s; Marseilles, —s to —s; Barcelona, —s to —s; Gibraltar, —s to —s; Odessa, —s to —s; Riga, —s to —s; Memel, —s to —s; Stettin, —s to —s; Pillau, —s to —s; Elsinore, —s to —s; Gothenburg, —s to —s; Carlscrona, —s to —s; Hernosand, —s to —s; Gefle, —s to —s; Stockholm, —s to —s; Uddevalla, —s to —s; Bremen, —s to —s; Hamburgh, —s to —s; Lubeck, —s to —s; Emden, —s to —s; Amsterdam, —s to —s; Rotterdam, —s to —s; Antwerp, —s to —s; Ghent, —s to —s; Ostend, —s to —s; Brussels, —s to —s; Dunkirk, —s to —s; Calais, —s to —s; Boulogne, —s to —s; Honfleur, —s to —s; Rouen, —s to —s; Caen, —s to —s; Cherbourg, —s to —s; Morlaix, —s to —s; Nantes, —s to —s; Bordeaux, —s to —s; Bayonne, —s to —s; Lisbon, —s to —s; Oporto, —s to —s; Figueira, —s to —s; Vianna, —s to —s; Portimao, —s to —s; Faro, —s to —s; Cadiz, —s to —s; Seville, —s to —s; Malaga, —s to —s; Alicante, —s to —s; Carthagena, —s to —s; Valencia, —s to —s; Barcelona, —s to —s; Tarragona, —s to —s; Tortosa, —s to —s; Tarragona, —s to —s; Tortosa, —s to —s; Tarragona, —s to —s; Tortosa

NEW BOOKS, &c.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW NOVELS.
Now ready, at all the Libraries,

LADY ALICE.
3 vols post 8vo.

II.

ROCKINGHAM; or, The Younger Brother.
3 vols.
"An admirable romance of real life."—Morning Post.
Also, just ready,

THE LOTTERY OF MARRIAGE. By Mrs. TROLLOPE. 2 vols.

A POPULAR EDITION of Mr. DISRAELI'S CONINGSBY, or, The New Generation. 1 vol. With Portrait of the Author. 6s bound.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street

BY ORDER OF THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS OF THE ADMIRALTY.
This day, crown 8vo., price 9s. 6d. cl., or by post, 3s.,

THE ROYAL NAVY LIST; containing all the recent Promotions and Appointments, with complete Lists of the Ships and Battles for which Naval Medals have been awarded to the Officers, Seamen, and Marines (and Soldiers who were served as Marines), surviving at the date of the Gazette notice of June 1, 1847.
J. ED. MURRAY, Albemarle-street (Publisher to the Admiralty).

Second edition, in one thick volume, price 15s.,

WHAT to OBSERVE; or, the Traveller's Remembrancer. By COLONEL JACKSON. "This volume may be declared a library in itself."—Literary Gazette. "For directing an individual how to qualify himself to be an intelligent traveller, both at home and abroad, we know of no book equal to Colonel Jackson's 'What to Observe.'"—Westminster Review
JAMES MADDEN, 8, Leadenhall-street.

THE MOST ELEGANT DRAWINGROOM OR PRESENTATION BOOK
Just published,

GEMS of WOOD-ENGRAVING (including ONE HUNDRED of the most BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVINGS ever produced. Elegantly Bound, price One Guinea
Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand; and by booksellers.

NEW MUSIC.—Just published, Miss Glascock's Polka,

"THE SEA-SERPENT" POLKA. By ELLEN S. GLASCOCK. Beautifully Illustrated, price 3s.
Published at WEBB'S, 33, Soho-square, where may be had by the above-named Composer, a 2nd Edition of the "Queen of Greece Waltzes."

PIANISTA Office, 67 Paternoster-row.

MASANIELLO.—Second Edition.—The PIANISTA, No 102, contains this Grand Opera, for 2s. This is the only edition that gives the music as played at the Royal Italian Theatre. Free by post 30 Stamps

MDLLE. JENNY LAND'S TWO BALLADS, "The Lonely Rose," composed by M. W. Balfe, and "Take me Love," composed by J. Benedict written by E. Fitzball. These are the two ballads sung by Mdlle. Jenny Lind at the Philharmonic, and by the Misses Williams at Mrs. Macready's Concert. Price 2s. each,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 366.—Vol. XIV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1849. [Sixpence.

RAILWAY MORALITY.

It would be a curious psychological study, to investigate the sources of the too common sentiment conveyed in those popular sayings, that when a man is down it is permissible to kick him, and that he who has no friends may be his hard. Though all men of refinement and good feeling repudiate such principles of action, there is a constant tendency in the crowd of coarser natures to indulge in them. It is the every-day philosophy of the vulgar—a kind of atonement which they endeavour to make to society for faults and errors committed by themselves. "This man," say they, "has been found out in an offence which we have committed; therefore, let him be made an example of—not for the offence, but for his clumsiness, mal-address, or ill-luck in being discovered." "Commit theft if you will," said the Spartan lawgiver; "but woe be to you if you are discovered." "Cheat the public, if you please," says that portion of society which gambled, in 1845, in Railway Scrip; "but woe betide you if you be discovered in any piece of roguery, which shall bring our doings and our vocation into contempt or discredit." The fox that loses his tail is persecuted by all the foxes; and the rook that is maimed is hooted out of the rookery. Mr. Hudson, the once great potentate of railways, is at present in a condition somewhat akin to, and almost as forlorn as these. The crowd of speculators who attempted to enrich themselves by gambling in shares are loud in the expression of their horror at a particular transaction of his life which happens at this moment to have been made rather painfully prominent. In fact, Mr. Hudson may be said to be "down," and there is, in consequence, a disposition in more than one section of the public not only to keep him down, but to kick him into the bargain. Did the pure alone raise the cry, it would be but a feeble one in comparison with that which we now hear against him. It is, however, too loud and general to proceed from those only whose hands are clean. The stags as well as the hounds are making a noise; and rogues as well as honest men are preaching a high morality.

But whatever may be the animus or the purity of those who condemn him, we must say, that, as regards the particular transaction which has led to the dethronement and disgrace of this so-called "King of the Railways," his present position is not unmerited. According to our notions of commercial morality, the committee appointed to investigate and report upon the matter have come to a right conclusion. Mr. Hudson, as Chairman and Trustee of a railway company, deputed by that company to purchase shares in the Great North of England Railway for the benefit of the company, sold to his constituents a large number of shares at a considerable advance upon the market price. He used the money of the company to make the purchase, and put upwards of £8000 into his own pocket, as his premium upon the transaction. The committee, after a patient investigation, have decided that the sum charged by Mr. Hudson for these shares ought to be reduced to the sum he actually paid for them, and that the difference is to be repaid with interest. The whole investigation pourtrays a looseness of management on the part of all the directors which may well surprise the public, and lays bare a system which, we hope, will receive its death-blow by the exposure. Mr. Hudson himself seems very far from having attained a conviction that he has done wrong. He knows that at the period when this bargain was effected all the world were endeavouring to pocket premiums; that he was held up to public adulation as one of the greatest men of the age for his skill in railway affairs; that his name was a tower of strength; that moral and religious men pocketed premiums without any compunctious qualms; that people of all grades of society flattered and fawned upon him for his interest to procure them allocations, not that they might hold them as bond fide proprietors of railway stock, but that they might dispose of them at premiums. He knows, too, that a monster subscription was got up to do him honour, not as a wise, a good, or a great man, but as a man who had grown rich in a hurry, as the Triton among the minnows of railway speculation, and as one who had it in his power to help others to do as he himself had done—to grow fat upon the madness of the public. He cannot bring himself to believe that his position, as Chairman and Trustee for a Railway Company, prohibited him, either in law or equity, from making a profit out of his brother shareholders. It is, doubtless, difficult for a man who was once almost worshipped for growing rich, to imagine why the idolators should turn away from his shrine; inasmuch as, whatever change may have come over the disciples, none came over the master. He has acted upon the same principle all along; and did no more in 1845-46-47-48, than he would be again prepared to do in 1849, should occasion present itself. "Raise shares to a premium, and pocket the premium if you can." This is the public and the private principle of the "stag" genus. It owns no other, and never seeks to enquire by what arts the stock is raised to that comfortable state expressed by the words "above par." Provided the end be attained, the true stag cares nothing for the means. Although Mr. Hudson undoubtedly was a bonâ fide railway proprietor, he was tainted with the universal corruption of staggery. Even now his thoughts and sympathies are with the stags. "It is not my wish," says he, in his published defence, "to impugn the reasoning or question the conclusion of the Committee; but I must be allowed to state that this opinion of the position which I occupied in connexion with the company is one now presented to my mind for the first time. * * * I never thought myself restrained from entering into personal engagements either with the Company or with others, by reason of the position I stood in towards the Company, any more than if I had been an ordinary proprietor. * * * It is impossible for me to adopt the conclusion at which the committee have arrived, for, as far as my own view of my position is concerned, that conclusion is incorrect. * * I care nothing for pecuniary considerations in this matter. I must pursue the course which my own feelings and judgment point out to be correct under the circumstances in which I find myself placed—circumstances to me of a most painful nature; but in which I have become involved without the slightest idea on my part that I was doing anything deserving of reprehension." This confession seems to us to be the most melancholy part of the whole business; for, not only did Mr. Hudson make this profit out of a company whose interests he ought to have considered identical with his own, but when he sold to the Company as principal with principal, he charged it with full brokerage, though he paid none either on his own account or that of the Company; and although, as a contemporary remarks, he made sundry other "pickings" for his own private and exclusive benefit. But the truth is that Mr. Hudson is neither better nor worse than the morality of 1845. He rose to wealth and importance at an immoral period; he was the creature of an immoral system; he was wafted into fortune upon the wave of a popular mania; he was elevated into the Dictatorship of Railway Speculation in an unwholesome ferment of popular capidity, pervading all ranks and conditions of men; and, whatever be the hue of the error he may have committed, it is rather too much to expect of him that he should be purer than his time or his associates. The commercial code of 1845 was, as far as Railways were concerned, framed upon anything but moral principles. The lust of gain blinded the eyes of men who, before that period, could see clearly enough the difference between right and wrong, between trading and gambling, and between legitimate and illegitimate speculation. Men who would have scorned to do a dishonest act towards any other real tangible living man, did not scruple to do acts against that great abstraction, the public, which no morality could justify. In the height of the Railway Mania it was generally admitted, that, ultimately, some parties must be losers; that the over-sanguine or the cautious who came in last, would have to pay the piper for all the gains made by those who came in early; but, as nobody knew who these individuals were, nobody cared about them or scrupled to make an immoral profit out of them. Mr. Hudson, from the superior magnitude of his transactions, from his superior talent in railway business, and perhaps, also, from his superior luck, became the representative of that system. He was to wealth what the Queen is to honour—its fountain; and all who desired to be wealthy without labour, and by a mere turn of the dice of Fortune, looked to him to aid them in their projects.

> Old men and young, the famish'd and the full,
> The rich and poor, widow, and wife, and maid,
> Master and servant—all, with one intent,
> Rushed on the paper scrip; their eager eyes
> Flashing a fierce unconquerable greed—
> Their hot palms itching—all their being fill'd
> With one desire.

Mr. Hudson would have been more than human if, with the fame, the wealth, and the adulation he received, he could have seen

"HUDSON'S HOUSE," AT YORK.

"HUDSON'S HOUSE," COLLEGE-STREET, YORK.

In this house, we believe, George Hudson was born, in the year 1800. Here he served his apprenticeship to a linendraper; and subsequently, for many years, carried on the business with such success as to amass some amount of wealth. His fortune was next increased by a bequest from a distant relative, which sum he invested in North Midland Railway shares; and we recollect, that at a meeting of this company, held at Leeds, about ten years since, a Mr. Hudson addressed the meeting, advocating many alterations in the system of managing the railway; and concluding a remarkable speech by offering to guarantee double the dividend the shareholders were then receiving, if the alterations he proposed were agreed to. His speech had its effect, for Mr. Hudson was then appointed chairman of a committee of shareholders, which led to the dismissal of the Directors, and the appointment of Mr. Hudson as Chairman of the North Midland Company; and, what is very remarkable, the shares gradually rose from £70 discount to £120 premium. Mr. Hudson next amalgamated the North Midland with other lines; and, unfortunately, by his system of amalgamation with neighbouring companies, he considerably extended the accommodation to the public, besides effecting a considerable saving in the working of the line. It is, therefore, only generous to remember, at this moment, what Mr. Hudson has achieved in improving the management of railways. After Mr. Hudson quitted his business in College-street, he accumulated great wealth; and he is stated to have cleared, in a single day, £100,000! He has also been elected M.P. for Sunderland; has been twice Lord Mayor of York; has been appointed Deputy-Lieutenant of Durham; and to the Magistracy of the East and North Ridings of York, and of Durham. With all this wealth and fame, very likely he says, with hundreds of others, "I wish I had minded my shop, and not speculated in railway shares."

Mr. Hudson married Elizabeth, daughter of James Nicholson, Esq., by whom he has a numerous family.

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

anything wrong in the popular madness that wafted all these things to his feet. We may be sure, too, that, had that railway madness lasted to this period, and had premiums, instead of discounts, been [illegible] put in his private purse by the [illegible] of the [illegible]. Although we blame Mr. Hudson for his greediness then, and for his obtuseness now, let us not hurl all our animadversions against him alone. We should lose a useful lesson if we did so. Had there been no insane lust for unearned [illegible] had [illegible] to induce him for his advocacy of [illegible] lations in the matter for premiums, he would never have become a member of the Legislature—one of the greatest celebrities of the day—the entertainer of what Sir Robert Peel calls the "proud aristocracy of the railway system." [illegible]

The public made him, and the public is to blame and also [illegible]. Frankenstein's Monster commits crime, is the Monster to be held guilty and Frankenstein guiltless? Most assuredly not. We hope, therefore, that the rise and fall of Mr. Hudson, if fallen he be, will be remembered not simply in reference to his fate or character, but to the far greater interest of the commercial morality of this great commercial country. English honour is proverbial. Were the [illegible] complete, and true history of the railway mania of 1845 written, it would show that the most honourable and the most moral of nations may go wrong in the furious scramble for wealth. It would show, also, that these scrambles never come to good. The [illegible] wealth of nations is [illegible] wealth, but [illegible] other wealth is most certain, and [illegible] The truth has been exemplified in [illegible] the more [illegible] summary. That it should take more [illegible] is not surprising. Let Mr. Hudson be condemned, therefore, when he has done wrong; but let the public not shut its eyes against its own folly, without which Mr. Hudson would have been a very insignificant, but doubtless a most respectable person.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The visit of our countrymen to Paris constitutes the main feature of the [illegible] The party received, on Saturday [illegible] day, [illegible] to offer an entertainment, or any demonstration [illegible] Lloyd, the chairman of the committee, in acknowledging this manifestation of good feeling, explained to the officers, that, however sensible the English party now visiting Paris together were of the politeness of the National Guards, he did not wish that they should have any misconception of the nature of their trip, or the composition of the party, which, he said, were clothed with no official pretensions whatever to a public reception. The officers particularly wished to know if any members of the Hon. Artillery Company were of the party, as they hoped to have an opportunity of showing their grateful [illegible] review which was got up by that body in honour of their visit to London last year.

Each of the visitors was furnished with a card, which, on presenting at the National Assembly, or any of the public buildings, and even at the Théatres, secured them an immediate entrance. A considerable number went to the [illegible] Monday night, and, as soon as they were [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

GRAND ENTERTAINMENT AT THE MANSION-HOUSE.

On Monday, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress gave a splendid entertain- [illegible] Egyptian Hall, which was fitted up for the occasion with great [illegible]

[illegible] Queen Dowager, and the rest of the Royal Family, which toasts were all drunk with enthusiasm.

The toasts of "The Army and Navy" were responded to by General Brother- [illegible] and the Marquis of Thomond.

The toasts of "The Foreign Ministers" [illegible]

[illegible] Ministers, expressed his regret that Lord John Russell was not able to honour the Mansion House with his presence upon the present occasion. The noble Lord was, no doubt, anxious to avail himself of the recreation which the temporary recess of Parliament afforded him after the severe duties which he had hadalready to perform. (Cheers.) In proposing the toast, his Lordship alluded to the new appointment to which Mr. Ward has been nominated.

Mr. Ward returned thanks, and facetiously called the attention of the company to the fact that his appointment had not yet been confirmed by her Majesty [illegible]

[illegible]

Several other toasts were drunk, and the company separated, highly delighted with their magnificent City entertainment.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—On Tuesday a ballot was taken at the Bank for the election of Governor and Deputy-Governor for the ensuing year. The [illegible]

[illegible]

EAST INDIA HOUSE.—[illegible] was held at the East India House, when the thanks of the Court were voted unanimously to Lieutenant-General Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., chairman, and Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, K.C.B., deputy-chairman, for their great application and attention to the affairs of the East India Company during the past year.

THE ASYLUM AND ITS INSTITUTION.—A meeting of the directors and committees of this valuable charity was held on Wednesday, at the Board-Room, 35, Red-Lion-Square, Bloomsbury; J. T. Fortescue, Esq., occupying the chair. Some routine business having been disposed of, it was announced that Her Majesty the Queen had been pleased to make a grant of £200 in aid of the funds of the Institution.

[illegible]

[illegible]

INDIA INSTITUTE.—The annual meeting of the governors and [illegible] was held [illegible]

[illegible]

LODGE AND WASHING-HOUSE FOR THE LABORIOUS CLASSES.—On Wednesday afternoon, at a meeting of the subscribers and members of this institution, held in the board-room, George-street, Euston-square, to receive an account of the baths, &c., for the labouring classes in the north-west districts of the metropolis, the number for the week ending [illegible]

[illegible] washers, dryers, ironers, and manglers, 106,814; these latter may fairly represent 427,257 individuals; and the number of articles of clothing washed would previous year [illegible] £241. [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[

LONGCHAMPS, 1849.

(From a Correspondent.)

PARIS, April 12, 1849.

WHAT a scene of animation of luxury, and of elegance the whole of Paris presents, when all ranks are absorbed in one desire—that of seeing and being seen!

The magnificent walks of the Champs Elysées, yesterday strewed with wounded and encumbered with cannon, are to-day thronged with the people of fashion from the Faubourg St. Germain and the Banque, happy to be restored to ease and luxury. Among the elegant equipages, with which Paris abounds, is to be seen, in the first rank, the aristocratic carriage of the Princess Mathilde Demidoff, whose delightful, gracious, and smiling face, glows with exquisite freshness. A little farther off, the crowd presses around the carriage of the President, distinguished by the beauty of the horses and elegance of the livery; but the general interest is engrossed by the fatigued and wan look of the chosen of his country, who consecrates his nights to meditation, to enable him to restore employment, order, and security; but the anxiety depicted on his thoughtful brow, indicate to the passers-by that, if Louis Bonaparte pays a tribute to luxury in encouraging fashion, his sympathies are well exercised in the haunts of misery and hunger.

Many votaries of fashion displayed on this occasion great luxury and taste, as much amongst the pedestrians as carriage people; the toilettes are very elegant, although furs and winter clothes are not cast off.

Longchamps has been as brilliant and picturesque as in former years: singularly contrasting with the faubourgs, which present the most sombre appearance, and continue perfectly noiseless. In the Champs Elysées is a mixture of carriages and hackney-coaches, and diplomatic equipages, and tradesmen's carts; never-tidiness, we must own that the armorial bearings were rare: but to sum up, in seeing the present promenades of Paris, we can hardly believe that scarcely a year had elapsed since a pretty and witty actress of one of the minor theatres, Mdlle. A. O——, used these celebrated words; "Decidedly we must try to please the wounded of February; it is only they who can give us cachemires."

Never was France more interesting to visit; never will the press have more convulsed all classes of the community; and never will the press have greater circulation, than in the short time which must elapse before the elections.

Before the election of the 10th of December we were in an abyss; now we are on a peak. We have secret and ostensible committees, meetings of the delegates of the clubs, and banquets: in a word, all are really in commotion, while a profound lull appears to reign everywhere. The decree of the Court of Bourges has still more depressed the Democrats than the restoration of the guillotine for the reputed political assassins of General de Bréa.—Barbès, Albert, Louis Blanc, Cassidière, condemned to an indefinite exile; Blanqui, to ten imprisonment; Raspail, equally smitten; Carbès, absent; Proudh fight; Haber, dishonoured. Notwithstanding, these proscriptions w the land for the advantage of the democratic elections. These beaten from the field, in consequence of legal incapacity, make w others of more moderate ambition. The number of aspirants restrained. The election of Red candidates will be much i would have been if the Barbès, the Louis Blanc the Raspails, the Saccambres, the Cassedières, had c to the number of dissentients which always sh

On the other hand, the Conservative p —such as Lyons, St. Stephen, The Orleanists—the Legitimists, es Presidentists or Imperialists—t al union, under the are about to divid

ON THE WEATHER IN THE MONTH OF MARCH, 1849.

The 17th of March, with the exception of the 9th, 10th, and 11th days, the temperature of the air was above that of the season; the average daily excess was 4½°. From the 18th, the temperature was below the average; the average daily defect was 8°. During the early part of the month the weather was very mild, and it was cold and rather severe towards the end of the month. The mean temperature of the month was 42½°, exceeding the average value for this month from the observations of the previous seventy years by 1½°. The average temperature of the four months ending March 31st, 1849, is higher than any other similar period for very many years. The mean reading of the barometer at the height of forty feet was 30·03 in., being above the average reading. The mean temperature of evaporation was 39°, and that of the dew point was 36½°. The difference between the temperature of the air and dew point was 6° This difference is greater than usual, and denotes dryness of the atmosphere The highest reading of the thermometer was 65°, and the lowest reading was 27·9°. The average daily range was 17½°. Rain fell on eight days only, and was somewhat less in amount than half an inch. Snow fell in small quantities on the 8th, 9th, 24th, and 25th. Several flashes of lightning were seen on the 22d. The month has been dry, and favourable for farming and agricultural operations.

JAMES GLAISHER.

Blackheath, April 12.

[For more particulars relative to the unusual warmth of the past winter, see the forthcoming Quarterly Report of the Registrar-General.]

The Pew Case at Cheltenham.—On Saturday last, the magistrates gave their decision in this case, which was a charge of assault preferred at the Cheltenham Police Court on the previous Thursday, against Charles Lloyd Harford, Esq., one of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the county of Gloucester, by Captain Henry Perrin Steele, a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the county of Dorset, and an occasional visitor to Cheltenham, who complained that on the previous Sunday, during the celebration of divine service in the parish church, the defendant forcibly ejected him from a pew, and by so doing squeezed his hand with the door. The defence was, that defendant's pew being a "faculty pew," he had a right to eject any intruder. After a full hearing of the evidence on both sides, the Bench deferred judgment until Saturday last, when the parties having re-assembled at the police court, Mr. G. E. Williams read the written decision of the magistrates, which was as follows:—"It is determined that the jurisdiction of the Bench in this matter is so questionable, that they have come to the determination of dismissing the case."

CROSSING THE BAR OF GALLINAS RIVER.

SLAVERY ON THE COAST OF AFRICA.

We have been favoured by a Correspondent and an officer on the coast of Africa with the accompanying Illustrations and details of a most successful attempt just made by our gallant countrymen towards the extirpation of Slave Traffic, in that infamous hornet's nest of slave-dealers, the Gallinas, lying in lat. 7° S., and long 11° E.; the coast being very low, and well adapted for the nefarious trade carried on there.

Our Correspondent states, that, on the evening of February 2, the small squadron which had assembled at Cape Mount proceeded for Gallinas River; the SLAVE BARRACOON.

Penelope towing Waterwitch, Dart, and Bonetta, and Favorite in tow of Pluto. They found the Scylark there at anchor.

At daylight, on the morning of the 3d, the boats from these vessels made for the bar of the river, in two lines; the bar being as quiet as usual, but still a great surf, and the stream very strong.

The Commodore led in person, in one of the Penelope's cutters; five gun-boats followed, one with a rocket brigade, and about fifteen others, under command of their respective captains. We should here mention that the occasion of the visit was, in part, enquiry as to the fate of a thirty-ton boat stolen from the Governor of Sierra Leone. As the attack was not at all expected, there was no resistance made, and the three principal factories were taken possession of, the owners having scarcely time to drive away slaves, but not to remove property.

The boats of the Penelope continued their route about twelve miles farther up the Solyman branch of the river, and there destroyed two large barracoons and a slave vessel building, meeting with little opposition on the east side, where their stockade was good, and four small iron guns were lying dismounted. A random fire was kept up from the bush, while the boats dropped down. One of their own people, a prisoner, in the gig with Captain Jones, was shot through the arm, and one man in another boat was slightly struck with a sling.

At sunset, another establishment was burned at the lower turn of the Solyman, after which the division joined the Commodore at the principal factory for the night.

Next morning, two more large establishments were destroyed without any resistance. The majority of the boats then left the river, but the Commodore remained to hold a conference with some of the neighbouring chiefs. Towards evening he entirely destroyed the place, and returned on board.

Fourteen slaves only were brought away some of them deplorably emaciated creatures, near the point of death.

The amount of loss sustained by the slave dealers must have been very great, as they were quite unprepared for such a visit, and their stores were full of goods. Some hundred barrels of fine powder caused a tremendous explosion. The general idea is that between £100,000 and £300,000 worth of property was be p (.. 1.)

THE ENGRAVINGS.

The first Illustration shows the boats crossing the bar of Gallinas. The number of boats was about 21: the largest were the Penelope's paddle-box boats, with guns, and 75 men each; three pinnaces, with guns; and Pluto's paddle box boat, with rocket brigade. There was a tumbling sea on the bar, the current running out as fast as boats could pull: the crossing is very dangerous, and seldom made by ships' boats.

In the second large view is depicted the burning of the slave establishments on Solyman River. The foliage on the banks is thick and luxurant to the water's edge. The explosion was terrific: a constant fire of musketry was kept up from the bush, answered by volleys from the four boats, with grape from brass guns.

SECTION OF EMBARKATION CANOE.

The premises destroyed were the residence and factory of Don José Lonla, a Spanish dealer. The quarters were comfortable, and, from the external appearance of the factory, no suspicion was likely to be raised of the owner being a slave-factor: yet such he is, on an extensive scale.

In one of the smaller Illustrations is shown a Barracoon at the back of one of the factories in the creek: here flogging is an hourly occupation, and the sufferers frequently expire under the lash. The slaves are chained by the neck and legs; and, except when marched from one barracoon to another, on chance of shipment, they know no change for a year or two.

We have likewise engraved one of the embarkation boats used by the slave-factors: they are launched from the beach, with 200 slaves in their bottoms, besides 20 or 30 rowers to each boat, which is about 40 feet long, 12 broad, and seven or eight feet deep.

BURNING OF SLAVE ESTABLISHMENTS, ON SOLYMAN RIVER.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 15. Low Sunday. Moon's Last Quarter, 7h. 8m. P.M.
MONDAY, " Passover of the Kybar Pass by General Pollock, 1842.
TUESDAY, 17. Dr. Franklin died, 1790
WEDNESDAY, 18.—Oxford and Cambridge Easter Term begins
THURSDAY, 19. St. Alphage. Lord Byron died, 1824, aged 36.
FRIDAY, 20. Emma Barton, the Holy Maid of Kent, executed at Tyburn, 1534.
SATURDAY, 21. Sun rises 4h. 8om., sets 7h. 4m.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 21, 1849

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
6 35	7 0	7 20	8 0	8 4	9 30	10 0	10 30	11 0	11 30	11 58	0 30	12 30	1 0

EXETER-HALL.—WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—On WEDNESDAY NEXT, APRIL 18th, will be held the TWO-HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIRST of the ANCIENT CONCERTS, for the BENEFIT of Mr SIMS REEVES, and on WEDNESDAY EVENING, APRIL 25th, the TWO of the season.—Vocal Performers: Miss Rainforth, Miss Lascelles, Misses [illegible] Poole, Miss Rainer, and Miss Nelson; Mr. Weiss, Mr. Whitworth, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Bodda, and Mr. Sims [illegible]. Tickets, to admit a Reserved Seat, 7s.; Stalls, 7s., may be had of Mr SIMS REEVES, 188 Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury; Mr STAMMERS, 4, Exeter-Hall, and of the Musicsellers.

MR. SIMS REEVES'S BENEFIT CONCERT will be held on WEDNESDAY EVENING NEXT, APRIL 18th, at EXETER HALL; and will be the Twenty-[illegible] of Mr. SIMS REEVES'S SIX CONCERTS (and Last Night but Two of the season). Vocal Performers: Miss Rainforth, Miss Lascelles, Miss Nelson, and Mr. Sims Reeves. Violin, Mr. [illegible]. Pianoforte, Mr. [illegible] Williams, and Mr. Blagrove. Conductor, Mr. [illegible]. Tickets to admit to a Reserved Seat, 7s.; Stalls, 10s. 6d. each. Applications for Boxes and Stalls to be addressed to Mr. STAMMERS, 4, Exeter-Hall.

EXETER HALL. Mr. WILLY has the honour to announce to his friends that his BENEFIT [illegible] place on WEDNESDAY EVENING, APRIL 18th, on the occasion of the LONDON WELSH CHORAL CONCERT, when [illegible] their particulars will be duly announced. Reserved Seats, 5s.; Stalls, 7s.; Orchestra Stalls, 10s. 6d. Tickets to be had of Mr. WILLY, 72, Pitcairn-terrace, Kensington.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed the THIRD CONCERT will take place at the CANOVA ROOMS, OPERA-ARE ROOMS, on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 16th. Programme: Sinfonia, A Minor (Mozart). Mr. Sloss derives, Allegro Andantino, Scena, Miss Nelson, and Aria, Mr. [illegible]. Overture, "Jessonda" (Spohr). Sinfonia Pastorale (Beethoven), Aria, Mr. Sims Reeves. Aria Mangerin, violin, Herr Ernst. Duo, Miss Lascelles and Mr. Sims Reeves. Quartett, "Calypso" (Winter). Conclusion, M. Costa. Stalls (stalls), 21 0s. Reserved seats, 10s. 6d. each. Tickets [illegible] double tickets, admitting [illegible] 42 0s.; to be obtained of Messrs. Addison, 210, Regent-street.

MUSICAL UNION.—WILLIS'S ROOMS.—TUESDAY, APRIL 17, Half-past Three o'clock.—Quartett, No. 78 (Haydn), B flat, Haydn. Trio Op. 2, E flat, Beethoven. Quartett, No. 6, Beethoven.—M. Alard, First Violin, and Professor at the Conservatoire in Paris (as First Appearance in London); Messrs. Hill, Chapman, Hobbs, and Goodban. Herr Halle will play Andantino, Halle; Caprice, each to be [illegible]. Herr Ernst. Vocalist: Mr. [illegible]. Conductor, Mr. [illegible]. Subscription for the Series, [illegible]. Single admission, 10s. 6d. Subscribers will not be admitted without their Tickets. Programmes, [illegible] may be procured at the doors of Lords [illegible] 63, Wellbeck-street.

FRENCH PLAYS and OPERA COMIQUE, ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—Mr MITCHELL begs to announce that the performance of French Plays at this [illegible] will be resumed on Monday next, April 16. He also begs to announce that [illegible] Mr. Balfe, and other members of the Company have kindly offered their services for a more effective representation of several popular pieces. Four of these Operas, Paris, who will make her first appearance on the following Monday, when the Opera of "Fra Diavolo" will be performed. Mr Mitchell has the honour to announce the engagement of the eminent artist, M Regal, who will give a limited number of his unrivalled, performances previously to the close of the Season. Subscriptions for the Stalls, [illegible] for regular Stalls, Mondays and Fridays, Twelve Guineas; Stalls for the Night, [illegible] Guineas. Boxes may be secured at the Box-office of the Theatre, and at Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

ROBERT HOUDIN'S FAREWELL ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—ROBERT-HOUDIN begs to announce that his FAREWELL SOIREE will take place at the above Theatre on Thursday next, the remaining Representations [illegible] Monday. The Evening will commence on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY EVENINGS. Doors open each Evening at [illegible]. Private Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets may be secured at the Box-office of the Theatre, which is open daily from Eleven till Five o'Clock.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. [illegible].—Finish of a new grand Easter Spectacle unprecedentedly splendid. On MONDAY, APRIL 16th, the performances will commence, at Seven o'Clock, with Pitchford's [illegible] Troop, in a new grand Equestrian Spectacle, in Act 2nd, entitled THE WHITE CAVALIER, or, the Days of Queen Elizabeth, in which Mr. [illegible] will introduce his unrivalled Act of the Roman Chariot Race, and [illegible] Mr. [illegible] will appear in a grand Equestrian Act, in which he

IRELAND.

TRIAL OF MR. DUFFY.

On Tuesday, at the sitting of the Dublin Commission Court the fourth trial of Mr. Charles Gavan Duffy was commenced. The Attorney and Solicitor Generals, Messrs. Baldwin, Q.C., Plunkett, Q.C., Perrin, and Fennsfather, appeared for the Crown; and Messrs Butt, Q.C., Napier, M.P., and Q.C. and O'Hagan, for the prisoner. The panel, which contained the names of 180 persons, having been called over three times, and 87 gentlemen having answered to their names, the swearing-in of a jury was proceeded with, and completed the Court up to half-past two o'clock.

The following is a list of the jury selected, after 55 challenges on behalf of the prisoner, 19 peremptory and 36 for causes. There were 24 jurors ordered to stand by, by the Crown:—Thomas Saunders, Daniel Hutton, Charles Egan, James Fallon (alderman), [illegible]arrell, James Haig, Hull Ingram, Richard Kelly, William Myers, Edward Rounds, Thomas James Wright, and Alexander Morrisson.

Four of the jurors, namely, Alderman Fallon, and Messrs. Farrell, Egan, and Kelly, are Roman Catholics.

The Attorney-General stated the case on behalf of the Crown, repeating his former explanations of the provisions of the Treason-Felony Act, passed on the 22nd of April last year, and under which the prisoner was now indicted, and his comments on the various articles in Mr. Duffy's newspaper, the Nation, which formed the subject of the present trial. The observations were merely a repetition of his speech at the former trial, it is quite sufficient to say that the Crown rely, in support of their charge against the prisoner, on certain articles published in the Nation newspaper, and on a letter addressed by Mr. Duffy to Mr. S. O'Brien, and which letter was found in the portmanteau of Mr O'Brien soon after his arrest. While commenting upon the articles published in the Nation, the Attorney-General was interrupted by

The prisoner, who remarked that his initials were not affixed by him to any of the articles

Attorney-General: I was not prepared for such a defence as that.

Mr. Napier: It is not fair to call a remark made by the prisoner a defence.

The Attorney-General then resumed his address to the jury, which occupied altogether about two hours

Mr. Charles Vernon, registrar of newspapers at the Stamp-office, gave evidence as to the declaration of proprietorship deposited by the prisoner in his office. He also produced several copies of the Nation, lodged in the Stamp-office, and proved that the prisoner's name, written on them, was in his own writing. He likewise proved that the letter addressed to W. S. O'Brien, and the manuscript of the articles set forth in the indictment, were in prisoner's handwriting.

To Mr. Butt: Witness admitted, that, on the occasion of a former prosecution against prisoner, he was mistaken with respect to his handwriting. It is often the habit of newspaper proprietors, in Dublin, not to sign the papers lodged themselves. Did not remember that he sent the paper of the 29th of June, or 8th of July, to Newgate, to Mr. Duffy, for his signature. The prisoner's papers were sent pretty regularly to me; but I will not say they were sent as Early after the prisoner's committal to Newgate as before.

Some further evidence was given with respect to prisoner's handwriting, and their Lordships signified their intention of adjourning.

A remark of the Jury: The jury are anxious to be allowed to go to their places of business for the night.—Attorney-General: That would be contrary to law. Your verdict then (whatever may be) could not be acted upon.

Another Juror: Is there not a precedent in O'Connell's case?—Attorney-General: That was merely a case of misdemeanour.

The Court: It would be utterly impossible to comply with the application.

A Juror: Will we get accommodation, my Lord?—Judge Jackson: Yes, gentlemen; even night-cots, if you please. (A laugh.)

The prisoner was removed; and the jury, under the care of bailiffs, retired to a hotel for the night.

On Wednesday the examination of witnesses on behalf of the Crown was resumed at the sitting of the Court Evidence was given, in the first instance, in corroboration of the testimony of the witnesses examined on the previous day as to the prisoner's handwriting of the letters found in Mr. Smith O'Brien's portmanteau, when arrested in Thurles in September last, and also the MS. of an article contained in the unpublished copy of the Nation.

Several persons were then produced, and, amongst others, General Macdonald; Mr. Redington, the under-secretary of the Lord-Lieutenant; Mr. Gorry Connellan, private secretary to his Excellency, &c., to trace the portmanteau to Mr. S. O'Brien's possession, after which the letter and papers were given in evidence, and the Attorney-General offered proofs relating to the transactions which took place at Ballingarry when the police barracks were attacked, as connecting those proceedings with the prisoner.

The case will occupy the Court throughout the week.

RETURN OF MR. TWISLETON.—Mr. Twisleton has returned to Dublin, and has resumed the discharge of the duties as Poor Law Commissioner, perhaps with a view to settle the affairs of his office.

The Dublin Corporation have resolved, after a long discussion, to petition Parliament in favour of the Rate in Aid.

SIR ROBERT PEEL.—Mr. W. Keogh, one of the members for Cork city, in a letter to Major Ludlow Beamish, dated London, April 5, says: "Government will do nothing for Irish railways, except give a loan of £300,000 to the Marquis Clanricarde. I think Ireland should call out for Sir Robert Peel. He is the only man for the crisis."

EVICTIONS.—The clearance system is going on in various parts of the country, and the landlords are pleased to the upper or journals, but it is not suggested what they should do. The more stringent the Poor-law, the more severely will the clearance system continue. The subjoined instance is given in the Tipperary Vindicator:—"Hundreds and thousands of human beings, the entire village of Toomevara, will be rendered houseless on the 18th of the present month, on which day, in pursuance of the decree of the Incumbered Estates Court on them, their tenements, it is said, will be levelled to the ground. Mr. Massy Dawson, landlord. In the name of God, where are those wretched people to go to?"

THE POOR-LAWS.—No more paupers are to be admitted into the Cork workhouse, as it appears that the Poor-law Commissioners are desirous that out-door relief should be administered throughout the union, a measure the guardians are exceedingly adverse. Dr. Phelan, the medical inspector under the Board of Health, required that the numbers of paupers in a room should be governed by its measurement of 300 feet to the air, as the overcrowding of the workhouse causes infection, and sweeps away numbers. Indeed, hundreds crawl about society spreading diseases of various kinds, rather than face the horrors of the workhouse.

BANQUET IN HONOUR OF RICHARD COBDEN, ESQ., M.P.

THE festive compliment to the Hon. Member for the West Riding of Yorkshire, by his constituents, for which preparations on a grand scale have been making for some time past, was celebrated on Wednesday last

The entertainment took place at the Corn-Exchange, Wakefield, where accommodation was provided for between 600 and 700 persons. The side walls were ornamented with branches of laurel; at the upper end was the Royal cypher surmounted by the imperial crown; and at the lower end of the apartment was suspended a flag with the inscription "Cobden and the Independent Electors of Wakefield;" in front of the Chairman were emblazoned the mottoes "Protection is Robbery," "The Tyrant's Weapon," and "Free Trade," &c.

At the upper table, which stood on a dais, and stretched the entire length of the room, sat the Chairman, Mr. George Goodman, having on his right Mr Cobden, M.P.; Mr. Bright, M.P.; Mr. William Brown, M.P.; Mr. George Wilson, late Chairman of the Anti-Corn-Law League; Mr. Harrison, Mayor of Wakefield; Mr. Alderman Carbutt, of Leeds; Mr. James Hanserton; Mr. H. Dawson; and on his left Mr. Marshall, M.P.; Colonel Thompson, M.P.; Mr Salt, Mayor of Bradford; Mr Henry, M.P.; Mr. Kershaw, M.P.; Mr. John Baldwin, Mayor of Halifax, &c.

The following acted as vice-chairmen: Messrs. W. H Foster, of Bradford; F. Crossley, of Halifax; F. Schwann, of Huddersfield; [illegible]. G. Macles, of Leeds. Edward Baines, of Leeds; R. Solly, of Sheffield; James Micklethwaite, of Wakefield.

The list of stewards comprised the names of the leading Free Traders of the district. The body of the hall was occupied with fifteen tables, each accommodating forty persons. The dinner was supplied by Mr. Wigney, of the George Hotel.

The spacious gallery in front of the Chairman and the principal guests was thronged by a numerous and fashionably-dressed assembly of ladies, who were admitted by tickets, and for whom (a new arrangement on such occasions) a handsome dessert had been provided.

The Banquet commenced at four o'clock

When the cloth had been removed, and grace had been said, sundry letters were read from gentlemen who had been invited, excusing their absence Amongst them were letters from Mr. Monckton Milnes, Mr. R. Gladstone, M Milner Gibson, Mr. C. T. Villiers, Sir W. Molesworth, Mr. Hume, &

The usual loyal toasts, and those of the army and navy, having been given

The Chairman, in a highly eulogistic speech, proposed the health of "our distinguished and patriotic member, Mr. Cobden, with unanimating him for returning me while I was thousands of miles away, conferring on me most distinguished honour that could be conferred on a citizen of this country. But, gentlemen, since my return home I have found myself occupied in public avocations. I believe that my pursuits; that my aim has been your aim; and I have felt assured that, dealing as I have done with a body of intelligent and practical men, you have been satisfied, whilst I was in pursuit of what I humbly conceived my duty and your welfare, you would be satisfied that I should pursue my duties in Parliament, and be content to be together in spirit, though we were absent in body. Your excellent chairman has been good enough to associate my name with three principles—Free Trade, Economy, and Peace. I beg it to be distinctly understood that in meeting you here to-day—in having the privilege of exchanging sentiments with you, we do not meet for the glorification of any individual or ourselves, but to do homage to those principles which your chairman has enumerated (cheers) to render, if possible, more secure the attainment of the first of those principles, and to pave the way for carrying out the other two. (Cheers.) As to the first two, I am not going to make a Free Trade speech; but an attempt has been made to show that Free Trade in corn—for that is about the limit of our triumph—as yet, that free trade in corn—when we had had for some time effect—three months, is a failure.

Well, I don't know what we expected free trade in corn to do that it has not done for us, as far as it possibly could have done for us. Did anybody ever ask themselves this question—"What would have been our position now if we had not carried the repeal of the Corn Laws just at the time we did?" I have talked to men conversant with these matters, and I have put this question to them:—"Suppose the 4th of February, 1846, had never been established in operation now, what would have been the price of corn at this moment?" And the general opinion I hear is that what would be at this quarter What would then have been the condition of England, what would then have been the condition of Yorkshire? Just what it was in 1836, after the failure of the harvest in 1838. Your towns would have been crowded with paupers, and your capitalists would have been meeting together to try and avert impending ruin, as they did in 1839. Now what is the condition of things? I don't say that trade is as good as it might be, or as I hope it will be; but, taking the condition of the whole of the working population now, and comparing this with what it was in 1839, 1840, 1841, 1842, and 1843 I say there is now a state of great prosperity (cheers); nay, I doubt very much whether that portion of the labouring classes of the county and Lancashire which is fully employed in the mechanical arts, in manufactures, and in other pursuits—I speak particularly of skilled workmen—ever in their lives were in the possession of a greater amount of comforts than in exchange for their labour than they are at this moment: because you have now not merely food, but raiment, and all those humane luxuries which are happily within the reach of the working classes, cheaper than, as a whole, at any time when the trade of this district was peculiarly prosperous. When we go back to 1836 and 1837, I am not denying that there was great prosperity, the price of many articles of clothing was then much higher than now; cotton goods were about double what they now are. The working classes being better employed their earnings amounted, however, to a hope to see their employers deriving a full and adequate reward for their skill and capital. But we did not profess that free trade in corn was a sort of alchemy that was to discover the philosopher's stone, or an universal panacea; we never said so. Our opponents have said that of us, to try and make us ridiculous. We never said that free trade in corn would prevent the evils that follow excessive speculation in railways. (Cheers.) There is a vice planted in almost every family and counting-house, arising from these railway speculations. (Cheers.) We never said that free trade in corn would heal those sores. (Cheers.) We never said it would prevent civil wars on the Continent; or, if civil wars arose on the Continent, we never said that free trade in corn would prevent them from operating injuriously on our foreign trade. We never said that it would turn out disastrous, or potato rot comes, you will be a great deal better able to bear all those evils with free trade in corn than you would have been under the old sliding-scale. (Cheers.) We never said more than that; and, if so much as we professed has been done, who has a right to [illegible] that free trade has been a failure? (Cheers.) But then we are told there is great difficulty and embarrassment in certain portions of the agricultural districts. I think there has been a great deal too much of outcry about distress in the agricultural districts. (Cheers.) I think it is a disgrace to certain portions of the press that they have made any outcry at all upon the great part of 1847 and 1848. The farmers of England were placed under more fortunate circumstances than ever they had been in this country; and there is not much [illegible] They had capital crops and unprecedented high prices; at least, prices without a precedent since the war. Bear in mind that when in former times they had a high price for their corn, it was from a deficient crop; but during 1847 and 1848 they were in the glorious position that the scarcity and high price of corn arose from the failure of the potato, while they had capital crops of wheat. They never had such an opportunity of actually coining money as in the spring of 1847 and during the whole of 1847. In Hampshire corn was selling at £5 the quarter; 100 shillings the quarter was refused in Chichester market; and now those same men, at meetings and elsewhere, are all trades, and some of them have had three or four months' bad trade. It is disgraceful both to farmers and landowners to make that outcry. (Cheers.) You had 18 months of high trade, you have more: at the very time they were getting that price for their wheat you were carrying on your business at a loss. In Lancashire losses during those 18 months must be measured by the extent of the unemployed hands, which, on the lowest estimate, amount to £1000, and, if smaller, the loss was about one-half or one-third of that sum, per month. (Cheers.) Yet you did not come whining to Parliament; you stood manfully to your guns, and were ready to go to work with the first gleam. (Cheers.) We do not pretend to say that the farmers will not have a difficulty in going through the transition state—Monopoly to Free Trade. It is in the very nature of things that they have been trying on evil courses for thirty years, the ordeal of getting into a right course must cause one pain. A man does not recover from a fever without going through a very painful state of languor. We expected that there would be this difficulty in the transition; so did our opponents, or why did they give us the work of a seven years' battle? They have no right, though, to turn round upon us and say, "Look at the difficulties we have in our transition state, landowners, tenants and landowners to meet this new state of things." We told them they would have difficulties precisely such as the manufacturers had in 1837; they had to look about them; they had to adopt a new system of business—make larger returns in quicker time—they had to produce more from a given quantity of machinery and in a given space of time, and they have done it (cheers); the owners, too, they must get through precisely the same process, they must have their energies quickened, they must make their land more productive, they must not expect to receive rents long based upon the unnatural monopoly and production out of the soil. All these we intend they should do it is for their interest, as well as ours, that they should, and whilst they do not, but, instead of so, are whining to Parliament, and talk of transferring [illegible] taxes off their shoulders on to ours—whilst they indulge in such child's play, they make themselves simply ridiculous in the eyes of men of business, and we tell them we have no sympathy for any of their complaints. (Cheers.) They say they cannot compete with foreigners in the produce of corn. I speak to the backbone and muscle of the clothing districts of England. Is there no protection, and if you wanted any, I should vote against your having it. (Cheers.) But there is this difference between your case and that of the farmers. You are obliged to sell your cloth as cheap, then, as it can be got in China or New York, it must compete with the producers there, even after the consumer pays the cost of carriage and a heavy duty. (Cheers.) Your production is so good, that the consumer prefers to buy yours, paying those charges in addition. (Cheers.) The farmer, on the contrary, has only to compete with the foreigner when his corn is brought into this market after incurring the expense of carriage. The farmer, therefore, is always sure of getting a higher price for his corn than the foreigner, and you are always certain of getting a lower price for your cloth than the foreigner requires. (Cheers.) The farmers may have difficulties, but they cannot be allowed to indemnify themselves out of your pockets, if they cannot make their trade answer. (Cheers.) I have been watching with some anxiety the course the farmers' friends have taken in the lament. Brought, when they brought themselves face to face with facts, they would at once begin to join with the Free Traders in reducing the expenditure of the country. (Hear) They have not done so, and for this reason—they believe, still, or find it their policy to affect to believe, that they can put their hands into your pockets, and indemnify themselves. (Cheers.) I want the agriculturists and landowners to be convinced that to go back to protection in any shape is impossible

We are not now talking the language of a party, but of every party [illegible] is no party in existence which has a majority in it for any measure which is in favour of a return of protection. (Loud cheers.) When the constituencies of rural counties are satisfied that if they maintain a taxation they shall pay their share out of their own pockets, and not out of those of manufacturers by putting their hands into your bread-baskets, they will join with us in reducing the taxation and expenditure of the country, as the only means by which they can enable themselves to meet the competition of foreigners. Up to this time they have not joined us, and I have been, I confess, astonished to see the unanimity with which county members uphold the extravagant expenditure of the country much. I made a motion, which was lost by a very moderate majority, that in the opinion of the House of Commons, we should return as speedily as possible to the amount of expenditure which was found sufficient for six fourteen years ago, and upwards of a hundred county members went into the lobby against me; and the county constituencies, therefore, sent up members in favour of high taxes. Well, if they won't help us to reduce the expenditure, we will take care that they only have low prices to pay high taxes. (Cheers.) And if they continue to pay high taxes it shall be their own fault It is not considered etiquette to attribute motives for votes in the House of Commons. We must not state what we know to be the fact as to what influences votes in Parliament. It is actually forbidden to say that Whigs are influenced by the Whig party, because their interests are connected with the service by land and by sea, and that the members of those aristocratic families keep up an enormous expenditure for the army and navy in order that their younger sons may find berths. It is considered improper that any of these allusions should be made, and, therefore, as there is a rule that motives should not be attributed, don't let it be supposed that I have imagined anything like what I have stated. We will suppose, then, that these farmers and small freeholders are the men who suppose they have all the interest. We must suppose, looking into our army list, that the staff appointments are all held by the relatives of the farmer and 40s. freeholders. (A laugh.) We have 160 Admirals; we never can employ more than fourteen of these at a time, and we must suppose that these farmers have all of them connexions of the tenant-farmer class. It will not be considered bad taste to have assumed that. Then, if these farmers and 40s. freeholders will support high taxes because their brothers and sons may be Admirals, Majors, and Colonels,—if they choose to keep up such establishments for their interest, we are not going to let them pay for them out of the bread basket. (Cheers.) Our friends in the southern counties will perfectly understand that we see through the whole case—that we know exactly how the land lies. If the tenant-farmers and the people of the middle class in the south of England really want to reduce taxation—if the want any amelioration in those laws that affect them with respect to game, with respect to occupancy, or in any other way in which legislation can be to their interest, they must join us, but not to impose an 8s. or 10s. duty [illegible] When I see the farmers getting up a row in South Hampshire, and carrying down a Mr. Shaw to be more prominent than the squires themselves in clamouring for Protection, I pity them; they are positively past all hope of salvation. (Cheers.) The farmers are a class of the most decidedly, politically, on the face of the earth. They ever now and then burst into a sort of saturnalia. These political bondmen they mean nothing—it ends in nothing. The landlord is merely asked to go to his agent, and say, "Tell all the farmers on such an estate they must vote for such man"—and they do it. The whole thing is effected by a wink or a nod. It requires no noise. Besides, the farmers form a very small portion of the electors even in a county. We have a return before Parliament of the different kinds of qualifications; and in the most rural, the proportion of occupying tenants is [illegible] to one-eighth or one-seventh, and in Lancashire, not more than one-tenth. To set up for themselves, without the middle class, is the most hopeless, helpless, foolish thing that human beings could resort to. If they want a reduction of taxation, we will help them to obtain it. (Cheers.) My friend Bright (cheers) has proposed to get rid of the Game Laws for them. But they don't help him much. It is something like the Malt Tax over again. The few men that will support Mr. Bright will be the Free Traders; they are the only friends the farmers have in the House of Commons. (Cheers.) Do you know what my motion about retrenchment is. It is a very simple case. I put it before Parliament, and I was sorry you found your representatives in so small a minority. But I beg you distinctly to understand that I was in good company (Cheers.) I had Lancashire with me—I had the metropolis with me—I had Edinburgh and Glasgow with me—I had Middlesex with me. Of all the large towns, only Liverpool—"a strange anomaly," seeing that financial reform commenced there, and Sheffield, rather peculiarly situated (a laugh), plumped against me. (Cheers.) Sheffield voted against me under peculiar circumstances, which you will understand; but that won't count again. (Cheers.) I am very anxious that you in the West Riding should understand this, and if you will take the trouble to analyze the places whence my supporters came, you will find that enlightened and free public opinion was with me on that motion, as certainly as it ever was with Mr. Milner Gibson when Sir R. Peel took up free trade in corn; and I may boldly say that I never expect to be in a majority in reducing our expenditure to the standard of 1835. Government will not do it of their own accord, they did on the Corn Laws, they will do the work themselves. (Cheers.) If we were in the majority, the Queen would have to send for us (cheers), and that would not suit them. (Cheers.) Some Government must do it for us. To be sure, our right hon. friend and neighbour, Sir Charles Wood, has only made a beginning—that is his policy. It is intended only as an encouragement for us to go on Perhaps he could not do more this session, but it is quite plain he means if you persevere, especially in the West Riding. A great deal more will be done next year, and it will be all done as soon as possible. (Loud cheers.) What I proposed was to go back as speedily as possible to the expenditure of 1835. No answer was given to the facts I stated, viz. that the successive increases of our expenditure for armaments had all been occasioned by special circumstances, which have all passed away. I instanced other changes, which I hope will suggest the attends of the West Riding

I want to enlist you, in two or three practical questions, but which our opponents will call Utopia. (Cheers.) Utopia? The West Riding has a knack of making Utopias realities (Cheers.) The West Riding made Cartwright's Utopia for abolition of the slave-trade a reality. (Cheers.) The West Riding made Wilberforce's Utopias for abolition of slavery a reality. You made what was called madness in 1839 reality in 1849. (Cheers.) I want you to take up my other Utopias. (Cheers.) One of them is to reduce the expenditure by means which seem to follow naturally out of our Free Trade structure. I want you to raise the cry for colonial reform. (Cheers.) Depend on it, you are as much interested in carrying out reform in our colonial system as the colonies themselves, or as you are in your own municipal affairs, because it is only by the reform of your colonial system that you can ever hope largely to reduce your present expenditure, or be in a position to be safe against an overwhelming expenditure from any accidental cause that may arise. You may have another war in Caffraria or New Zealand. We must have our colonies put on a totally different question; we must raise the cry of "self-government for the colonies." Don't give a feeble response to that, under the idea, substantially spread abroad, that something tending to a disinheritance of the empire is involved in giving your colonial fellow-subjects self-government. As Englishmen they are entitled to it. If you don't separate yourselves from the dominant class—if there be a dominant class, for it is nearly fashionable to say there is (Cheers)—if you don't separate yourselves from them in their attempt to keep the colonies as a field of patronage for their younger sons, and that the aristocracy may nominate the government, you will have your colonies put on a totally different question; we must raise the cry, whether in North America, at the Cape of Good Hope, in New Zealand, in Australia, or in the West Riding of Yorkshire, will govern themselves. (Cheers.) I can conceive nothing like up a newspaper from any part of the empire reaching complaints in every direction. I do not wish to be thought attacking the noble Lord at the head of the Colonial Office. I do not care a straw for Grey. I have a high respect for his personal honour, and for his moral courage and independence. He was one of the first that boldly advocated our principles and Free Trade. (Cheers.) Some of you recollect the intolerable office rules which tied himself to compromise on the slavery question (Cheers.) Such a man is entitled to our respect. I make no charge against Mr. Hawes, a man of unusual talent amongst ourselves, who laid constantly and honourably at the office under Government. What I do find fault with is, that men should allow themselves to be put into an office to do impossibilities; it would require omnipotence and omniscience almost to be able from a desk in London to govern more than 40 dependencies in every latitude. Suppose we had to send up to Sir George Grey to have his authority for everything we do in the shape of debts, would we tolerate its interference in Yorkshire? Why, every transit that performs the distance between this and London in six hours; and by the telegraph, that will communicate in a few seconds in a minute, you can talk with the Downing Office; and yet you would not tolerate its interference in Yorkshire, Leeds, or Manchester. Now, then, do you think that in Downing street they can govern the Cape of Good Hope, or Australia? Before you can exchange communications, ten to one the object of those communications will have passed away It is utterly absurd; and it is impossible, for the interest of the colonies, with the unbounded right of Englishmen and the rights of our own interest, that they should be kept in a state of pupilage any longer. If the colonies require our soldiers as a police, they must pay for it; they must pay [illegible] would they grumble to do so if we only gave them self-government. No doubt, I hear Lord John Russell meets Sir William Molesworth on this subject with reserve; but, with all deference and respect, he shows no more than any thing else that Lord John is not quite equal to the position in which he is placed. I refer to the great Act by which we treated those profound arguments and most careful collected facts which Sir William Molesworth and others brought forward on this subject. He had twice since, "You must consider yourselves totally severed from us, you must dismember the empire; you want to make this great united empire a smaller empire by getting rid of your colonies one by one: you are going the right way to accomplish your object." Is it right to treat the question in such a spirit? What is Free Trade for, if it be not carried out to its legitimate ends? There are some statesmen of our days who think the only object of the Reform Bill or the abolition of the Corn Laws was to place them in power (cheers), and that when once in power they are to remain there. The country is to be satisfied that they are there. They console themselves with the belief that the country wants nothing but that they shall be there; and they are utterly incompetent, or what is the same thing in effect, they are unwilling to carry out legitimately those principles by which they have acquired power, and of which they profess to be the champions. (Cheers.) Our colonies are subjected to an enormous expenditure in order that Government may ex-

[illegible] our North American colonies, with salaries amounting to £.7,000 a year, while the United States, with 30 governors, paid only £14,300; our colonies having a population of 1,500,000, and the United States of 20,000,000. Why, at the last appointment made by the United States was of a Governor of California, with a salary of £5000, our last appointment was the Governor of Labuan, with £2000 a year. Now, gentlemen, this is a question of great importance, namely, greatly reducing our armaments, insisting on the policy of arbitration instead of war. He also urged the formation of a convention between England and France and America, to prevent the unfortunate increase of our naval force, and concluded an eloquent speech by calling on his friends to attend to the registration, as the best means of carrying out their pacific economical views. He sat down amidst loud cheering.

The next toast proposed by the Chairman was "The seventy-eight supporters of Mr. Cobden's motion in favour of financial reform, and of a speedy return to peace, be speedily adopted to the circumstances of a heavily burdened people."

Mr. J. G. Marshall, M.P., as one of the seventy-eight, returned thanks.

R. Solly, Esq., Sheffield, then gave the following sentiment—"May international arbitration be adopted in all our future treaties with foreign nations, and speedily supersede the anachronism appeal to the sword in the settlement of national disputes"

J. Micklethwaite, Esq., Wakefield, proposed—"Mr. Bright, the undaunted champion of civil, religious, and commercial freedom."

Mr. Bright responded, amidst the most flattering manifestations of applause. The succeeding toasts were as follows:

"May the basis of the representative system be enlarged, and the national institutions thereby rendered more stable, and still more worthy the universal [illegible]ciment of the people."

By the Chairman—"Colonel Thompson, the veteran leader in the war against

By the Chairman—

Wm. Brown, Esq., M.P., returned thanks

By Frank Crossley, Esq., Halifax "George Wilson, Esq., the able and indefatigable Chairman of the League."

Mr. Wilson, during his response, was great [illegible]cered.

By Frederick Schwann, Esq., Huddersfield—"Alexander Henry, Esq., and prosperity to commerce throughout the world.

Mr. Henry, M.P., returned thanks.

Messrs. Esq., of Leeds, Vice-Chairman "The Chairman [illegible]man and Stewards;" to which Edward Baines, Esq., responded.

The party did not separate till nearly eleven o'clock.

GENOA.—FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.

THE CITY OF GENOA.

The beautiful city of Genoa lies on the coast of the Mediterranean, at the foot of the Ligurian Apennines, in the recess of a wide crescent-like gulf. The town stands partly on the declivity of several hills rising in the form of a semicircle round the spacious harbour, and partly on a narrow strip of ground between them and the sea. It is inclosed on the land side by a double line of fortifications, the external one being 8 miles in length. The higher Apennines rise immediately behind, dividing the waters which run to the Mediterranean by the vallays of Bisagno and Polcevera, from those which flow northward into the Scrivia and Bormida, two affluents of the Po. Upon the summits of these mountains, which are near enough to command Genoa, are several detached forts. The appearance of the city from the sea is truly superb. A succession of fine buildings lines the shore; palaces and gardens, churches and convents, rise on the steep sides of the hills.

Mr Dickens, in his "Pictures from Italy," sketches "the noble bay of Genoa, with the deep blue Mediterranean; monstrous old desolate houses and palaces dotted all about; lofty hills, with their tops often hidden in the clouds, and with strong forts perched high up on their craggy sides." Again, "They who would know how beautiful the country immediately surrounding Genoa is, should climb (in clear weather) to the top of Monte Faccio, or, at least, ride round the city walls—a feat more easily performed. No prospect can be more diversified and lovely than the changing views of the harbour, and the valley of the two rivers, the Polcevera and the Bisagno, from the heights along which the strongly-fortified walls are carried, like the Great Wall of China in little. * * * That lies all Genoa, in beautiful confusion with its many churches, monasteries, and convents pointing up into the sunny sky. The fort within the walls commands that height upon the right. The broad sea lies in front there; and that line of coast, beginning by the light house, and tapering away, a mere speck in the rosy distance, is the beautiful coast road that leads to Nice."

DINNER TO MR. COBDEN M.P. AT THE CORN EXCHANGE, WAKEFIELD.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

SPRING.—THE COUNTRY.

THE INVITATION TO THE FIELDS.

Why should we ever toil
In silence or turmoil,
To gather gold like Californian slaves?
Why should we still debate,
In melancholy state,
Knowledge abstruse to lead us to our graves?
Or dream majestic dreams,
Filling the earth with schemes
Of human happiness from our Utopian shelves,
World-wide, alas! but far too narrow for ourselves?

Let us be young again,
And o'er the grassy plain
Gambol like children, and give Care the slip,
Forgetful of distress
And mental stateliness;
Let us be young in spirit, as we trip
Beside the running brooks,
Heedless of men and books,
And heart-sore Wisdom's frowns or magisterial sighs,
Looking contemptuous down upon our revelries.

Have we outgrown the joys
That fill'd our hearts, as boys?
And does the music of the thrushes bring
No more the young delight
That in our childhood bright
Made beautiful the mornings of the spring?
Ripple the streams no more,
As in the days of yore?
Or are our ears so dull'd by commerce with our kind,
That we can hear no hymns between the trees and wind?

In our too pleading homes
We ponder over tomes,
Ledger and day-book, till we quite forget
That there are fields and bowers,
And river-banks and flowers,
And that we owe our languid limbs a debt;
A debt most sweet to pay—
A needful holiday
A brain-refreshing truce, 'mid intellectual strife,
That, fought too keenly out, imps the mortal life.

We do our nature wrong
Neglecting over long
The bodily joys that help to make us wise;
The rambles up the slope
Of the high mountain cope—
The long day's walk, the vigorous exercise,
The fresh, luxurious bath,
Far from the trodden path,
Or mid the ocean waves dashing with harmless roar,
Lifting us off our feet upon the sandy shore.

Kind heaven! there is no end
Of pleasures as we wend
Our pilgrimage on life's undevious way,
If we but know the laws
Of the Eternal Cause,
And for His glory and our good obey.
But intellectual pride
Sets half these joys aside,
And our perennial care absorbs the soul so much,
That life burns cold and dim under its deadening touch.

What pleasures he hath miss'd
Who struggles to exist
Amid factitious wants and luxuries vain,
Spending his youth and prime,
As if our comrade, Time,
Were but a servitor in Mammon's train.
And, waking up at last,
When threescore years have pass'd,
With stiff and palsied joints, and just enough of breath
To own how wrong he was, and pay his court to Death.

Welcome, ye plump green meads,
Ye streams, and sighing reeds!
Welcome, ye corn-fields, waving like a sea!
Welcome the leafy bowers,
And children gathering flowers
And farewell, for awhile, sage drudgery
What, though we're growing old,
Our blood is not yet cold:
Come with me to the fields, thou man of many ills,
And give thy limbs a chance among the daffodils!

Come with me to the woods,
And let their solitudes
Re-echo to our voices as we go.
Upon thy weary brain
Let childhood come again,
Spite of thy wealth, thy learning, or thy woe;
Stretch forth thy limbs, and leap—
Thy life has been asleep;
And though the wrinkles deep may furrow thy pale brow,
Show me, if thou art wise, how like child art thou!

Charles Mackay

SPRING.—ST. JAMES'S-PARK.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

PICTURESQUE SKETCHES OF LONDON, PAST AND PRESENT.

BY THOMAS MILLS.

CHAPTER XI.

THE PARKS.

THOSE who wish to witness the out-of-door pomp and pride of modern London, must visit the Parks; for there all the array of rank, and fashion, and aristocracy beauty congregate, under the open eye of Heaven: mounted on splendid horses, or seated in richly ornamented chariots, and arrayed in the most approved costumes, they confer a mutual pleasure upon all by passing forth to see and to be seen. Here, from the humble pedestrian—the nursery-maid, with her children, walking within the railings—to the man-about-town, handsomely dressed, and who may either be taken for a member of the swell mob or a marquis,—the links sacred to celebrated statesmen, soldiers of renown, and lords and ladies, whose titles have figured for centuries in the pages of history, and who all appear to have no other object than the display of beautiful toilettes, and enjoying the beauty of the scenery. For in these places the leaves wave, and the flowers blow, and the waters run, as green, and sweet, and freshly as if the [illegible] with its millions of murmuring voices, had been removed miles away. Yet, all is London; only a wider space in that great unbroken chain of streets and houses, whose squares are but the openings in the links, that are locked together, in an out, and under and over, to the very smiling

St. James's Park, in the reign of Henry VIII., appears to have been nothing more than a wide space of open fields, formerly occupied by an hospital, on the site of wh ch Bluff Hal erected a palace, and formed a park, which he enclosed with brick walls. To this park he added a chase, which he threw out like a wide open noose, from his palace at Westminster, and where the line fell it formed the circle, which ran from St. Giles's-in-the-Fields, up by Islington, round Highgate and Hornsey, Hampstead Heath, and back again to St. Giles and Westminster; and all subjects of every degree were forbidden either to hawk or hunt within those boundaries. Only three centuries have passed away since this proclamation was issued. Old Death himself, with dart in hand, hunted down Henry soon after he had taken possession of his new chase; and after the headless form of the lord had fallen, the whole chase was soon disforested. Edward VI possessed not his father's organs of destructiveness; but, instead of forming parks, founded hospitals; one of which will carry the name of the Boy-King to be reverenced throughout all time. But few features of that old park now remain, although there are spots about it in which the spectator may stand on such a situation as to shut out every other object, excepting the grey old Abbey of Westminster, against which the trees seem to rest, half burying it, as they no doubt did three hundred years ago.

There are many "pretty bits" about St. James's Park, as you look up towards the pale marble arch, on which the Royal banner of England, that throws out its golden lions upon the breeze, used to float; when, seen through the trees, it appears to be dropped by fairy hands, and to be carried by the imagination into the land of old romance and chivalry. Nor is the Palace itself less pleasing; for although in many points deficient of architectural beauty, it throws out its dark, black-looking gloomy pile of St. James's altogether into the shade. But the most [illegible] with water-fowl, brought from almost every corner of the globe. Around the part there are many fine trees, which throw their green shadows into the water, broken at times by an hundred tiny ripples, which have been raised as the paddles of some strange-looking duck, or thrown up by the silver-breasted swans. We have seen little morse's mirrored in these "cool translucent waves," of the richest colour and beauty—the dazzling gold of the lion's mane, and the pearly white of the hawthorn, dangling amid moving shadows of green; while deep down, the blue sky lay sleeping, like another heaven, motionless and without a cloud. This is the favourite haunt of children and nursery-maids; and few fowls are fed better in summer-time than those which skim about the water in the Park, for the handfuls of bread and biscuit which are thrown by the "little dears" for their little diversion and often gobbled up by the larger ones—would almost feed a workhouse. It has been a celebrated spot for love-making ever since the days of Charles the Second, and is frequently mentioned in the works of the dramatists who wrote at that period. In this it has not degenerated up to the present day, for many a "Corydon and Phillis" may yet be seen breathing out gentle vows in the most secluded recess, some of the walks in particular being as beautiful as ever figured in that period of gracious Graces which formed the reign of the Merry Monarch. In that Park Prince Charles often amused himself by playing with his dogs, or seeding the ducks; or sometimes he rode away to have a gossip with Nell Gwynn, the Duchess of Cleveland, or Lady Castlemaine, all of whom resided under that roof. Here we first saw Queen Anne walking with the wife of the late Sydney Smith; and here, also, we have listened with "bated breath" to the music murmured by the lips of Moore. Within these walls we first saw that true poetess and brilliant Mrs. Norton; and from the host himself, in our early career as an author, received that encouragement and kindness, which which we might have fallen on days of gloom, and celebrated his house, all it contains, and the guests it has received, would require the hand of another Walpole to illustrate. The name of Samuel Rogers will alone save the Green Park from oblivion, and give it a popularity which it would never have had for him, have possessed.

No stranger would ever think of entering Hyde Park without first casting a look at Apsley House, the abode of "the" Duke, and the statue of Achilles, which seems stationed as if to point it out, would remind him where he was. This is the very nucze and centre of fashion; here the pride and beauty of England may be seen upon their own stage; and on a fine day, in what is called the "season" in town, no other spot in the world can out-rival in rich display and chaste grandeur that which is here presented. In far excels St. James' in pure rural scenery—there is less of art and more of nature in its appearance, and this is increased by the beauty of the Serpentine river. There, be we remembered, we are in the vicinity of "Tyburn Tree," the history of which has yet to be written. We have often pictured, while wandering here in the deepening twilight, the mouldering bodies of the stern Protector, Ireton, and Bradshaw, dangling upon their gibbets in the sunset of a winter's evening, after they had been dragged out of their graves in Westminster Abbey. This was, indeed, carrying revenge beyond the grave, and is one of the blackest deeds that stains the memory of the Merry Monarch. Evelyn has a savage and unfeeling note in his "Diary," on the revolting exhibition. "On the 30th of January," he says, "the carcasses of those rebels Cromwell, Bradshaw, the Judge who condemned his Majesty, and Pretor, (query—how to the Martyr?—were dragged out of their superb tombs in Westminster, among the Kings, to Tyburn, and hanged on the gallows there from nine in the morning till six at night, and then buried under that fatal and ignominious monument in a deep pit, thousands who had seen them in all their pride being spectators."

Hyde Park is mentioned as early as the reign of Edward VI., and was no doubt enclosed long before that period. During the time of the Commonwealth it was put up to auction and sold in lots, the deer alone being valued at near upon a thousand pounds. At that period it extended to the Acton-lane, and contained 300 acres, and to Knightsbridge the other; the boundary, citywards, being, as now, near Park-lane, while the distance it extended westward is at this day unknown. The consort of George II., we believe, enclosed the three hundred acres of this Park in her day, and early writers state that Queen Anne had enclosed thirty acres within Kensington Gardens.

Hyde Park was the sporting-ground for the May-day holidays in the olden time. Cleveland, who wrote and fought in the time of the first Charles, makes mention of it in a poem entitled "May day," which contains many beautiful lines. He speaks of "Delight in shape of silver wings," watching for the "dappled lawns;" of "snow-white milk-maids crowned with garlands," of the youths and maidens tumbling and rolling upon the grass, and of revelling in the heavens "cards and dice." Even Cromwell, with all his gloomy Puritanism, went to witness the wrestling in Hyde Park, little dreaming that after he had been long dead and buried, his body would be hanged on the neighbouring gallows, which must have been conspicuously above those merry-making.

The sing good-natured old Pepys regrets, in his "Diary," that he could not be in Hyde Park one May-day among the great gallants and fine ladies.

[illegible]'s Park [illegible] attractions [illegible] as scenery, although many portions of it are very beautiful. Here we find the Zoological Gardens and Colosseum, both important enough to deserve a separate notice in our Sketches of London. On entering the Gardens you see a beautiful terrace, which reaches from the royal lodges to some distance, while below are placed the cages where contain the noble animals, which are very common and very interesting. Beyond this terrace there is a pleasant rustic walk, hemmed in by luxuriant foliage, at the end of which there is an opening commanding an extensive view of the Park. To the right you see the Serpentine river, and the gardens of Kensington, with some fine specimens of the fowls of Peru and Mexico. To the left of the terrace there is a little morsel of real Watteau-like scenery, with its smooth lawn and clear pond, near to which is placed the cage appropriated to the feathered tribe of the colours of the rainbow. Further on there is another "green nestling spot," adjoining a sheet of water, which with its fountain and variety of aquatic fowls and beautiful beast-trees, tempt us to linger longer. Then there is the mossy work, where the otter is located, with its silent water, into which Eve fish by the town, when the monkeys, [illegible] above them, perpetrated his jacket before he can enjoy his dinner. But were we to describe the monkeys and parrots, and every variety of bird and beast which [illegible] which, we should require the whole space of our paper. The cages in the Gardens consists of nearly thirty cages, and to this we refer our readers when they visit Regent's Park.

[illegible] occupied by Regent's Park is not without its interest. The old monastic house of Marylebone stood within its boundaries in former days, and had in the time of Elizabeth its park and deer. Here also was a famous bowling-green, which the Duke of Buckingham in his day visited.

The new Parks which are now forming around the metropolis do great credit to Government, and will, like charity, cover a multitude of minor transgressions; for those who originate for the benefit of posterity, must be influenced by something more noble than narrow and selfish views—breathing-room has been sadly neglected of late around the metropolis. Let any one cross over London-bridge, and turn up by St. George's Church, in the Borough, along the Old Kent Road, and as far as New Cross, he will find it one continuous and unbroken chain of buildings. Yet here is space amply enough, and grounds of but little value, that might be formed into a spacious park. If this is not done, those who twenty years hence live in this neighbourhood of railways, will be compelled to wander [illegible] as Blackheath or Greenwich Park, to obtain a breathing of pure air. Kensington Common is but a name for a small patch of grass, surrounded with houses, and poisoned by the stench of vitriol-works, and bleach, open, sluggish ditche[illegible]

[illegible] spot in days of yore;
[illegible] now—the place to stare!

Walworth Common has vanished; and the little fairy Green has the Swan, at Bracknell, is now no more; while even Clapham Common is [illegible] to lessen every year. Wandsworth had set out in good earnest to [illegible] both, and would soon have been near the Royal Mint station, had not Government stepped in sooner, by stepping in between at Battersea Fields. Cross the water, and some of the micaulied Parks are like the one named Whetstone Park, just into the corner of a square. Some of the Islington omnibuses may please to set you down at; while Islington, Highbury, Pentonville, and King's Cross are all so jostled together, that you cannot tell much in the beginning or end of either of the one or the three. We have heard of a neighbourhood that stretches somewhere behind Houndsditch and Bishopsgate, and seen something of it while gazing from the dome of St. Paul's; but from the river this appeared of it, we should as soon hope to find our way out of the Cretan labyrinth, if once in it, as to extricate ourselves from this maze of streets and [illegible] We can imagine some stranger losing his way in this perplexing [illegible] morning on which he grew giddy without a hope of finding his way out again. The new Park in progress near the neighbourhood may, at last, be something like a healthful breathing which we can freely [illegible] an unbroken wilderness. Let the inhabitants of such localities as these [illegible] must plan for

> The populous solitude of bees and birds,
> And fairy-formed and many-coloured things,
> Who worship [illegible] such haunts more than words,
> Who [illegible] open their gold wings,
> [illegible] the gush of light,
> [illegible] and the bend
> [illegible] the but that lingers
> [illegible] beauty. BYRON

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Prematurely, Mdlle Lind, inimitable in the portraiture of the gentler heroines of the drama, is about to leave the stage. The mantle of the Queens of lyrical tragedy, which Pasta, Catalani, and Malibran wore, is about to be dropped by the last that maintained it. We need not, therefore, feel astonished at seeing how great a sensation was created by the announcement of a new claimant, who put forward the most pretentious claims to succeed to the throne of the [illegible] while to state that Mdlle. Parodi's appearance on Tuesday has made the most sceptical revoke their prophecy that the minute Queens of lyrical tragedy, like the Kings of the political world, were now about to disappear in the fluctuations of the hour. That intimate combination of words, notes, gestures, and attitudes—one in which genius finds its expression—has found its representative in a lady who can array in splendour all the conditions necessary, and with a dramatic passion as to speak it—this most difficult of all arts of the [illegible] where lofter conceptions are concerned, has found in Mdlle. Parodi another worthy exponent. In her bearing she is not ordinary sense, but young, with fine eyes, beautiful teeth, a Roman contour of countenance, and the true Italian complexion, high of stature and classical of form, with energy in her action, and graceful withal by a sense of dignity, and gesture palpably studied from the antique. Mademoiselle Parodi impressed the beholders from her first entrance upon the stage with the certainty that an actress of a lofty and original stamp was about to develop her resources [illegible] by full and the expectations raised, and maintained the pleasing surprise which she found its expression in, was hailed, lauded, and followed by loud and hearty applause, so characteristic of the opinion of an English audience. Her voice trembled with emotion as she uttered the first notes from the recitative of the Druidess, when she sang "Casta diva," immediately afterwards, there was no emotion left but that of the appropriate passion, displayed in all its phases, and with a loftiness of conception truly admirable [illegible] in this first scene, and the contrasts of dramatic intention which put to the test the most opposite gifts of the lyrical tragedian. The denunciation of the invaders was given with a force and breadth, power, and dignity which brought down all the house [illegible] her most glorious moments, to which was added certain sustained notes à la Lind—not so sweet, but of surpassing volume and duration, and peculiarly effective from the extraordinary profundity of the voice which called forth so great a comparison with the gentler Queen of Song; but this approbation immediately ceased. Comparison there could not be, and she rose to the height of her fame [illegible] in the [illegible] great by the due execution of chromatic passages, but a vocal expression of human feeling, of exquisite suavity and truth. The fiercer scenes that followed, and succeeded the first, displayed many high and dignified [illegible] in which stupid, compared to the clever and elaborate pantomimes of more recent seasons. Mr Shepherd is setting about his new management with spirit. Mrs. Warner and Mr. Anderson are underlined to appear in "Macbeth." The lady will also play Mrs. Beverley, in the "The Gamester;" the Queen, in Hamlet;" and Madame Deschapelles, in the "Lady of Lyons." We have not heard who is to be Pauline—probably either Mrs. Nisbett or Miss Mordaunt, who commence their engagement on Whit-Monday. All the looks well.

ASHLEY'S

"The White Maiden of California; or, the Horse of the Ocean," is the title of the holiday equestrian spectacle at Astley's, the management opening it proper that, somehow or another, under every circumstance—and in this case it is a showrock a horse must make a principal figure. We expect it would be dangerous to form a notion of the appearance and customs of California rather from this spectacle than from Mr Tyrwhitt Brooke's book just published; but we glean from the piece that maidens abound in El Dorado, that the main action is lack of the necessaries of life, and that red and blue fireworks are as plentiful as gold. It was triumphantly successful, as was also the dashing equitation of young Hernandez, of whom we have before spoken. This extraordinary boy eclipses everything we have ever seen in the way of circus riding. If he goes on as he has begun, what he will do when a young man is difficult to be conceived.

Mdlle. Louise Tournaire—one of our most graceful equestrians—has returned to Astley's, and was warmly welcomed. See is also the only lady of the group of the grand troupe who have lately visited us; and we have still vivid recollections of the Esmeralda—one of the most charming "acts" ever performed on horseback Both these artistes were called for, and complimented with bouquets

A melodrama, called "The Dumb Driver," concluded the entertainments.

The ADELPHI and SADLER'S WELLS were the only theatres that produced no novelties, relying upon the attractions of their present bills. Robert-Houdin opened his temple of magic at the ST. JAMES'S; and Mr. H. Farren collected a company at the STRAND.

MUSIC.

GRAND CLASSICAL CONCERT AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

On Thursday night the first grand Classical Concert of the series of Lind Concerts was given. The stage was arranged as for an oratorio, the chorus singers being seated on raised platforms, and the principal singers being placed in front of the foot-lights, on chairs. When Mdlle. Lind was conducted on the stage by Labiache, there was a general burst of cheering. The Concert then commenced with the overture of "Il Flauto Magico. In consequence of the death of Madame Gulian's father, that orchestra was unable to appear, and the music allotted to her was omitted. There was no regular distribution of parts. The singers sang alternately the various pieces; Mdlle. Lind taking the soprano portions, Viardot, in the opera, are assigned to Mdlle. Lind and the Queen of Night, the mother. Thus she sang, in the first part, the difficult air, "Non paventar;" and in the second, the air, "Ah! lo so più non ritornera;" and was rapturously encored in both compositions. In the former, she took the bravura passages with surprising skill, and ascended to the F in sit, for Mozart had actually, for a particular singer in his day, written up to that astonishing note in the upper octave of the soprano. The vocalisation of Mdlle. Lind in the last air was perfection: she articulated her shake sotto voce deliciously. The tenorines were sung by Mdlle. Lind and the Misses Lind and Mr Williams on the one side, Mdme. Grimaldi, Mdlle. Polenzi, and Mdlle. Castellan, in the other portions. Bordas and Bartolini, a new tenor, divided the tenor music and Labiache, Coletti, Belletti, and Arnoldi, the bass solos. Coletti was encored in "Qual sdegno." The want of dramatic action rendered the concert somewhat heavy, but the culminating point of attraction was Lind, and she delighted her audience as usual.

The sixth concert of the Choral Harmonists was given at the London Tavern on Monday night.——On Wednesday, Mr Lucas had his 4th chamber evening. The scheme comprised quartets in No. 1 by Spohr, op. 58; No. 3 of Beethoven, and Mozart's Carinone Quintet, op. 516; the executants were Blagrove and Goffris (first and second violins), Hill (tenor), Lucas (violoncello), Aylward (contrabass), and W. S. Bennett (piano). The twentieth concert of the London Wednesday Concerts took place in Hanover Hall, on Wednesday; Miller and Stoepel was the pianiste, and Misses Birch, Poole, Wells, A. and M. Williams, Mrs. A. Newton, Weiss, Leffler, T. Williams, Bage, and Reeves, the vocalists.——On Monday was the third Philharmonic Concert, at which Ernst, the celebrated violinist, will play, after an absence of five years from England, Miss Lucombe and Reeves are the vocalists.——The seventh meeting of the Musical Union will take place on Tuesday afternoon, when Allard, the violinist, the successor of Baillot and Habeneck at the Paris Conservatoire, will make his first appearance in this country; and Chopin, the pianist, will also perform.—— The fourth concert of the Amateur Musical Society will be given on Wednesday next; and on the same evening will be the 21st of the Ancient Harmonic Concerts, for the benefit of Mr Reeves. —— Mr. John Parry's new entertainment is to be given for the first time at Lord's on the 23rd inst., at Willis's Rooms.——Meyerbeer's "Prophète," which was to have been produced on the 11th at the Grand Opera in Paris, has been postponed to the 16th; but it is believed that the 18th will be the first night of performance.

LONDON INSTITUTION.

The last soirée of the season took place on Wednesday, when the Institution was attended by near eight hundred of the proprietors and Literary and scientific visitors. During the evening Mr. Alfred Smee delivered a lecture on "Electrobiology, or the relation of electricity to the functions of animal life." For animal life it is necessary to have a central portion or brain, a peripheral body, both supplied with bright arterial blood, and connected together by nervous fibres. Mr. Smee traced the analogy of this arrangement to that of a double voltaic circuit, and demonstrated that the communicating portion might be fluid, or, in other words, that tubes filled with fluid would serve as well for electric telegraphs as ordinary wires, and that the nerves perform a similar office in the body. Mr. Smee stated that there were great difficulties in the way of ascertaining the presence of a voltaic current in any fluid, but that he had succeeded in overcoming that difficulty by the use of what he termed the electric voltaic test, which was exhibited to the audience. In imitation of the action of light upon the eye, the lecturer stated that he had constructed numerous voltaic circuits, in which the current was solely determined by the action of the sun's rays In imitation of the other organs of sensation, Mr. Smee exhibited a contrivance in which the voltaic circuit was caused by odours; in another contrivance a similar current was produced by savours; in others the current was set in motion by heat or force. The effects in each case, notwithstanding the delicacy of the experiments, were extremely well marked, and excited much applause. Mr. Smee exhibited voltaic combinations in imitation of the commissures of the brain, and of the theoretical structure of that organ, which he stated is sufficient to account for all the varied effects of mental phenomena. The artificial electric eel deflected the galvanometer most powerfully, to the great delight of the audience; and the artificial muscular substance moved a long lever over the space of three or four feet. The functions of the blood corpuscles were illustrated by an analogical experiment, with artificial corpuscles made of membrane and penetrate of iron. The commissures of the brain exhibited under the microscope, in the human, were of surpassing beauty, and well illustrated "how fearfully and wonderfully we are made." The author summed up by showing that sensation, mind, thought, and all functions of animal life were entirely subject to voltaic action, and governed by physical laws; but, nevertheless, that science no less leads us to infer, than religion commands us to believe, that man is immortal, though that which is mortal should never be confounded with that which gives to man his immortality.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

OPENING OF THE LOOP LINE FROM LINCOLN TO GAINSBOROUGH.—On Monday this further portion of the Great Northern Railway was opened for public traffic. The line was certified by the Government Inspector last week, and on the arrival of the train from Boston at 9 15 A.M. on Monday, the first passenger train started for Gainsborough; it was well filled with passengers, gentlemen connected with the company. The line, after leaving Lincoln station, crosses the high street on the level and the Upper Witham on a drawbridge; it then runs through the south side of the Fossdyke, passing close under the cliffs of the cliff district, and of Doddington-hall and wood. At Saxilby the line crosses the Fossdyke on a handsome bridge, and proceeds direct to Gainsborough. Four miles from Saxilby there is a station for Marton and Gate Burton, by the side of the old Roman Fossway from the Trent to Ermine-street: near it is place a gateway of the old Castle of Torksey is obtained. Stow Church is one of the oldest in England, and is built on the foundation of a Saxon cathedral which was destroyed by the Danes in 778. About midway between Saxilby and Marton, the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire line from East Retford joins the Great Northern. After leaving Marton station, the line passes near Gate Burton, the seat of W. Hutton, Esq., Knaith Park, and Lea, the seat of Sir Charles Anderson. At Gainsborough, a very handsome bridge with the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire lines has been made, and the station of the company is used by the Great Northern. In consequence of legal disputes, the Great Northern do not intend to complete the loop from Gainsborough to Bawtry, but will use the line of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, from the junction near Torksey (above referred to), to their own grand junction line at East Retford. This will not increase the distance by two miles between Lincoln and York, and will save the company nearly £200,000. The opening of the line from Gainsborough to Lincoln will bring a large amount of new traffic on the Great Northern Line, and will tend to bind the Eastern Counties and North-western Lines of Peterborough. An extension of the line to the docks recently proposed seems to be made: engineers have also been employed to take levels, &c., from Lea or Gainsborough to Crowle, near Thorne, which are already obtained. The distance between Lincoln and Gainsborough by the railway is some three miles shorter than by the turnpike-road.

EXTENSION OF THE SOUTH-WESTERN INTO WINDSOR.—The Admiralty have given their assent to the proposed extension line from Richmond to Windsor, on condition that, with a view to prevent any obstruction to the navigation of the Thames, the navigable channel be crossed by bridges of one span, with as much headway as the limits of deviation will allow. This point in question is a spot about three-quarters of a mile below Windsor-bridge.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"F. G. R."—The Key move to Enigma 398 is—1. K Kt to K 4th. We must leave the rest to your own sagacity

"Ignoramus," Tunbridge Wells.—Obviously, because the Black Pawn would take the Pawn in passing

"J. W." Morpeth.—See the early chapters of the Chess-Player's Handbook.

"Norah." He can demand a Queen or any other Piece

"M. F. C." We are sorry we have not room to repeat the solution. Address the editor of the newspaper.

"Precis," Chess-club.—For back volumes of the Chess-Player's Chronicle, application should be made to Hastings, or Caver-street.

"Jerusalem."—Try No. 395 again, supposing you take B to Q R 3d (ch).

"Persse."—Ingenious, but too easy

"G. P."—Quite unpracticable, and full of losing errors.

"F. G. R."—It shall be published next week; but you would greatly facilitate our references to back problems by giving the name of the authors.

"E. L. W." "Omicron."—They shall be examined. It is want of space, not want of material, which prevents the appearance of more games in our columns

"C. L."—You can have two Bishops of the same colour on the board at the same time

"W. L., Jun."—The Problem you previously sent was an easy mate in three, instead of four, moves. That received this week appears correct, but is very dull.

"Alpha."—You will find the solution required in our notices to correspondents in the number for March 24th

"G. S. J." Oxford.—The Chess-Player's Companion, now on the eve of publication, is by the author of the "Handbook." The publisher, R. G. Bohn.

"W. L." Jun.—Easy in three moves. —Q to K B 6th, 2. K to R 4th; 3. Q to K B 8th, mate

"G. S. J." Oxford.—Thanks for the information. You will see that the very beautiful Problem mentioned is quite correct

"Percy."—Your subsequent letter came too late.

"J. W."—Get the German "Handbuch" of Bilguer.

"H. C. F. S."—is thanked for his acceptable selection of recently-played games.

"J. W. Peterborough."—Parts can only take in passing on its first move.

"W. G." York.—The mistake is in your diagram, which admits of no possible solution in four moves

"G. H. C."—The next Chess work we are told, will be ready in a few days.

"W. D." Jun.—The key move to Mr. Anderson's brilliant little Problem is—1. Q to K B 8th. Your other questions should be submitted to the authors or publishers of the books mentioned.

"Andrew T." Your subscription, and that of your Club, to Mr. King's collection of Problems, may be sent to Mr. C. Kenny, King William-street, Strand.

We beg to acknowledge the receipt of several beautiful Problems from "Minor," Madras, Delhi, and Allahabad, in India; from Hamburgh, Leipsic, and Magdeburg, in Germany; from Paris, Bordeaux, and Vincennes, in France; and from Troy, St. Louis, and Frankfort, in America.

"A Member of a Chess-club."—Pray look again attentively, remembering that White and Black each count the squares from their own sides of the board.

"Argent."—Send your name and address, and the former shall be inserted in Mr. King's list of subscribers

"J. L. K." Glasgow, is thanked

"Sath."—A Piece cannot take a Pawn in passing. 2. The Key move to the Indian Problem is 1. B. Q to

"Andrew T."—Your late note is received. Pleased Enigma No. 427 incorrectly. Try it again

"No Desperandum." An old idea, ingeniously renewed. It shall appear.

"J. T." Glasgow.—Enigma No. 425 is without flaw. Examine it again. The solution of No. 423 is also satisfactory, as a moment's consideration might have convinced you. If the Black King go, as you suggest, to his 5*th, he is mated in one move as it is.*

"H. W." "P. A."—Next week, if possible.

"Special Constable."—Black can take the Pawn in passing, if he please, and thus give check by discovery.

"Tyro."—Is right. There can be no stalemate when the King is checked.

"Herrick."—1. Both books are useful compilations. 2. A good sound second-rate player

"Agatha."—We shall feel obliged by the list, although the typographical errors, as the learned editors shrug, are very few

"B." Scotland lost her Chess laws when "Hailie Donaldson" died. No one has yet risen there worthy to supply his place

"H." You will find your discovery in the Hand-book to the Knight's march over the Chessboard anticipated in Dr. Angel's article in the Philosophical Magazine, Vol. VII., and in a paper of Mr. Beverley's, vol. IX., p. 344.

Solutions by "W. J.," "F. L.," "Philo-Ebor," "Caissa," "A. F. G. R.," "S. U.," "Otho," "H. E.," "H. V.," "H. K. A.," "J. B.," "L. L.," "Mary," "Ireland," "Phi," "H. E. A.," "Eboa," "W. P. B.," "Leo," "to B G.," "F. H. G." "W. B.," Droitwich, "R. A. B.," "Dereon," "I. F.' Royal Artillery, "W. L.," "Mary," "T. B." are correct. Those by "Sibh," "P. V.," "Amicus," "Tele." "An Old Subscriber," "Stultus," "J. G. Jr.", "G. R.," "S. P. Q. R.," "E. G. B.," are wrong.

 Any amateur desirous of playing Chess by correspondence may meet with a competitor, by addressing "J. W. G." West Oxford-street Post-office.

Correspondents not replied to this week will understand that the cause is our want of space.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 272.

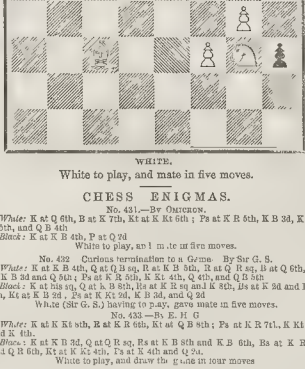
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK
1. Kt to K 7th (ch)	K to K 5th	4. Q to K Kt 2d (ch)	K takes Kt
2. Kt to K B 5th	P takes P	5. Q to K Kt 4th	Mate.
3. K to R 4th	R to K 3d

PROBLEM NO. 273.

By M. JULIUS BRÉDE, of Altona.

(From Mr. Staunton's forthcoming work, "The Chess-Player's Companion.")

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 431.—By OMICRON.

White: K at Q 6th, B at K 7th, Kt at K Kt 6th; P s at K R 6th, K B 3d, K 5th, Q 6th, and Q B 4th

Black: K at K R 4th, P at Q 2d

White to play and mate in five moves.

No. 432 Curious termination to a Game By Sir G. S.

White: K at K B 4th, Q at Q B sq, R at K B 5th, R at Q R sq, B at Q 6th, Kt at K B 3d and Q 8th; P s at K R 5th, K Kt 4th, Q 4th, and Q B 5th

Black: K at his sq, Q at K B 8th, R s at K R sq and K 8th, B s at K 8d and K Kt 7th, Kt at K B 2d, P s at K Kt 2d, K B 3d, and Q 2d

White (Sir G. S.) having to play, gave mate in five moves.

No. 433.—By E. H. G

White: K at K Kt 8th, R at K R 6th, Kt at Q B 8th; P s at K R 7th, K Kt 6th, and K 4th.

Black: K at K B 3d, Q at Q R sq, P s at K B 8th and K B 6th, B s at K R 4th and Q R 6th, Kt at K Kt 4th, P s at K 4th and Q 2d.

White to play, and draw the game in four moves

MR. KLING'S CHESS PROBLEMS.—We have much pleasure in directing attention to a prospectus just issued, announcing that a collection of 'n sanlon's admirable problems, to be printed in colours, and published by subscription, is now preparing. In this delightful branch of the game, the ingenuity and originality of Mr. King's conceptions place him in the topmost rank of composers. No inventor of chess subtleties has ever done so much so well: there is scarcely a community of chess-players in the civilised world which has not derived delight and instruction from this artist's productions, as they have appeared during the last ten years in the various periodicals devoted to the game; and there are few amateurs, we hope, will be so unmindful of their own amusement and his interest, as to neglect the present opportunity of obtaining them in a collected form.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE past week, although not rife with important events, has been a busy one amongst the holiday-makers, who have entered into the various amusements incident to the season, with as much zest as the state of the weather would permit. Hunting is at an end, steeple-chasing is over, and cricketing and aquatics are as yet confined to training. All, therefore, that we have to touch upon is the Craven Meeting at Newmarket, a dull one as far as it has gone; but interesting, inasmuch as it brought into notice some prominent and highly favoured public performers. On Monday six races came off, but one only requires notice, viz. the stake in which a Derby outsider triumphed over Lord Stanley's flying mare, Escalade; a result that was altogether unexpected. Tuesday's racing was excellent, and not a little important, inasmuch as another Oaks favourite—Sister to Arkwright—was defeated. The Handicap was won, after a most exciting contest, by Lord Stanley's beautiful mare, Canezou. The only race of any significance on Wednesday was the Column Stakes, a nice little nibble of nearly £1000 for Colonel Peel, whose Derby nag, Tadmor, yclept "the Dumpling," had it all his own way. That terrible "dark" flyer, Nunnykirk, was expected to make mince-meat of his opponent on Thursday. The racing fall of fare for next week comprises the Bath and Catterick Meetings on Tuesday and Wednesday; and the Epsom Spring on Friday, when, besides many other stakes, the "Great Metropolitan Handicap" will come off. This will be a grand field-day for "pub icans and sinners." The Windsor Steeple-Chase will take place on Wednesday and Thursday; there will also be several in Ireland Altogether, a stirring week is expected.

LATEST BETTING AT NEWMARKET.

TWO THOUSAND GUINEA STAKES.

6 to 4 agst Nunnykirk | 7 to 2 agst Honeycomb

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

5 to 2 agst Canezou. | 9 to 1 agst Flatcatcher (t) | 14 to 1 agst Excentor
6 to 1 —— Pop-o'-day Boy | 16 to 1 —— Lizzy | 33 to 1 —— Cithara
13 to 1 —— Do the Boys
Cid-ma-for-a-Hero

15 to 1 agst Jessie Scott | 20 to 1 agst Lady Wildair | 25 to 1 agst Blucher
16 to 1 —— Chanticleer (t) | 20 to 1 —— Jealousy | 30 to 1 —— Pop-o'-day Boy
66 ditto

5 to 2 agst Flying Dutchman | 13 to 1 agst Honeycomb | 40 to 1 agst Fire King
6 to 1 —— Nunnykirk (t) | 20 to 1 —— Osmaston (t) | 2000 to 70 —— Velveteen (t)
11 to 2 —— Tadmor | | 1000 to 10 —— Normanton (t)

NEWMARKET CRAVEN MEETING. MONDAY.

THE HINCHINBROOK STAKES of 100 Sovs each, h ft

Col. Peel's Indus	.. .. ..	walked over
HANDICAP SWEEPSTAKES of 20 sov each, and only 5 if declared, &c.
Mr. Batson's Beauclerc, 4 yrs 7st 9lb	.. ..	(J. Sharp) 1
Duke of Bedford's Retail, 3 yrs, 8st 6lb	.. ..	(G. Mann) 2
Run 1 mile 52 sec.
HANDICAP SWEEPSTAKES of 25 Sovs each, 10 ft
Lord Clifden's Sagacity, 5 yrs, 8st 3lb	.. ..	(Flatman) 1
Col. Peel's Francesca, 4 yrs, 8st 9lb	.. ..	(G. Brown) 2
SWEEPSTAKES of 100 Sovs each, h ft
Duke of Bedford's Sobranie	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Lord W. Powlett's Fly Townshend	.. ..	(S. Rogers) 2
MATCH, 100, h ft. A. F. Mr. Verity's Diplomatist, 8st 12lb (F. Butler), beat Mr Gordon's Queen Mary, 7st 6lb (Flatman), by a head.

TUESDAY.

SWEEPSTAKES of 100 Sovs each, h ft.
Duke of Bedford's Quasimodo, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(Robinson) 1
Col. Anson's Knight Templar, 8st 10lb	.. ..	(F. Butler) 2
SWEEPSTAKES of 10 sovs each. The winner to be sold for 80 sovs if demanded.
Mr. Bilson's Treacharous, 3 yrs	.. ..	(E. Sharpe) 1
Mr. Shelly's Pincushion, 3 yrs 7st	.. ..	(F. Butler) 2
SWEEPSTAKES of 50 Sovs each.
Mr. R. N. Nevill's Lettitia, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Mr. Greville's Puffy	.. ..	(Flatman) 2
TUESDAY'S RIDDLESWORTH, of 200 Sovs each
Duke of Bedford's Sobranie	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Lord Chesterfield's Sir. to Arkwright	.. ..	(F. Butler) 2
NEWMARKET STAKES of 25 sovs each, 10 ft, and 5 only if declared, &c., with 200 added; the second to receive 100 sovs out of the stakes.
Lord Stanley's Canezou, 3 yrs 7st 7lb	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Sir J. Hawley's Fernhill, 4 yrs, 8st 10lb	.. ..	(Pearl) 2
WEDNESDAY.
SWEEPSTAKES of 100 sovs each.
Mr. S. Stanley's St. Ann, 4 yrs, 7st	.. ..	(Chapple) 1
Duke of Bedford's Saddle, 3 yrs, 8st 9lb	.. ..	(J. Butler) 2
DONCASTER CUP PLATE of £50
Duke of Bedford's Saddle, 5 years	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Lord Exeter's Bishop of Romford's Cob, aged	.. ..	(Bartholomew) 2
SWEEPSTAKES of 50 Sovs each h ft.
Duke of Bedford's Retail, 8st 12lb	.. ..	(Flatman) 1
Lord Exeter's Medea, 8st 10lb	.. ..	(Bartholomew) 2
CRAVEN STAKES of 50 Sovs each, h ft.
Colonel Peel's Tadmor, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(Flatman) 1
Lord Exeter's Grace, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(Bartholomew) 2
THURSDAY.
Fifty Pound Plate.
Capt. Lowther's Peccadillo	.. ..	(Dockeray) 1
Lord Exeter's Ulysses	.. ..	.. 2
SWEEPSTAKES of 100 sovs. each. D.M. 15 Subs.
Mr. A. Nichol's Nunnykirk, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Lord Orford's Fire King, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(Nat) 2
SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each, h ft.
Duke of Bedford's St. Rosalia, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Lord Exeter's Grace, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(Nat) 2
SWEEPSTAKES of 50 Sovs each, h ft
Mr. Gratwicke's Rochester, 8st 11b	.. ..	.. 1
Colonel Anson's Bon Bon, 8st 11b	.. ..	.. 2
THE OPTIONAL SELLING STAKES of 10 sovs each.
Mr. Gordon's Queen Mary, 5 yrs, 7st 7lb	.. ..	.. 1
Mr. Verity's Whitstone, 4 yrs, 7st 8lb	.. ..	.. 2

SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY.

THIS, one of the most important railway communications in the midland counties, was commenced in the month of June, 1846, and traverses a district unparalleled in agricultural and mercantile importance. It commences in the Wolmer meadows, midway between the Oakley and Barton Stations of the Birmingham and Derby portion of the Midland Railway. Running by the villages of Alrewas and Fradley, it joins, by a loop line, the London and North-Western, at the Trent Valley Station, at Lichfield; and also crossing it about a mile from Lichfield, approaches that city through a magnificent cutting by St. Michael's Church, entering the station, at a most picturesque point, in the very heart of the town. Thence it proceeds, by means of a handsome bridge, of which we annex an illustration, over St. John's-street. The design of this work is by Thomas Johnson, Esq., architect, and is in the antique gothic style. It is of white stone, presented by the Earl of Lichfield, and emblazoned with the 3 Royal and city arms; together with shields, containing several bishops' and other crests, designed and handsomely given by Richard Greaves, Esq.

Leaving the town and Beaudesert Hills on the right, it passes on an embankment by the romantic and beautiful Aldershaw; it is through the Pipe Hill cutting, to the village of Hammerwich; and by Cyfley Hays, through the vast coal fields of Brown Hills and Pelsall, to the town of Walsall, where it enters under Park street a very commodious station. The line then proceeds to this latchboat a mile, where it again joins the London and North-Western line, by means of which the Birmingham and Gloucester traffic is conveyed; and at the same place crosses the line, entering into the many tracts of the "black country," running by Wednesbury, Tipton, Darlaston, &c., to Dudley and Wolverhampton, and joining at these latter towns all the great Western and Welch lines communicating therewith.

The whole portion of the line between the Midlands and the London and North-Western Junction beyond Walsall is completed, and was inspected by Captain Wynne on the 1st of March; and the remaining part will be completed in August. The stations were designed by Mr Adams, of George-street, Westminster, and are of pleasing character. The line has been constructed under the direction of J. R. Maclean, Esq., engineer; Thomas Earle, Esq., contractor, and the whole executed in a manner that reflects the highest credit upon all parties concerned. The personal assistance of Richard Chawner, Esq., the Vice-Chairman of the company, has contributed in no small degree to the progress and admirable position of the undertaking

The portion of the line between Walsall and Alrewas (joining the Midlands) was opened to the public on Monday last, and the occasion celebrated at Lichfield with much éclat. The directors traversed the line and were met at the Lichfield Station by the Mayor (J. F. Dyott, Jun., Esq.) and Corporation, their robes of office, the High Sheriff, and officers of the city, preceded by the mace-bearers, with their two silver-gilt maces, presented to the Corporation by Charles II., and his brother, King James. Thence the party proceeded to the George Hotel, where a banquet was provided, and upwards of 150 persons dined. The Mayor presided at the principal table; and John Mort, Esq., officiated as Vice-Chairman. Amongst the company were the Earl Talbot; Viscount Lewisham, M.P.; Viscount Anson, M.P.; Viscount Ingestre, C. S. Forster, Esq. (chairman of the Directors); R. Chawner, Esq. (Deputy-Chairman); R. Green, Esq., Walsall, Esq., P. Williams, Esq., Captain Dyott, and J. Foster, Esq (Directors); J. R. Maclean, Esq., and J. Scaleman Esq (Engineers); the High Sheriff; Major Mackenzie, Colonel Bowyer; W. Mott, Esq., T. Johnson, Esq., Aldermen Lowndes, Steadily, and Higgins.

After the customary loyal toasts had been drunk, the Chairman said—The next toast on his list was the toast of the evening. It was, "The health of the Directors of the South Staffordshire Railway, that of their chairman, C. S. Forster, Esq., the deputy-chairman, R. C. Chawner, Esq., and success to their undertaking." (Applause.) To-day the first journey upon the line had been accomplished, and he had to congratulate the city and the neighbourhood for miles round upon possessing this excellent means of communication, valuable alike to the rich man and the poorest labourer. (Applause.) By it the poorest artisan from the manufacturing districts of the county the "black country," as it was frequently called—might escape into the green fields and pure air, and recreate his exhausted strength by visiting its agricultural portion. Indeed, he hoped to see the miner of Bilston and the artisan of Wednesbury with as ruddy faces as the peasantry living upon Cannock Chase. (Applause.) Indeed, this county, where every article of iron was manufactured, from a cannon-ball to a half-inch nail, might be deemed the California of England—(applause)—and all it needed was the means of sending forth its productions, which this railway would greatly afford. However, he wished not to run his engine past the station of discretion (laughter)—and therefore he at once gave them the health of the Directors of the South Staffordshire Railway. (Applause.)

SIGNORA PARODI, AS "NORMA," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

C. S. Forster, Esq., in acknowledging the toast, noticed that the line brought into communication the town of Burton, the city of Lichfield, and the town of Walsall, and adverted to the mutual advantages likely to arise. He also happily referred to the long-neglected but now well-known quotation from Dr. Darwin:—

> Soon shall thy arm, unconquer'd steam, afar
> Drag the slow barge, or drive the rapid car;
> Or on wide waving wings expanded bear
> The flying chariot through the fields of air; and remarked, that, with a degree of prescience truly wonderful, the Lichfield poet had ventured upon a prediction which was now fulfilled, and that within the walls of his own city, to the very letter. (Applause.)

The Chairman then proposed the "Members for South Staffordshire;" for which Lord Lewisham returned thanks, and concluded by proposing the health of the excellent chairman, the Mayor of Lichfield, which was drunk with three times three. The "Member for the City of Lichfield," the "Health of Earl Talbot," and the "Corporation of the City of Lichfield," were the next toasts.

Captain Dyott, after rattling at some length the advantages likely to arise to the district through which the railway passed, and stating that, unlike the Trent Valley, which owed its parentage to Manchester, and was brought to a birth by a celebrated nurse at Tamworth, who turned the first sod, the present line owed its existence to local patronage and support, proposed the health of Messrs. Maclean and Stileman, the engineers, and the officers of the company. Applause.)

After several other toasts had been drunk, the Mayor quitted the chair, and the meeting, which seemed to afford much gratification to every one present, broke up about seven o'clock.

☞The festivities of the day terminated with a Ball in the Town-Hall.

SIGNORA PARODI.

THE following is an outline of the history of this young artiste, the pupil and adopted daughter of Pasta, who made her début at Her Majesty's Theatre on Tuesday. She was born at Genoa, in 1827: her father is a retired and pensioned employé of the Sardinian Government. So early did she display natural musical gifts, that at twelve years of age she was placed by her parents at the Musical Institute at Genoa, under Maestro Celli; from which she was removed to the tuition of a professor of some celebrity in the same city, Maestro Degola. In 1844 she had exhausted the lore of these masters, and was taken by her mother to Milan, to study under Felice Ronconi. She had not been many days in the capital of Lombardy, when she happened to be heard at a private concert by the husband of Pasta, who was so struck by the resemblance of her vocal gifts to those of his renowned consort, that the following morning he hurried back to his villa at Como, to tell La Pasta that he had heard a young singer, in whom her voice and dramatic spirit were revived. Pasta repaired to Milan, to gratify the curiosity her husband had excited. Such an impression did the young musical pupil produce upon her, that she employed every means to persuade Madame Parodi to leave her daughter under her care, and return to her family at Genoa. Madame Parodi consented: Pasta took her daughter with her to her villa at Como, and from that time she became her pupil and adopted daughter. Felice Ronconi, it is true, having complained of being deprived of a pupil, from whose success he expected to derive an addition to his fame, she having been so suddenly withdrawn from him, Pasta could not resist his entreaties; but she returned with Parodi to Milan, and gave her lessons at the same time as her professor, and soon withdrew her once more to Como, where she remained a whole year, without returning to Milan. The young Parodi, who has four brothers and three sisters, anxious to contribute as soon as possible to the support of her father and mother, with their numerous family, determined to appear on the stage at the first opportunity. The Fiera di Bergamo, one of those united festivals of commerce and of music so peculiar to Italy, presented her the first opportunity of début; and Pasta, finding she could not prevent the departure of her adopted daughter, and retained at home by her domestic duties, on her leaving, conferred upon her all the ornaments she had worn when acting the fictive queens of lyrical tragedy —the tiara, zone, and girdle of Medea; the crown, the mantle, and golden sickle of Norma. Thus armed and encouraged, and heralded by the old friends of Pasta, Parodi's success at Bergamo was one of those scenes of fanatismo only beheld in Italy. From all quarters of the fatherland of song she received offers of engagement, and appeared successively at La Spezzia, at the Teatro Nuovo at Florence, and at the Argentina at Rome. From thence she was engaged for the Grand Opera at Palermo. Once there, so much did the Palermitans delight in her talents, that they made every offer imaginable to prevent her leaving their city and there she still lingered when the insurrection broke out. Obliged to take refuge, with the French Consul and other official persons, on board a Sardinian man-of-war in the roads, she remained for twenty-two days in the bay, witness of the continuous scene of warfare and destruction. It is a singular fact, characteristic of the overruling love of music amongst the Sicilians, that the same evening the citadel and the last bastion were taken by the insurgents, they sent a deputation to fetch Mdlle. Parodi, who that night sang Norma to an immense crowd of auditors, who had assembled to hear their favourite singer, although the streets were scarcely passable with the ruins that had fallen. The advance of the Royal army soon dispelled all dreams of peace and all pursuits of pleasure.

Mdlle. Parodi left Palermo to join her family once more; and, on her way, paid a visit to her adoptive mother, Pasta, at Como. There she found innumerable engagements—one, twice renewed, from Covent Garden, others from Spain, San Carlo at Naples, &c. But Mdlle. Parodi refused every offer, at that time being betrothed to the Duke de S——, whose family had resisted the marriage, and whose consent reached her at that moment. Subsequently, however, the disasters of Charles Albert, and the devastation of Italy by intestine war, opposed a new obstacle to this marriage. Mdlle. Parodi determined, for a time, to return to the stage, and accepted her present engagement at Her Majesty's Theatre. Mdlle. Parodi is 22 years of age; of stature above the middle size, her form and features are adapted to dramatic effect. She is an energetic actress, and an impassioned singer; and, as to her voice, its resemblance to that of the never to be forgotten Pasta is singularly striking. As regards Pasta, the interest with which this resemblance inspired her, induced her to write to her pupil numerous letters, which all who have had access to them have read with the deepest interest. They show how profoundly the great prima donna had investigated the resources of her twofold art, and how admirably she has always reasoned on its philosophy. They are written in Italian: we subjoin translated extracts:—

"My dear child,—I am transported with pleasure by the description given me of your most fortunate début. What delicious commotion you must feel in thinking of the happiness you are shedding in the minds of your good father and your family; this is the real reward which is found in our career, and truly it is a balm which falls from heaven, and leaves a remembrance the sweeter as time cannot efface it. Your successes has spread far and wide, for I have here by me the offers of engagement from Maestro Costa, Director of Covent Garden Theatre, in London; from the impresario of Naples and Barcelona, &c., which I keep until you arrive. Thou mayest imagine how agitated I was, were it only with thinking that you were going to England—that country which is so dear to me, which I love as my own fatherland. Oh, why am I not permitted to visit it once more before I die, and in thy company, my child? Now, I beg of thee, in thy letter, when thou hast tendered me the proofs of thy affection, to speak to me of thy progress—since, under the fostering warmth of applause, like plants in their genial natural temperament, talent developes all its beautiful energy—at least, when the soul is sound, and the mind virtuous, like thine. Such influences in you has increased the love of study, after which the inspirations are not only more beautiful and more prompt, but more truthful, and do not allow the sincere lyrical votary to fall into triviality.

"How happy I am to find that in practice, in the duo trials of the stage, thou hast adopted my precepts; that thou hast remembered that nature and truth must be of all things studied; and that thou hast been a severe judge, despising sycophancy and treacherous praise of all thou hast executed, vocally and dramatically. With what pain I have seen other young singers of greatest hope, in the hour of their maturity, fall into vocal and dramatic exaggeration—a poison which introduces itself into the whole lyrical system under the cover of false and unmerited applause, which cheats actors more readily, as it awakens all their self-love, and upsets their caution. They forget that, on the stage, as in society, it is far more important to study personal dignity, than to excite passing admiration by trickery. They abuse energy by grimace—they employ abrupt gestures and physical resources, which, if they may sometimes attract questionable and unrefleeting applause, disturb the full and truthful evolvement of the vocal organ—forgetting that the strongest dramatic expression can be rendered by the look, the countenance, and the hand. How deeply I feel these circumstances must be obvious, when thou remembereest that I abandoned my career, although it had been so fortunate, a few years before its natural termination, because I could not attain and preserve those beauties and excellences which render our art truly divine. Not all the sounds and tones I could command would express the depth of sentiment, the truth of passion, which I felt. Thus many phrases remained imperfect. I suffered deeply from this, and it appeared to me as if each day I was getting more distant from perfection. Now I am consoled, for I live in your triumphs."

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

MR. SPARROWE'S HOUSE, IPSWICH, SUFFOLK.

THIS fine old house, one of the most striking in its picturesque appearance to b met with perhaps in England, stands in the Butter Market, Ipswich. It seem from documentary evidence, and from the date, 1567, which occurs in the interior, that the house was built in that year by George Copping, and it was purchased of him by one of the ancestors of the present occupier, in 1670. The front of the house is about seventy feet to the extreme ends; and, from the overhanging story supported by bold corbels, springing from richly ornamented pilasters, between which are sunken panels sculptured with flowers, fruit, &c., and windows, a great variety of light and shade and picturesqueness of effect are produced. The second story has four bay windows in its front, and one looking into St. Stephens-lane; and on the front panels under the windows are carved representations of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, with their distinctive emblems; the side panels under the windows being also filled with sculptured work. The spaces between the windows are filled with carvings representing wreaths of roses, birds, animals, flowers, and other devices. On the side of the house in St. Stephen's-lane are wreaths of flowers, an Atlas supporting the globe, and a group representing a shepherd under a tree, surrounded by his flock, whilst another shepherd, hat in one hand and a crook in the other, and also having sheep around him, approaches the sitting figure. A wide projecting plasterm crowns the whole of the upper part of the front and ends, having a deeply moulded cornice, broken at intervals over the windows. Four attic windows, to correspond to the windows below, rise from the roof; and in their gables are bas-reliefs of Cupids playing. The rooms in the house are as richly decorated with carving and devices as the exterior. One room on the first floor extends the whole length of the building, and is lighted by the five bay windows. The ceiling is divided into compartments by massive beams of oak, the compartments being enriched by carvings of wreaths of flowers; and in the corners of the ceiling are shields, having the family crests. The dining-room has beautifully carved panelling of dark oak, the fire-place having wreaths of vine and fruits, with the arms of the Sparrowes in the centre. The beams of the ceiling, the doorway, &c., as well as the panels, are all richly carved. A bedchamber on the first floor also is in the same character of sculptured decoration. In the Church of St. Laurence is the family vault of the Sparrowes, on which is the quaint inscription over the door, "Nidus passerum"—"a nest of sparrows"! We are happy to add that the oak carving is in fine preservation.

SPARROWE'S HOUSE, IPSWICH.

THE SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY.—BRIDGE ACROSS ST. JOHN'S-STREET, LICHFIELD.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THE Messrs. Brough—who can claim the somewhat novel honour of having two burlesques running together at two popular theatres have chosen "The Sphinx" as their subject; and by making the great propounder of "guns to crack" of antiquity a sort of Egyptian Billy Black, for ever asking riddles, and devouring the unhappy elves who fail to answer them, have thrown a capital burlesque air over the old story. It was a good notion, famously worked out; and the principal character, in the hands of Mr. Keeley, becomes a great fact. His is assisted by Mrs. Keeley, as Mercury, who acts, in some measure, as Chorus; and Miss P. Horton, as Œdipus; and the fun these great artists in burlesque, aided also by Mr. James Bland, make amongst them, is first-rate.

It required much ingenuity to concoct even a one-act burlesque from the materials; but nothing can go off with greater spirit. The mere absurdity of the Sphinx's riddles which are not of the elaborate school that puzzled the ancient Thebans, with respect to the animal that walked on four legs in the morning, three at noon, and two at night, but of the more homely class of "When is a door not a door?" provokes roars of laughter, and the quaint manner in which this idea is turned to account in the "tag" of the piece brings down the curtain with loud demonstrations of enjoyment and approval. Indeed, the piece was soundly applauded throughout.

The dresses are very classical and effective, the make-up of the hero (for the Sphinx is here a "he") being perfect; the scenery admirably painted; and the rapid hits at topics of the day, showers of puns, and selection of popular music, exceedingly clever. To say that it was performed to the top of the tree is scarcely necessary. The present cast at the Haymarket includes certainly the best burlesque performers we have upon the stage. The extravaganza was announced for repetition every evening amidst unqualified applause; and the authors, being loudly called for, had to appear before the curtain to acknowledge the compliment thus paid to them by a crowded audience. They can take their places amongst the first burlesque writers of the day.

SCENE FROM "THE HOP-PICKERS," AT THE ADELPHI THEATRE.

Our Illustration portrays an incident in the fourth scene, where Œdipus enters at the head of a body of peasantry, whom he has armed against the Sphinx. The King is alarmed at the warlike "demonstration;" but Œdipus quiets his fears by assuring him that his "agitation" has been a peaceable one; and thus parodies in mock heroic style—such as Miss Horton alone can accomplish—the "Death of Nelson"—

> "'Twas in Trafalgar-square,
> (You've seen the fountains there,)
> This morn at half-past ten,
> I a meeting did convoke:
> For half an hour I spoke,
> Unto these gentlemen.
> I roused their pluck, and made them brave,
> Three cheers the gallant Thebans gave,
> And thought my speech a beauty.
> To fight the Sphinx then off we ran;
> And I expect that every man
> This day will do his duty."

This hit at one of the great events of 1849 was highly enjoyed by the audience and was re-demanded.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

The continued success of "The Hop-Pickers," and the farce of "Who Lives a No. 9?" rendered unnecessary the production of any Easter novelty; the manager, wisely resolving to let well alone. The only change is the reproduction of the "Enchanted Isle," the raciness of which is as heartily relished as ever.

"The Hop-Pickers" is a genuine Adelphi drama, with many excellent situations and incidents, very neatly put together; and its success is well merited by author, actors, and those concerned in producing the piece.

We have engraved the closing scene of the first act. In the centre of the picture, Venus (Madame Celeste), has recognised in Hester Leyton (Miss Woolgar) her long-lost sister; while Brian Cullen (Mr. O. Smith), a returned convict, discovers in Maurice Caroline (Mr. H. Hughes) the proprietor of the hop-grounds, and guardian of Hester, a former companion at the hulks, who, having escaped, has assumed respectability. On the opposite side, Radius Wright (Mr. Wright), who has joined the hop-picking party, is expressing his envy at the recognition, and wishing he also could find a sister as affectionate. The other characters are the party of hop-pickers, who are making merry on the occasion; some of the groupings, by the way, are very picturesque. The scene, painted by Pitt and Johnstone, is remarkably real and effective, reminding one of what appears but to have been of late years admitted by travellers that the hop-grounds of Kent exceed in luxuriant beauty the boasted vineyards of "the sunny South."

SCENE FROM THE NEW EXTRAVAGANZA OF "THE SPHINX," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

ROMAN ANTIQUITIES AT HEADINGTON, NEAR OXFORD

The remains of a Roman Villa, &c., which have recently been discovered near the above place, by Mr. Llewellyn Jewitt, local member of council of the British

ROMAN POTTERY FOUND AT HEADINGTON, NEAR OXFORD.

Archæological Association, are situated at a distance of about three-quarters of a mile to the west of the Roman road leading from Alcester to Dorchester; and the foundations at present excavated lie in the two parishes of Headington and

ROMAN POTTERY FOUND AT HEADINGTON.

Elsfield. From the earthworks and foundations the remains appear to be of considerable extent; and in the partial excavations which have at present been carried on, some massive walls of solid masonry, a small bath lined with a red-dish-coloured plaster, and a room measuring fourteen feet by ten feet six inches, likewise plastered, and having a concrete floor, have been laid bare, and many interesting relics brought to light. Amongst these are a beautiful little globular bell of bronze, highly ornamented; the umbo of a shield, in an excellent state of preservation: two bone pins; some implements of iron; several iron nails of various forms and sizes; a few coins; fragments of glass vessels and window-glass; some horns and bones; flue, drain, and other tiles; stone roofing slates; pottery &c.

ments exhibit examples of most of the known varieties—from the fine red glazed ware, usually called Samian, down to the coarser description of the home manufactured vessels. Our Illustrations exhibit some of the forms restored from fragments in Mr. Jewitt's possession. In the large glazed ware the centre vessel is of a coarse red ware; and fragments of several other nearly similar pots have been found. The indented vase to the right is formed of a very thin, fine, light grey material, and is of an elegant shape. The one to the left is of a coarish hand corner, is a Samian patera. The vessel lying down to the left is coarse, and but slightly baked

In the smaller engraving, the front vessel (No. 1) has the inside studded with fragments of quartz. Of this description of pottery, portions of upwards of forty vessels have already been found, of various forms and colours, ranging in sizes found by Mr. Artis in the Durobrivæ Potteries; and several other interesting examples of early Settle art.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Connexion of Mr. Roebuck's Family with Sheffield.—The Sheffield Times says:—Mr. John Arthur Roebuck, our member elect, is connected with this town by a relationship both [illegible] was a merchant and banker. He lived in the house now occupied as the Rotherham and Sheffield Bank, and he bought the farms at Meersbrook, and built the house for the residence of the Misses Shore. He afterwards sold this house to Mr. Shore, and went to live at Bath, where he continued to reside until his death. Dr. Roebuck had two sons and one daughter. The sons both died bachelors and dentally fell off his chair, when his stock (which were then worn very thick and strong) got fast upon the corner of the fender, and he was strangled before his friend suspected that anything was wrong. He was the first person who brought an umbrella to Sheffield, and was hooted in the streets when he used it. The daughter was married to the late Colonel Fenton, who afterwards carried on the business in Sheffield under him of Roebuck and Fenton, although there was no Roebuck in the house at the time Dr. Roebuck, who in 1790 had established iron-works in Sheffield, left this town, and undertook the superintendence of the Carron Iron-Works, on the Clyde. He had two sons. One of them went out to Canada, married a Canadian, and Mr John Arthur Roebuck is his son. Mr. J. A. Roebuck was sent over to England by the French Canadians. [illegible] Falconer, of that place, whose mother was a sister of Mr. Edmunds, of Worsbrough, near Barnsley.

Financial and Parliamentary Reform.—On Tuesday, a meeting of gentlemen took place in the Leaguo Rooms, Manchester, to hear a report of the proceedings which had been taken by the executive since the great meeting in the Free Trade Hall, at the commencement of the year. Mr. G. Wilson took the chair, and in opening the proceedings addressed the meeting at some length, stating that since the meeting, which was held on the 1st of February, a committee had been sent through most of the English counties, the replies to which had brought a great number of addresses to the objects of the proposed association. He stated also, that, from the correspondences which had already taken place, it had been found that a large number of associations had been established, having [illegible] financial and parliamentary reform. He alluded to the Provincial [illegible] throughout the country, the representation of the counties would speedily be in other hands. The meeting was subsequently addressed by Mr Bright, M.P., Mr Ashworth, Mr Prentice, Mr Walker, Mr [illegible] Esq., all of whom expressed approval of the proceedings so far, and urged further action. It was moved by Mr. Bright, seconded by Mr. Kershaw, and carried unanimously, "That the report which has been made be approved by the meeting, and that steps be immediately taken to promote the objects of the association, and that this meeting be adjourned for one month." The meeting was private.

The Boston Corporation and their Debts.—The Lords of the Treasury have agreed to the memorial of the Boston Corporation, and given them permission to sell such of their property as they deem necessary to pay off a debt of £20,000 contracted by the old corporation, and which falls due in June, 1850. The corporation have chosen a quantity of property they hold in the [illegible] returning about 2 per cent. on the actual value, and which, owing to the state of their funds, they are debarred from improving. As they can [illegible] pay a 4 per cent. for the borrowed money, it will be at once seen that the sale will effect a great relief to the borough funds, and the corporation anticipate, as soon as the matter is settled, that they will be able to do without any further borough rate.

Church and State.—After a long discussion on the union of church and state, the town-council of Dundee have resolved, by a majority, to appoint a committee to [illegible]

[illegible] magistrates of the West Riding of Yorkshire, and gentlemen connected with the management of the turnpike roads thereon, was held at the Court House, Wakefield, pursuant to a resolution or understanding come to last week at the General [illegible]

[illegible] bill, was submitted by the Rev. J. A. Rhodes, moved by Henry Wickham Wickham, Esq., seconded by Col. Plumbe Tempest, and adopted with only one dissentient—Randall Hatfield, Esq. The petition was then signed by most of the gentlemen present, and ordered to be forwarded to Edmund Denison, Esq., for presentation to the House of Commons, the other representatives of the riding and its township being requested to support the prayer thereof.

[illegible] P. Osborne, Esq., cost from £11,000 to £13,000; and a large sum is now being laid out in fitting it for the present purpose. Its original title, "The Victoria," has been changed to "Essex Hall."

Unexpected Banking Bank.—Under this title the Liverpool Mercury says:—[illegible] already held was entitled to £150 a year by the scale as to population. The circular replied that he had never received more than £100. Whereupon the noble patron wrote to the rector to know the reason how he ought to proceed, and ordered the paying up of all arrears, £950, with interest, the whole amounting to above £1400—a handsome fortune to the poor clergyman, who is also to receive his full salary in future. It has therefore occasion to rejoice in having unconsciously saved a pretty little property, which, if received during the whole time, might have gaded out of his possession almost imperceptibly.

Highway Robbery at Cambridge.—The inhabitants of Cambridge have of late been frequently startled by audacious highway robberies, and another occurred on Friday night week, characterised by great brutality. As Mr. Josephus Glover, B.A., of St. John's College, was returning from Grantchester, about 10 o'clock, a tall ruffian, standing by a gate, struck him with great violence with a tremendous bludgeon across the forehead, which laid it open; he seized the fellow by the throat, but another one, as yet unseen, [illegible] by the collar behind, forced his knee in his back, and pulled him [illegible] state position, while the first one beat their victim with the bludgeon. He guarded the blows with his arm, which is now for a time rendered useless, and one blow laid his eye open; they then threw him wholly on the ground, tore his watch from his [illegible] [illegible] as were taken into custody, and Mr. Glover immediately [illegible] they live at Grantchester. Their names are Hayes and Wilson known [illegible] well as them standing near the place where the robbery was committed a few minutes before it took place. Committed for trial.

Turn-out of Factory Hands at Stalybridge.—The agitation which has been going on for many weeks past at Stalybridge, amongst the [illegible] those left behind attending to their frames in their absence. The shifts are so [illegible] managed, however, that the extra minding of frames does not extend to more than an hour per day for each person; and the hands are, by this system, enabled to make twelve hours' wages. Against this system the hands of the two mills above named—two of the largest mills in the neighbourhood—[illegible] more decisive step, on Wednesday week, of leaving off at eight, so soon as ten hours from the opening of the mill to the morning had expired. The consequence was, that, on Thursday morning, when the workpeople presented themselves to resume labour, they found the doors closed against them. On seeing the managers, they were informed that the mills would be opened on the following Tuesday morning to the hands, if they chose to resume work, but, if not, they would be again closed. They are to have the option, however, each six [illegible] on the ensuing Monday to work with relays, went to the mill in the morning, but refused to commence the relay system. They were again at breakfast time, and found the mill locked up.

The Murderous Rush.—The following particulars have been published:—The prisoner, on being conducted to his cell after the trial soon re[illegible] [illegible] and I suppose I must do; but should the man who really committed the murders come forward and avow it himself, do you think that I shall be released?" Again he remarked, "Well, upon such evidence, had I been the jury, I should certain y have returned the same verdict." Remaining silent for a few minutes, he added "But am I really to be buried within the prison? Will they not allow my friends to have a [illegible] [illegible] the gaol, the prisoner retired to rest, and slept soundly, or, as it is said, "pretended to do so," during the whole of the night. In the morning he resumed his remarks upon the trial, arguing in favour of his innocence, and, as the reporters were informed, "seemed fully prepared to leave it out." So great was the desire in this country to obtain particulars of the trial, that no less than four "extraordinary" numbers of the Norwich Mercury were sold in great numbers.

The Liverpool Murders.—The inquiry into the circumstances connected with the death of Mary Parr, who died at the Southern Hospital on Thursday, was held on Saturday morning last, at the Court-house, Kirk laid. The inquest took place in the room in consequence of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

NEW BOOKS, &c.

TRIAL and CONVICTION of RUSH.—This Day is published, price Sixpence, a FULL REPORT of TRIAL of RUSH, and every Particular relative to the Shrubhill Hall Murders. With many E

Publis' 47, Ware

This day is published, price [illegible], post free, Sixpence,

THE SCIENCE of LIFE; or, How to Live, and What to Live For. With ample rules for the

[illegible]

WHAT to OBSERVE; or, the Traveller's Remembrancer. By COLONEL JACKSON. "This volume may be declared a library in itself."—Literary Gazette. "For all persons [illegible] how to qualify himself to be an intelligent tra-

[illegible]

Now ready, pri

THE ANNUAL MISCELLANY for 1849

Contains a Poem of the Year

[illegible]

THE DRAWING-ROOM QUADRILLES, as

[illegible]

THE ROYAL ENGINEER POLKA. Price 3s. By a YOUNG LADY. To be had at Mr

[illegible]

MASANIELLO. Solo Flute. The FAVORITE

[illegible]

Boosey, Norton, and 10 other [illegible] 30 stamps. Catalog [illegible] one door from Cheapside.

MDLLE. JENNY LIND'S TWO BALLADS, "The Lonely Rose," composed by M. W. Balfe, and "Take this Lute," composed by J. Benedict, written by E. Fitzball. These ar

[illegible] Mdlle. Lind. Also, New Duets and [illegible] Maria Hawes," composed by M. W.

[illegible]

NEW WORK FOR LADIES' [illegible]

[illegible] lished, price [illegible] description of

[illegible] by commencing with the Fashions [illegible] This day is pub[illegible]ed, a Striking Novelty in Crochet price Sixpence

[illegible] edition, price [illegible] with [illegible]

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY. By JAMES CORNWELL, PH.D

[illegible]

[illegible] its details, so comprehe[illegible] the [illegible] of Mr C[illegible]

[illegible]

A SCHOOL ATLAS, consisting of 30 beautifully executed maps on sixteen imperial sheets, each of several hundred places, with their latitude and longitude, and the accentuation and pronunciation of all different names.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; HAMILTON, ADAMS, and Co.

[illegible]

THE HAND-BOOK of HYDROPATHY. [illegible] Practical [illegible] Priessnitz. By Dr. J. [illegible]

[illegible]

HOMŒOPATHY in ACUTE DISEASES, [illegible] M.R.C.S. [illegible] to the New S[illegible]

[illegible]

DU BARRY on INDIGESTION, a Popular Treatise, with numerous cases pro[illegible]

[illegible]

READING and BOOK-[illegible] Now ready—Part [illegible]

A NEW PLAN for READING and BOOK SOCIETIES THROUGHOUT [illegible]

[illegible]

TO BOOKBUYERS, &c.—SAVILL'S [illegible] Theology, Classics, and General Literature, at very [illegible] which may be had postage free, on application. A Catalogue of 2000 Greek and Latin Classics Translations, &c., on receipt of two stamps.—39, High Holborn

READING and BOOK SOCIETIES must [illegible] that they can purchase but a very small proportion of the New Works that appear; they are, therefore, very generally adopting the plan detailed in a Hand-book recently Published, entitled, "Hints for the Formation of Read[illegible]

[illegible]

CHEAP MUSIC.—[illegible] Music bound and classed in [illegible]

[illegible] Catalogues, 2d., on receipt of two s[illegible]

JUST ARRIVED, a large importation of very [illegible] MARQUETERIE LOO TABLES, of the choicest design; also occasionals, and ball work-tables, for beauty unsurpassed, and the quality most reasonable. To be seen in the show Rooms of RICHARD A. C. LOADER, 24, Pavement, Finsbury, London. An [illegible] is most respectfully solicited.—Note the address

IRON BEDSTEADS and CHILDREN'S [illegible] Iron Bedsteads, with dove-tail joints, without screws

[illegible]

PATENT GALVANIC PENS.—The steel [illegible] makes them soon useless by [illegible]

[illegible] Sold by all Stationers, Rockseller-[illegible] and at the patentees RICHARD MOSE[illegible]

GOLD PENS.—RICHARD MOSELEY and Co.'s Gold Pens still maintain their character as the [illegible] that have yet been introduced. Their lasting qualities are no[illegible] The wri[illegible] gained with a Pen which n[illegible] ease as of the qui[illegible] and pleasantly [illegible] the ordinary pe[illegible] possibly or the [illegible] Sold by all Statio[illegible] Manu[illegible]

THE NEW UMBRELLA-[illegible] [illegible] guinea the [illegible] width, warranted [illegible] either to wash or clean. Patterns free to all parts [illegible] and M. WOOD, 108 to 110, Whitechapel-road.

MR. EDWARD GAVAN, Surgeon Dentist, [illegible] to his patrons and friends and the public [illegible]

NATURALIZATION [illegible] ALIENS [illegible] nations [illegible]

HATHERSICH, [illegible]

THE CONCERTINA LASTLY PERFECTED, [illegible] have a guinea or six months' trial may [illegible] £4 4s to £10 10s. Instruments Ex[illegible]

FRAUDULENT IMITATION [illegible] MORtality Pre[illegible]

[illegible]

JOHNSON and CO.'S SILVER LEVER [illegible] Watches [illegible] and are w[illegible]

[illegible]

ELECTRO SILVER PLATED SPOONS and FORKS, of the [illegible] doubt [illegible] Gracechurch-street, London.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES, A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, 9, Cornhill, Lond[illegible] 5 th [illegible] and shou[illegible]

[illegible] and the prices are Fou[illegible] or, in Gold Ca[illegible]

MUSICAL BOXES, A[illegible] [illegible] 8 airs, a no[illegible] or prices, is [illegible] ble, on application [illegible] J. Cornhill, next d[illegible]

ORNAMENTAL CLOCKS.—Recently [illegible] a number of FOURTEEN-DAY [illegible] Marble, and [illegible] a fine [illegible]

HANDSOME GOLD WATCHES, jewelled [illegible] with substantial power, and all the modern im[illegible]rovements, at elegantly engraved cases, for £5 15s. Also, highly finished Silver Watches, engraved dials &c., with movements equal to the above, for £2 5s. A written warranty given. Old gold, plate, and watches purchased or taken in exchange.—[illegible] 224, High Holborn, one of the oldest [illegible] houses in the [illegible] serve. The only Watchmakers and Jewellers in London of that name.

ELEGANT PRESENTS.—SARL and SONS, [illegible] fitted cases [illegible] a beautiful Morocco [illegible] dial, and the extremely [illegible] and other presents

SARL'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE.—SARL and SONS, 18, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, have finished a large and splendid [illegible] of SPOONS and FORKS to every variety of pattern. The [illegible] extensive premises for the [illegible] enable them to afford a constant supply impossible, S. and Sons take this [illegible]

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A [illegible] [illegible] gold Dial, [illegible]

ATKINS and COMPANY, Cutlers, Manufacturers, and [illegible] 11, Ludgate-hill, [illegible]

COUNTY FIRE OFFICE, 50, Regent-street, and No. 2, [illegible] Cornhill. It is respectfully notified to parties holding policies in this Office, the renewals of which fall due at Lady-Day, that the same should be [illegible] before the 5th of April. The receipts are lying at the head [illegible]

Insured, and the security to a large sum of [illegible] Annuities. All claims are settled with promptitude and liberality. Full particulars will be immediately furnished to parties applying personally, or by post, to the head office, or to any of its agents who are appointed in all the principal towns of the United Kingdom.

JOHN A. BEAUMONT, Man[illegible]

EDUCATION.—To INVALIDS [illegible] GENTLEMAN wishes to take [illegible] hire, and thoroughly study of the [illegible] and would [illegible] side, as it is in a most healthy and respectable part of London, [illegible] some Boarding scholars. The best masters amongst the faculty are always to be called in at a few minutes' notice. The highest references will be given. Terms, 80 guineas per annum. Apply, personally or by letter, to Mr. CHARLES MONTAGUE, 3, Gay advertiser would have no objection to accommodate a gentleman.—Terms, £100 per annum.

WHARFEDALE HYDROPATHIC ESTABLISHMENT and HOTEL, at BEN RHYDDING, [illegible] near Leeds.

[illegible] the comf[illegible]

[illegible] The Rooms [illegible] tastefully laid out, [illegible] of the Establish[illegible] and offer an [illegible] CHARGE [illegible] Introductory [illegible]

[illegible]

The above ch[illegible]

TO LADIES, INVALIDS, & SEA [illegible]

[illegible] and [illegible] New bond street, London.

PIANOFORTES, the best of every description, English and Foreign, for SALE and HIRE, at CRAMER, [illegible]

PIANOFORTE [illegible] A Boudoir Grand, Rose[illegible]

PIANOFORTES [illegible]

LONDON PIANOFORTE MART, 76, [illegible]

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE [illegible] from [illegible]

THE NEW PATENT CALISTHENIC CHEST EXPANDER, invented b[illegible] [illegible] observes that each instrument is [illegible] on the inventor

GIBBINS'S CREAM of ROSES and FROST [illegible] on it falling

SATIN SHOES, Black or White, [illegible]

KING and SHEATH, 264, Regent-street. Patterns sent (postage free) to any part of the Kingdom.

PARASOLS, Wholesale and Retail, SANGSTER [illegible]

The New Registered

BROCADED POULT DE SOIES, at 37s 6d and £2 12s 6d the full dress.

THE QUEEN'S MOURNING.—Our Gracious Queen has given her immediate patronage to [illegible]S LACE, and has constantly worn it. It would therefore be a courtly compliment in those ladies attending her Majesty's concerts to appear in it at the approaching Presentations. It can only be procured of her Majesty's principal Lacemen, who is the sole possessor of it, that [illegible] less than half the original prices, at No. [illegible] Oxford-street.

LADIES' RIDING HABITS.—The Nobility [illegible] and [illegible] are supplied with [illegible] secure a perfect fitting Habit [illegible] Very Rich Glacé and Fancy Poult de Soies, at 25s the full dress. The Richest Quality, at 35s the full dress. Address [illegible]

KING and SHEATH, 264, Regent-street. Patterns sent (postage free) to any part of the Kingdom. [illegible] Regent-street.

LADIES' RIDING HABITS.—W. FORD [illegible]

BONNETS, PARISIAN MILLINERY, To [illegible] [illegible] price, and the largest [illegible] ever [illegible] from Paris [illegible] unstitchable White Straws, the most [illegible] [illegible] Bonnet [illegible] and equally [illegible] 30 Cranbourn [illegible]

WEDDING and GENERAL OUTFITS. JOHN CAPPER and SON, 69, Gracechurch-street, [illegible] have added, a SANATORIUM for LADIES' READY-MADE LINEN, [illegible] under female superintendence. Ball [illegible] [illegible] Immediately ready-made Linen, of acknowledged taste. Parcels above £5 sent carriage free, per rail, throughout England. LISTS, with PRICES, sent to ladies on application.

OPENING of BEECH and BERRALL'S [illegible] 63 and 64, EDWARD [illegible] [illegible] at no other estab[illegible]

[illegible] and Spain-fields [illegible] Upwards of a thousand ready-made Silk Shirts, with three to five Scarves and purple cashmere, all for the season, commencing at 27s 9d, 30s Paisley and Prince's Plaid Shawls, at 12s 9d—nothing was ever [illegible] and equal to these goods under 21s to 25s

It [illegible] impossible to detail the many [illegible] closed this spring; it is to say, we have an unlimited Stock of all that is elegant and useful [illegible]

1700 pieces of the riche[illegible] [illegible] 42d and 63d per yard. Purple [illegible] [illegible] 54d per pair, Good [illegible]

THE REGISTERED PALETOT is Now Ready for the Spring [illegible] with all improvements enabled, in [illegible] bears the name [illegible]

IT is impossible to detail in an ordinary Advertisement the many advantages appertaining to MOSS'S MORNING CO[illegible]

HOMŒOPATHIC PATIENTS [illegible] DI[illegible] [illegible] grocers and tea dealers in the neighbourhood, and [illegible] by TAYLOR BROTHERS, at their Mills, Brick-lane and Wentworth street, London.

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWING-ROOM, LIBRARY, and DINI[illegible] [illegible]

SHEETS WHITE [illegible] SONS [illegible]

FOLDS LINEN SHEETS, [illegible] which will fit [illegible] all their perfect

SIX VERY STRONG SHEETS [illegible] 24s.

HEMS MARKING INK, [illegible] Lettering [illegible] in this [illegible] Inks gradua[illegible]

GOOD FEMALE SERVANTS are [illegible] obtained [illegible]

HOUSEKEEPERS may avoid [illegible] by [illegible]

CHEAP WASHING, [illegible] and Linen.—[illegible] wash can be done in [illegible]

CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES [illegible] for [illegible]

LADIES [illegible] to [illegible]

VARICOSE VEINS.—SURGICAL [illegible] [illegible]

RUPTURES.—TO MECHANICS.—PATENT LEVER TRUSS is the best invented. The pad is small and exactly to fit the [illegible] the finest steel spring, a soft bandage is [illegible] so to avoid detection. Upwards of 400 of th[illegible]

NO SUFFOCATION!—Had one of AR[illegible] NOTT'S PATENT VENTILATING VALVES been fixed at [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

SUPPOSED APPEARANCE OF THE GREAT SEA-SERPENT, FROM H. M. S. "PLUMPER," SKETCHED BY AN OFFICER ON BOARD.

THE GREAT SEA SERPENT.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

H.M.S. Plumper, Portsmouth Harbour, April 10, 1849.

NOT having seen a sketch of the extraordinary creature we passed between England and Lisbon, and being requested by several gentlemen to send you the rough one I made at the time, I shall feel much obliged by your giving it publicity in your instructive and amusing columns.

On the morning of the 31st December, 1848, in lat. 41° 13′ N., and long. 12° 31′ W., being nearly due west of Oporto, I saw a long black creature with a sharp head, moving slowly, I should think about two knots, through the water, in the north-westerly direction, there being a fresh breeze at the time, and some sea on. I could not ascertain its exact length, but its back was about twenty feet if not more above water; and its head, as near as I could judge, from six to eight. I had not time to make a closer observation, as the ship was going six knots through the water, her head E. half S., and wind S.S.E. The creature moved across our wake towards a merchant barque on our lee-quarter, and on the port tack. I was in hopes she would have seen it also. The officers and men who saw it, and who have served in parts of the world adjacent to whale and seal fisheries, and have seen them in the water, declare they have neither seen nor heard of any creature bearing the slightest resemblance to the one we saw. There was something on its back that appeared like a mane, and, as it moved through the water, kept washing about; but before I could examine it more closely, it was too far astern.—I remain, yours very truly,

A NAVAL OFFICER.

[We have engraved our Correspondent's sketch, which coincides with one forwarded to the Lords of the Admiralty previous to the return of H.M.S. Plumper.—ED.]

ELIZA CHESTNEY.

THE excellent conduct of Eliza Chestney in aiding the ends of justice at the trial of Rush, the murderer, has called forth a simultaneous expression of sympathy for her suffering, and admiration of her heroic fidelity, from many of our contemporaries, and more emphatically by the Norwich journals.

The Norwich Mercury says:—"This most faithful and courageous woman, an example to all classes, and particularly to those of her own class, had, we understand, felt a proper desire to give her testimony without regard to her own personal safety. However this feeling could not be otherwise than respected, its indulgence of course depended upon her state. Fortunately, that state was sufficiently satisfactory to enable her medical attendant to permit her to give evidence, and a bed was constructed, to be carried by men in a manner similar to that of a sedan chair, with a canopy and curtains. On Wednesday afternoon the wounded girl left that hall, the scene of so much guilt and so much mourning, for Norwich. In this palanquin she was carried by two men, with relays at certain places, and at every forty yards a slight stop was made, for the double purpose of rest to the carriers and for the convenience of the patient. A body of county police accompanied the invalid, and at Hartford-bridge the cortège was met by a large body of city police, under the direction of Mr. Yarrington, in case any rush of persons should have collected. These formed a line ahead and behind the county police, who marched at the side and directly across the road at a distance from the main body, and thus prevented any evil from eager curiosity or improper conduct. Thus did Eliza Chestney enter Norwich to aid in the great purposes of legal and moral justice. Its effect upon those who saw this particularly interesting procession—and we have heard several speak of it, women both of high and low position—was the same; a sensation of faintness, but also of deep feeling, almost amounting to silent prayer for the safety of one whose devotedness to her mistress more than amply compensates for, if it cannot hide, the shame which attaches to the county for the great guilt of the perpetrator. Thus passed the procession to the house of Mrs. Watson, opposite the Shire-hall, where rooms had been secured—a procession which long will be remembered, and would be no uninteresting and certainly a worthy subject for the pencil of the artist, as the 'entry of the good and faithful servant.'"

A Norwich artist has sketched for our Journal this touching scene.

We are gratified to learn from the Norfolk Chronicle that it is proposed by several of the inhabitants of the county to mark their respect for Eliza Chestney by raising for her a subscription, to be opened at Messrs. Gurneys and Co.'s, and Messrs. Harveys and Hudson's, bankers, Norwich. The money will be invested in the names of the Earl of Leicester, Lord Wodehouse, and Mr. T. B. Proctor, who have consented to act as trustees. The following are among the names already received:—Earl of Leicester, £10; Hon. Edward Coke, £5; Mr. W. Bagge, M.P., £5; Lord Huntingfield, £5; the Bishop of Norwich, £10, the Dean, £5; Lord Hastings, £5; Mr. Berney Petre, £5; Sir W. B. Proctor, Bart., £5; Lord Wodehouse, £5; Earl of Orford, £5; Earl Cadogan, £5; Mr. William Burroughes, £2; Colonel H. Fitzroy, £5; Sir M. Dunnah, £2; Rev Canon Wodehouse, £2; Sir John Boileau, £5; the Mayor of Norwich, £2, Mr. T. B. Proctor, £3; Sir Jacob Preston, £4. Her Majesty has intimated her intention of lending her assistance to the unfortunate girl, and has directed a communication to be forwarded to the county magistrates, requesting to be informed how her Majesty's pleasure may be most effectually carried into operation.

ELIZA CHESTNEY CARRIED ON A LITTER TO THE COURT-HOUSE AT NORWICH, AT THE RECENT TRIAL OF RUSH.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE.

Frederick Hayes Whymper, of Trinity College, has been elected to one of the Classical Scholarships founded by Lord Craven. The electors stated that William Owen, of St. John's College, acquitted himself in such a manner as to be deserving of special commendation.

THE ADAMS PRIZE.—The fund raised by several members of St. John's College, for the purpose of founding a prize, to be called the Adams' Prize, has been accepted by the University. The prize is to be given for an Essay on some subject of Pure Mathematics, Astronomy, or other branch of Natural Philosophy. It will be given once in two years, and is open to the competition of all persons who have at any time been admitted to a degree in this University. The Examiners give notice that the subject for the first Prize is—"The theory of the long inequality of Uranus and Neptune, depending on the near commensurability of their mean motions." The essays must be sent in to the Vice-Chancellor on or before the 1st of July, 1850. The successful candidate will receive about £130. He is required to print the Essay at his own expense, and to present a copy to the University Library, to the Library of St. John's College, and to each of the four Examiners.

B.A. EXAMINATION, 1851.—Notice has been given, that, in addition to the fixed subjects for examination for the degree of B.A., the following are selected for the year 1851:—1. The last fourteen chapters of the Acts of the Apostles. 2. St. Paul's Second Epistle to the Corinthians. 3. "Medea" of Euripides. 4. Forty-fourth book of Livy. 5. The first and second books, and the first and second parts of the third book of Paley's "Moral Philosophy."

TYRWHITT'S HEBREW SCHOLARSHIPS.—The examination for these Scholarships will take place on the second Wednesday in May next.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.—The next general meeting of the society will be held on Tuesday, the 17th inst.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS.—The one hundred and forty-eighth anniversary of the society will be celebrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, on Monday, the 21st of May. Divine service will commence at half-past three o'clock. The sermon will be preached by the Bishop of Lichfield.

ETON.—The following is the result of the examination for the Newcastle Scholarship:—1. Lewis (Scholar); 2. Freemantle, ma. (Medallist); 3. Herbert.

BISHOP OF PRINCE RUPERT'S LAND.—The Rev. David Anderson, formerly Vice-Principal of St. Bees' College, has been appointed to the newly created Bishopric of Prince Rupert's Land, including the whole territory of the Hudson's Bay Company.

The Reverend Richard H. Podmore, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, has been appointed Chaplain Priest in the church at Ottery St. Mary, Devon.

THE ROYAL HOSPITALS.—On Monday, the Lord Bishop of Lichfield preached the first Spital sermon at Christ Church, Newgate-street; and on Tuesday last, the Rev. S. R. Catley, Chaplain to the Lord Mayor, preached the second sermon before the right Hon. the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen, and Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. A beautiful Easter anthem was sung on both occasions by the boys of Christ Hospital.

THE PRUSSIANS AND THE DANES AT LEITH.—On Thursday evening (last week) a skirmish took place between the Danish and Prussian sailors connected with the vessels at present in Leith Docks belonging to those two countries. The colours were pulled down from one of the Prussian vessels, and, but for the prompt and effectual interference of the police, it is probable that a serious encounter would have taken place between the belligerents, in their absurd zeal to participate in the quarrels which unhappily exist between Denmark and Prussia. Some of the most active promoters of the disturbance, says the Scotsman of Saturday, were taken into custody, and brought up before Bailie Ford, and fined in sums varying from 5s. to 20s. each. On the following night an attempt was made to renew the hostilities of the previous evening, but, by the intervention of the police and special constables, this was fortunately prevented.

THE STATE PRISONS AND NEW BARRACKS AT THE TOWER.—The celebrated Beauchamp Tower, which has for a long period been used as a messhouse for the officers of the garrison, will shortly be thrown open to the public. The Beauchamp Tower was the prison-house of the unfortunate Lady Jane Grey, the Earl of Essex, Sir William Wallace, the hero of Scotland; and at one period contained two Sovereigns as prisoner, viz. James of Scotland and the King of France. The new and splendid barracks, which have been erected upon the site of the disastrous fire which took place some years ago, are now occupied by the men of the 2nd battalion of the Coldstream Guards. The officers' quarters are not yet completed.

AN UNFORTUNATE FAMILY.—The family of Mary Ann Staight, the poor girl for whose murder Pulley suffered the last penalty of the law, on Monday week, at Worcester gaol, has (says the Gloucester Journal) been almost destroyed by fatalities. Sarah Staight, the mother of the girl, was tossed by a cow over a hedge near the spot where her daughter was murdered, and died of the injuries she sustained. This woman had two brothers, one of whom, a gamewatcher on the estates of the late Earl of Coventry, was killed at Pirton by a gang of poachers some years since. Richard Staight, the other brother, was killed by a wall falling on him. The murdered girl's grandmother died three days before Pulley's execution.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1849.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 367.—Vol. XIV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1849. [Sixpence.

PRINCE ALBERT'S VISIT TO LINCOLNSHIRE.

France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Russia—almost the whole of Continental Europe—is either involved in popular commotions, or engaged in the unwelcome, but needful, task of defending order against the excesses of the Revolutionary tornado. Their mobs or their soldiers, their insurrections or their armaments, occupy the thoughts and employ the energies both of rulers and people. In the endeavour to establish new, or to maintain old, systems of Government, the ordinary pursuits of life, though not abandoned, are greatly neglected. The danger that menaces them is imminent, and requires great sacrifices to confront it. In our happier position, in this country, the case is different. We, also, have our social problems to solve; our political questiones vexatæ to debate; the demands of ultra-Democracy to argue, to postpone, to deny, or to repress; our difficulties to meet and overcome; and our high position to hold among the great nations of the world. But the steady character of our people, the invincible common-sense of all classes, our industrious habits, our enterprising and speculative turn of mind, and our conviction that, bad as our system of Government may be in some respects, it is infinitely superior to any other that exists around us for the blessings of real liberty which it confers upon the people generally, have secured tranquillity for us, whilst all around us has been disturbed. We have continued our daily work, while the rest of the world has been busy with street or field fighting; we have traded as usual, while fears of social commotion or foreign warfare have cramped the energies of commerce everywhere else; and have produced wealth, while less fortunate nations have been compelled not only to cease accumulating, but to dissipate it. Europe may well look on with admiration, and take lessons from us, both in the patient enjoyment of the constitutional freedom, of which we were the first to make successful trial; and in the homely virtues of industry and commercial enterprise, which form, in combination, the only sources of the material advancement of nations.

The laying of the foundation-stone of the Great Grimsby Docks, which has suggested these remarks, is an event both of national and European interest. The ceremonial was appropriately performed by the Consort of the Sovereign, who, having no armies to command, as he might have had, if his lot had been cast in another country, lent his presence to grace the inauguration of a splendid commercial enterprise. Well might his Royal Highness remark that the circumstance made a deep impression upon his mind. His name became associated with an undertaking of great public utility—the foundation of a dock; not only, as his Royal Highness observed, as a place of safety, refuge, and refitment for our mercantile marine, and for the largest steam-vessels of the navy, but the nucleus of a great commercial city—a new centre of life, an important link in the connection of the east and west, and a mart for the vast and increasing commerce of the world. The work, continued his Royal Highness, had been undertaken, like almost all great enterprises in this great country, by private enterprise, with private capital, and at private risk; and it shared, also, that other feature so peculiar to the enterprises of Englishmen, that, strongly attached as they were to the institutions of this country, and gratefully acknowledging the protection of those laws under which those enterprises commenced and prospered, they loved to connect them in some manner with the authority of the Crown and the person of the Sovereign. It was the persuasion of this circumstance which brought his Royal Highness to Great Grimsby, as the readiest mode of testifying how strongly her Majesty appreciated and reciprocated these feelings. We can but hope that the undertaking thus inaugurated may meet with all the success which is anticipated.

The enterprise, indeed, reflects high credit both upon Englishmen generally, and upon the county of Lincoln in particular. That county, which has been transformed from an unwholesome swamp into a smiling farm or garden by the industry of its people, needed but the crowning work of constructing a large dock in the very jaws of the ocean to prove that no difficulties either by land or sea can repress the energies of men who have wisely conceived a great scheme and carefully calculated its cost. The banquet in celebration of the ceremony was actually held in a spot, as Lord Yarborough reminded the guests, nineteen feet under the level of the sea. The first pile was driven in 1846; and since that time the coffer-dam has been extended to the length of 1600 feet: 7000 pieces of Baltic timber, averaging fifty feet in length, have been employed; the sea has been effectually excluded; and an area of no less than 135 acres has been gained for the purposes of a vivifying and reproductive commerce. It was a great national as well as local want which the proprietors of the Great Grimsby Docks undertook to supply. The rapid improvement of Lincolnshire in agricultural wealth, no less than the inconveniences attendant upon the position, size, and distance of Hull, the only great port upon the eastern coast, alike suggested the establishment of the Great Grimsby Docks as the supplement and completion of the Railway system that traverses England from west to east. When the Great Grimsby Docks are opened to receive the mercantile marine that trades with the north of Europe, these vessels will not only be spared the intricacies of the Humber navigation, but will be enabled to enter a harbour to the very edge of which the lines of railway will be laid down. The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire line will run into the docks, and the cargoes will be discharged, with an immense saving to merchants, and distributed without either the delays or the expenses attendant upon the ordinary carrier system. As a harbour of refuge for our ships of war, its position is equally advantageous; and there is every reason to believe that Great Grimsby is destined to rank hereafter among the most important of the commercial towns and thriving communities of Great Britain. We may not, perhaps, share all the sanguine anticipations of its founders. Speculators are usually sanguine. We remember the acclamations that were raised and the aspirations that were formed when a ceremony very similar to that just performed at Great Grimsby took place at Birkenhead. It was to be the new city of the west, as Great Grimsby is to be of the east. It was either to rise upon the decay of Liverpool or to run a race of prosperity and splendour with that town just in the same manner as Great Grimsby is to rival if not to eclipse the more venerable greatness of Hull. The elements of prosperity seem to encircle and to be concentrated in the new harbour of the east—all the obscure fishing village of a few years ago bids fair to become, in a few years hence, what its projectors have imagined it. We trust that it will be so; and that the far-seeing enterprise of all concerned will meet its due reward.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT LAYING THE FIRST STONE OF THE DOCKS AT GREAT GRIMSBY, ON WEDNESDAY.—(SEE PAGE 256.)

COUNTRY EDITION.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

The expedition to Italy, meditated some months ago by General Cavaignac and having for its object the restoration of the Pope, has been ordered to Civita Vecchia by Prince Louis Napoleon and his advisers. It consists of 14,000 men, and will be commanded by General Oudinot. A credit of 1,200,000 francs has been opened to defray its expenses, on the motion of M. Odillon Barrot. Though not as yet stated, it is believed that this movement has been made by France with the concurrence of all the Roman Catholic powers of Europe, and that Austria especially will give its not countenance merely, but aid if need be.

M. Guizot having been requested by some of his friends in France to become a candidate for a seat in the next Assembly, has addressed, from his retreat in Brompton, a long letter to the electors of Lisieux. The letter has excited much attention, though, as regards M. Guizot's real sentiments upon the present position, and future prospects of his country, it conveys but little information. M. Guizot does not express himself in favour of the existing Government. It was not to be expected that he would; but something more was expected from him. In breaking silence for the first time since the Revolution of 1848, than the vague generalities with which his letter is principally filled. He expresses himself strongly in favour of the party of "ORDER." A party to which the Bonapartists, the Legitimists, the Orleanists, and the sincere Republicans are all quite as firmly attached as he can be, so that his avowal of adherence to that party signifies little or nothing. M. Guizot is of opinion that society in France has a difficult task before it, if it would combat the Communists. He represents this faction as composed of Revolutionists, peasants, unbridled, intelligible, and insatiable, who attack order in its foundation, everywhere and at all times, in the Government, in society, at the family, hearth, and in the hearts of men. M. Guizot, we think, would find few to agree with him in the estimate of the power of this faction, or of the difficulty of preserving society against a total overthrow at its hands. The Socialists are by no means so formidable as his fears have depicted them. M. Guizot is of opinion that nothing but a stable government can rescue France from the abyss in which she is now sunk. He does not consider apparently that the Republic offers any chance of the stability he so much desires. He says that the forms of Government which have existed and have fallen in France during the last sixty years, have left after them by the side of the Republic, three hopes, or, rather, three "prospectives" of Government. By these, he means—though he does not say so in direct terms—a Monarchy, either under the sceptre of Henry V., the Count of Paris, or a Bonaparte. The difficulty is to choose between them; but, says M. Guizot, "it is for France to reserve it, for it alone can do so." He, himself, gives no advice upon the matter, but will accept a seat in the new legislature if his friends think fit to elect him. We take it, therefore, that M. GUIZOT is open for election, and that he will not object to serve any party in France that may come uppermost, except the Republic. At present, the Republic is not in the very best of repute, as that M. Guizot runs but little risk, either of increased unpopularity or of prolonged exile, in giving it a kick. M. Guizot, however, is not likely to gain much by his letter. Though a very honest man, he was, to say the least, a most unfortunate minister. All parties would like to see him in the legislature, but no party, we think, would like to see him in office

The visit of the National Guards to London last year has been returned by a heterogeneous party of Englishmen, got together by public advertisement, and as the speculation of an individual. The [illegible] nevertheless, been productive of very gratifying results. However the [illegible] may have been, its cordiality not to say the enthusiasm—of the French was strongly exhibited to do them honour. Some surprise was at first expressed that the crews of the cab-men were not in uniform, and that they could not muster a sword or epaulette among them; but when this was explained, the honest Frenchmen reconciled themselves to our peaceful way, and doffed their own uniforms for the plain clothes of perhaps, the more appropriately to fraternise with the friendly slan era. All the exhibitions of the capital were thrown open to them, they were invited by Prince Louis in a grand sortie of the fleet of the military bands at their approach struck up "God Save the Queen," and, marshal dans, "Rule Britannia!" Altogether the proceedings have been of a kind that, although they might be somewhat ridiculous, have yet on the whole left a grateful impression However ludicrous some of the details may be, the result shows good fee ing on both sides, and especially on that of the French. The simple but remarked fact, that the majority of Frenchmen on set out so far forgot the foo lish animosities of the past as to join in the chorus of that nitra-patriotic—and, to a Frenchman, that arrogant—anthem of "God save the Queen," is itself a proof of a more good humour, the most gratifying and unlooked for.

At a dinner given to a select party of twenty-four of the English, at the Salle Valentino, by a party of the National Guard of Paris, M. Bouvet, the spokesman of the National Guard, read a neat speech on the ties of feelings of peace, and the necessity for a cordial and standing and firm alliance between Great Britain and France. He [illegible] the power of the middle class, with no pretension of any kind, to being unfashionable, unaffectedly, fearlessly, and frankly, among their French friends, and expressed his hope that many such visits would be mutually paid. General Cubières his speech by proposing as a toast the perpetual friendship of the two countries Mr. Lloyd, who acted as spokesman for the English on this occasion, and who seems to have been placed by his fellow-Britons in the respectable position of their representative or chairman, and who performed the part with great good taste, correct feeling, and distinction, returned thanks. Whenever, in the course of the speech, he adverted to the absence of the two great nations, and dandestine war between them as the greatest of follies, as well as the greatest of calamities, he was repeatedly interrupted by deafening cheers.

In the evening, an alignment of the meeting took place. The whole party moved in procession and marched to the Hôtel de Ville, to the Boulevards, the Italiens. An immense concourse of people followed, chiefly of the working classes, who made the streets ring with cries of "Vive l'Angleterre!" "Vivent les Anglais!" "Vive la Reine Victoria!" A number of well-dressed young women, on the Boulevards, as the procession passed, threw nosegays into the carriages of any exceptional—strewed flowers in their path. About 1000 persons congregated around Torton's, and repeatedly uttered shouts, which were heard distinctly as far off as the Madeleine, of "Hurrah to the English!" "The English for ever!" "God save the Queen!" Several large bouquets of flowers were sent in to the guests at Torton's from the crowd outside, as testimonials of respect from the citizens of Paris; and when the party broke up, unable to express their satisfaction in any more emphatic manner, shouted with all their powers of lungs the national "Hurrah!" It was taken up by the people outside, and repeated along the streets as far as the Porte St. Denis.

The Parisians are renowned for their medals in commemoration of public events. The event has not been suffered to pass without being commemorated in this manner. A medal has been struck at the Mint, and has already found its way into the shops. Two models of it have been presented, one in gold, to the President of the French Republic, and one in silver, to General Bedeau, commanding the —— Visit of the French to England, and of the English to France."

Altogether the proceedings have been highly characteristic and gratifying, the more so from the total absence of preparation, and from the incongruousness of the English party, including no known names, and being invested with no authority or official character whatever. The English took care to impress this fact upon their entertainers; but the full knowledge of it did not in the slightest degree damp the enthusiasm of the French. That was at it should be; and all sensible men in England, whatever their political principles may be, will look with satisfaction on this little episode in international history. We trust that many similar holiday trips will be taken by both parties, and that the French and the English will learn to know each other better than they have ever done before. Nothing but good can result from their cordiality.

ITALY

The proclamation of a Republic at Genoa has not aided the cause of the Italian Independents. It was a treacherous proceeding. Charles Albert, whatever may be thought of his conduct, did not deserve to be betrayed by the party for whom he was fighting so desperate a battle. But no sooner did fortune frown upon him on the disastrous field of Novara, than the "patriots" who should have aided him began the work of disorganising the kingdom and of proclaiming Genoa a Republic, and established a triumvirate to govern it. General Marmora, who commanded a large detachment of the army of Charles Albert, and who remained firm in his allegiance to Victor Emanuel, the new King, was within an easy march of Genoa at the head of 10,000 men, when the revolutionary party in that city, in obedience to the commands of the republican Government of Rome, endeavoured to throw off the yoke of the Sardinian Monarchy. In consequence of the events in Genoa, he marched to that city; an from the block in the morning of the 5th, he bombarded it with the utmost fusion, doing immense damage to the beautiful public and private buildings. On the morning of the 6th an armistice of three days was agreed upon, in order that General Marmora might refer to the Government at Turin for the terms of an amicable arrangement. [illegible] received to Genoa recommenced the struggle, and again the city was bombarded with destructive effect. The chief leaders of the revolutionary party were, it is said, the conspirators, but the respectable inhabitants, who, in their terror and consolation, had submitted to the populace, determined to make an effort to throw off the yoke when they saw that the total destruction of Genoa [illegible] would, in all probability, be the penalty of their ungracious or cowardice. By means of the representations made by them to General Marmora, a new armistice [illegible] was agreed upon. The Republican triumvirate then fled, with the exception of their chief, Avezzana; and the minor orders of the insurgents embarked for the south, and chasing Republic of Leghorn. General Marmora now occupies the city, and there is an end, at all events for the present, of the short-lived Republic of the Genoese.

The Venetian Republic displays spirit and energy, but a still harder task is before it than that which was late spited by the triumvirate of Genoa. It is true that the Genoese struggle was a civil war, and that the effort which will most assuredly be made by Austria to bring Venice to obedience will partake more of the character of a foreign invasion; but, for that very reason, the inevitable conflict will, in all probability, be more desperate and protracted. In Genoa it was Italian again Italian; in Venice it will be Italian against Austrian. On the 2nd instant, the news of the defeat of Charles Albert, at Novara, was announced to the Venetian Assembly by the President Manin, one of the most extraordinary men of these extraordinary times. He said that the circumstances were grave in the extreme, and asked the Assembly for instructions as to the course to be pursued. A member having replied that the Executive Government ought to take the lead, Manin demanded of the Assembly if it were prepared to resist under all circumstances and at any cost? A loud and unanimous shout of "We are!" was the reply "Will you grant me unlimited powers, that I may do what is useful and necessary for the purpose, without calling upon me for explanation?" A similar shout of acquiescence was the reply to this question. The representatives flocked round Manin and embraced him, and he was formally proclaimed irresponsible dictator. In the evening a decree was issued, "In the name of God and the people," stating that Venice would resist the Austrians at any cost, and that President Manin was invested with unlimited powers.

A letter of the 4th instant, in the Austrian Lloyd's, states that the Austrian fleet, under the command of the new Admiral Dahlerup, will immediately sail from Trieste to blockade Venice.

A telegraphic despatch received by the French Government announces a fact which may be considered the precursor of the fall of the Republic at Florence. It is stated, under date of the 12th instant, that a reaction has taken place at Pisa in favour of the Grand Duke of Tuscany; that the people have pronounced enthusiastically in his favour; that the Assembly is dissolved; that the Dictator Guerrazzi is kept a prisoner in his own house; and that a deputation has proceeded to the Pope at Gaeta.

The news from Rome and Gaeta is of equal interest. The celebrated Mazzini, hitherto one of the triumvirs of the Roman Republic, has fallen from a height equal to that of Manin at Venice, and Guerrazzi at Florence—that is to say, to the Dictatorship. The crisis of his fate seems approaching, as well as that of the Roman and other Republics of Italy. The conference opened at Gaeta to settle the affairs of Rome, has already produced its results. The parties to the conference were the plenipotentiaries of the four Roman Catholic Powers, France, Spain, Austria, and Naples. The conference began on the [illegible] March, and still continued on the 4th of April, when the last advices left. The plenipotentiaries first examined whether the re-establishment of the Papal power should be settled by pacific means. This was decided in the negative. The next question was as to the armed intervention of the Powers, and the part which each of the should take in it. No definitive agreement had been come to when the packet left; but it will be seen that the French Government has taken the initiative, and determined upon landing a considerable force at Civita Vecchia. M. Odillon Barrot, in the National Assembly, has demanded and obtained a credit of 1,200,000 francs for the expense of the expedition; and, unless all Italy be determined as the man to resist the re-establishment of the Papacy, we may expect to hear of the arrest of M. Mazzini and his colleagues, and the entry of Pius IX. and his Cardinals to the Palace of the Quirinal.

GERMANY.

At the opening of the Frankfort Assembly after the Easter Holidays, the report of the Deputation to Berlin, charged to offer the Imperial Crown of Germany to the King of Prussia, was read, together with the King's answer. The result was, of course, known before, but considerable agitation took place when the formal documents were communicated. Several motions were instantly made. The first was to the effect that there should be no Emperor of Germany, but a President or Stadtholder of the Empire, with a Council of six members; the dignity to be borne every alternate three years by the Emperor of Austria and the King of Prussia: the next was a simple declaration that the Assembly would adhere scrupulously to the Constitution: the third proposed an adjournment of the question for a month: the fourth proposed a committee to consider the propriety of a removal of the Parliament thence; and, after the qualified refusal of the King of Prussia, be best solved: the fifth proposed an Imperial President, to be elected by the universal suffrage of the German people, for a period of six years: the sixth proposed to make overtures to consider all these motions and report on them: the seventh proposed to stigmatise the answer of the King of Prussia as a declaration of war against the Frankfort Parliament, and to call upon the people to resist the forcible dispersion of the present body until the new one could be brought together: the eighth declared it beneath the dignity of the Sovereign Assembly to treat with Independent Princes, and proposed to vote itself en permanence; and at the same time to elect an Executive Committee of five members, which should govern the Germanic Union for the time being with full powers: and Jellachich, Ban of Croatia, was not a man to be lightly alienated in the present grave [illegible] of [illegible] affairs. The Austrian journals print a letter from his Imperial Majesty to the Ban, dated the 31st of March. In the document the charter or constitution of Croatia is essentially modified, and Jellachich is invested to state fu ly and freely the wish of the Croats on such other points as may not have been already considered. The object of this concession is apparent, and it is thought it will be successful in securing the wavering loyalty of Croatia, and in preventing any sympathy on its part with the Hungarians.

In spite of letters from Vienna to Hungary, the Hungarian army under the command of General Semi has defeated the Austrians under Prince Windischgrätz and Baron Jellachich, at a place called Waitzen. Having taken this town after some resistance, and leaving a strong force in charge to occupy it, General Bem advanced to Pesth, which he entered on the 12th; and the Hungarians are now stated to be in full possession of that ancient capital. By this event the road to Komorn is opened; and General Georgy has advanced to the relief of that fortress. All the Austrian Ministers were summoned to Olmütz on the 13th; and it is believed that, alarmed by the events in Hungary, the Cabinet is desirous of effecting the Magyars the constitution of 1848. "The battle of Komorn," says the Allgemeine Zeitung, "will decide the fate of Hungary."

SPAIN.

The Conde de Montemolin has been arrested on the French frontiers in an attempt to penetrate into Spain. His Royal Highness, however, was speedily liberated, and has now arrived in England.

RUSSIA.

That some great movement is at present meditated by Russia, is beyond doubt. There seems to be no truth in a rumour current during the week that the Emperor had actually declared war against Turkey; but Turkey, it is well known, is preparing herself for that contingency. Russian troops continue to pour into the provinces of Moldavia and Wallachia, which, though under the protection of Russia, are part of the Turkish Empire, have been ordered by the [illegible] to occupy, and to include the name of the Emperor Nicholas in their [illegible] prayers, says a recent letter, "which amounts to an assumption of sovereignty."

INDIA.—THE BATTLE OF GOOJERAT.

The Overland Mail of the 17th of March brings full particulars of the victory of Goojerat, obtained by Lord Gough over the Sirdars of the Punjaub, of which some details reached this country by the previous mail of the 6th of March. Lord Gough's army, which amounted to 25,000 men, with 100 guns, encamped on the 20th within four miles of the enemy, whose force was estimated by some at 60,000 men, and by others at 50,000 men, at the very least. Their artillery, however, was deficient in comparison with their numerical strength, and amounted to but sixty guns. Shere Sing chose his own position around the village of Goojerat, and the British army moved to attack him early on the morning of the 21st. The British line extended nearly three miles right and left. The action began with a heavy cannonade, in which the British artillery did much admirable execution, that the enemy's guns were speedily silenced. The infantry then advanced and the Sikhs gave way on all points, and fled in the utmost confusion. The cavalry division were then sent in pursuit, and hung upon the skirts of the flying enemy until night prevented further operation. The Sikhs took away only seven out of their sixty guns; and left behind them, in addition to this splendid park of artillery, very large quantity of ammunition and camp stores. The victory was obtained at a loss of life comparatively small; namely, of five officers and ninety-two men. The wounded amounted to 24 officers and 682 men. The loss on the part of the Sikhs is not stated; but it is believed to have been enormous. Both Chuttur Singh and Shere Singh are said to have been wounded, but not seriously.

On the day after this decisive battle, General Gilbert, with a force of 12,000 men, was despatched towards the Jhelum, to seize and occupy Rhotas, Attock, and Peshawur, and the whole frontier up to the passes of Afghanistan. He crossed the Jhelum on the 26th of February, and took possession of the town of that name, where he found some mortars and a considerable quantity of ammunition, which had been abandoned by the flying Sikhs. The last direct advices from General Gilbert's camp are to the 2d of March, when they had been compelled by the inclemency of the weather to halt on their advance. A report, however, had reached the camp of Lord Gough that the General had [illegible] and established himself temporarily at Rhotas. This report has since been found to be correct. The latest advices from Lord Gough's camp are to the 3d of March, on which day his Lordship reviewed and inspected the whole of the troops. He was received with the utmost enthusiasm.

No decision has yet been come to with regard to the ultimate government of the Punjaub. The Sikh chieftains are anxious to be represented as quite dispirited. Shere Sing is willing to surrender, and the other chiefs are ready to imitate his example. The present terms of the Governor-General are simply unconditional surrender, and even to these it is expected that the Sikh leaders will accede. India generally, is quiet. The small garrison left at Moolan has remained unmolested; and Scinde is free from any apprehension of renewed disturbance.

The news from China extends to the 27th of February, but it is altogether unimportant.

INTERVIEW OF IRISH MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT WITH LORD JOHN RUSSELL.

An interview of the Irish members with Lord John Russell took place on Wednesday, in Downing-street, according to the circular invitation, which had been addressed to all the Irish members by Lord John Russell, &c.

The following members were present:—Lord E. A. Herbert, Captain Jones, J. H. Moore, Sir E. M'Naughten, J. Follett, J. O'Connell, R. M. Power, Colonel Dunne, Colonel Brown, Sir J. Young, Viscount Castlereagh, Sir W. Somerville, Sir E. Han. M. Alexander, Sir Lucius O'Brien, F. French, C. St. George, the Hon. J. F. Maxwell, R. Dillon Browne, the Marquis of Kildare, T. Meagher, J. T. Devereux, Lord J. Chichester, J. Sadleir, Dr. Keating, R. M. Bellew, M. Sullivan, Sir A. Armstrong, P. S. Butler, F. Scully, Viscount Milton, W. H. Magan, A. O'Flaherty, Sir T. Burke, Hon. H. A. Cole, Captain Archdall, C. F. Lentle, R. Shaw, Colonel Chatterton, Sir R. Norreys, T. Barnard, R. S. Bourke, E. K. Tenison, W. Monsell, R. M. Fox, Major Blackall, Right Hon. R. L. Shell, Colonel Rawdon, Hon. T. V. Dawson, M. J. O'Connell, Sir R. Howard, Hon. C. Lawless.

It proposed by Lord J. Russell in calling the meeting was to obtain the sense of the Irish members, or their majority, upon the motion of which notice has been given by Mr. Hume, for the country of Kerry, for extending the property and income-tax to Ireland, as a substitute for the proposed rate in aid

Previous to entering upon the subject of the interview, Mr. John O'Connell called the attention of Lord J. Russell to a statement which had been published [illegible] authorised," relative to a late interview of some Irish M.P.'s with Lord Clarendon on the case of Mr. Duffy, and which statement those hon. gentlemen regarded in the light of an insult, as imputing to them a wilful misrepresentation of what had occurred at the interview with Lord Clarendon. Mr. O'Connell wished to know if Lord John Russell approved of such an imputation being cast on them

Lord J. Russell declined saying anything as to that particular occasion, as he had not been present, but his experience of deputations generally (Irish, English, and Scotch) showed him that their members usually in their reports of the interviews with members of the Government, made their own case appear in the most favourable light, while the answers of the Ministers to their arguments were passed over in a few words. He had known in the case of deputations from North Britain, from Liverpool, and other places, answers to be given of what passed, in which the Minister was made either to say, or to appear to acknowledge, that he had been completely overwhelmed by the arguments, when certainly his impression upon the subject had been very different

The noble Lord then proceeded to address the hon. gentlemen assembled on the subject respecting which he had invited their attendance. After referring to what the Legislature had already done for the relief of the destitute districts in Ireland, to the feeling generally prevalent that the other parts of Ireland which were better off should contribute somewhat in aid of the distressed localities, and to the two modes in which had been indicated of effecting the latter object, viz. either a rate in aid (which was that proposed by the Government), or the imposition upon Ireland of the income-tax which that country was at present exempt, and which were paid in Great Britain, and then the payment of grants out of the Imperial Exchequer to meet exigences of the present kind, whether they occurred in Ireland or elsewhere, the noble gentleman stated by some of the Irish representatives), the noble Lord pointed out the obstacles in the way of the extension of the assessed taxes to Ireland, and then went on to state, in reference to the proposition made by Mr. Hume. Now, if this were a general tax affecting the United Kingdom, supposing the exigences of the public service required that there should be either a new tax imposed, or an income tax and property tax, it might be a question. Now, if the Irish members were generally of opinion that the present exigency was one which they could meet by a rate in aid

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The House re-assembled to-day after the Easter recess.

NOTICES OF MOTION

Lord J. Russell gave notice that on the 24th instant he would move for leave to bring in a bill to amend and extend the Irish Poor Law Act. The noble Lord also gave notice, on the part of the Attorney-General, that he would, on the same day, move for leave to bring in a bill to facilitate the sale of encumbered estates in Ireland.

Mr. H. Berkeley gave notice, for the 2d of May, to move for leave to bring in a bill to carry into effect the resolution passed last year with respect to the vote by ballot.

Mr. B. Drummond gave notice, for the 26th inst., of a motion for a committee of the whole House to consider our revenue and expenditure, with the view to an equalisation of taxation.

Mr. Disraeli gave notice that he would, on an early day, bring the whole question of our foreign relations in Europe under the consideration of the House.

THE COLONIES.

Mr F. Scott moved for a select committee to inquire into the political and financial relations between Great Britain and her dependencies, with a view to reduce the charges on the British Treasury, and to enlarge the functions of the Colonial Legislatures. The hon. member described the extent and importance of our numerous Colonies, and entered into a review of their government, political and local. He charged this country with keeping them without the pale of her constitution, although she kept them within the pale of her empire. The colonial system had been condemned loudly enough by Lord Grey when in opposition; but now, when he was in office, he was the loudest defender of the system. The two causes which had led to the disruption of our American colonies from this country—the altering of their constitution without their consent, and the taxing of them against their will—were still maintained towards those colonies that remained to us. The hon. member at considerable length adduced instances of the uncertainty, the despotism, the perpetual change of mind that distinguished our colonial administration, and exposed the injustice that arose from our mode of land sales and of dealing generally with the colonial finances; and pointed out a variety of improvements which might be effected in the administration of our colonial affairs; after which he dwelt, in considerable length, upon what might be done, both for the colonies, the mother country, and the emigrants themselves, by a judiciously-conducted system of emigration. Emigration, as at present conducted, was of the most faulty description. There was, in fact, more expatriation than emigration from this country. Foreign countries, particularly the United States, benefited more from this state of things than did England or her colonies. His next topic was the convict system, which, he said, unless judiciously conducted, would work the greatest mischief to our penal colonies. The whole state of the colonies wanted revision; and it was because he thought that investigation should precede revision, that he now moved for the appointment of a select committee

Mr. Hawes objected to the committee, because he believed it would be practically impossible for a committee of the House of Commons to discharge functions so great and so various as the motion of the hon. member embraced. He had no objection to enter into a discussion on our colonial policy; on the contrary, he desired to do so, because he regretted to say that there was an apathy on the part of some, and misapprehension on the part of others, on this subject. The hon. Under-Secretary proceeded to take a glance at our colonial system, and to describe it in its different phases. Out of our 43 colonies, he said, 27 had, or were about to have, representative institutions. In these 27 he included those Australian Colonies and the Cape of Good Hope to which he proposed to grant representative institutions by a bill which would be shortly laid on the table of the House. There then remained only 16 which had not representative Government, and these were not in a condition to receive such government. Besides, our Colonies had a free press, trial by jury, and control over their own purses. He, therefore, fearlessly asserted that our colonial government was most honourable to this country. But he could not deny that collisions and differences had arisen between this country and the Colonies in consequence of the course taken by Parliament on the questions of Slavery, of Sugar Duties, and of Free Trade. The colonists attributed their depression to these acts of the Imperial Parliament, and no doubt what was called Free Trade had sensibly affected some of them; but the Colonial Office, which was merely an administrative instrument, ought not to be made to bear the brunt of all these collisions and differences caused by the enactments of Parliament. The hon. member proceeded to defend the colonial administration, declaring that Lord Grey was anxious, in every possible way, to exercise his patronage for the benefit of the Colonies, to reduce the expense of colonial administration as far as possible, and to confer representative institutions on all those Colonies which had them not, as soon as they should be fitted to receive them.

Mr. Gladstone agreed with Mr. Hawes, that no good could arise from the granting of the proposed committee; and therefore he could not support any description of inquiry which would not lead to a searching inquiry or to a practical result. He agreed also with Mr. Hawes, that there was an opportunity which fell to the Colonies. Office attached to it for no views of its own, but because it had been made the organ of Parliament. Whenever the cases of particular colonies could be brought before the House, there would be the time to show that they were governed on sound and just principles. An opportunity for granting free institutions occurred last year in the case of Vancouver's Island, but that opportunity had been thrown away by the Government.

Mr. Mangles suggested the propriety of giving to the Colonial Secretary a council of retired governors to assist him in his administration. It was impossible for any man to understand the wants and interests of the numerous colonies

Mr. Hume hoped the honourable member would press either for a committee or for a commission. Two-thirds of our whole military force were wanted for our colonies on account of our present system of government, whereas, by a new system, the colonies should be made to defend themselves. There would be an end to all quarrelling with the Colonial Office if the colonies were made to maintain their own expenses, because then the patronage of the Colonial Office would entirely cease.

Mr. Anstey supported the motion. He designated the Colonial Office a public nuisance.

Sir W. Molesworth said the two questions for consideration were—should an inquiry into our colonial policy take place, and, if so, by whom. He thought inquiry was imperatively called for; but that a commission of three or five would be the best plan. However, he should vote for Mr Scott's motion, should it be pressed to a division

After a few observations from Major Blackall, the House divided—For Mr Scott's motion, 34; against it, 81: majority against the motion, 47.

Smithfield. On the motion of Mr. Mackinnon, the Select Committee on the removal of Smithfield Market was nominated.

SUPPLY.

On the motion for going into Committee of Supply,

Mr. Anstey moved an address to the Crown on the subject of certain illegal ordinances and acts of Council for the taxation of the people of New Zealand Land—the attempts of Lieutenant-Governor Sir William Denison to intimidate the Judges of the Supreme Court of that island into declaring such ordinances or acts to be legal, and the grievances complained of by the colonists of that island in their petition presented last year to her Majesty, and printed by order of the House; and that her Majesty may be pleased to direct the local authorities in future to respect the independence of the judicial functions of that Court, and also to signify her disallowance of any ordinance or act subsequently passed by the said Lieutenant-Governor in council, for giving to such illegal ordinances or acts the force of law.

No hon. member having been found to second the motion, it consequently fell to the ground.

The House went into Committee of Supply pro forma.

The House adjourned at two o'clock

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

Sir J. Farington gave notice of his intention to move, on the motion for the second reading of Mr. Hume's bill for the establishment of county boards, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.

Sale of Land in Ireland.—Mr. Sadleir called attention to the legal circumstances which unduly impede the sale of landed property in Ireland, and to those facilities which may be safely afforded for its free transfer. The hon. member cited an array of cases to show the impediments that lay in the way of the transfer of estates in Ireland in consequence of the absurd technicalities and rules of the Court of Chancery, and gave a description of the various and anomalous kinds of tenure by which land is held in that country. He suggested the appointment of local boards, on whom great powers should be conferred by Parliament, as the best means of providing a direct, speedy, and safe remedy for the social evils of Ireland. The hon. member concluded his speech by moving for a Select Committee to inquire into the legal and other hindrances that impede the transfer of property in Ireland.—The Solicitor-General declined to go into the details of the forms of conveyancing, and of the rules of the Court of Chancery, contenting himself with expressing his desire that those forms and rules should be reformed. With respect to the facilitation of the sale and transfer of estates in Ireland, he observed that objections might be should move for leave to bring in the bill, for that purpose of which he had given notice. Having referred to the altered state of feeling observable in the House now, from what it was when the Encumbered Estates Act was passed, he gave utterance to a hope that all parties would unite in framing an effective and practical measure. In his opinion the evils of Ireland were not to be remedied by any large and comprehensive plan, but by the operation of numerous measures, devised and amended after experience.—Mr. J. O'Connell was proceeding to address the House, when it was counted out.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock

PUBLIC ROADS BILL.

A great many petitions having been presented against the bill,

Mr. C. Lewis moved its second reading. It is the second bill introduced this session, the first having been withdrawn.

Mr. Denison opposed the bill, and moved, as an amendment, that it be read a second time that day six months. After some discussion for and against its measure,

Mr. C. Lewis defended the bill, and contended that a combined management of all roads would be the most economical and efficient. He admitted that the present was not a very favourable moment for obtaining a calm consideration of the measure, because the rate-payers in agricultural districts were just now peculiarly sensitive to all questions of taxation, although he was ready to maintain that this bill would not increase their burdens. Considering the difficulties in the next his subject, and the unfavourable state of public feeling at this moment he would consent, should the second reading be assented to by the House, to move for the bill to a Select Committee, the understanding that the management of turnpike trusts and highways should be intimately confined to the combined [illegible] Board

Sir R. Peel could not, in assenting to the second [illegible] reference of the bill to a select committee, agree to the principle that turnpike trusts and highways should be placed under one management. [illegible] ben. Bannot pointed out many objections to the [illegible]

Mr. Hume advised the withdrawal of the bill

Sir G. Grey, seeing that the opinion of the House was decided opposed to the principle of the bill that of a combined management—would advise the withdrawal of the bill, at the same time that he felt bound to say that the government could give out no hope that they would introduce a measure during the present session.

The motion for the second reading was in consequence discharged, and the bill was withdrawn

Mr P Wood moved the third reading of the Affirmation Bill

Mr. Goulburn opposed the bill, and moved, as an amendment, that it be read a third time that day six months

Mr. Henley also opposed the bill.

The House then divided a few minutes before six o'clock—For the third reading, 70; against it, 46; majority, 24

On the question that the bill do pass,

Captain Harris rose and spoke in opposition to the bill until the hand of the clock pointed to six, when the Speaker vacated the chair, and the House, amid some laughter, adjourned without disposing of the question.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Their Lordships re-assembled to-day after the Easter recess.

The Petty Sessions Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Army of the Punjaub.—The Marquis of Lansdowne gave notice that on Tuesday next he would move that the Papers of the Legislative Council in the Governor-General of India, the Commander-in-Chief, and the officers and soldiers of the army in India, for their services in the Punjaub. (Hear, hear.)

In answer to Lord Brougham, the Marquis of Lansdowne stated that the papers relative to our intervention in Sicily would be presented to the House forthwith. He had hoped to be able to produce them that evening, but they were not yet ready. Meanwhile he had to state that our squadron in the Mediterranean confined its exertions to the protection of the lives and property of British subjects.

NORTH WALES RAILWAY COMPANY.

Lord Montegle moved that Mr. Chadwick and Mr. Marriner be called to the bar. The noble Lord having repeated the history of the proceedings which their Lordships had taken in relation to the North Wales Railway Company, obtained the Queen's Attorney-General to direct the Usher of the Black Rod to call in Messrs. Chadwick and Marriner.

Lord Campbell said that all the parties had to answer for was not obeying the order of the House

Messrs. Chadwick and Marriner having been called to the bar, and asked what they had to say,

Mr Chadwick said, that, had he received the order to attend, nothing should have prevented him from obeying it, and he read the evidence of the messengers of their Lordships, to prove that the order had not been served upon him till the month of October, 1848. Had he had the least idea that his presence would have been required in September, he would have been in the way.

Mr. Marriner, on being called on, said he had done all in his power to comply with the orders of their Lordships' House, and proceeded to explain the steps he had taken to procure and supply to their Lordships the information required; and it was not until after the prorogation of Parliament that he had received any intimation that his presence was required at their Lordships' bar. From the moment he had received that intimation, he had held himself entirely at the orders of their Lordships.

Lord Montegle considered the explanations unsatisfactory, and that there had been a deliberate intention, on the part of those persons, to delay the ends of justice, to prove that the contempt was improper intention; and, in order to show that their Lordships would not permit their privileges to be trampled on, moved that William Cubitt and John Hawkesley, having been guilty of a breach of the privileges of the House, by a disobedience to the orders of the House, have been guilty of a contempt of the House, and that they be therefore taken into custody.

The motion having been agreed to, Messrs. Chadwick and Marriner were removed in custody.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

Mr. Bromley took the oaths and his seat for South Nottingham, in the room of Colonel Sibthorp.

Vote of Thanks to the Army in India.—Sir J. Hobhouse gave notice of his intention on the 24th instant to propose a vote of thanks to the Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief, and the officers and men of the army of India, for their late eminent services in the East. (Hear, hear.)

Turkish Intervention.—Mr. Anstey—Sir, I wish to ask the noble Lord, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, whether he received any information from Constantinople on the subject of an alleged demand made on the Sultan by the Government of the Czar, that the Turkish troops from the Moldavia and Wallachia, under the menace that if the troops were not withdrawn, the Russian Ambassador would be instructed to ask for his passport, and, if so, whether the honour and interests of the country in question when the no-quarrelsome and learned gentlemen has put, I beg to say that I do not believe that any such demand has been made by the Russian Government; on the contrary, I have every reason to believe the reverse, which is that the no-quarrelsome and learned gentleman refers to totally unfounded. In fact, the presence of the Ottoman troops in the Danubian Provinces was invited by Russia, and by that Power in possession of the most recently Russia sent General Soltzgan, an officer of great distinction, to Constantinople, with the view, as I am informed, of endeavouring to effect a friendly arrangement of the matter in dispute.

Mr. Disraeli to have an interview with Irish members.

On the motion that the orders of the day be now read,

Lord Castlereagh threw himself on the indulgence of the House while he introduced to its notice matters referring personally to himself, and having reference to a correspondence which had passed between himself and the noble Lord the First Minister of the Crown, bearing upon the interview of Irish members with that noble Lord. At that meeting the hon. gentleman the member for Limerick introduced business of an extraneous nature, and gentlemen present were unable to come to any conclusion as to who should be elected spokesman of the body He (Lord C.) was requested by many of the gentlemen present to state their views, but he was unable to catch the noble Lord's attention. He therefore addressed a letter to the noble Lord, which, with the permission of the House, he would read It was as follows:—"My Lord, I beg to state to your Lordship, not only for myself, but on behalf of a numerous and influential body of Irish members, that, whilst in deference to your position as a Minister of the Crown, we attended the meeting in Downing-street, we were not prepared to pledge ourselves to adopt any particular measure as a Minister of the Crown may propose for the consideration of the two branches of the Legislature; but without hearing the arguments which may be produced in the discussion of such a question, we could not put ourselves in the position of answering for our constituents, and therefore we beg to state that in offering any advice to Government on the course they may think proper to pursue,—I am, &c." In answer to that letter he received a note to the following effect: "I should have waited to hear your Lordship, but it does not appear to be the wish of the members present that I should do so, and I thought it best to retire; otherwise, I must have heard other members who did not belong to that numerous and influential body to which your Lordship alludes, and I must have assisted at a debate instead of receiving a decision." He had thought it his duty to refer to the [illegible] and he would now leave the matter in the hands of the House [illegible] and submit it. He would only make one other remark with reference to the numerous and influential body which the noble Lord had alluded to in his letter. He held in his hand the names of the gentlemen who constituted it, and, if the noble Lord chose to see them, he would find that they were numerous and influential. In conclusion, he had to state that the whole body of Irish Members had come to the conclusion, in conformity with the letter which he had the honour to address to the noble Lord. (Hear, hear.)

Lord J. Russell rose and said, as the noble Lord had thought it necessary to make that statement, he might be allowed to make a few observations in reply. He begged to state that, after having obtained what the views of the Government were, he intimated that he thought it would be better if the gentlemen then present should take some further time to consider their decision, and expressed a hope that they would favour him with a reply in the course of this morning. The noble Lord (Lord Castlereagh), as he understood, then began to state that he was prepared then to say what the opinion of the meeting was.

Lord Castlereagh: No, not the meeting.

Lord J. Russell: Then, said that he was prepared to state the opinion of several persons. He (Lord J. Russell) was ready to receive the answer—he stopped to hear it, upon which several gentlemen called out "No, no." He thought that if he received the answer of the noble Lord, he should not be receiving the answer of the meeting, and that he should be involved in a debate with respect to what the intention of the meeting was. He, therefore, adopted his original intention, and retired into the next room and expressed his willingness to come back again and make any other explanation that might be required of him. He could assure the noble Lord that he was very sorry that any misunderstanding should have arisen, but he begged to say that he wished to cast no disparagement upon any one, and was ready to make any apology which might be considered necessary (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Disraeli—I think it highly unconstitutional to call a meeting in the way in which the noble Lord has called one; and I am surprised that a Minister who is so well known for his knowledge of the constitution should have recourse to such meetings. (Hear, hear.)

Lord J Russell said that the hon member was out of order.

The Speaker said he had allowed the noble Lord (Lord Castlereagh) to proceed with his statements, although he was out of order, seeing that it was the general opinion of the House that he should do so; but the House would now see the inconvenience of the discussion proceeding further, and he trusted that he would now be supported in enforcing the rule of the House. (Hear)

Mr. Disraeli said—I rose to move the adjournment of the House, and I concluded that I was in order. I shall, however, take the first opportunity of bringing forward this subject again, and then a Minister of the Crown will not have it in his power to say that I had prepared my observations. (Laughter and cheers)

NAVIGATION BILL

The report on this bill, as amended, was considered and agreed to, and the bill ordered to be read a third time on Monday next

RATE IN AID (ADVANCE OF MONEY)

On the motion of Lord J. Russell, the House went into committee of the whole House on the question of the relief of the distressed unions in Ireland, when

The Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed that a sum of £100,000 be advanced from the Consolidated Fund on the security of the Rate in Aid, for the relief of those unions. The advance was to be conditional on the passing of the Rate in Aid; the sum required for immediate use would be but £6000.

Mr. Herbert moved, as an amendment, that the security should be, not a Rate in Aid, but an Income and Property Tax, levied in Ireland.

After a lengthened discussion, Colonel Dunne moved the adjournment of the debate, which, on a division, was negatived by a majority of 207 to 56

Mr. Sadleir then moved that the Chairman report progress, which was agreed to, the Chairman obtaining leave to sit again on next day (Friday).

The House shortly afterwards rose, at one o'clock.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.—RESIGNATION OF MR. HUDSON.

A special meeting of the shareholders of this company was held at the Derby station on Thursday, to take into consideration the propriety of appointing a committee to inquire into the affairs of the company; Mr. James Ellis, the Deputy-Chairman, presiding, in the absence of Mr Hudson, M.P.

Mr Bell, the Secretary of the company, having read the requisition and advertisement convening the meeting,

The Chairman read the following letter from Mr. Hudson:—

York, 17th April, 1849

To the Directors of the Midland Railway Company

Gentlemen,—The approaching meeting of the shareholders renders it necessary for me to address you on the subject of the office which I have the honour to hold, as Chairman of your Company. Forming parts of one great line of communication, the Midland, the York and North Midland, and the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Company on have hitherto had one common interest to promote; and, in watching over the development of them, it has always been to me a pleasing reflection that I was contributing to the prosperity of each of the other companies. It was this which enabled me to discharge the duties of Chairman confided to me by the shareholders of these different lines; and it is because I have apprehensions that circumstances have now arisen which may render it impracticable for any one person to preside over all these companies, that I feel it requisite to make the present communication.

I must have been obvious to the public that the Great Northern Railway, when opened, must of necessity materially affect the existing line of railway in the districts through which it passes. To the formation of that railway I gave my strenuous and most uncompromising opposition. I believed its formation to be unnecessary, and I felt that the benefits to be derived from it were not sufficient to justify an expenditure of the immense capital requisite for its construction. It pleased the Legislature to view the question otherwise, and the consequence is, that this line will very shortly be brought into active operation. The extension of that company cannot now be disregarded; and it may be that the interests of these different railways may not be found to be identical. Therefore it is, that, after due deliberation, I have thought it might be more satisfactory to the shareholders of the Midland Company that I should resign the office of their Chairman. I could not consent to hold the office without devoting every energy that I possess to the furtherance of their interests regardless of that of any other company; neither could I consent to preside over the other two companies without being prepared to exert myself for the promotion of the interests of their property, irrespective of the consequences which might result to any other company from the policy which they might decide on pursuing.

Under these circumstances I feel that I best perform my duty to the shareholders by tendering my resignation of the office of chairman. It is impossible for me to do this without expressing the deep sense which I entertain of the generous confidence which has been reposed in me by my brother shareholders, and the high satisfaction which I have derived from the cordiality which has prevailed among the directors with whom it has been my good fortune to be associated, and of the unanimity which has characterised all our proceedings. This it is which has enabled the capabilities of your line to be brought into full activity.

I take my leave of you, gratefully acknowledging your past kindness, and anxiously desirous for the continued prosperity of the undertaking with which I have been identified.—I have the honour to be, gentlemen, your faithfully,

Geo. Hudson.

The Chairman said that the letter of Mr. Hudson only spoke of resigning the chairmanship of the Directors, but the directorship it is assuming to assign his seat at the Board, and accepted it accordingly. At the last meeting of the company a proposition had been made to appoint a committee to investigate the affairs of the company, which was opposed by the directors, and overruled by the shareholders. A few days afterwards, at a meeting of the York and North Midland Company, held at York, Mr. Hudson stated that arrangements had been entered into with the Great Northern Company; and there a friend of the Midland at once saw the necessity of an opportun being given to the shareholders to inquire into the affairs of the compa. In the meantime, the [illegible] (Mr. Ellis) made inquiries of Mr. Hudson, the Chairman of the Great Northern Company, and Mr. Hudson, and was assured that the only arrangement entered into was for the purpose of saving an outlay of capital by the Great Northern Company on the line beyond Doncaster, the one becoming connected with the York and North Midland at Burton Salmon. (Hear.) The chairman then proceeded to deprecate the pol. of entering into warfare with any other company, and expressed the wish of the directors to enter into amicable arrangements with the Great Northern and other lines, though he could not conceal from himself the fact that the Great Northern line would tend to injure the Midland. At the same time that they were willing to enter into such arrangements, he would not hesitate to say that he believed the junction of the North Western Company to be the natural ally of the Midland (Cheers.) Knowing the anxiety the shareholders must feel relative to the position of their company, the directors, immediately after the meeting held at York on the 28th February, resolved on calling a meeting of the shareholders, but deferred the period for its being held until they could receive the report of a committee appointed to another object. (Hear.) In the meantime, the directors received a requisition from some of the Liverpool shareholders on the subject, which caused the meeting to be he d some ten days earlier than it would otherwise have been. The directors were anxious that the fullest inquiry should be made into the affairs of the company, but he (the chairman) hoped that nothing would be said to excite acrimonious feelings in the minds of any one until the report of the committee was made. He was satisfied that the time has arrived when an inquiry must take place into the affairs of all, or of almost all, railway companies, in order that the real value of the property might be ascertained. No charges had been made against the directors, and therefore he would not enter into a statement of the affairs of the company until the committee which it was proposed to appoint should make their report, when he had no doubt that the directory would be able to defend any of their acts, if necessary. (Cheers.)

Mr. Wylie, of Liverpool, in an extremely moderate speech, deprecating the prejudging the question of the affairs of the company, proposed the appointment of the following gentlemen as a committee to inquire into these affairs:—Charles Arkwright, Esq., Dunstall, Staffordshire; Wm. M'Cracken, Liverpool; Wm. Smith, Esq., of Shelfield; Jno Cartwright, Loughborough, Esq.; Wm. Ham Watson, of Ayr, esq; John Starling, of Huddersfield, Esq.; and Jno. Mercer, junior, of Bristol, Esq.; with full power to call for all necessary books and documents. The committee had been framed with a view of fairly representing the shareholders in the various districts; and an interview having been had with the directors on the subject, he was happy to say that they also approved of the gentlemen named.

Mr. Elias Morley seconded the motion, and, in doing so, strongly urged the shareholders not to part with their property at the present depressed prices, as he believed they would only have to grieve in vain.

After a short, uninteresting conversation, the committee was appointed; and thanks given to the Liverpool Committee, and Mr. Ellis, the chairman of the day. The meeting then adjourned till the 31st of May, to receive the report of the committee.

The meeting was very densely crowded, not less than 1000 or 1200 shareholders being present.

RATING OF RAILWAYS.—A petition has been got up in Liverpool to the House of Lords, praying that railways be more equitably assessed in respect to poor's rates; that a share be taken in the government of parishes through which railways pass; and that they be allowed to appeal to a high court against the decisions of the local magistrates. The petition has been already numerously signed.

THE POST-OFFICE ROBBERIES AT EXETER.—Harrap, who was convicted at the late assizes for Exeter of having purloined valuables passing through the Exeter post-office, has made a confession, exonerating the young man (Hyett) who was dismissed from the post-office some time since on suspicion of having abstracted a letter containing sixty £5 notes. It appears, from Harrap's statement, that he himself abstracted the letter, cashed twelve of the notes, and burnt the remaining forty-eight. "It is to be hoped," says a correspondent, "that justice, though tardy, as it must be, will be done to the young man Hyett, so long suffering under such a suspicion—a suspicion which, unfortunately, resulted in the suicide of a father, and which caused deep grief in a respectable family.

FOREIGN ARMS FOR CALIFORNIA.—A quantity of arms, of different descriptions, were recently imported into one of the ports on the coast, for the ostensible and expressed purpose of being exported to California; but, as arms of foreign manufacture of every description are prohibited from being imported into this country, they were not allowed admission for exportation. Cutlasses and rapiers, but were permitted, as the only privilege that could be granted, to be put to the foreign port from which the importation of them had taken

THE FORT OF RHOTAS, IN THE PUNJAUB.

PART OF THE FORT OF RHOTAS.—FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.

THE WAR IN INDIA.

WITH reference to the intelligence just received by the Overland Mail, it will be seen that Rhotas promises to be a point of considerable interest in the campaign of the British troops in the Punjaub. From the Bombay Courier, dated Rhotas, March 3, we learn that, "on the 1st of the month, more troops crossed the main stream, while others moved to the right bank of the Jhelum; and, on the 2nd, marched to Rhotas, which is a very large, picturesque-looking place, and might have been strong before the day of gunpowder, but with artillery opposed to it could not resist two hours, being built of brick, and commanded by several hills near it. The road from the fort to Rhotas lies through a very finely cultivated country and pretty scenery, but nothing that could have stopped the advance of our army."

In Thornton's excellent "Gazetteer," Rhotas is described as an extensive fort, six miles west of the right or western bank of the river Jhelum. The interior is two miles and a half long, and is of an oblong, narrow form, having its two sides and eastern end resting upon the edge of ravines, which divide it from a table-land of elevation equal to that of the hill on which the fort stands. The western face of the plateau is washed by the small river Gham, running at its base. Its works consist of massive walls, thirty feet thick, cemented with mortar and strengthened with bastions, all crenated throughout, and provided with a double row of loopholes. Connected with the fortress is an immense well, lined with masonry, and having passages down to the water, so numerous that fifty to a hundred persons may draw water at once.

The present fortress (continues Mr. Thornton) was built about the year 1540, by Shuher Shah, the Patan Emperor of Dehly, who had driven Humaioon into exile, and he is said to have expended a million and a half in its construction. When Humaioon returned, at the head of an army, to reclaim his empire, the fortress was given up to him without resistance. He demolished the palace raised within the fort by his rival and enemy, but found the massive defences too strong for the limited time and means which he could allow for their destruction. The fortress is at present in a ruinous state; and in one place a huge mass of the wall has tumbled down the precipice, and rendered the interior accessible. It is considered by military men indefensible against modern modes of attack.

The upper of the two accompanying Engravings is from a sketch just received from a Correspondent in India. The companion Illustration is from a sketch from the portfolio of Mr. Vigne, the traveller.

THE BATTLE OF GOOJERAT.

WE extract the following details of this engagement from a private letter of John Dunlop, M.D., Assistant-Surgeon, H.M. 32nd Regiment; whose sketches from Moultan appeared in our Number for March 10:—

CAMP, GOOJERAT, 27th Feb., 1849.

The Sikhs had proved themselves such formidable foes, that a hard and bloody fight was looked for; now we have to record a great and satisfactory victory gained on the field of Goojerat (where we are now encamped), with a comparatively small loss on our part, the enemy cut up, most of their guns captured, and we trust the campaign nearly over. I shall now give you a short account of our participation in the affair. When we arrived from Moultan at Ramnuggur, two days' march from Lord Gough's camp, we heard that the Sikh army had changed their position their strong and well-defended position—and it was supposed they had crossed the Jhelum. Luckily for us, this was not the case: they had merely moved eastward towards Goojerat, and out of the broken, jungly country around Chillianwalla, puffed up in their pride to the belief that they could meet us in a fair pitched battle in the open country. Encamped around the city of Goojerat, they awaited us.

On the 19th of February we forded the river Chenab without any accident bivouacked on the right bank during a cold, wet night, and joined Lord Gough's camp on the 20th. The old white-headed commander rode down our lines, and told us that an attack on the enemy was to be made on the morrow After spending two hours in preparation, we marched in order of battle towards Goojerat, the 32d being nearly on the extreme right of the line. At five P.M. we halted, in the same order, pitched our tents, and arranged our affairs the tall towers of Goojerat being now seen about three miles in front of us. We had but a grave dinner party that evening; it was hardly to be expected that we should all meet again—we hoped the best.

At daybreak I was made aware by my bearer that things were being put in preparation; and, as it was my turn to go out with the regiment, I got all my surgical apparatus in order, and with the bandsmen, as if my body-guard, followed my regiment. Onward we moved, through a beautiful, richly-cultivated country, covered with short green crops and groups of picturesque trees; a clear blue sky above; a cool, refreshing wind playing around; the regular masses of infantry moving on in the greatest order, diversified by the blue-coated artillerymen and the picturesque troops of cavalry which protected our flanks; the whole scene being closed by the magnificent Himalayas, capped with snow, towering in the distance. Not a sound reached us, save the heavy tread of the soldiers; and nothing did we see to tell of the neighbourhood of the Sikhs. An occasional halt took place, then onward still we moved.

At length a clear white vapour, shooting up from behind a distant grove, followed by the sullen sound of a gun, told us that our work was about to begin. Flash after flash succeeded in quick succession as the Sikhs opened their fire from their extended line, but the balls fell short. Still onward we went, now sitting down for a brief space to rest on the green grass, or to drink a cooling draught from a well as we passed. At last we halted, and the heavy artillery moved to the front, and in a short time our fire began to open. The horse artillery galloped through our opened lines, cheering as they went, and taking up their advanced position, began to ply their guns. For miles on our left the clouds of smoke, the flashes from the guns, and the incessant roar of artillery, made the scene one of great excitement. The infantry were ordered to lie down, and little damage was received; the balls generally fell short, a few went over our heads, and some rolled in among the troops harmlessly. For nearly three hours the cannonading continued, when one by one the enemies guns ceased to fire. Then the order was given for the infantry to advance, and the roll of musquetry began: rattle, rattle, rattle, with an occasional boom from a large gun, was all that was heard. I followed with my "dhoolies" for carrying the sick, and picking up the wounded as we advanced, and sending them to the rear. On still our troops went, cheering and firing, and firing and cheering, and driving the enemy's regular infantry right before them. At this time I fell in with ——, who had joined his regiment again, having quite recovered from his slight wound. He was covered with dust and smoke. We shook each other by the hand, and went our different ways. At length, we halted; and the enemy being in full flight, on dashed the cavalry and horse artillery in pursuit, cutting up mercilessly the flying foe. For fifteen miles they chased the Sikhs. When night came on it was found that we had captured fifty-three pieces of cannon, and that our loss did not exceed 1000 men. Thus ended the battle of Goojerat; satisfactorily proving to the Sikhs, that, in an open and fair field, they are no match for us.

RUINS OF THE FORT OF RHOTAS, ON THE GREAT ROAD FROM ATTOK TO LAHORE.—FROM A SKETCH BY G. T. VIGNE, ESQ.

THE FORTRESS OF RENDSBURG.

We have been favoured by a Hamburgh artist with the accompanying scene of the arrival of the prisoners of the vessels Christian VIII. and Gefion in the fortress of Rendsburg. The hostilities were described in our Journal of last week. The locality presents the market-place and town-house.

Rendsburg is a fortified town of Denmark, in the duchy of Holstein, and is situated partly on a heath, partly on an island, at the mouth of the Eyder, at its junction with the Holstein canal. It consists of three parts: the Old Town, built on the above-mentioned island; the New Town, on the Holstein bank of the river; and the crown-work, with the last sluice of the canal; and some warehouses, all on the Schleswig side. It has two churches, an hospital, a house of correction, military academy, &c. It is the residence of the Superintendant-General (a high dignitary of the Lutheran Church); and the military chest of the duchies of Schleswig, Holstein, and Luneburg is in the town.

RUSSIAN FUR COMPANY.—The Emperor of Russia, by a recent ukase, has renewed the privilege of the Russian American Company, founded in 1797. This Company, the principal office of which is at Archangel, on the north-west extremity of North America, carries on an immense commerce in furs, skins, and other articles, with all parts of the world. In this renewed charter, the Russian Government has introduced a clause, expressly stipulating that the Company shall establish factories in both the Americas, to meet the wants of the commerce of Russia. It also imposes upon the company the establishment of a line of transatlantic steamers, towards which it is to receive a subvention of 4,000,000 roubles.

FALL OF BRESCIA.

THE bombardment and sacking of this fine city of Lombardy was detailed in our Journal of last week.

Brescia, the Roman Brixia, is the capital of the province of that name, and is situated in a plain between the river Mella and a navigilo or canal which comes out of the river Chiese, and joins the Oglio; the hills from the north being close to the town. It is nearly square in plan, surrounded by walls, and has a castle on a hill. It is described as a bustling, lively, well-built town, a bishop's see, and the residence of the delegate or governor of the province.

Brescia has many fine churches, with numerous paintings by the great masters, principally of the Venetian school. The rotunda of the old duomo, or cathedral, is a structure of the Lombards of the seventh century; and the new cathedral is a splendid building. Some of the churches abound with paintings by native artists, among others by Marietto, whose works alone (Lanzi says) it is worth a journey to Brescia to see. The town, too, has many noble palaces, enriched with works of art; and the public library has 28,000 volumes

Brescia, next to Rome, has most fountains of any town in Italy. There are 72 public fountains in the streets, besides some hundreds of private ones; the water being supplied from the hills in the neighbourhood. There is a handsome theatre, a casino or assembly-room, and a new camposanto, or cemetery, in which the tombs are placed in rows one above the other against the walls, after the manner of the ancient columbaria.

Of the modern history of the place, it may be sufficient to state that the league of Cambrai took it from Venice in 1509, when it passed under the French, from whom having revolted in 1512, it was retaken by storm by Gaston de Foix, who gave it up to all the horrors of pillage and massacre. It was on this occasion that Bayard was severely wounded. Soon after, by the retreat of the French, Venice recovered its possessions, and Brescia among them. From that time it remained under the Republic till 1797, when a party of nobles and citizens, dissatisfied with the Senate, and encouraged and assisted by the French and the Milanese, revolted against Venice. Bonaparte annexed Brescia and Bergamo to the Cisalpine Republic. By the peace of 1814, Brescia, with the rest of Lombardy, passed under the dominion of Austria, against which it has just revolted, and become reduced to almost a heap of ruins. The Illustration shows the hot conflict in one of the streets, and gives some idea of the architectural character of the town, which has thus been sacrificed to devastating war.

THE FORTRESS OF RENDSBURG.—ENTRY OF THE DANISH PRISONERS.—FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.

THE CONFLICT AT BRESCIA.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

SUNDAY April 22 Second Sunday after Easter New Moon, 11th. 54m. P.M
MONDAY, 23 — St. George. Sir J. N. Hickens, Sculptor, died, 1803.
TUESDAY 24 — Sun rises 4h. 49m.; sets 7h. 10m.
WEDNESDAY 25 — St. Mark. Princess Alice Maud born, 1843
THURSDAY, 26 — Sun rises 4h. 45m.; sets 7h. 13m.
FRIDAY, 27 Length of day 14h. 33m
SATURDAY 28 — Lyndhurst imprisoned at the Gatehouse, at Westminster, 1742.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 28.

So day	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h. m.	A. h. m.	A. h. m.	A. h. m.	A. h. m.	A. h. m.	A. h. m.
1 20	1 46	2 13	2 45	3 20	3 59	4 43
P. h. m.	P. h. m.	P. h. m.	P. h. m.	P. h. m.	P. h. m.	P. h. m.
1 40	2 6	2 33	3 5	3 40	4 19	5 3

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that a GRAND EXTRA NIGHT will take place on THIS [illegible] Additions for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Opera Box-Office [illegible]

ROYAL MISSISSIPPI PICTURE, Egyptian Hall.—BANVARD'S GREAT PAINTING has re-opened from Windsor Castle, where it was exhibited by command to her Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, and the Royal Family, is NOW OPEN to the public, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. Morning, Half-past Two; Evening, Half-past Seven.—Admission: Lower Seats, 2s.; Gallery, 1s

THE EXHIBITION of the Association for Promoting the Free Exhibition of MODERN ART is NOW OPEN at the Gallery, Hyde Park-corner, daily from 9 till dusk. Admission, 1s. Catalogues, 6d BELL SMITH, Hon. Secretary.

EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly.—MARIE, the Infant Pianiste and Vocalist, (Sanctioned and Gentle), Six Years of Age, EVERY DAY, Morning, 3 o'clock; Evening, 8. To appreciate the powers of this highly gifted and interesting little [illegible] is necessary to see her performance, which is fixed in a style of elegance and ease. Reserved Seats, 2s.; Balcony, 1s. Children and Schools, half-price

HERR STRAUSS (of Vienna) has the honour to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that he will give a GRAND CONCERT (assisted by a celebrated Pianist and Vocalist) on EVENING NEXT, at the QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, Hanover-square, on which occasion he will perform Eight o'Clock PROGRAMME Part I. Overture to [illegible] Waltz, "Wiener Carneval," by Herr Strauss. Set Cotillon Waltz, "Les Sirènes." Quadrille "Les Masques." Waltz, "Pluyende Blatter," Grand Pot-pourri of Spanish Airs. Galop "Die Marketenderin." Part II. Grand Selection of Russian Airs, by Herr Strauss. Part III. Overture [illegible] Waltz, "Sinngedichte." Quadrille "Nordische Tandelyeen for Orchester." Waltz, "Kathinka Polka." Grand Galop, "Sehnsucht." Quadrille "Les Sirènes

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

GREAT SOUTHERN WHALE FISHERIES.

A public testimonial, in the shape of a grand entertainment, was given on Wednesday, at the London Tavern, to Mr. Charles Enderby, F.R.S., by the merchants and citizens of London, the occasion being the departure of that enterprising gentleman to his newly-founded colony at the Auckland Islands. In explaining this, it should be mentioned that Mr. Enderby has obtained a grant of the Auckland Islands, a position in the South Pacific preferable to all others for the prosecution of the object in question—which he and his two brothers above were interested. This grant they have ceded to the Southern Whale Fishery Company, allowing the company a site for the business of the fishery free of charge, and making no other reservation respecting the islands, or the waters for then that they shall share, in equa. proportions with the company, any net profits which may be derived from the sale or lease of the land, after a suitable and sufficient site for the whaling establishment of the company at the Islands of the Aucklands, with descriptive details, appeared in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, No 339.)

The chair, on Wednesday evening, was taken by Admiral Dundas, M.P., one of the Lords of the Admiralty, supported by Mr. Labouchere, M.P., President of the Board of Trade, Lord Colchester, Mr. Thomas Baring, M.P., the Hon. F. Scott, M.P., Sir W. Clay, M.P., &c.

In the course of the evening, Mr. Enderby, in responding to the toast of his health, observed that, according to a paper which he held in his hand, the cases of whaling (including Arctic) were 696 American whalers in the Southern Pacific Ocean, to 14 British ships. (Hear, hear.) His instructions were, to restore the balance. (Hear.) He had no feelings or enmity towards the Americans, but he did wish to see British skill and British enterprise assert their own position. As for the Auckland Islands, he must say he should welcome the American whaler, and he wished them success, whilst he should make every endeavour to compete with them.

Mr. Enderby then proposed the health of Mr. Labouchere and of her Majesty's Ministers.

Mr. Labouchere, in acknowledging the compliment, said it was matter of great gratification to him to be present on an occasion like the present, when all the principal merchants of the City of London were at the table. (Hear, hear.) But more especially did he feel pleasure in the circumstance that he had a warm sympathy with the objects of the enterprise contented by their worthy guest, Mr. Enderby. (Hear.) The presence of so many of the greatest merchants of London proved the value of the enterprise: it was deeply to be regretted that the fisheries of the deep sea had been left by English seamen to the United States. He trusted, however, that it would be found possible to restore the influence which England once possessed in the whale fisheries. (Hear.) He hailed, therefore, with satisfaction the meeting; and as to the thanks which Mr. Enderby had offered to the Government for their promotion of his views, he could only say that Government had done their duty in so acting. (Hear.)

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

CONDUCT OF MR. D'EYNCOURT, M.P., ON MR. COBDEN'S MOTION.—At a meeting of the Lambeth Electoral Association, held on Tuesday evening, at the Horns Tavern, Kennington Common, to take into consideration the resolutions assigned by the Right Hon. C. T. D'Eyncourt, for the absence of his name from the division list upon Mr. Cobden's motion for financial reform, and upon the general business of the Association, the following resolutions were carried, to :—1. "That the reasons assigned by the Right Hon. C. T. D'Eyncourt, in his letter of the 19th of March, for the absence of his name from the division list, upon the important question of financial reform, brought forward by Mr. Cobden on the 26th of February, are deemed by this meeting most unsatisfactory." 2. "That, in the opinion of this meeting, no member of the House of Commons deserves the confidence of the people who fails to record his vote in favour of such a measure as that brought forward by Mr. Cobden, and that Mr. D'Eyncourt has, by his conduct on that occasion, forfeited all claim to the support of the electors of this borough." On the general business of the Association the secretary read the report of the committee, in which, after referring to the establishment of the association, they regretted that their operations had been hampered for want of pecuniary support, only about 125 members having been enrolled, and £70 subscribed. This they attributed to the want of a more active canvass Nevertheless, they had convened various public meetings in favour of their leading measures; and hoped to be able to commence operations in the registration courts next year. If the electors only responded to the call of the committee, the objects of the association might be accomplished by a very small effort from each. The financial statement showed a balance of £6 8s. 6d. now due to the treasurer. The committee earnestly appealed to the meeting for increased support; £20 or 30 sub-scribers of 2s. annually would be sufficient to carry out the objects of the association. The report was adopted, and the retiring members committee re-appointed.

CAMDEN-TOWN RAGGED SCHOOLS.—On Tuesday afternoon the annual meeting of the supporters of these schools was held at the Hanover square Rooms; Lord Ashley in the chair. The report of the committee stated that since the foundation of these schools, in July, 1846, 1,200 destitute children had received, and seventy or eighty more had applied for admission, but had been refused from the want of proper accommodation. The progress made by the children was in the highest degree satisfactory, both as regarded the ordinary religious and moral education and the industrial occupations taught to them. From eight to ten adults had been admitted to the schools at their own request; their ages varying from nineteen to thirty-eight. They were all in a most lamentable state of destitution, but seemed very anxious to improve. An infant school and a Sunday school had been opened in connexion with the original foundation, both with encouraging success; but there were unfortunately outstanding bill-lities to the amount of £74 1s. 9d. This report was received and adopted, and several gentlemen then addressed the meeting in support of the resolutions for the support of Ragged Schools to the support of the public, and pledging the meeting to do all in their power to promote them. After a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting, which was rather numerously attended, separated, after perusal of the articles manufactured by the industrial classes in these schools were exhibited to the meeting.

DEPUTATIONS OF THE LATE REGISTRAR-GENERAL OF CALCUTTA.—A meeting of gentlemen representing the interests of parties injured by the defalcations of the late Registrar-General in Calcutta, Sir T. Turton, was on Monday at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, for the purpose of organising upon the best means to be adopted for obtaining compensation for their losses. The chair was taken by Mr. R. Alexander, who briefly detailed the incidents connected with the defalcation of the late Registrar-General, and expressed his opinion that compensation could only be expected through the intervention of an Act of the Imperial Parliament. He admitted, as a parallel case, the act of the 3d of William IV., cap. 74, which was passed awarding compensation to the sufferers from the defalcation of Mr. Gilbert Rickets, who was Registrar-General of the Court of Judicature in Madras, in 1817. The claims in Calcutta had, in the present case, ordered commissioners to prepare a report on the defalcations of the late Registrar, which report had, as it was understood, been received in London, but had not yet been made public, and he recommended that, in the first place, and as a preliminary step, some member of the House of Commons should be requested to move for a return of that report, and upon that being obtained, it might be followed up by a bill similar to that to which he had referred. After some discussion, a committee, consisting of Mr. Alexander, Mr. Fry, and Mr. Shuttleworth, was appointed to wait upon certain members of Parliament for the purpose of soliciting their co-operation in carrying out this view of the meeting.

MASTER MARINERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—On Tuesday night the fourteenth annual meeting of the committee and members of the Master Mariners' Benevolent Society was held at the Bridge house Hotel, London-bridge, to receive the report of the committee, and for the election of officers for the year ensuing. From the report it appeared that the funds of the society were £7547 6s. 6d., and the expenditure £1305 18s. 9d., leaving the total funds in hand, up to the 31st of March, 1849, £6,36 7s. 7d., of which £3,000 is invested in the National Debt Office, and £747 3s. 9d. in the hands of the treasurer; there being due from 123 members £174 9s. That notwithstanding the almost unprecedented number of casualties at sea during the last twelve months, the state of the funds was highly satisfactory. That since the first establishment of the society up to the present time there had been paid to the representatives of deceased members £6,027 10s. 6d., making a total of £13,567 3s. 9d. The committee, however, regret that there had not been a greater accession of new members than 14 during the past year, the number of subscribing members being 559, the highest registered number of masters being 1,555; out of this number 396 names are erased by death and other causes from the muster roll. Some of the gentlemen present took occasion to notice the merits of the master mariners. The society was established for their express benefit; and although there were hundreds in the port of London, none of them would attend it: it was too bad to expect those who had no interest in the society to attend the monthly and annual meetings, and the masters to absent themselves: and it was suggested that unless the masters made it a point to attend that the committee would dissolve themselves, and thus force the masters themselves to attend to their own interests. The committee was re-elected, and a new secretary appointed.

HEALTH OF TOWNS ASSOCIATION.—On Tuesday, the annual general meeting of this Association was held at the house of the Statistical Society, St. James's-square; the Hon. F. Byng in the chair. Amongst the individuals present were Mackinnon, M.P., Pr. B. Hollond, of Mansfield, to attend them, J. W. Tottie, Doctors Gavin, Oliver, Addis, & that while the metropolis, and Ireland, and Scotland remained unbenefited by sanitary measures, it shou d be held, not only that the Association had not fulfilled its mission, but that the most important portion of its allotted work remained undone. (Hear, hear.) At the same time it was gratifying to have let how much had been achieved with the small amount of means which had been placed at their disposal, and he had no doubt whatever, that, if supported a little longer, the Association would accomplish in their entirety all the objects which it had in view. (Hear, hear.) Dr. Guy read the report of the Association for the past year, which minutely detailed all the steps taken during that period, and embraced a statement of the receipts and expenditure since its commencement in 1845, from which it appeared that the sum of £1865 18s. 8d had been received, chiefly in subscriptions, of which the sum of £1858 19s. 1d. had been expended; leaving a balance of £46 19s. 4d. on hand. Mr. Mackinnon, M.P., begged to state, in reference to Smithfield-market, that he had the good fortune to get a Committee of the House of Commons on the subject on the previous night. He had experienced much opposition from Alderman Sidney and other gentlemen connected with the city; but he believed that if the call for a division had been persisted in, these gentlemen would have walked out alone, and he should have had the remainder of the House with him (Hear, hear.) As the Chairman of the Committee, he did not like to pronounce any opinion on the matters which were likely to come before it, but this he would say, that he would keep steadily in view the main object of endeavouring to obtain the most correct information, and the most respectable evidence on the subject. He trusted that if there were any gentleman present who had it in the power to offer information on the subject, he would send in their communications to give them the benefit of their evidence.—The Chairman said that the step taken by Mr Mackinnon would undoubtedly produce much good, and he trusted that the public would be induced to support the present system of intramural interments, for he believed his medical friends who were present would say that, in the event of a hot summer, the present system of the grave-yards in the metropolis was likely to produce pestilence. Mr Mackinnon begged to state that he had privately applied to Lord John Russell, to the chairman of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and to Sir George Grey, and stated that he intended to put a question to them regarding their intentions in the matter; but the answer which he had received was that it would accelerate the object which he had in view by not pressing them then on this subject. A question, however, regarding the intentions of government, with respect to any interference with burials in towns, was asked of Lord John Russell by Lord Ingestre lately, and the answer which he got was, that a bill was in course of preparation for the purpose of preventing interments within the bills or mortality. Lord John Russell, however, had not mentioned any time for the introduction of the measure, and he trusted that some one would take care to force him to be explicit on that important point. Lord Dudley Stuart was chairman of a meeting on the subject lately held at the Crown and Anchor, and he had informed him (Mr. Mackinnon) that it was his intention to put the question in a very few days. (Hear, hear.) The report was adopted, and a numerous committee for the present year was appointed. The proceedings closed with the adoption of resolutions expressive of the imperative necessity of the extension of effective sanitary measures to Scotland and Ireland, and calling upon the friends of the association to come forward with subscriptions.

THE ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY DINNER.—At the seventy-fifth anniversary festival of this institution, which took place, on Wednesday, at the Freemasons' Tavern, R. Hanby Cr., M.P., presiding, medals were presented to General Millman, for transmission to his son, Captain Bryan Millman, of the 6th Fusiliers, who had by the most intrepid conduct saved the lives of five of his brother officers; Dr. M. Oberon and his son, for the part they had taken in the same transaction; to Mr. Samuel Sims, the captain of the Waterman steamboat, No. 16, for saving the present Duke of Norfolk and his two sons from drowning in the water at Aberdeen; to Mr. T. Austin, for saving the life of John Holme, at Lancaster; and to Lieutenant Smith, for saving the life of Mr. West, near Vera Cruz. One of the most interesting presentations was that to Miss Julia [illegible] of Wight, on the 24th of June, 1848. The medal was presented to the lady through her brother. She herself was, however, in the gallery, and, on rising, was received with deafening and long-continued applause. [illegible] Lumley, M.P., Sheriff Pearman, Mr. Josiah Wilson, Mr. C. Rodenby, Mr. J. D. Powles, Mr. George Ingleton, Mr. C. Graham, Captain Halsted, R.N., of Lloyd's, Mr. Brookes, Mr. Chester, &c. The Chairman of Lloyd's was prevented joining the party through indisposition. The Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress have issued cards of invitation to a distinguished circle to meet Sir Robert and Lady Peel on Wednesday, the 9 h of May.

THE DEPUTY-CORONERSHIP FOR MIDDLESEX.—The office of Deputy-Coroner for Middlesex has been temporarily filled by Mr. J. Mills, in consequence of his health requiring a few months' relaxation from his duties, which, owing to the continuance of the recent indisposition of Mr. Wakley, have latter y been especially arduous. The duties of the office will, therefore, be undertaken for the next six months by Mr H. M. Wakley, son of the Coroner, on the expiration of which time it is hoped that Mr. Mills' health will be restored.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY.—The Earl of Rosse, the president, will, on Thursday evening, commence a series of four conversazioni, on Saturday (this evening), at Somer-set House. The other evenings appointed for these receptions are the 5th and 26th of next month, and the 6th of June.

FORGED BANK OF ENGLAND NOTES.—On Monday forged Bank of England notes which had been taken in business were exhibited in the shop windows of Mr. Heath, Poultry; at a tailor's, in Tavistock-row, Covent-garden-bridge; and at two other shops in the Commercial-road. So many of these forgeries have lately been passed, that the middle class and petty tradesmen absolutely refuse to take notes at all.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS, &c.—By the Registrar-General's report, for the week ending April 14, we find that the deaths registered in the week were 1059, which shows an excess of 103 on the spring average. Of these, 79 were from measles, which increase is one, hooping-cough, which was fatal in 69 cases, while the average is only 26 bronchitis and pneumonia, which severally count for 79, while the respective averages are 37 and 31, re found in the metropolis. Under the class of diseases which affect the respiratory gans, exclusive of phthisis, 198 deaths are enumerated, making 67 more than the average. Of small-pox, which died of inflamma in the week, 9 in the last four weeks. Cholera was fatal to only two persons. The whole number of lives which it has destroyed during a comparatively mild visitation of 30 weeks is 1,000. Diarrhœa, which generally proves fatal to a still greater extent, for it continues to maintain a population a little above the average. With reference to a fatal case of this disease, which occurred in Cambridge-heath, the Registrar-General observes that it is the second which has occurred in the same house; and that the medical attendant believes that they had their origin in an open sewer which runs at the back of the premises, and emits a very offensive smell. A boy, a year old, died in the week of "synanche parotidea maligna." The case is reckoned for convenience among those from scarlatina, that the list of causes of death might not be to much extended by introducing into it diseases which are rarely fatal. The births during the week numbered 1349.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean daily height of the barometer was greater on Tuesday, when it was 29.603 ; the mean of the week was 29.385. The temperature of the air fell gradually from the beginning of the week till Friday, when it began to rise. The highest daily mean was 47.1 on Sunday; the mean of the week was 41.8

THE WEATHER.—At about four o'clock on Tuesday afternoon last, the sky became suddenly overcast, and a heavy fall of snow took places. At first it came down in small flakes, which were soon succeeded by large and thick ones. In about a quarter of an hour the flakes increased in size and intensity, present ing all the appearances of a regular snow storm. The streets and houses were soon covered with the snow. Along the Strand, it was rather amusing to see the numerous vehicles in this unlooked-for garb. In the course of the evening the sky cleared up, and the snow ceased, but the weather remained intensely cold. The thermometer went down to 26. The barometer showed no change. In the course of the night there was another heavy fall of snow, accompanied with a drifting, piercing wind; and on Wednesday morning the streets were covered with snow, which, however, quickly disappeared before the sun's rays, which shone brightly. The day continued unseasonably cold, and in the afternoon there was some sleet. On Thursday there was a slight fall of snow, but it was not much to notice, which lasted from an early hour in the morning until four o'clock in the afternoon.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR ANDREW AGNEW, BART., OF LOCHNAW.

THE death of Sir Andrew occurred on Thursday, the 12th inst., at his residence, Rinland square, Edinburgh. The deceased was the representative of a very ancient Scottish family, which had been many generations the hereditary Constables and Sheriff of Wigtonshire. His father, Andrew Agnew, Esq., a military officer, married the Hon. Martha de Courcy, eldest daughter of John Lord Kingsale, and died in the year of his marriage, leaving a posthumous son, who succeeded his grandfather, the late Sir Stair Agnew, and was the Baronet whose death we record.

Sir Andrew was born March 21, 1. 3, and married June 11, 1816, Madeleine, daughter of Sir David Carnegie, Bart., by whom he leaves a large family. The eldest son, the present Sir Andrew Agnew, Bart., is married to Lady Mary Arabella Louisa Nicol, daughter of the Earl of Galloway.

"The character and labours" (we quote from a northern contemporary) "of the deceased Baronet are so well known, and in this country only, that all over Christendom, that it is needless for us to dwell upon them. He had devoted himself to one great and holy cause, the sabbath. For this only did he live whatever faculty he possessed, whatever influence he wielded, whatever office he filled, whatever rank he held, was made subservient to the furtherance of the sacred cause to which he had devoted his life. He was most unwearied in seeking out opportunities of keeping the question before the public eye, and of promoting the national observance of that holy day, both in his place in Parliament, where at one time represented his native county, and in the meetings of railway companies. He stood undaunted before opposition which would have daunted ordinary men. His temper was never ruffled, his exertions were never remitted, nor did he suffer his hopes ever to flag; and though he had many [illegible] to encounter, he lived to see the majority of his motions unfeasible integrity and consistency of his character."

WALTER BENTINCK, ESQ.

THIS gentleman, who died at his house, 81, Gloucester-place, Portman-square, aged 68, on the 10th inst., was the chief of the elder branch of the Bentinck family, some of which are still residents in Holland, in which country he was Baron by inheritance, although he never assumed the title in England. Mr. Bentinck married Adelaide, daughter of J. H. Stracey, Esq. (brother of Sir E. Stracey), and has left a daughter and one son, Walter, aged ten years, who succeeds his father as chief of the house.

COUNTRY NEWS.

SOUTH NOTTINGHAMSHIRE ELECTION.—The election of a member, in the place of Colonel Rolleston, took place at Newark on Tuesday. Little interest was excited. Mr. Mee, the Under-Sheriff, having opened the proceedings, Mr. R. Holden, of Lowe park, came forward, and, after regretful mention of the retirement of Colonel Rolleston, nominated Mr. R. Bromley, jun., as his successor. The nomination was seconded by Mr. H. P. Sherbrook, of Oxton; and, there being no other candidate, Mr. R. Bromley, jun., was declared duly elected. That gentleman then addressed the constituency, and expressed his intention to exert himself to the utmost of his ability to perform the duties of his new position. He stood on the present Government as a weak, irresolute, and incapable of grappling with the existing difficulties. He charged Mr. Cobden and the Free Traders with attempting to dissolve the landowner and tenant farmers, and he was sorry to say in one county they had succeeded their object. He would not enter into the arguments in favour of protection, as they had been so often reiterated. Mr. R. Bromley then spoke in favour of reduction of taxation, and the advantages of the colonies to England, and concluded by returning thanks for the honour conferred upon him. Three cheers having been given for the Queen, the business terminated.

MONUMENT TO THE LATE GENERAL SIR THOMAS ARBUTHNOT.—A neat mural tablet was last week erected in St. Philip's Church, Salford, to the memory of the late in itary commander of these districts. The tablet is of statuary marble on black ground, in the Grecian order, with circles of stars in the [illegible] diment, and flambeaux on each pilaster. It has been executed by Messrs. Patterson, of Manchester. The inscription is as follows :—"Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas Arbuthnot, K.C.B., who died at Manchester, when in command of the northern and midland districts, on the 26th day of January, 1849, aged 78 years. Reconcaest in part."

STOWE PARK.—The work of demolition has again commenced on the extensive and still beautiful domains of Stowe. Hundreds or thousands of trees of all kinds are doomed to the axe, though not, as before, to the auctioneer's hammer. Already the roads and walks are intercepted with prostrate trees in the gardens, of which they have been the pride and glory for generations; and it is painful to witness the havoc made by timber-fellers on the once well-kept lawns and glades. The only trees that have any mercy shown them at present are the oaks, but their doom will come before a month has passed, when the sap having risen, the bark may be torn from their stems. It will require a series of years to extirpate all the useful timber from the estate, as it can only be cut down when purchasers can be found for it. Another symptom of decline in the good old town of Buckingham, during the past week, has shown itself in dismantling the well-known inn, the Cobham Arms, which has been the scene of political and municipal feasts for about a century, and a pesting and coaching office as long. It is now to be converted into a bank, under the auspices of the London and County Banking Company, whose agent will open his commission there as soon as the necessary alterations are completed.

FEARFUL OCCURRENCE.—The Perth papers mention a dreadful accident which happened on Tuesday week on the farm of Fingask, in the parish of Rhynd, to a man named M'Donald, the son of a widow residing at Town's Muir. When leaving the field where he and others had been ploughing, for dinner, he, against the orders of the foreman, tried to mount one of his horses which bore a dangerous character, when the animal instantly set off at full gallop, and one of the chains unfortunately getting twisted around M'Donald's right leg, he was dragged at the heels of the maddened beast till the limb was actually [illegible] on the body at the hip joint, and the latter at the knee; the mare then continued to trundle at the horse's heels until it reached the stable door, when his companions rescued the poor lad he still lived, but his body presented a shocking spectacle—too shocking indeed to narrate. In ten minutes afterwards, however, death kindly interposed, and terminated his suffering.

INCENDIARY FIRE.—On Sunday morning, a wheat barn, the property of Mr. Stephen Lefever, Marden (Kent), was discovered to be on fire. The engine of the Kent Fire-office was quickly on the spot, but the fire was already nearly extinguished by the prompt and spontaneous exertions of the labourers of the district, who, both men and women, with the utmost zeal came flocking to the spot to render assistance the instant the alarm was given, bringing with them buckets, tubs handbowls, and any utensil they could lay their hands on. A fellow having the appearance of a gipsy has been apprehended on suspicion.

THEFT OF FIVE HUNDRED POUNDS.—A robbery of £500, it may be recollected, was effected on the 13th of January last, in the firm of Messrs. Graham-street, Glasgow, with such audacious address as eventually to baffle all attempts at discovery at the time. Last week the guilty parties were apprehended and the money recovered. The porter of the bank had been sent to get change for £500 quoted in the Clydesdale Bank, and had received five £100 notes in the latter establishment, which he carefully put into a pocket-book, and placed on the counter of the bank for the cash. While the book was getting ready he left the counter for some time, but when the teller took it up there was no money in it. Among the plans adopted for the recovery of the £500, the managers of the Clydesdale Bank called in all their £100 notes, and the notes of that denomination were returned to the directors, except six, so that if any person was found with £100 notes belonging to the Clydesdale Bank, he would be obliged to give a satisfactory account to the officials. On Saturday last a waterman, residing in Hamilton-street, Greenock, lodged a £100 note of the Clydesdale Bank in the Greenock savings bank. The manager of the savings bank sent a clerk over to the Greenock branch of the Union Bank, at once gave information of the circumstance to the authorities; but they did not think it [illegible] evidence, because, as six different individuals were apprehended with £100 notes, it was determined that the note in question was really stolen. Information having been sent to the police establishment in Glasgow, a different view of the case was taken of it. Superintendent Kay and Inspector Lamont proceeded to Greenock, where he searched the premises of Walker; but he was unable to discover anything except several tickets bearing the name of a man named Gregory, of Govanhill, Glasgow, which were seized as likely to throw some light on the matter. He returned, and, without losing a moment's time, took Holmes by surprise, searched his house minutely, and found three £100 notes concealed in the grounds. Holmes was taken into custody; and Superintendent M'Kay went back again to Greenock, made a closer search of Walker's shop, and in the ceiling discovered another £100 note. This, with the one in the hands of the bank, left three taken in Holmes's house, made the entire of the money so mysteriously taken from the counting-house of the Union Bank

THE STANFIELD HALL MURDERS.

On Monday afternoon the condemned convict Rush was visited by the whole of his family of nine children. They were accompanied by Mr James Rush, of Wymondham, brother to the convict, and Mr. Simms, the brother of the late Mrs. Rush. The scene is described by those who witnessed it as being most heartrending, both parent and children giving way to the wildest paroxysms of grief. They spoke little upon family affairs; the convict, with intense meekness, relied upon God to witness his innocence of the foul crimes imputed to him, and with many prayers recommended his children, especially the younger ones, to the kind and loving care of the Almighty. The interview lasted for two hours, and as it was understood that this was to be the parting visit, its close was most harrowing. Parent and children embraced each other, and gave vent to the most heartrending lamentations; even the gaolers and others present seemed to such scenes were greatly affected. At length the children of the unhappy man left him, and, after indulging for some moments in grief, he fell upon his knees and was engaged for a few minutes in prayer. A large number of persons congregated on the outside of the Castle walls, to witness the departure of the convict's family.

The house for £40 has been given up by Rush to Mr. Pinson, the governor of the castle, under very curious circumstances. It will be recollected that, in the course of the trial, Mr. Calthorpe, the solicitor, had a desk in the witness-box at Wymondham, produced certain papers and books which he found at Potash Farm, on going there after the apprehension of Rush. Amongst these was a book containing memoranda relative to the murder, with Rush's handwriting, a few memoranda, &c., and a cheque drawn in favour of Rush for £40. Rush asked permission to inspect it: the request was complied with. On the following Mr Nathan Cann Calthorpe had been abstracted. His suspicions immediately fell upon the prisoner Rush, who, however, strongly denied all knowledge of it. At length, however, when much pressed, and on being told that, in all probability, the instrument would give it his family, he said, "Well, Mr. Pinson, if you really think it will be given to my children, perhaps I might be able to tell you something about it." You will find it in the [illegible] of my bed, although every eye was turned upon him.

The family of the convict have been ejected from Folmingham farms under the notice of quit which expired some time since served. They still remain at Potash, but only upon sufferance. There is some talk of pulling down Potash Farm and building another house upon its site, to be called of course by a different name.

[illegible]

EMILY SANDFORD.—Subscription lists have been opened at Norwich and Swaffham, for the purpose of raising a fund for the relief of Emily Sandford. The subscribers say, "We, the undersigned, participating in the general feeling of commiseration for the unprotected and destitute state in which the unfortunate Emily Sandford has been plunged by the crimes of the convict James Blomfield Rush, have resolved to testify our desire to alleviate her misfortunes by private contributions, and have consented to be administered to her necessities under proper direction and management. We therefore invite the charitable and humane to contribute to further this intention, by benevolently forwarding their donations to [illegible] any amount they may deem proper." Messrs. Hanbury, [illegible] have also kindly consented to receive any donations not less than £1 each. Lord Leicester, Lord Hastings, and Mr. Beckwith [illegible] Es each, the subscriptions amount to £2.0 10s.

MRS. JERMY AND ELIZA CHESTNEY.—In some of the papers it had been stated that Mrs. Jermy is entirely deprived of her reason; for medical attendants state that this is not the case. Although Mrs. Jermy has been suffering from much mental excitement, yet those unpleasant symptoms are fast passing away, and there is every reason to hope that, ere long, we shall have the satisfaction of being able to announce her perfect recovery. We need but say, that the wound in the arm has progressed most favourably. Of Eliza Chestney, we also happy to add, that she has not suffered in any way from being brought to Norwich, and her return to Stanfield; her present condition is considered most satisfactory. The subscription for her already amounts to a considerable sum.

VISIT OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT TO LINCOLNSHIRE.

THE visit of his Royal Highness the Prince Consort to the important county of Lincolnshire has proved an event of so interesting a character, as to have induced us to devote a prominent portion of the present Number of our Journal to its illustration. The object of the Royal Visit, it will be recollected, was the laying of the foundation-stone of the New Dock and Wharfs constructing at Great Grimsby for the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company: and part of a vast system of communication which has much of the importance of a great national undertaking. The progress of the works has already been illustrated in our Journal. Thus, about a year since (No. 312, April 15, 1848), we engraved views of the New Holland Ferry, on the Humber; of the Railway at Great Grimsby; and of Thornton College, a picturesque antiquarian pile adjoining the line. In No. 344, Nov. 18, 1848, the Dock Works at Grimsby were illustrated in two Engravings; and in No. 341 and 343, the Opening of the Great Northern Railway was similarly recorded. At each of these dates we gave some account of the great scheme of communication by Railway and Sea, which the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Company are now carrying out; and, by reference to these details, it will be seen that the vast extent and importance of the Docks, both in a commercial and national point of view, were altogether worthy of Royal patronage, such as has been shown by Prince Albert consenting to lay the first stone of the works.

ARCH ON THE RAILWAY.

We shall now proceed to detail

THE ROYAL JOURNEY.—TUESDAY.

Although the Eastern Counties and Great Northern railways would have afforded a somewhat more direct route to Lincoln, than traversing the North-Western and Midland lines, the convenient proximity of the Watford station to Windsor decided the Prince on availing himself of the latter route, and a special train was accordingly engaged to convey his Royal Highness from Watford to Lincoln. This train left the Euston Station at a quarter past eight o'clock and arrived at Watford at ten minutes before nine on Tuesday morning. His Royal Highness was accompanied by the Marquis of Abercorn, Hon. Colonel E. Phipps, and Colonel Seymour.

GENERAL VIEW OF THE DOCK WOR

On alighting, the Prince was received by Mr. Smith, Mr. Creed, and Mr. Pitman, directors of the company, with Captain Huish, the general manager of the railway. His Royal Highness at once entered the saloon carriage, and Mr. McConnell, the locomotive superintendent of the company, having taken the direction of the engine, the Royal train was immediately set in motion, and in a few minutes lost sight of in the Watford tunnel.

The train ran to Wolverton at a very rapid speed, where a few minutes' delay took place to take in water and coke. Hence to Rugby was run in little more than an hour, the train drawing up alongside the platform at the latter place at five minutes to eleven o'clock.

Here the Directors and officials of the London and North-Western Railway took leave of the Prince, his Royal Highness having first expressed his thanks for the admirable manner in which the journey so far had been performed.

From Rugby the Royal train moved on without any other change, except the substitution of a Midland Company's engine, and ran through Leicester and past Syston without stopping, arriving at Nottingham at five minutes past twelve. Here the townspeople were out in thousands, and loudly cheered the Prince. After replenishing the boiler, the train again set forward, and passing Newark, where the station was thronged with persons, arrived at Lincoln at five minutes past one, thus performing nearly 150 miles in rather less than four hours.

The weather, until the train reached Leicester, was fine, but after passing that place a sharp storm of snow and sleet came on.

THE BROCKLESBY STATION.—ARRIVAL OF THE PRINCE.

ARRIVAL AT LINCOLN.

At the Lincoln station the Prince was received on the platform by the Earl of Yarborough, as Chairman of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, and by the Mayor and Recorder of Lincoln, who were presented to his Royal Highness by the noble Earl. The civic authorities were waiting in open carriages, and the

the whole cavalc change, amidst green arches a and the cheers

In the Corn

bourhood had as to the Prince, lo

The Aldermen

succession, and struck up "God joined in the pe

handsome raised presented to hi

and attachment

proceeded to vi

Chapter to the Highness made

After the deli screen, where h windows. His cloisters into the door, the beauty

the Prince exp

Bonney, who ac

many of its arch

On leaving the ceeded, amidst t

Sheffield, and M

rough, the chair

Esq., B. Thorold

THE LODGE AT BROCKLESBY.—TENANTRY MEETING THE PRINCE.

PRINCE ALBERT'S CARRIAGE DRAW

ESBY, LINCOLNSHIRE.

e seat in the Earl of Yarborough's landau, ion, which made its way to the Corn Ex- and banners, the profuse display of ever- ng of handkerchiefs from open windows, ined the streets able inhabitants of Lincoln and its neigh- e ceremony of presenting a loyal address ess read a reply. s then presented to his Royal Highness in o occupied a gallery over the entrance, e many of the gentlemen and ladies below m immediately after descended from the been standing, and where the address was cheers and every demonstration of loyalty escorted as on his arrival at the station, re the Bishop introduced the Dean and delivered an address, to which his Royal e Prince was conducted up the aisle to the icularly directed to the stained circular roceeded up the choir and through the etired through the chancel to the south dmired. Before re-entering his carriage gratified by his visit to Mr. Archdeacon h the cathedral, and drew his attention to

Highness re-entered his carriage, and pro- ople, to the station of the Lincolnshire, ere he was received by the Earl of Yarbo- , Esq., the deputy chairman; J. Whitaker, , Esq., directors; and Captain Humfrey the secretary, who conducted his Royal Highness to a special train, and pre cisely at half-past two was conveyed from Lincoln towards Brocklesby, the seat of the Earl of Yarborough

The festivities at Lincoln were kept up throughout the day, there being a grand dinner at the Great Northern Hotel, a ball in the evening, and a variety of entertainments for the people.

ARRIVAL AT BROCKLESBY.

At each station along the line to Brocklesby crowds of healthy sturdy peasants and yeomen had assembled, who greeted the special train as it swept along with loud cheers and the waving of hats. Arriving at its destination, his Royal Highness and suite alighted amidst every demonstration of loyalty, and the firing of a Royal salute; and having entered Lord Yarborough's carriage, they were rapidly conveyed to the Earl of Yarborough's residence, which is about two miles distant from the railway. The park was thrown open to the long stream of visitors. It is of considerable extent, and is ornamented at different points with small lakes, and is well clothed with timber; but the beauties of the landscape are dependent more upon natural than artificial effects, and consist of the broad, homely, and unadorned features of English woodland scenery. The Hall is a substantial building entirely in keeping with all around it, and totally divested of everything like architectural embellishment or display. On the lawn in front of it were drawn up the Earl of Yarborough's tenantry, to the number of 500 or 600, all mounted, and presenting, as may be imagined, a very striking appearance. Many of them, firmly seated on their hunters, revealed at a glance the favourite pastime of the North Lincolnshire farmers. The Prince was greatly struck with their appearance, for, after receiving the graceful welcome of the Countess of Yarborough at the entrance to the Hall, he stepped out upon the lawn and reviewed this regiment of mounted yeomen, expressing as he did so the high admiration with which they inspired him. Another important feature in "the high state" o our great nobility then presented itself; and the fox-hounds, which the hunts man vouches are the oldest and best in England, were seen hastening from their kennels to the centre of attraction. These came in also for a fair share of the Prince's attention.

We have engraved one of the arches on the line of railway; the Brocklesby Station, with the arrival of the Prince; and the tenantry meeting his Royal Highness at Brocklesby. We have likewise given a view of BROCKLESBY.

The lodge is entered within a very short distance of the railway station, but the mansion is situate more than a mile distant from the spot, pleasantly sheltered among fine branching oaks and other ornamental trees. The house itself is a plain brick structure. The interior had been specially re-decorated for th Royal visit.

The Picture Gallery has been superbly painted under the superintendence of Mr. Moxon, of High-street, Marylebone, whose exquisite taste in producing the richness, transparency, and variety of tints observable in marbles is marvel lous; and the imitations of various marbles, which have been skilfully arranged as to harmony of colour, in the new decorations in Brocklesby, are proofs of his skill. The columns and pilasters are of sienna marble, whilst verde antique, giallo antico, and Egyptian green marbles, and breccia traccagnus, in the panels and skirting round the room under the pictures, give richness of colour and beauty of effect, without garishness, a point of great importance in interior decorations. The furniture and fittings to this elegant room are of magnificent character, and have been supplied by Messrs. Snell, of Albemarle-street; and with the pictorial treasures on the walls, give an air of princely richness to the whole. The suite of sleeping apartments for Prince Albert were also furnished by Messrs. Snell, and the fittings do infinite credit to their taste. The furniture is of satin-wood; the draperies to the bed are of delicate chints, lined with blue silk, and having a white figured muslin over all. The cornices of the bed and windows are of Italian design, covered with blue silk, and the effect is peculiarly chaste and beautiful. We may remark, no gilding has been employed in the ornamentation of these rooms.

ARCH AT THE ENTRANCE TO THE DOCK WORKS.

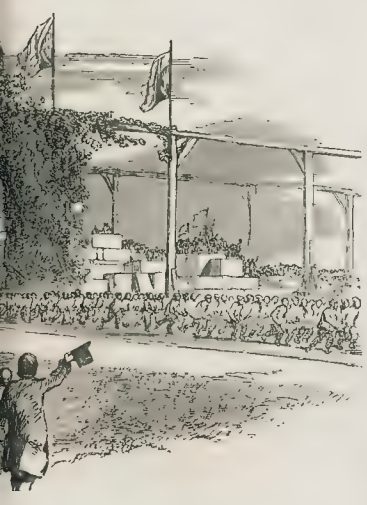
On arriving at the Hall, the Mayor and Corporation of Boston, headed by Sir

SILVER TROWEL USED IN LAYING THE FIRST STONE.



TO THE ENTRANCE OF THE DOCK WORKS.

EARL OF YARBOROUGH'S SEAT, BROCKLESBY.

James Duke, read and presented an address to his Royal Highness, in the grand picture gallery; to which the Prince replied.

The Mayor and Aldermen were presented to his Royal Highness, and then retired into one of the ante-rooms.

The interval between the arrival of his Royal Highness and dinner-hour, eight o'clock, was usefully filled up by a reconnoitre around the park and the farm, extending over an area of between six and seven thousand acres; and this was effected by the Prince and suite in an open barouche, and on horseback, in spite of a pelting snow-drift. The visit of his Royal Highness to the kennels, said to be the best in the county, occupied a considerable period. Having completed the tour of the park, the cavalcade, under visiting the splendid mausoleum erected to the memory of the late Lord Yarborough, and the lofty column to the memory of the Pelhams, returned to the mansion to dinner, which was laid out in the most sumptuous style by his Lordship's artistes and Messrs. Batson and Breach of London.

The following is a list of the company invited to meet the Prince:—The Earl of Carlisle, the High Sheriff of the county of Lincoln, Charles Chaplin, Esq., the Viscount Hawarden, the Lord Bishop of Lincoln, Sir Montagu and the Lady Georgiana Cholmeley, the Lady Mary Corbet, Mr. Christopher, M.P., and the Lady Christopher, the Lady Adela Capel, Sir Charles and Lady Anderson, Captain the Hon. Dudley Pelham, the Hon. J. Monson, the Lord Mayor of London, Mr. J. Parker (M.P for Sheffield, and the new Secretary for the Admiralty), Mr. E. Heneage, M.P., Mr. G. P. Heneage, and Mr. Chapman (deputy-chairman of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway).

Dinner was served in the banqueting room, a fine apartment, with a magnificent organ, and several fine oil pictures. The table presented a rich display of plate, conspicuous among which was a centre-piece, consisting of a magnificent testimonial presented to the present Earl of Yarborough, when Lord Worsley, by his constituents, the electors of North Lincolnshire.

The guests invited to the dinner, exclusive of the party staying in the house, were Mr J. M. Rendel, the engineer-in-chief of the Great Grimsby Dock; Mr. Fowler, engineer-in-chief of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway; the Hon. Robert Curr Brackenbury, rector of Brocklesby; and the Mayor of Great Grimsby (Mr. W. H. Dashwood). Lord Worsley, the youthful son of the Earl of Yarborough, joined the party at dinner. Covers were laid for thirty guests.

While the great and filled were thus receiving the splendid hospitalities of Lord Yarborough, his Lordship had not forgotten the claims of the poor. Two oxen were slaughtered for their especial benefit, and an abundant supply of the home-brewed ale was added to complete the cheer.

WEDNESDAY.

This morning the Prince left the Hall on horseback, accompanied by his noble host and several gentlemen of the party, for the purpose of further inspecting the Yarborough estate. His Royal Highness first visited the very superb family mausoleum, which stands about a mile from the mansion, and is one of the great features of Brocklesby. After inspecting this, the Prince accompanied the noble Earl over several farms occupied by his Lordship's tenantry, to each of whom his Royal Highness was introduced.

At twelve o'clock, Prince Albert, accompanied by the Earl and Countess of Yarborough, and nearly the whole of the guests staying at the mansion, left the Hall, and, escorted by the tenantry on horseback, proceeded to the Brocklesby station, en route for Great Grimsby. The Prince rode in a landau with his host and hostess, and on reaching Brocklesby entered the saloon carriage, which had been brought from New Holland under conduct of Mr. Wright, of the North-Western Railway. The train passed under the triumphal arch thrown over the railway at the entrance of the station precisely at one o'clock.

THE DOCK WORKS AT GREAT GRIMSBY

The corporation of Grimsby was then received by his Royal Highness in the reception room of the station, when the Mayor, Mr H Dudbery, Mr Heneage M.P. for the borough, Messrs Bell, Bennet, Brooks, Woods, Nicholson, magistrates, and others, presented an address, to which his Royal Highness read the following reply:—

"I return you my best thanks for the address you have just presented to me, and particularly for your attachment to the Queen, laws, and constitution. It has given me much pleasure to visit this part of the country, for the purpose of laying the foundation stone of a great work, which promises not only to be the means of increasing the wealth and prosperity of the borough, but may prove of considerable national importance."

The usual trade then proceeded, amid the waving of handkerchiefs, shouts and salvos, to the entrance of the dock way, under two splendid Egyptian arches, with the mottoes, "Vivat anor patriæ," "Welcome to Prince Albert," "God save the Queen," "Prosperity to Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, and Great Grimsby Dock" This was the gone al feature of all the flags and loyal demonstrations at the station and thre ghout the town. At the entrance to the dock-gates, the aldermanic procession was halted, and a choice array of m vigators, in white smock frocks and with blue favours, were hauled sed to the Royal convoy, and in this fashion the Prince was escorted to the scene of action, amid strains of martial music, hearded with hurras of artillery from surrounding eminences. The yachts and oreign vessels had their colours rung up to the topmost masts, and literally bristled with human beings. The men of war, under the flag of Admiral Elliot, were the Lightning, Wildfire, and Dasher, with sevens. ravenue cutters

The procession consisted of a train of carriages conveying the Prince, the directors and officers of the Dock Company, the corporation of Great Grimsby, the visitors at Brocklesby, and military band to the docks Upon their arrival, the Prince's carriage stopped immediately in sight of the vista of masonry; and the procession advanced along the outer line of railway, in sight of the flood under the command of Admiral Elliot, C.B., and of the dock works.

We have expressed the entrance to the dock works; and the characteristic scene of the "marvies" drawing the Royal carriage

We may now describe the preparations for the ceremony. Within the docks, nothing but a vast space of enclosed sea strewed with mud met the eye; but immense quantities of stone and timber collected for the completion of the works. As, however, we advanced, an immense amphitheatre opened up, the basement of which was considerably below the surface of low water, and in the centre of which rested the enormous foundation-stone. Close at hand stood a handsome pavilion, within the well-stored recesses of which Messrs. Baths and Breach, of the London Tavern, had provided a sumptuous repast. Immediately around the other parts of the amphitheatre seats had been prepared for spectators.

The Royal procession, on entering the docks, took the outer line of railway, which was ornamented with flags and banners of all descriptions, and met the one coming from the eastward, and which commanded a view not only of the docks, but also of the Sheerness squadron anchored without. Upon arriving at the amphitheatre the Prince and suite alighted from their carriages; and the procession descending amidst the booming of a Royal salute and the enthusiastic cheers of the spectators,

THE CEREMONY OF LAYING THE FOUNDATION-STONE

commenced. Colonel Humphrey, the Secretary of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, took charge of the inscription or depositum plate; Mr. Fowler, of the plate vessel to hold the coins; Mr. Cole, of the [illegible] and coins; Mr. Adam Smith, of the trowel, which was an extremely handsome and elaborate piece of workmanship. The plan of the docks was appropriately entrusted to Mr. Rendell. The Prince placed a collection of new current coins of the realm in a glass vessel, and having closed the stopper of it, the Earl of Yarborough handed to him the trowel, and briefly explained the object of the works The Prince then laid the stone in due form, and placed the glass vessel in the place of deposit assigned for it. The following was the commemorative inscription:—"This first stone of the Great Grimsby Docks was laid by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, on the 18th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1849, and in the 12th year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria. May God protect these works! The Prince Albert Dock, the first." Amen. Salvos of artillery were then fired for a prolonged period from the squadron in the roadstead; and, on the cessation, the Lord Bishop of Lincoln delivered an impressive prayer, beseeching that no harm might befall the port, for mariners in storm and tempest, they might always find a safe refuge from the winds, and waves, and perils of the deep, in their occupation on the great waters

The foundation-stone weighs 11 tons, and there are deposited in it the current coins of the realm, from a five-pound piece to the fraction of a farthing—the whole sunk in a recess thirty-five feet below low water.

We have engraved the Trowel, a tasteful work, designed by Mr. F. Spencer, and beautifully executed in silver by Messrs Barnard, of the Haymarket. In his design the artist has applied the subjects chiefly connected with the occasion on which it is used. The handle is of a spiral form, encircled by a cable, which winds round it, and is terminated by the model of a splendid modern vessel, whose figure-head, representing the town of Grimsby, is surmounted by a mural crown, and supports a shield with the armorial bearings of the town. Beneath the vessel is the figure of a Triton, supposed to be waiting it to a haven of safety. On either side of that part of the trowel where the handle unites with the blade, is the figure of a boy—one with the attributes of navigation and commerce, the other with the implements of dockyard labour. Between these figures is a shield, with the arms of England quartered with those of Prince Albert, the Prince's crown being placed immediately above the shield. The trowel, which is party-gilt, measures 14½ inches, and bears an inscription stating:

THE LUNCH.

The ceremony of laying the foundation-stone being concluded, the bands now played the National Anthem. Salutes were again fired. The processions then formed, and conducted the Prince to his tent, constructed by Mr. Edginton. Meanwhile, the company with tickets took their seats in the pavilion, 90 feet in circumference, and the Prince entered when the company were nearly seated after two o'clock.

The lunch was served in admirable style, and on a scale of profusion by the proprietors of the London Tavern. There were 1000 guests.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert sat on the right hand of the Earl of Yarborough, who presided; and among the eminent persons present were, Lady Mary Christopher, the Bishop of Lincoln, Colonel Phipps, Lord Worsley, Admiral Elliot, the Mayor of Manchester, the Mayor of Grimsby, the Marquis of Abercorn, Countess of Yarborough, Viscount Hawarden, Lady Sophia Pelham, Colonel Seymour, Mr. Christopher, General Thorne, Captain Maitland, Mr. Yorke, Mr. Hussey Packe, Mr. E. Heneage, Sir C. Anderson, the Rev. Mr. Attwood, Dr. Barnicott, the Master Cutler of Sheffield, Lieutenant-Colonel Artaur, Sir John Nethercote, Lieutenant Parker, Captain Elliott, Colonel Walkesley, the Hon. Captain Pelham, Lieutenant-Colonel Martin, Lady Nethercote, Mr. Adam Smith, the Mayor of Sheffield, Mr. A. S. Gee, Mr. J. M Rendell, Mr. Turner, Mr. Hutton, Mrs. Hutton, Sir M. Cholmeley, the Lord Mayor, Lady Georgina Cholmeley, Mr. Chapman, Lady Anderson, Earl of Mulgrave, and the Earl of Scarborough.

At the close of lunch, thanks having been returned by the Bishop of Lincoln, The Chairman rose and said: Your Royal Highness, my Lords, Ladies, and Gentlemen, the first toast I have now the honour to propose to your notice is "The Health of her Majesty the Queen, and may God bless her!" (Loud cheers)

The toast having been drunk with great enthusiasm and amidst every possible demonstration of loyalty,

The Chairman rose again and said, I have now the honour to offer to your notice the toast of "His Royal Highness Prince Albert." (Cheers.) His Royal Highness has been very graciously pleased to come to this place for the purpose of sanction at a ceremony which we hope will go forth, not only in England, but in all parts of the world with which the manufacturing interests of this country can be at all connected, as a most important undertaking. We have always entertained the most favourable sentiments, and his Royal Highness having been pleased to come here on the present occasion, shows that we have not been mistaken. His Royal Highness has been pleased to consider it an undertaking worthy of his Royal presence, and we have consider him as one with which he has associated himself with objects of national importance and [illegible] to this country, I am sure we must all feel highly honoured at having him here to-day, peculiar as he so deservedly is by the example he has always shown His Royal Highness is now visiting a part of the country which, until the introduction of railways, was scarcely known. Some people used to suppose we could not move about in this country except on boats. It was, therefore, not surprising, that when it was understood his Royal Highness was coming among us, that great curiosity should be evinced to know whether the report was true. But I am sure his Royal Highness will admit that in no part of England has more heavy work been executed than on Tuesday afternoon. Allard, the famed violinist of the Paris Conservatoire, and Charles Halle, the pianist, performed, being the first appearance of the former in this country. We are unavoidably compelled to postpone our notice of these great artists.——Bohrer, the violoncellist and composer, has arrived in London for the season.——Mr. Sims Reeves's benefit took place at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, being the 21st of the London Wednesday Concerts. The 22nd will be for Mr. Willy's benefit.——Madame Dulcken commenced, on the 16th instant, a series of three pianoforte matinées at her residence.——Ernst, Benedict, and Lindsay Sloper are invited to the meeting of the Melodists on the 26th inst., the Duke of Cambridge in the chair.——At the last meeting of the sixty-second season of the Glee Club, Sir Felix Booth's prize of twenty guineas for the best glee will be awarded.——The forty-ninth anniversary festival of the Western Madrigal Society was celebrated at the Freemasons' Hall, last Saturday, J. Evans, the president of the club, in the chair. There were about 100 anniversary presents. The madrigals were sung by a choir of twelve canons, fourteen altos, thirty tenors, and twenty basses, conducted by Mr. Turle, of Westminster Abbey.——The health of the president, Mr. G. Budd the secretary and treasurer, and of Mr. Hullah, conductor to the society, were drunk in succession.——Lodge occupied the chair to-night at the Exeter Hall concert to Mdlle Lind, in order to fill up the 6th part, and to lead Handel's "Acis and Galatea," in order that the four concerts, the proceeds of which are to be given to the Queen, may be completed.——The Council of the Royal Society of Musicians, the Central Fund, the Female Society of Musicians, and the Governesses' Fund may have a stretched was the weather, was most unpreitably small. The Great Metropolitan Handicap had not the "come off" which it first calculated to create. Peep o' Day Boy was all the "go." The only meeting of any note for the remainder week is the first Spring meeting. Much interest is excited by it, inasmuch as the 2000 Guinea Stakes on Tuesday, and the 1000 Guinea Stakes on Thursday, are likely to throw some further light on the Derby and Oaks. Steeple-chasing and hunting are at an end, and summer amusements are "just a-going to begin."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The Metropolitan betting was remarkable for the total disappearance of Canezon and Excenter, both of whom are reputed to be lame or otherwise amiss. Peep-o'-day Boy, in consequence, was backed at 2 to 1 for the Derby, and two or three others were backed with some spirit. Nunnykirk was backed at even for the 2000 Guineas, and the Flying Dutchman at 2 to 1 for the Derby. The other quotations did not show any change of moment.

SOMERSETSHIRE STAKES.

2 to 1 agst Leap-garon
5 to 1 — Brandylass

7 to 1 agst Hawkhamdun
10 to 1 — Canbier

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

Even on No. 6 mark.

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

3 to 1 agst Peep-o'-day Boy
6 to 1 — Lugar

7 to 1 agst [illegible]
17 to 1 — Flatcatcher

10 to 1 agst Fogi. man
10 to 1 — Do-the-Boys

CHESTER CUP.

14 to 1 agst Joe-o'-Noll
16 to 1 — Chanticleer

36 to 1 agst Lady Wildair
50 to 1 — Cast-off

DERBY.

2 to 1 agst Flying Dutchman (5)

11 to 2 agst Tedmor (5)
13 to 2 — Nunnykirk (5)
50 to 1 agst Honeysuch (5)

12 to 1 agst Vanguard (5)
33 to 1 — Chanticleer

DERBY, 1850.

55 to 1 agst Compass (5)

50 to 1 agst Skiff (5)

TATTERSALL'S, THURSDAY. The Metropolitan Handicap was the only race speculated on to any extent, and only four horses were in anything like force, viz. Peep o' Day Boy, Lugar, Flatcatcher, and Cast-off. The first mentioned of these "selects" received nearly two points from the odds quoted at Bath, but left off with several powerful friends. Canezon was declared not to start. No change of consequence on the Chester Cup or Derby.

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

7 to 2 agst Peep-o'-day Boy
4 to 1 — Lugar
5 to 1 — Flatcatcher (1)

7 to 1 agst Fernhill
15 to 1 — Paganism
15 to 1 — Do-the-Boys
20 to 1 — Magnolier

25 to 1 agst Gleelle
30 to 1 — Hayley
33 to 1 — Tuscus

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

Even on Nunnykirk.

ONE THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

2 to 1 agst Sc. Rosalia.

CHESTER CUP.

12 to 1 agst Joe-o'-Nol
18 to 1 — Minister

33 to 1 agst John Cesor
40 to 1 — Peep-o'-Day Boy

100 to 1 agst Impostor

DERBY.

2 to 1 agst Flying Dutchman
5 to 1 — Tedmor
10 to 1 — Vanguard

40 to 1 agst Vedetta (1)
50 to 1 — Cast-off
Alice Hawthorn'dan

66 to 1 agst Belus
100 to 1 — Hotspur

BATH RACES.—TUESDAY.

The LANSDOWNE TRIAL STAKES of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, and 50 added. One mile.

Mr. Blenkiron's Tyrrhina 1st Fly, 9st 2lb .. ..(A. Day) 1
Mr. Godwin's Hotspur, 3 yrs, 7st .. .. ..(Pearl) 2

The WESTERN STAKES of 10 sovs each, and 51 added.

Duke of Richmond's Officious, 4 yrs .. .. ..(Flatman) 1
Captain Arundell's Rose Pompon, 8st 4lb .. .. ..(Wakefield) 2

The SOMERSETSHIRE STAKES, of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, and 5 only if declared, with 100 added.

Sir R. Pigott's Escadarina, 3 yrs .. .. ..(A. Cowley, jun.) 1
Mr. Gregory's Loup-garon, 3 yrs, 8st .. .. ..(Treen, jun.) 2

SWEEPSTAKES of 10 sovs each, and 50 added. Heats, one round.

Mr. Harrison's Miss Burns, aged, 8st 4lb .. .. ..(A. Day) 1
Mr. Isaac Day's Mildmer, 5 yrs, 8st .. .. ..(Wakefield) 2

The CITY CUP of 100 sovs, added to a Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.

Duke of Richmond's Jelly Roll, 4 yrs, 6st 2lb .. .. ..(Treen) 1
Mr. J. Eyke's Model, 3 yrs, 6st 2lb .. .. ..(W. Sharp) 2

CATTERICK BRIDGE RACES.—TUESDAY.

The YORKSHIRE CLUB STAKES of 100 sovs each.

Mr. Jacques's Chanirey .. ..(Holmes) 1
Mr Bell's Velox .. ..(Bumby) 2

The REVIVAL STAKES of 20 sovs each, with 20 added.

Mr. Humphries's Lesape, 4 yrs, 7st 13 lb .. .. ..(Holmes) 1
Lord Eglinton's Eagle's Plume, 4 yrs, 8st 7lb .. .. ..(Marlow) 2

The FILLY STAKES of 15 sovs each.

Lord Zealand's Ellen Middleton .. ..(J. Marson) 1
Mr. T. Dawson's Priestess .. ..(Cartwright) 2

The CHAMPAGNE STAKES of 20 sovs each.

Mr. Meiklam's Thalia .. ..(Templeman) 1
Mr. Jaques's Mildew .. ..(Cartwright) 2

The SENIOR STAKES of 10 sovs each.

Mr. Meiklam's br c by Lanercost .. .. ..(Templeman) 1
Mr. Standish's Gaudy .. ..(Clarke) 2

THE INCOME TAX.—On Wednesday the following notice was issued from the office of the Commissioners of the Income-Tax, in the City.—"That all persons are required by the Property and Income Tax Act to make returns of their profits from trades, professions, &c., within 21 days after the assessment made in the year 1849, under schedules A and B, in respect to lands, tenements, &c., remains in force for three years from the 5th of April, and that four returns are required to be made for the present year under these schedules, except in cases where lands, tenements, &c. have not been charged in the assessment already made, or where any buildings have been since erected."

MOSES ATTORNEYS.—On Monday notice was given in the Court of Queen's Bench by the articled clerks, of intended application during Trinity Term next to be admitted attorneys without court, and on a motion, by order of the Judge, rule added to the list. The number to be examined for admission during the present Easter Term is 140. The examiners will hold their court at the Law Institution, Chancery lane, for that purpose, on the 1st of May. There were 81 application to renew certificates, making a grand total of 237. Solicitors will be sworn in before the Master of the Rolls on the 8th of May.

GREAT COST OF THE LONDON POLICE.—MEETING OF METROPOLITAN DELEGATES.—On Wednesday a numerous meeting of the delegates appointed by the metropolitan parishes, in reference to the increased demand for police in the parishes in Middlesex, took place at the Court-house, Mary-bone, for the purpose of determining what steps should be taken in reference to that matter, consequent on the indisposition of Sir George Grey to re-introduce his bill of last session for reducing the police rate of the metropolis to a penny in the pound. The following resolutions were agreed to:—"1. That, in consequence of the application to the Home Secretary requesting him to re-introduce his bill for the reduction of the police rate of the county of Middlesex, not having been attended with success, this meeting is of opinion that application should be made to Parliament for redress forthwith." 2. "That Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P., be requested to move the House of Commons for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the amount levied for police rate, and into the manner of its expenditure, particularly with reference to the recent enormous increase in the county of Middlesex, and that the members for the metropolitan boroughs and the county be requested to support such motion." 3. "That the metropolitan parishes be requested immediately to prepare petitions to Parliament praying for the appointment of the select committee."

HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION, BROMPTON.—The list of stewards for the forthcoming anniversary festival of this most excellent charity is filling up rapidly. Lord Ashley has long been early in May next, when it is expected a very strong muster of the friends of the institution will take place, over whom Benjamin Disraeli, Esq., M.P., will preside. After the usual loyal and [illegible] toasts, the noble Auxiliary Vice-President will [illegible] the health of the [illegible] Mr. Walker, the secretary, will [illegible] the internal arrangements. The system of ventilation (Dr. Arnott's) afforded the greatest satisfaction to the Prince.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Hon. Secretary."—The Chess prints from Frank Stone's charming subjects, "The Impending Mate" and "Mated," are published by Gambard and Co., printsellers, of Berner's-street, Oxford-street.

"R. H."—Much too easy.

"Traveller," Saugatore, is thanked. His solution is the correct one.

"Glasford."—They have not only quoted a Pawn, but have the better position.

"M. Kisseritzky." The Number for April has not yet reached us.

"Jarsph."—Received, with best thanks

"John M." will see, by our solution of Mr. Dalton's Problem, No 271, that he is quite wrong.

"J. H."—1. Von H. der Lasa is alive. 2. La Bourdonnais won a majority of the games between him and M'Donnell. 3. The Enigmas are too a mple.

"C. F." Cambridge.—1. How is it possible we can tell, by so vague a description as "a new move at a great number," to what Problem you allude? 2. Easy; but we have not also

"H. A."—Many thanks.

"Pawn."—Your communication is not only a most important one to Chess. He must no longer be left to wander about the world, the unprotected object of such hands as yours, but must be at once secured and placed in the custody of some one of the Chess Societies, who will undertake to conduct his future career with the greatest possible care and attention. Your own claims to be entrusted with this office are, we admit, of the highest order, but we cannot, under the circumstances, allow you the honour of the appointment. We therefore have no alternative but to recommend you to the Committee of the Westminster Chess Club, who will, we are sure, duly appreciate your services to the cause of Chess, and will, we have no doubt, be happy to avail themselves of your valuable assistance in the management of their affairs. We have written to the Secretary of the Club, and have no doubt that you will receive a favourable answer to your application. We shall be happy to hear that you have been elected, and to see you in the Club-room.

"Leeds."—Your Problem is unsound. Black can play 1. K to Q 4th (ch), and mate next move.

"Brighton."—1. Of any bookseller. 2. The position shall be examined.

"E. P. W." The Chess diagrams are not printed from wood-cuts. In the Problem and original? If so, you must send the column before we can look to it.

"H. V."—Please to draw the diagram correctly.

"J. B. K." Glasgow.—It has surely been published by us before.

"D. B. C."—A good suggestion. It shall not be forgotten.

"Dunrun."—The answers remain shall be examined.

"C. H. R."—The key to Enigma No. 433 is:—1. F to K R 8th, becoming Bishop (ch), &c.

"A. H." Cheltenham.—1. The price will be as. 2. Your Enigma is discoverable at a glance.

"W. L."—You are quite right. See the notice above to "C. W. R."

"Query" Hull.—Query, because, if the Queen take the Bishop, White checks both King and Queen, and has a Queen to move to a vacant square, and consequently can choose which he will take.

"P. S." York.—Quite right now. See the last Number of the Chess-Player's Chronicle.

Solutions by "F. G. R.," "H. E.," "H. V.," "A. M.," "P. R. S." "Trivindle," "M. P.," "Ebza," "G. A. H.," "J. B.," "H. F.," "R. H.," are correct. Those by "Tu," "Aram," and "D. C. L." are wrong.

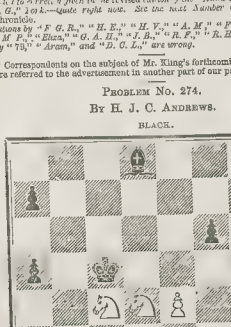
 Correspondents on the subject of Mr. King's forthcoming book of Problems are referred to the advertisement in another part of our paper.

PROBLEM No. 274.

By H. J. C. ANDREWS.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, moving first, to check-mate in six moves.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 273.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to K 8th (ch)	P takes Kt (best)	3. P takes P (ch)	K takes K
2. B to Q 5th (discovering check)	K to his 3d	4. R to K 4th sq 5. R to Q sq—Mate.	What he can

CHESS IN THE METROPOLIS.

GAME AT ODDS, BETWEEN MESSRS. COCHRANE AND STAUNTON.

(HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.)

[Of the seven games played between Messrs. C. and S., at odds, three only have been published, the remainder it was supposed, not being preserved. Through the politeness of a Correspondent, we are enabled, however, to present one more of those scarce games, which, though not remarkable from its intrinsic merit, will be of interest from its novelty.]

(Mr. Staunton gives the Pawn and Move to Mr. Cochrane.)

(Remove Black's K B's Pawn from the board.)

WHITE (Mr. C.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. C.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q 3d	14. B takes B	Q takes B
2. P to B 4th	K Kt to B 3d	15. Q to K 2d	Q R to Q sq
3. K B to Q B 4th (a)	Q B to K Kt 5th (b)	16. K Kt to B 3d	P to Q Kt 4th (e)
4. K B to K 2d (c)	Q B to Q 2d	17. Q to K 3d	B to K 2d
5. P to Q 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	18. Q R to K B sq	R takes R
6. K Kt to B 3d	P to K 4th	19. K takes R	P to Q R 4th
7. Castles (d)	P takes P	20. Q to Q Kt 6th	P to Q R 5th
8. Q B takes P	B to K 2d	21. P to Q R 3d	B to Q 3d (f)
9. Q Kt to B 3d	Castles	22. Q to K 3d	Q to K 2d
10. B to K Kt 5th	Kt to K 4th	23. P to Q 3d	B to Q B 4th
11. Kt takes Kt	P takes Kt	24. Q to K sq	R to Q 3d
12. Q B takes Kt	B takes B	25. Kt to K 3d	R to K R 3d
13. K P to K Kt 4th	P to Q B 3d	26. P to Q B 3d	P to K 4th
		27. P to K R 3d (g)	Q to K 2d

The remaining moves were not taken down, but the game was finally won by White

(a) P to K 4th would have been improved, from its giving the much freedom to Black's game

(b) If Black had taken the K P, he would have subjected himself to an embarrassing attack; for suppose—

3	Kt takes K P
4 (ch) Q to K R 5th	P to K Kt 3d (best)
5 Q to Kt 5th	&c.

(c) Interposing but to little purpose, as we have soon at portion

(d) Better than at once taking the P or playing P to K B 5th.

(e) Threatening to dislodge the Kt and probably gain a Pawn by checking with his Q.

(f) Preparing to play the Rook to Q Kt sq, and then advance the Q Kt Pawn

(g) This was indeed a little before playing the K to Kt 3d (or)

27. Kt to Kt 4th	R takes B (ch)
28. B takes R	Q mat s.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE,

BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF LONDON AND AMSTERDAM.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
29. R takes Q	R to Q R
30. R to Q B 2nd

London to play.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 434.—By W. L., Jun.

White: K at his sq, B at K 4th, Kt at K B 3d, P at K 2d

Black: K at his 5th

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 435. By M. PERTZ.—From "La Régence."

White: K at his K 5th, Q at her sq, Rs at Q 2d and Q Kt 4th, Kt at Q 8th.
Black: K at Q 3d, Q at K R 6th, R at Q B sq, Kt at K 5th, P at Q 4th.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 436.—By E. H. G.

White: K at Q Kt 8th, R at Q R 7th, B at K Kt 4th, Kts at K R 6th and K Kt 5th.
Black: K at Q Kt 3d, Q at h 8th, Rs at K Kt 3d and Q B 8th, Bs at K R 7th and Q Kt sq, Kt at K B 8th, P at K R 4th.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Conde de Montemolin, whose arrest on the French frontier while endeavouring to effect an entrance into Spain we noticed last week, arrived in London on Sunday morning last. The Prince was escorted from Perpignan to Calais by two French military officers.

Mr. Drouet, the proprietor of the Pauper Asylum, Tooting, whose trial at the Central Criminal Court on a charge of manslaughter was begun on Friday week, was on Saturday acquitted, the jury unanimously returning a verdict of "not guilty."

Mr. Duffy's fourth trial before a Dublin jury has terminated like all the preceding cases of prosecution against him: the jury could not agree, and they were accordingly discharged on Saturday last. Mr. Duffy, who is to be tried again, has been let out on bail of two sureties of £500 each and himself £1000.

Rush's executions is to take place this day (Saturday) at Norwich.

On Saturday afternoon, about half-past eleven o'clock, a fire broke out in the premises, consisting of warehouses, &c., belonging to Messrs. Gardner and Son, Manchester, which, so rapid was the progress of the flames, the entire building, together with its contents, which consisted of about 600 bales of cotton, was destroyed.

On Saturday last, an aged Swiss lady, named Forester, residing at Bayswater, accidentally set fire to her clothes, and was so much burnt before assistance could be had that she died shortly afterwards.

A very untoward mishap will deprive the Edinburgh artists of the opportunity of exhibiting their pictures at the forthcoming exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts in the metropolis. The steamer on board which many cases of their productions were embarked could not land them in London until Wednesday morning week, and Tuesday night was the latest period appointed by the Royal Academicians for the reception of all works intended for exhibition. Application for indulgence, under the peculiar circumstance, was made to Mr. Knight, R.A., secretary, and that gentleman submitted the question to the Council, who, however, declared the regulation to be imprescriptible.

A return laid on the table of the House of Commons, on the motion of Sir H. Winston Barron, shows that the total amount of loans applied for and granted under the Land Improvement Act, and refused for want of adequate funds, was £240,—. Besides the above applications, on which no loans were made in consequence of insufficient funds, many other applications were only partially complied with from the same cause.

Workmen have been engaged during the week in boring near the centre of Mansfield Market-place, with a view to ascertain the nature of the proposed foundation for the Bentinck Testimonial in that town. The depth is an elaborate specimen of an early English market-cross, richly decorated.

On Saturday, the contract for the building of the new city prison at Holloway was formally signed by the contracting parties, and on Monday operations commenced on the ground. The first stone will be laid at Midsummer, and it is believed that the whole structure will, under the direction of Mr. Bunning, the city architect, be completed in the summer of 1852.

In consequence of a dispute in the National Assembly between MM. Ledru-Rollin and Denjoy, a duel took place between these gentlemen, on Friday (yesterday). The combatants were withdrawn by their seconds after an exchange of shots, neither party being hurt.

M. Proudhon has addressed a letter of seven columns to the People, to vindicate himself against the charge of having embezzled 8000 francs of the 17,000 francs subscribed towards the establishment of the Bank of the People. Several charges of fraud are to be brought against Proudhon before the Police Correctionnelle, for he has defrauded from the money raised for his bank nearly one-half for expenses, which by the law he alone is bound to bear, that company not having been incorporated.

The Inspector-General of Imports and Exports has laid before Parliament, in compliance with the motion of Mr. Ricardo, an account of the quantities, in tons, of the produce of Europe imported into the United Kingdom during the years 1845, 1846, and 1847, showing the proportion imported in British ships and that imported in foreign ships. The following is the result:—In 1845 there were imported in British ships, 731,834 tons; in foreign ships, 70,369 tons. In 1846, British ships, 947,174 tons; foreign ships, 110,948 tons. In 1847, British ships, 1,259,878 tons; foreign ships, 1,176,372 tons.

M. Eugène Raspail, who was to be tried before the tribunal of the Police Correctionnelle at Paris, for the assault on M. Point, another representative, has not, it would seem, have been assaulted for his apprehension. The highest punishment for such an offence is five years' imprisonment.

Richard Leder, who on Friday week pleaded guilty to stealing, in May last, £750 from the Justice hulk, at Woolwich, has been sentenced to be transported for seven years. On hearing this sentence pronounced, the prisoner fainted, and he was carried out of the dock in a state of insensibility. He was at one time governor of Horsham Gaol, and at the time of committing the offence overseer of the Justice hulk.

On Tuesday morning, the 10th instant, as a little boy, named Flowerdew, aged four years and a half, was playing on some sacks in the Wandford mills, Norfolk, where his father was at work, it is supposed he fell into the hopper and was suffocated, as his father, on emptying the hopper, was horrified at discovering his child, literally drowned in flour, grasping a sack in one of his hands; life was quite extinct when he was found.

The health of Mr. T. S. Duncombe, M.P., has so far improved that it is his intention to resume his parliamentary duties within a very short period. The disease under which Mr. Duncombe has suffered so severely for a protracted period has yielded to the skill and unremitting care of the medical attendants who are of opinion that, with proper precautions, the hon. member for Finsbury has yet many years of public usefulness before him.

The Great Western Railway Company intend making a reduction of 200 men in their establishment at Swindon, on the 1st of May next.

The mania of gold hunting has extended to the usually unspeculating isle of Jersey. An English brig, the Lord Stewart, Captain Cook, is now advertised for passengers for San Francisco, in Upper California, some forty persons are about to start with a fair cargo of wines, oil, &c., on the 26th inst.

The governor of the county jail at Hereford, Mr. Riddle, has been dismissed by the justices on the ground of incapacity or neglect of duty.

Lord Clarina has been elected for the vacancy in the Irish representative peerage caused by the death of Lord Dunsany. Lord Dunsandle and Clanconal are candidates for the Irish representative peerage vacant by the death of Lord Gosford.

At the meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, held recently at Stamford, the chairman (the Marquis of Exeter) gave a donation of £100.

Importations of horses are at present taking place, not only from Holland and Belgium, but also from France and the Hanseatic States. The vessel Venerable, just arrived from Havre, has brought 12 horses, individually selected, of French production, the Procès Verbaux, from Antwerp, has brought 18 horses, of Belgian growth, consigned to order, besides the large number of 64 calves; and an arrival of horses has also just taken place by a steamer from Hamburgh, consigned to a dealer in the metropolis.

M. Salvandy, former Minister of Public Instruction under Louis Philippe, had returned to Paris. He intends to present himself as a candidate in the department of Eure et Loire at the approaching election.

Two miserably poor young men, residing in an obscure village, in the department of the Isere, in France, have succeeded, it is said, after ten years' labour, in completing a calculating machine declared to be superior to any yet invented. The Academy of Sciences have issued a most "eulogistic report" on it.

The Spanish Progresista Chief Ametler has been arrested near Toulon, and conducted to Fort Lamalgue.

The aggregate quantity of grain, meal, and flour, of all sorts, entered for home consumption in the United Kingdom, from the 2d of March, 1848, to the 2d of March, 1849 (both days inclusive), was 5,953,958 quarters. Of this there were entered with duty 5,938,958 quarters, and admitted duty free 15,000 quarters. The amount of duty received was £8,1985 19s. 4d. The total quantity of grain, meal, and flour remaining in warehouse under bond, on the 31st of January, 1849, was 1,045,772 quarters

Letters from the relatives and friends of the officers and seamen serving in the Arctic Seas in her Majesty's ships Arrobus and Terror, Enterprise and Investigator, will be transmitted by Her Majesty's ship North Star, sent out for the discovery of the Admiralty on or before the 1st of May

The total number of county constables of all classes employed in England and Wales in the year 1848 was 6716, viz. 2857 in England, and 159 in Wales. The total charge for maintenance amounted to £.58,944 9s 8d; and of this sum £31,.02 1d was for pay and allowances, and £23,741 for incidental expenses. The amount paid to the county police rate in the year was £111,367 6s. 2d.

Notwithstanding the difficulty his Grace the Duke of Buckingham's trustees have in disposing of the late Duke's large estates to their mind, it is a fact that the whole [illegible] were ready disposed of at some amounting to 30 years' purchase on good rentals.

Mr. Bartholomew O'Brien, a native of Clonmel, who emigrated to Canada over thirty years ago, died at Montreal last month, and bequeathed £1000 to build an asylum for the destitute Irish orphans, and a similar sum to the poor of Clonmel.

Eighty men, mechanics and labourers, employed in her Majesty's Dockyard, Holyhead, have received notice that their services will not be required any longer.

As Prince Metternich has not paid his taxes, about 177,000f., on his château in the Duchy of Nassau, his wines have been seized, and will be shortly sold. Some of the wines are 200 years old.

The farmers of Ulster are laying down a greater quantity of flax than usual this season, and the increased demand has caused an advance in the price of seed in Belfast and Londonderry.

A respite during her Majesty's pleasure was received in the course of the week by the Governor of Huntingdon gaol for Charles Jarvis, by whom sentence of death was passed at the summer assizes for the murder of his wife at St. Ives, but who was at the last session tried for the murder of his child a [illegible], and acquitted [illegible] and discharged.

The Emperor of Russia has conferred upon General [illegible] the dignity of Marshal of the Russian army, and has appointed him chief of the hussars of White Russia

DISTRICT CHURCH OF ST. STEPHEN THE MARTYR, AVENUR-ROAD, PORTLAND TOWN.

CHURCH OF ST. STEPHEN THE MARTYR.

THE noble-looking Church of which we this week give an Illustration, is rapidly approaching completion, and is to supply the spiritual destitution of the district of Portland-town, comprehending the numerous streets between Circus-road and St. John's Wood-terrace, on the north; South-bank and Regent's-park on the south; Cavendish-road and Grove-road on the west; and the boundary line between the parishes of St. Marylebone and St. Pancras, on the east, containing a population of at least 6000, two-thirds of whom are poor. It is included in the district, rectory of Christ Church, St. Marylebone; but the inhabitants are, on account of the distance, practically prevented from attending the public services, and precluded from the private ministrations of the clergy of that church.

The view we give shows the eastern end of the Church, and, as may be inferred, it forms a pile of building of good character and proportion. The tower and spire, when completed, will be 136 feet in height; but at present, for want of funds, the tower alone is not carried up so high as the belfry. The body of the Church consists of nave, side aisles, transepts, and chancel. The nave is 75 feet in length, and the chancel 21 feet, and the height 43 feet. The width of the Church is 62 feet. The tower rises from the south side of the chancel, and is open to the latter and the transept; a part of it is used as a vestry, over which the organ is placed. The tracery of the windows is good, particularly the western windows, and we hope to see them richly dight with stained glass. The circular windows in the clerestory, are all filled with varied tracery. The pulpit, which is of stone, is placed against the last pier in the nave, near to the vestry. Stone from Swanage, near Poole, has been used for the rubble-work of the exterior, with dressings of Bath stone.

St. Stephen the Martyr is the largest church which has been built of late years in the neighbourhood of the Regent's Park, and is, as we observed before, a very effective and elegant pile. The style, we should remark, is that known as the Decorated, and will add to the already well-known fame of its architect, S. W. Daukes, Esq. Mr. Myers was the contractor for the building. The Church will give accommodation to 1000 persons, one-half of the sittings being free; and to further the important object of erecting the Church, two individuals generously contributed £1000 each for the purchase of a site selected between the Avenue-road and Primrose-hill, the freehold of which, in addition to a donation of £900, was munificently given by his Grace the Duke of Portland. Application was then made to the Church-building Societies, with much success; her Majesty's Commissioners granting £500, the Incorporated Society £900, and the Metropolis Churches Fund Society £1500; but the amount collected is not, as yet, sufficient for the complete finishing and furnishing the Church, though we trust the deficiency will soon be made up.

The Rev. Edward H. Nelson has been appointed incumbent of the new Church, and the future patronage will be vested in the Lord Bishop of the diocese.

FALL OF CHIT CLIFF, SIDMOUTH.

FALL OF A CLIFF AT SIDMOUTH, DEVON.

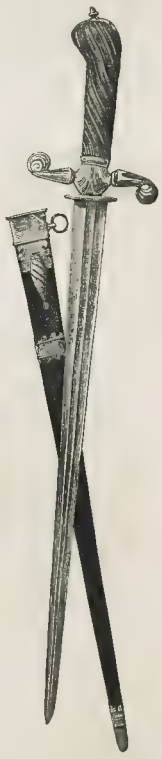
ON the morning of the 7th inst. great alarm was occasioned to the inmates of Clifton Cottage, Sidmouth, by a violent motion given to the house, accompanied by a peculiar noise, which led the inmates to fear an earthquake. This was soon discovered to be produced by a fall of part of the cliff at the rear of the cottage. This cliff, which is of red sandstone, scarcely hard enough to resist the action of the waves of the sea had been somewhat undermined, and the late rains filling its chinks, the mass became loosened, and fell. The weight of the earth thus suddenly started probably exceeds a thousand tons.

The View shews the rear of the cottage, which is the residence of Frederick Callaghan, Esq.; and the mass of sandstone that fell, carrying with it numerous trees and shrubs.

EASTER TERM.—A SCENE IN COURT.—Easter Term opened on Monday. In the Court of Queen's Bench, Mr. Serjeant Kinglake, having obtained a patent of precedence, was called within the bar; as was also Messrs. Lloyd, Malins, Walpole, Keating, and Hope, who have recently been raised to the degree of Queen's Counsel. A ludicrous circumstance occurred just as Mr. Hope was about to take his seat in the Court of Queen's Bench, which disturbed the gravity of the Court. A person of colour, whose shining jet black skin had attracted general notice, appeared to pay considerable attention to the addresses delivered by Mr. Justice Patteson to each of the gentlemen called within the bar; and after the learned Judge had said, "Mr. Hope, her Majesty having been pleased to appoint you one of her counsel learned in the law, you will take your place within the bar," &c., the person alluded to, who seemed to answer to the name of Hope, hastily pushed himself before that learned gentleman, and was about to occupy the seat intended for him within the bar, when the usher informed him of his mistake amidst the loud laughter of the Court.

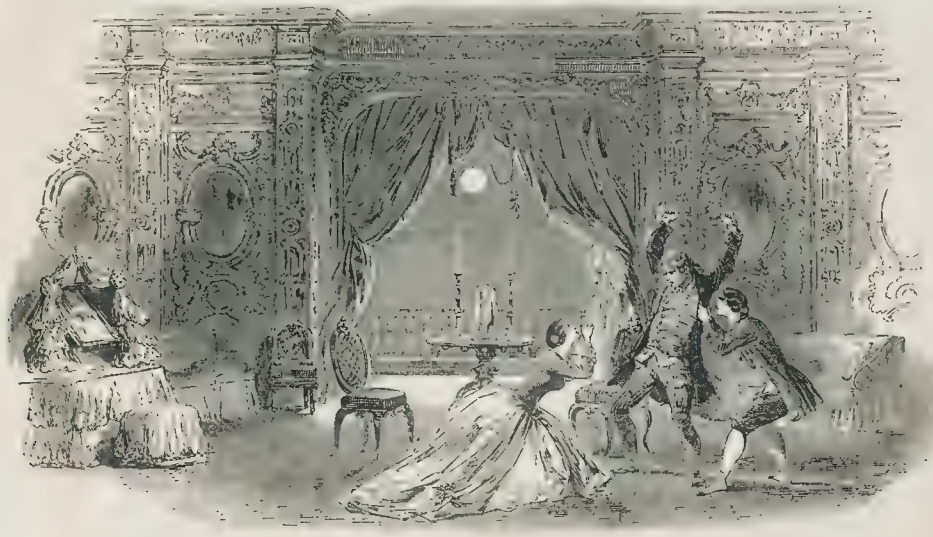
CURIOSITIES.—I.

[WE this day commence a series of Illustrations, under the above title, which, we are persuaded, will prove very attractive to our readers. The objects intended to be comprised in this series will be, in the main, of historic interest, such as the memorial engraved below. Others will be of artistic as well as historic interest, combining rare beauty of form and material with elaborate workmanship, so as to present very interesting specimens of the arts of design in a bygone age. We shall, in adding to this little gallery of rarities, be happy to receive from Correspondents drawings of such articles as may adorn their cabinets, accompanied by well-authenticated historical particulars; subject to our estimate of their eligibility for representation.—ED.]



SWORD OF GENERAL WOLFE, IN THE UNITED SERVICE MUSEUM.

The accompanying Engraving represents the Sword worn by General Wolfe on the memorable day of his victory and death at Quebec, the 13th September, 1759. This relic of the gallant warrior is silver-mounted; the grip being of horn, spirally fluted. The sword-blade has evidently been ground down to its present length from a longer weapon; probably, the blade was a favourite one; at all events, it is of excellent quality, for the maker's name stamped on it shows it was fabricated by Heinrich Keil, at Solingen, a place long celebrated for the excellence of its sword-blades. The scabbard of the Sword is of black leather, the chape and lockets being of silver. This Sword is in the interesting collection of weapons in the United Service Museum; to which establishment it was presented by George Warde, of Beechmont Seven Oaks, Esq. Mr Warde inherited this sword from his great uncle, General the Hon. George Warde, Colonel of the 4th Dragoon Guards, who became possessor of it as executor to General Wolfe's mother, Mrs. Henrietta Wolfe.



MISS. CATHERINE HAYES. SIG. TAMBURINI. MDLLE. MERIC.

SCENE FROM "LINDA DI CHAMOUNT," AT THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—THE MALEDICTION, ACT. 2.

NEW STRAND THEATRE.

The only feature of importance in the week has been the appearance of Mr. W. Farren at this theatre, which is now opened by his son, Mr. Henry Farren, for the representation of vaudevilles and short dramas. He has collected a good company together, the veteran's name being a tower of strength by itself. Mr. W Farren is seen to great advantage in this little theatre. The last time he appeared in a London minor house was at the Olympic, during the management of Madame Vestris. We have engraved a portrait of this great artist, as Michael Perrin, in the admirable drama of "Secret Service." His impersonation of the Curé is one of the most touching and finished performances on our stage. Should there be any who have not seen Mr. Farren's fine acting as Perrin, the piece is being performed every night, and we advise them to drop in and look at it. They will pass a couple of hours very agreeably. Fouché is cleverly played by Mr. Leigh Murray; and Desonnais, very effectively by Mr. H. Farren.

MR. W. FARREN, AS "MICHAEL," IN "THE SECRET SERVICE," AT THE STRAND THEATRE.

Mr. W. Farren has likewise appeared in the popular farce of "Petticoat Government."

LYCEUM.

We have engraved a scene from the costly burlesque of "The Seven Champions of Christendom," now performing at the Lyceum. It has, as we predicted, proved very attractive, and Charles Matthews' song is a mighty "hit." The piece will have a run, no less from its clever writing than from the beautiful manner in which it has been put upon the stage. Stage artists are now beginning to take as much care that the colours of the costumes harmonize with the scenery, as though they were painting a picture. The Grotto Scene is the subject of our Illustration: it is a remarkably artistic, as well as superb scene.

We understand that Mr. W. J. Hurlstone, who distinguished himself at the amateur performances of the Whittington Club, has been engaged at this theatre, and will make his first appearance shortly in a new farce.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The first appearance of Grisi, this season, as Semiramide, and the début of a new contralto Mdlle. Angri, as Arsace, about whom the public expectation had been raised to a high pitch, as might be imagined, drew together a crowded and brilliant audience on Tuesday evening.

Grisi's inimitable performance of the Assyrian Queen is well known to the public. She stands unapproachably alone in her impersonation and conception of the character; and she was never in better voice than on Tuesday, her long repose having allowed her voice to regain all its power and beauty. Her reception was tremendous; and she was continuously cheered throughout the opera, more especially after the performance of the famous "Bel raggio," and the "Dolce pensiero," which were magnificently rendered. There was only one drawback to the great gratification derived from her performance—the reflection that we lose this great artiste at the conclusion of the present season.

Some interest, apart from that of a first appearance, was attached to the début of Mademoiselle Angri, inasmuch as she had chosen the character in which the great Alboni made so wonderful an impression, for her ordeal. That she succeeded, and most triumphantly, is by this time generally known; the audience being literally taken by storm, this furore commencing with her first appearance in the recitative "Eccomi alfine in Babilonia," and gradually increasing until the end of the opera. The only piece which did not rouse her hearers to the same pitch of enthusiasm was the duet, "Giorno d' orrore;" and this is somewhat difficult to account for, as it was admirably sung, both by Grisi and herself. Mademoiselle Angri's voice, we should say, is rather a mezzo-soprano than a pure contralto; and its upper notes are the most mellow and resonant. The lower ones are not so rich in that full thrilling quality which distinguishes those of Alboni; at the same time she excels her great rival in power of vivid expression, dramatically speaking, and energetic truthfulness. Her eyes are remarkably fine—dark and lustrous, and flashing with great effect in the more impassioned scenes. All her stage business had an air of confident intelligence; and it was evident, from the first, that she knew her power, and felt perfectly at home in the character. In a word, Mademoiselle Angri is a great artist; and lond as was the applause thundered down upon her on Tuesday evening, she will achieve a yet greater success, we are certain, and take yet higher ground on the boards of the Royal Italian Opera.

Tamburini was, of course, the Assur, and shared in the honours of the evening. He was in admirable voice, and played the character as he alone can. His reception was also enthusiastic; and he had to appear with Grisi and Angri after the acts, to acknowledge the renewed acclamations of the house Signor Lavia was excellent in the up-hill part of Idreno.

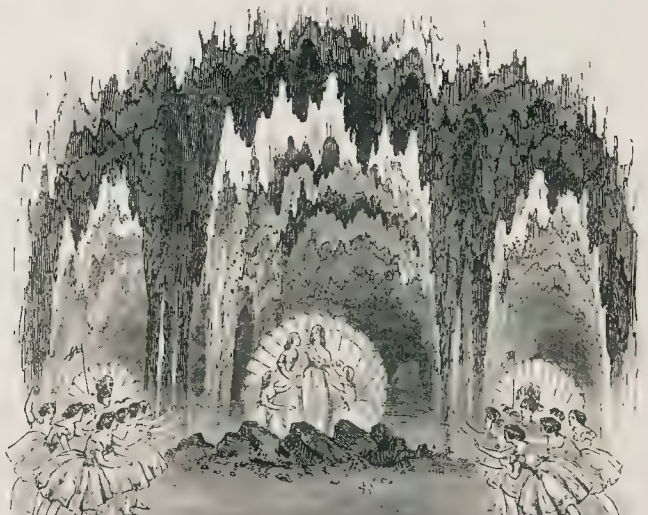
On Thursday, the second act of "Linda di Chamount" was given, with "Masaniello," commencing with the overture and second act. We have engraved from "Linda," the Malediction Scene in the second act, in which Miss Catherine Hayes has achieved such great success. Of the entire performance a copious notice appeared in our Journal of last week.

Miss Catherine Hayes is a native of Limerick; and from an early period her genius for music was manifested. She commenced her studies in Dublin, her master being Signor Sapio. She was then sent to Paris to cultivate her talents, and her master was Manuel Garcia, the brother of Malibran and Viardot, and the master of Jenny Lind. At the end of nearly two years, M. Garcia recommended that she should proceed to Italy, to acquire the language and to reap the fruits of her indefatigable labours. She, however, continued her studies under Signor Felice Ronconi, brother of the artist Giorgio Ronconi, at Milan

Her first engagement was for the Italian Opera in Marseilles, for three months. On the 10th of May, 1845, she made her début as Elvira in Bellini's "Puritani." She then sang in "Lucia," and next in Rossini's "Mose in Egitto." She had large offers made to her to appear on the French lyric stage, but she declined them, and returned to Milan to pursue her studies. It was at one of the concerts of Ricordi, the musical publisher, that she was heard by the managers of the Imperial theatres of Milan and Vienna, who immediately engaged her to make her début at the Scala. It was in Donizetti's "Linda di Chamouni" that she passed through the trying ordeal, and raised the enthusiasm of the Milanese to the highest pitch. Her next character was Desdemona, in Rossini's "Otello."

In the spring of 1846 she appeared at Vienna, with signal success; and in the autumn returned to Milan, appearing with unprecedented success in "Lucia." At the Scala she sang in the "Mose" and Mercadante's "Giorniments," and also in "Mortede," an opera composed expressly for her. During the Carnival of 1846-47, she was at Venice, where two new operas were composed for her—"Griselda," by Frederico Ricci; and "Albergo de Romano," by Malaspero. In the spring of 1847 she passed a second season in Venice, Ricci writing "Estella" expressly for her. She also added Norina, in "Don Pasquale," to her répertoire. After the Viennese season she returned to Italy, and sang at Bergamo and Verona, where Donizetti's "Maria de Rohan" was one of her new parts, as well as the "Due Foscari" and "Masnadieri" of Verdi.

From Verona she went to Florence, and went the round of her characters. Madame Catalani was much struck with her vocal powers, and prognosticated her success in London. The final season of Miss Hayes was passed at the Carlo Fe-



SCENE FROM "THE SEVEN CHAMPIONS OF CHRISTENDOM," AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE.

lics, in Genoa, this winter, where she remained until her engagement at the Royal Italian Opera called her to London. Miss Catherine Hayes's gentle and captivating manner has secured for her the sympathies of the élite of society in every city she has visited on the Continent; and she came to this country with recommendatory letters to the most distinguished circles in London—a proof of the personal estimation in which she is he

HER MAJESTY'S

To any person of taste or judgment no second-rate dancing can be acceptable. Not only is this assertion a principle of faith, but a conviction which impregnates itself more than any will or art requires: but likewise because here is absolutely indispensable, to veil every defect, Fearre, sustained by pictorial effects, combined with structures and a variety of dances, described with great distinctive, which, with mute gesture, speaks the plot; the salutatory; and no less that dreamy vague species which, melines the minds of the hearers to illusion. The new grand ballet, produced at her Majesty's Theatre on Thursday presented these elements in the most fascinating forms. The chief female dancers, unsurpassed in their profession, execute new and astonishing feats of execution grace; while the male dancers are judiciously confined to minute action. The pictorial effects are true to nature, but highly imaginative; while all the colours of the costumes are adapted to the scenery, and the attitudes and poses in harmony, with correct design—even the per-pective effects being preserved, by placing children as dancers in the background. Independent of the sprightly dances, there are some most morally and artistically constructed harmony, as tied to the imaginative mythology of this ballet, which partakes on the one side of the mystic spirit of Scandinavian legends, and on the other of those erratic metamorphoses Ovid has described

A Norwegian shepherd has been betrothed to a village maiden, but in his solitary wanderings and contemplations of the heavens, his imagi... has become ... led into a sort of adoration for "a bright particular star" ... which is happening to be a pretty woman, is not insensible to his fame. Modern (so is the star named) comes down from the firmament to meet him in the wood, and a great deal of lively flattering conversation ensues between them, in the midst of which, unfortunately, the pair are surprised by a whole bevy of stars, with their Queen at their head. The poor star, as a punishment for her vagaries, is degraded from her starry state, and condemned to remain on earth. Thus reduced to the condition of a mere village maiden, she accompanies her lover home; but she proves a most unwelcome guest. For her sake the faithless swain deserts his betrothed, who straight runs mad and dies.

To pity by this catastrophe, restore the ... of the dead maiden to life. The shepherd returns to his old love, and the stars shed their brightest rays, and join in the rejoicings, which conclude an ideal of the splendour of the Empyrean. Carlotta Grisi is the star, Paul Taglioni is the shepherd, and Marie Taglioni his betrothed.

Amongst the concerted dances there are but two particularly eliciting attention: the first derives its charm from being led by an exquisitely lovely young dancer, Hollin, Marie—a pupil of the establishment. The second is the dance of the stars in the forest, where the solitudes, the perspective, and even the hues of the dancers' dresses, are admirably managed to create the most pleasing effect. As the pas, they surpass every thing ... e us to this ... We can only afford space to mention two. The one is the Pas de Zoria," in which the attitudes of Carlotta Grisi, as she pursues the star her lover has taken from her, are full of classic beauty.

Another pas is that entitled "La Lutte" (the struggle), which is a scene of contention for supremacy between Carlotta Grisi and Marie Taglioni: the exertions displayed, the sprightly twinkling movements, and the daring ... almost flying steps elicited by this contest, baffle description.

In conclusion of the ballet when has the immense advantage of being shorter by an hour than any previous grand choreographic composition—is worthy of the work. The stars are soon incarnated in the forms we behold in heavenly scenes in Raphael and Andrea del Sarto, although here nothing is painted but the finely transparent azure sky, and the figures are rendered effulgent by the aid of electric light. The audience were mute with astonishment at this startling sight. The London applause followed, amidst which Paul and Marie Taglioni, and Carlotta Grisi, were recalled before the curtain.

The HAYMARKET is at present rich in comic actors. Mr. and Mrs Keeley, Mr. Buckstone, and Mrs. Fitzwilliam are playing every evening. A new play by Mr. Lovell, the author of "The Wife's Secret," is in preparation. The principal characters will be supported by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean.

The "Lady of Lyons" has been carefully produced, for Mrs. Mowatt and Mr Davenport, at the MARYLEBONE. Mr. George Ellis, who ... formances at Windsor, has succeeded Mr Webb as stage-manager, in consequence of the late fracas, a report of which appeared in the papers.

The OLYMPIC Theatre has undergone a complete repair, and contained below for its opening on Boxing Night. The front will face Newcastle-street instead of Wych-street, as before. We believe some of the adjoining property will be included.

Mr Lowes has brought out a new and original three-act drama, entitled he "Noble Heart," at the Theatre Royal, Manchester, with signal success—the author playing the principal character. A local journal says of it—of "The 'Noble Heart' is an excellent piece. It is free from the hackneyed sensation, and highly tragic, without any morbid tampering with forbidden passions. The main ideas has been used by Schiller in his "Don Carlos," but Mr. Lowes handles the subject in a manner totally dissimilar. In both, the father and the son are in love with the same woman; but, in the 'Noble Heart,' they are unwitting rivals; and it is in the collision between these two natural affections and his love for his son that the father's lofty nature is brought out, and he well earns his title of the 'Noble Heart.'"

ROBERT-HERPIN's farewell performances at the St. James's Theatre will conclude on Saturday next. Previous to his departure for Brussels, he will have the honour of performing, for the second time, before her Majesty.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

NAVIGATING THE ARCTIC REGIONS.—Commander Joseph West, an officer of long standing, has proposed a plan of fitting a steam-vessel with ice mumper and ice saws, to be worked by the force of the engine, for the purpose of navigating the Polar regions. The projection is applicable to either screw or paddle-wheel steamers, and is thus explained:—A semi-circular cogged plate is fixed on the stern, which connects itself with an elevating bar, fixed to the end of a sway beam, the fulcrum being in a crank on the bow of the vessel, at the fore-end of the sway-beam, where the ice hammer is hung, which, by the connection of the cogs, is raised with the least power revolution. It is thrown out of gear when they disconnect, the hammer then falls, and is again raised when the cogs connect. The hammers are from fifteen to twenty hundredweights, working alternately over each side of the stern, and are capable of breaking through ice four or five feet thick, this enabling a vessel so fitted to approximate much nearer to the supposed position of Sir John Ross's ships than can be done by the present means. The above application can be fitted to any steam vessel at a trifling expense compared with the object to be attained. The invention is as simple as it appears to be practicable

The new Military School at Sandhurst, the building was opened on Tuesday last, for the study of tactics and the art of war. It is under the superintendence of Captain Walker, of the 68th Regiment. The pupils, in addition to military instruction, receive lessons in the languages of the East, in order to fit them for the Indian army.

SUPERNUMERARIES.—A Circular Memorandum, dated Horse Guards, 4th inst., has just been issued, which is to have the effect of cancelling a former one, dated March, 1838, respecting the raising of supernumerary men for regiments on foreign service. To avoid the expenses and misapprehensions which have arisen in carrying out the former memorandum, it is stated that the following rules are to be strictly adhered to by the recruiting authorities. Regiments serving at home are to enlist only men attested for supernumerary to the home establishments, unless in some special case, an explanation of the case to be forwarded to the Secretary at War. Regiments serving in India and at Hong Kong are to have each 50 supernumerary men. Regiments serving at the Cape, at the West Indies, 20 supernumerary men. Reg ments serving at the Cape, at the Mauritius, and in Australia, 10 supernumerary men. Regiments serving in North America, 6 supernumerary men. Regiments serving in the Mediterranean, take those at home, are to have no supernumerary men.

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL, NEW CROSS.—Sir Francis Baring, the First Lord of the Admiralty, has expressed as a matter of gratification to give annually for competition amongst the pupils of this institution, the naval and marine cadetships which were granted by his predecessors in office.

RECRUITING.—The artillery have again commenced recruiting. On Tuesday morning seven non-commissioned officers and nine gunners left Woolwich for Southampton, to be employed on the recruiting service at that place and neighbourhood, under the command of Captain Dundas. Arrangements are making for sending also a recruiting party of the 1st battalion to the south of England, and an increase of batchlors is again anticipated in the Royal Artillery Branch of the service. Brigade Major Bingham has been appointed to have charge of the recruiting establishment at Woolwich for the home establishments, and, in some special cases

NEW BOOKS, &c.

New ready, price 2s 6d,

THE LIFE and ADVENTURES of SIR REGINALD MORLIN, BART By GEORGE JOHN CAYLEY. Canto First W. PICKERING, 177, Piccadilly.

TRIAL and CONVICTION of RUSH.—Now publishing, price 2s each, Part I. of the TRIAL of RUSH, and every Particular relative to the Stratfield Hall Murders. With many Engravings. 96 pages, 8vo.

Twenty-second Edition now ready.

Published at 12, Warwick-lane.—Sold by CLARK'S Edition.

TO CHESS PLAYERS.

Shortly will be published, in one volume beautifully printed in colours, a complete collection of

MR. KLING'S CHESS PROBLEMS, containing nearly 200 examples of scientific strategy, many of which have never been published. The whole revised and a proof by the Author. The price of the work will be to subscribers and to non-subscribers after publication. Subscribers' names received, at the office of the Chronicle."

KING WILLIAMS, 12, King William-street, Strand.

Second edition; in one thick vol 8vo, price 15s.

WHAT to OBSERVE; or, the TRAVELLER'S Remembrancer By CHARLES SELKIRK. "This volume is declared a library in itself."—Literary Gazette "For describing an individual how to quality, none it to be an intelligent traveller both at home and abroad, we know of no book equal to Colonel Jackson's Work."—Sun.

JAMES MADDEN, 8, Leadenhall-street.

THE FOLLOWING

THREE NEW NOVELS,

Published by Mr. COLBURN,

May be had at all the libraries

I.

ROCKINGHAM; or, The Younger Brother.

"The work abounds in interest. From internal evidence, it must have been written by a person constantly mingling in the highest English society."—Quarterly Review.

II.

LADY ALICE, or, The New Una.

"Lady Alice will excite an intense interest. It is the most brilliant debut since Vivian Grey. —Court Journal.

III.

THE LOTTERY OF MARRIAGE.

ANEW SERIES, by MISS PARDOE.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street

Now Ready, New Edition for 1849 (nearly Revised, PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE, &c., for 1849 (Ninth Year including Biographical Accounts of Princes, Dukes, Marquises, Earls, Bishops, Baronets, Privy Councillors, Knights of the Garter, Thistle, and the Guelphic Orders, and all Persons holding Civil, Legal, and Honourable Offices, by CHARLES R. DOD, Esq., Author of "The Parliamentary Companion," &c. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges, 10s 6d.

JAMES CLARKE, 13, Fleet-street.

STARLING NOVELTIES.—Now ready, to appear in the LADIES' COMPANION for MAY, price 1s, 5 Plates, 100 Figures, 50 Patterns in 85 Working-dresses, Vignettes, 12 Children's Dresses, 30 Bonnets, &c. A superb Coloured Glass Plate of Fashions, and a grand Historical Picture of the Boys, Family, Grades, Descriptions, Rights of London, &c. Post-free, 6d extra.

HEDGES, HARRIS, Letter-st, Strand; and all Booksellers.

PRIZE MODEL COOKERY.—At the latter end of APRIL will be published, 3s 6d boards, and in cloth gilt, with seventeen pages of Plates DETAILED WORKING DRAWINGS of the Prize Model Kitchen, with the Prize Essay, containing the method of warming and ventilating the buildings, and, with the specification, contains every information that can be needed by the workman in carrying the designs into execution Booksellers.

Now publishing,

DARTON'S HOLIDAY LIBRARY; a Series of Sterling Volumes for Boys and Girls By Approved Authors.

1. The CHILDHOOD of MARY LEESON. By MARY HOWITT.

2. TAKE CARE of NO. 1; or, Good to Me intends Good to Thee By S. G. GOODRICH, Esq (the veritable Peter Parley)

3. HOW to SPEND a WEEK HAPPILY. By Mrs. BURBURY.

4. POEMS for YOUNG CHILDREN. By AUTHORS, one of the amiable Authoresses of "Original Poems."

5. The YOUNG CRUSOES. By CAMILLA TOULMIN; and VICTORINE DUCHERGT, by Mrs. SHERWOOD. In the press.

DARTON and Co., Original Infant School Depot, and Juvenile Repository, 58, Holborn-hill, London.

Fifth edition, price 3s 6d, with maps on cards, 3s 6d,

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph.D.

We are glad to see a new and improved edition of this work. Its details, so non-substantive, and carefully arranged in its plan as this Grammar of Mr. Cornwell, which will certainly supersede all other school-geographies as soon as it becomes generally known."—Richmond's Colonial Magazine.

Also, by the same Author, price 2s 6d, plain, 4s coloured,

A SCHOOL ATLAS, consisting of 30 beautifully executed Maps on steel, together with lists of several hundred places, with their latitude and longitude, and the accentuation and pronunciation of all difficult names.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; HAMILTON, ADAMS and Co.

NEW WORK for LADIES!—Just published, price 1s, THE ART of TORSET, a new and elegant Fancy Work in Crochet Silk &c. By Mrs. SIMPSON Author of "Ladies' Fancy Repository, Edgeworth-street, H. Fancy Repository, Folkestone.—Frames and Needles for this Work may be had at Berlin Repositories. A Box and Specimen will be forwarded on receipt of 24 postage stamps.

In one volume, 8vo., 900 pages, second edition, price 7s. 6d., or 8s. by post,

THE HAND-BOOK of HYDROPATHY, for Professional and General Use, being the result of twelve years experience at Graefenberg and Freyenberg. By Dr. J. M'LISS. "The best book that has been published on hydropathy."—Clayton Clarke. JAMES MADDEN, 8, Leadenhall-street.

THE SCIENCE of LIFE; or, How to Live, and What to Live For With remarks upon the Causes of Indigestion, together with instructions for securing perfect health, and attaining state of Happiness only attainable by observance of a well-regulated course of life. By Dr. J. MORRISON and RICHARDS, 23, Paternoster-row.

The 58th Edition, price 6d,

HEALTH WITHOUT MEDICINE.—WATSON'S TREATISE on the EFFECTUAL CURE of DIGESTIVAL CONSTIPATION, INDIGESTION, the HEMORRHOIDS (Piles), and other Chronic Diseases, by a natural, simple, agreeable, and certain means, confirmed by numerous certificates and testimonials from eminent physicians, chemists, clergymen, and others. Sold by WATSON and Co., 8, 82, Martin's-lane, Cannon-street, London; and through all booksellers.—By post, 1s.

No more Pills nor any other Medicine for Indigestion, Habitual Constipation, Headache, or any Stomachic derangement whatever. At home, and under any other circumstances. Palpitation of the Heart, Flatulency, Roughness of the Skin, Turbidity of the Urine, Hot Feet, Nervousness, Tremors, Paleness, Debility, Hypochondriasis, Hysterics, Blushing, Timidity, Bashfulness, Confusion, Vertigo, Spasms, Sickness, Nausea, Heartburn, Wind, Pain, Weakness, Low Spirits, Lassitude, Cramp, Epilepsy, Fits, Nervous Irritability, Trembling, Loss of Memory, Dimness of Sight, Universal Debility, Dropsy, Consumption, Decay, Premature Old Age, and all Diseases arising from Indiscretion, Excesses, Exposure, Infection, or Neglect, in either Sex, however long standing, or however induced, are speedily, effectually, and permanently cured by the use of THE NATURAL REGENERATOR of the DIGESTIVE ORGANS without Medicine of any kind whatever.

Certificates of cures, testimonials of the highest character, and pamphlets containing full particulars, may be had gratis of all Chemists and Booksellers in town and country, and of the Proprietors, DR. BARRY and Co., 127, New Bond-street, London.

Agents wanted in every town in the United Kingdom.

MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE; A Popular Treatise, exhibiting the Symptoms Causes, and most successful Treatment of Diseases; with a Selection of approved Prescriptions, Management of Children, Doses of Medicines, &c. Forming a comprehensive Medical Guide for the Clergy, Families, and Invalids, in the absence of their Medical Adviser. By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D., &c.

"It is evidently the result of great professional talent, experience, and judgment. The Author every where appears candid, modest, and sincere, and is prominently evident—a sincere desire to lessen the sum of human suffering."—Spectator. "To recommend a work like the present is a task of no difficulty."—Lancet.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; and may be had of the Author, 162, Great Portland-street. Publishers may be supplied by Parkinson, Bristol; and Tegg, 73, Cheapside.—Sold by all Booksellers.

NB Appended to this Edition is an Essay on DISEASES OF THE NERVES.

RHEUMATIC GOUT, Tic-doloreux, Weakness in the Limbs and Joints, Paralysis, Affections, &c. Dr. LOCOCK'S WAFERS are the most speedy remedy known for the relief and cure of these painful complaints, as numerous testimonials from patients of the highest rank and character will prove. Sold in boxes, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 11s each, by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom. Full directions are given in the pamphlet which surrounds each box. Observe that the name of "DR. LOCOCK" is on the Government Stamp affixed to each box.

NEW MUSIC.

NEW SACRED SONGS.—"Sunday, Pearl of Days," and "Remember and Forgive." Both written and composed by W. WEST.—These compositions are written in a pure, yet classic style, and without distortion.—"The public press from the most favourable [illegible] by T. WILLIAMS, 11, Paternoster-row.

THE DRAWINGROOM QUADRILLES, as Duets for the Pianoforte, by WM. TROTOLD PLOOD. Price 4s. At the Balls and Parties at NOTTINGHAM these quadrilles are the favourites of the season.—Published by J. SIMPSON, 295, Regent-street, and forwarded, on receipt of 48 postage stamps.

HERR STRAUSS' LATEST WALTZES, PIA-QFORTE, 3s. each.—Marien, Atelier Trauns, Amphion, Leuden-Parties, Sofgen Bruchen, Feldthauses, and his Polkas (as above, each), viz., Elefan and Parks Bernen, Sonnenschein, Pesth, Wanze, Kreutzer Mariankas, Salon, Esse o, and Schlesisch Polkas.—At Herr Strauss, assisted by his celebrated Band, will give his FIRST CONCERT on MONDAY EVENING NEXT, at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—All tickets, Stalls or Concerts, to be ordered to his Publishers, Messrs. [illegible]

NEW SONG.—"THE SEA [illegible] Author and Composer, [illegible] Price 2s. The immense success of [illegible] world and music are of a universally interesting, and [illegible] latter. LONDON: LUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-st.

HEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING, containing Descriptions of Weights, Sizes, and Prices, by which Purchasers are enabled to judge the articles best suited to each. A good Bed for Bedding, sent free by post, on application to their Factory, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road, London.

HEAL and SON'S PRESENT PRICES of BEDSTEADS, as fitted up in their Show-rooms, and adapted to the Country. Drawings and Prices sent free by post on application to their Factory, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road, London. Bedding sent to all parts of the Country. Deliver Outside Metropolitan Districts, Carriage Free. Heal and Son's Illustrated Catalogue of Bedsteads, with Designs and Prices, sent free by post.

GERMAN SPRING MATTRESSES, perfect [illegible] 3 feet wide [illegible] £3 3 0
2 feet 6 [illegible] 2 10 0
4 feet wide [illegible] 3 15 0

Also of these, with a French mattress [illegible] a most elastic and luxurious bed. Heal and Son's List of Bedding, with full particulars of weights, sizes, and prices, of every description of Bedding, sent free by post.—HEAL and SON, Bedding Manufacturers, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road.

EASILY LEARNT MUSICAL INSTRUMENT.—These Ladies and Gentlemen who have not had a good ear for music but have not leisure to learn, will find SIMPSON'S BUGLE-HARMONICON a most satisfactory musical instrument. Sold at the depot, 295, Regent-street, near Oxford-street. By the remarkably easy method contained in Simpson's Book of Instructions, price 2s, any persons who can sing correctly accompanied with music, are enabled in a few hours to play popular airs. The prices of Simpson's Bugle-Harmonicons are from 5s. to 15s. Accordions repaired and exchanged.

BERDOE'S LIGHT OVER-COAT, a first-rate garment with silk sleeve-linings, &c., the charges are strictly moderate, the cloths are of a genuine, respectable, and really superior article, as the lowest possible cost, and who are undiscovered by mere cap-trap pretensions will meet with unfeigned support in proportion as they possess [illegible] BERDOE, Tailor, &c., 96, New Bond-street, and 69, Cornhill.

SUPERIOR PIANOFORTES for HIRE or SALE, at Town or Country, (packed free of expense) PHACHEY'S Manufactory and extensive Ware-rooms (the Queen's Royal Manufactory), 104, Great Portland-street, Portland-road, Morley Society. 100 Pianofortes always on hire. Lists of terms and variety of Instruments—N.B. Harmoniums and Chamber Organs.

E. T. ARCHER, HERALDIC ENGRAVER, Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, of DECORATIVE PAPER HANGINGS, which can be seen fitted on the walls of a Room in regular order every degree of taste, from economical to the most elaborately decorated panelling. In Gothic and Elizabethan stock and assortment of every kind of Rose and French manufactured papers, suited to every purpose of useful and ornamental [illegible] Gothic and Elizabethan Ceilings, and Modern Ceilings in all the prevailing styles. In addition to the panelled rooms, they are furnished with patterns of the finest wood and of the most workmanship, of superior design, and reduced to the most moderate scale of charges, from the smallest to the largest sizes. Every kind of manufacture extant, which are manufactured in the most approved manner, and [illegible] Patent Papers, from the best makers. E. T. A. particularly invites the inspection of his extensive stock by persons furnishing, who are desirous of seeing, who can have designed or refurnishing their establishments. 1, ARCHER, 451, Oxford-street, corner of Soho-square.

DAVIES'S CANDLES, 4½d and 5d per lb.—Pure wax candles, 11d; German wax, 1s 3d; fine wax, 1s 6d; transparent wax, 1s 8d; sperm candles, 10½d; mould, 9½d; composite candles, 8½d; mould, 7½d; fine yellow soap, 4½d; mottled soap, 3½d and 4d; fine yellow soap, 3½d, 3½d, and 4d; brown, Windsor, 1s 3d; sperm oil, 5s 6d per gallon; seal oil, 3s 6d; vegetable, 2s 6d; sweet oil, 4s; Old Established Ware-house, 57, Cornhill, and 164, Piccadilly, corner of Sackville-street.

BONNETS, PARISIAN MILLINERY.—To Ladies who are Cash Purchasers, and wish to avoid the Credit System.

Satin or Glace Silk Bonnets, trimmed, patent crapes, 10s 6d to 14s 6d; White [illegible] Bonnets, trimmed crape veil, 14s 6d to 21s 6d; Arcadian Crape, in colours, drawn or en Paris net shapes, 15s 6d to 21s 6d; White [illegible] Bonnets, trimmed Fancies, 10s 6d to 15s 6d; Paris Crape, for Bridal, in shapes and veils, 21s 6d to 30s 6d; Rich Horsman Crape, 4s 11d to 5s 6d, more fashionable and more becoming Bonnets cannot be procured at any price, and the new shape, 2s 11d to 3s 11s. Fine Rice Straws, 4s 11d to 5s 11d; Leghorn Hats, Prince of Wales shape, 3s 11d, very fine 5s 11d. For cash only, at CHAMBERLIN HUSE, No. 36, Commercial-street, Limehouse [illegible] PROPRIETORS, R. WOOD and COMPANY.

NUMBER ONE, SAINT PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.—No Tea is cheap but is real good, nor profitable unless it be low; good and low combined is the secret of success. Here are the greatest care to prevent being subject to appearances of cheapness on the other. What economy requires a quality that will wear, and the Tea that imparts those [illegible] Sold in packets, 2s 6d, 3s, 3s 6d, 4s, and 4s 6d per lb. Number One, Saint Paul's Churchyard.

LOVERS of CHOICEST TEA may have [illegible] Alexander Carrie, Esq
John Ilt ort Goodhart, Esq
The Baron de Goldsmid and de Rothschild, Esq
James Robert Gowen, Esq
Arthur Heath Hastie, Esq, M.P.
Sir Ralph Howard, Bart, M.P.
William Ivett, Esq, M.P
George Lyall, Esq, M.P

The Right Hon the Lord Petre
Jeremiah Pilcher, Esq
Abraham Robarts, Esq, Alderman
John Abel Smith, Esq, M.P.
The Right Hon the Lord Viscount Sydney
Alderman William Thompson, Esq, M.P.
George Fred Young, Esq

Her Majesty's Commissioner—Charles Cox, Esq
LIBERTY FOR FIVE SHILLINGS.

Principal Agent at Wellington—William Fox, Esq.

NEW ZEALAND COLONISATION.—RESUMPTION OF LAND SALES

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the NEW ZEALAND COMPANY, Incorporated by Royal Charter, A.D. 1841.

COURT OF DIRECTORS.

[illegible]
Deputy-Governor—Henry Rigbeby Aglion, Esq, M.P.
DIRECTORS.
[illegible]

upon terms as near as may be the same as those now [illegible] upon application at the Company's Office, 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, London.

By order of the Court,
JOHN ROBERTON, Secretary.

THE MAN CUDBERT HUDDINGTON

New Zealand House, 9, Broad Sanctuary-buildings, Westminster, London, 23rd March, 1849.

ARTICLED CLERK.—A SOLICITOR, in good general practice in London, is willing to receive an ARTICLED CLERK. A premium £100 without board and lodging; or, £300 with board and lodging.—Apply, by letter, to A. B., care of Mr. BROOKS, Stationer, 42, Oxford-street.

LAW.—A SOLICITOR, in old-established practice in Lincoln's-inn-fields, is willing to take under his charge a young Gentleman, who desires to reside with the Principal. Every respectable home will be given and strict attention paid.—Address to CHAS. WOOD, 18, King-street, Cheapside, or 3, Lincoln's-inn-fields, West. Regd.

BLACK and WHITE PORCELAIN BRACKETS.—The new and elegant ornament, with black jet ground beautifully enamelled and with white raised flowers, and fixed by post, on receipt of 7s. 6d., direct from Mrs. HART BRO. GHAM, Burslem, Staffordshire.—Patent Brackets, 3s; Shawl Pins, 3s.

PAPER-HANGINGS, Printed by Machine, from 4d. per yard. Elegant Satins, Printed by Hand, 8d. per yard. Patterns sent for approval, in town or country. CHEAP, 29, Lowther Arcade, Charing-Cross. Established 1817.

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWINGROOM, HEARTH, and DINING-ROOM, LENNOX, 49, Strand, corner Bedford-street, has just received a new and elegant assortment of Ormolu Figures, Vases, Candelabra, Tokeanas, beautiful inlaid Tables, Paper-weights, &c., in Italian Alabaster, Marble, Bronze, &c.

SILVER PLATE, New and Second-hand.—T. COX DAVIES, CO'S Plate, List of Prices, with outlines, of his bed grate, or will be sent free if applied for by a paid letter. Patterns are his prices, weights, and patterns of new and second-hand Silver Plate, at spoons and Forks, Watches, Clocks, Ladies' Gold Neck Chains, and Jewellery [illegible] IVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Bank), [illegible] church-street), London.

SILVER TEA-SERVICES, of New Patterns, [illegible] patterns of TEA and COFFEE SERVICES of novel and elegant design, and of the highest finish. The following have been generally adopted:—

The Portland Pattern, tastefully [illegible] Lions Quatorze Pattern, richly engraved:

Britt. Sugar Basin, gilt	7	4	0	Britt. Sugar Basin, gilt	8	5	0
Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt	5	5	0	Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt	6	10	0
£42	9	0		£47	10	0

A large stock is offered for selection in the Show-Rooms, and adding every variety of patterns, from £21 upwards. Any article may be had separately. A Catalogue of Crests, with Coronets, will be forwarded gratis, per post, to any part of Great Britain or the colonies.

SILVER-PLATED DISH COVERS and CORNER DISHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 4, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, invite an inspection of their STOCK of these elegant requisites to the dining-table, whilst they continue to sell of superior quality, cheaper than any other house in the trade. Drawings with prices annexed, forwarded to any part of the kingdom, postage free.

HANDSOME GOLD WATCHES, jewelled in [illegible] holes, extremely [illegible] with all the modern improvements, for 2l. 2s. Also, highly-finished, silver Watches, richly engraved dials, movements equal to the above, for £3 3s. A warrant warranty given. HAWKES and Co., 224, High Holborn, [illegible] the late firm, Hawkes, 75, Strand. Old gold, plate and watches purchased or taken in exchange. Observe the only genuine Watchmakers of that name in London.

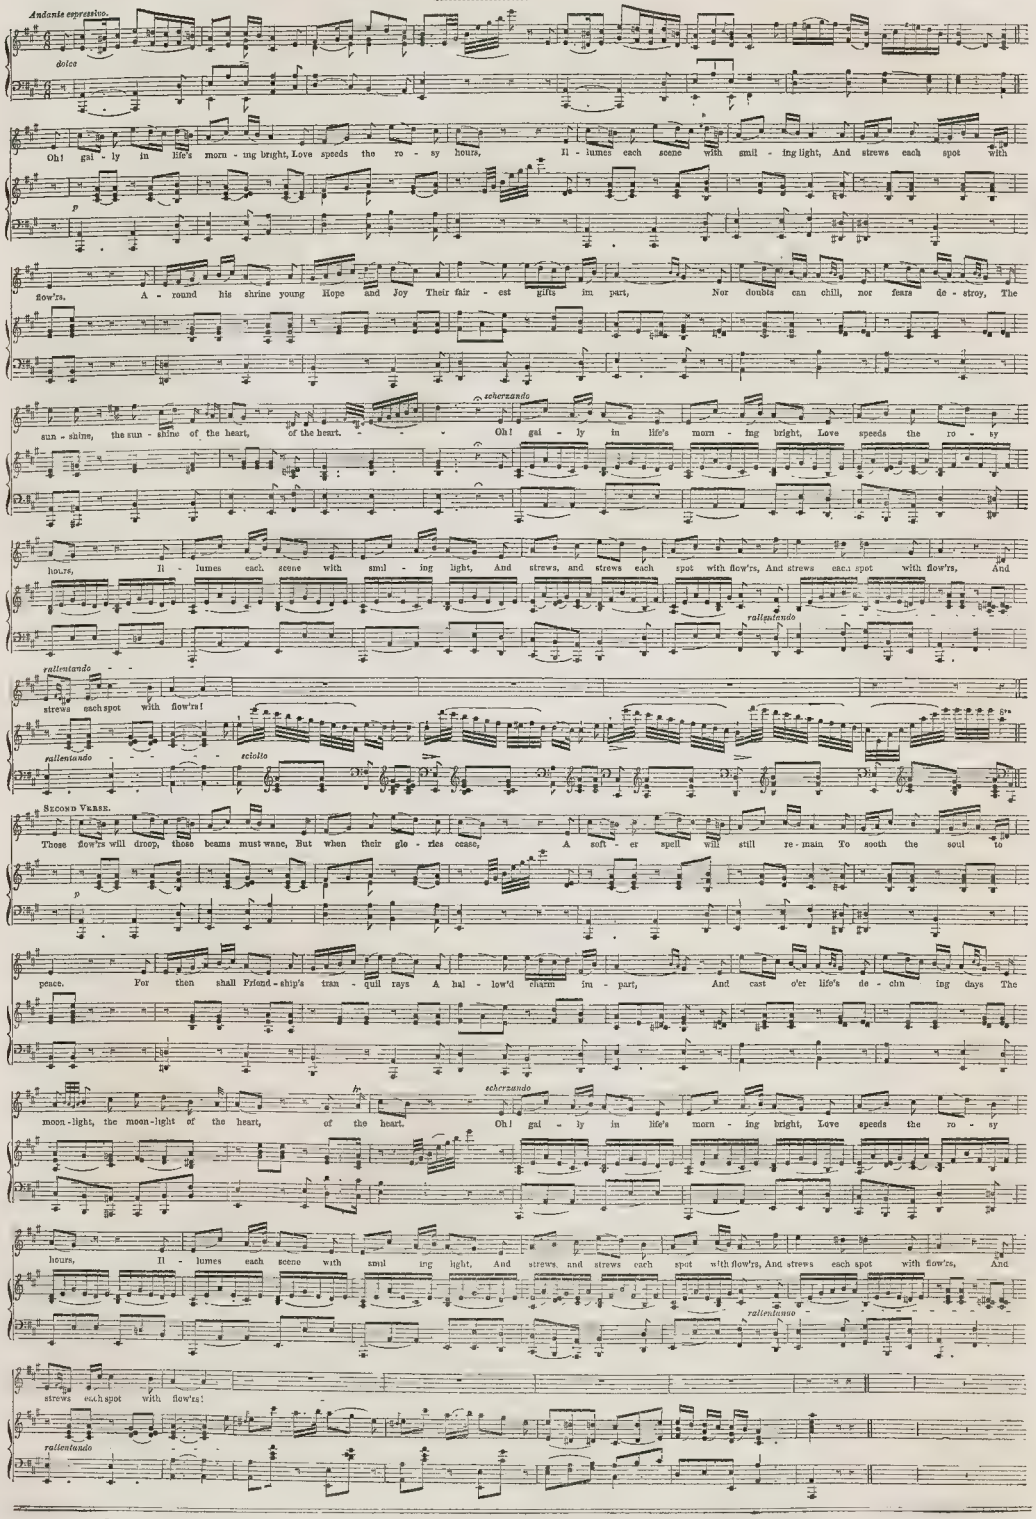
SILVER SUPERSEDED by R. and J. GOS, 34, Strand, opposite Somerset House, [illegible] PALLADIUM, for dressing, dishes, and spoons, forks, candlesticks, cruet frames, teapots, &c., at one-fifth the price of silver. Old plate exchanged, and by cash. Observe [illegible] best and your orders direct from Hardware. Late [illegible] that may be had direct, and send post free. [illegible] CK, 336, Strand, opposite to Somerset House.

SARL'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE.—SARL and SONS, 18, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, have exhibited a large assortment of this beautiful metal, which [illegible] pattern. The late extensive demand for this article, and the universal approbation it has received, induced SARL and SONS to [illegible] Catalogue, with engravings, and by forwarding it to any part of the country, they will be enabled to execute orders with [illegible] patterns.

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A GOLD WATCH and FINE GOLD CHAIN, fitted complete in a morocco case, for £8 18s very suitable for a present. The description of the watch is as follows:—Double-backed, and fine gold throughout, horizontal movement, four holes jewelled, maintaining power to go whilst being wound up, and every recent improvement. Any one may be trusted with the watch, or sent to be examined by a watchmaker, and if not approved of, will be exchanged or the money returned. A gold watch, with a single case, jewelled in four holes, and every recent improvement, for £5 5s

THE MOONLIGHT OF THE HEART.

The Words by Mrs. Abdy; the Music by Mrs. Octavius Freire Owen



Andante expressivo.
dolce
Oh! gai - ly in life's morn - ing bright, Love speeds the ro - sy hours, Il - lumes each scene with smil - ing light, And strews each spot with p flow'rs. A - round his shrine young Hope and Joy Their fair - est gifts im part, Nor doubts can chill, nor fears de - stroy, The scherzando
sun - shine, the sun - shine of the heart, of the heart. Oh! gai - ly in life's morn - ing bright, Love speeds the ro - sy hours, Il - lumes each scene with smil - ing light, And strews, and strews each spot with flow'rs, And strews each spot with flow'rs, And rallentando
rallentando
strews each spot with flow'rs!
ritardando
rallentando
SECOND VERSE.
Those flow'rs will droop, those beams must wane, But when their glo - ries cease, A soft - er spell will still re - main To sooth the soul to p peace. For then shall Friend - ship's tran - quil rays A hal - low'd charm im - part, And cast o'er life's de - clin ing days The scherzando
moon - light, the moon - light of the heart, of the heart. Oh! gai - ly in life's morn - ing bright, Love speeds the ro - sy hours, Il - lumes each scene with smil ing light, And strews and strews each spot with flow'rs, And strews each spot with flow'rs, And
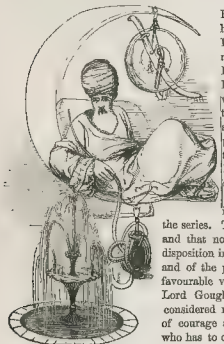
rallentando
strews each spot with flow'rs!
rallentando

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 196, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 196, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY APRIL 21, 1849.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 368.—Vol. XIV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1849. [Sixpence.

THE VICTORIES IN THE PUNJAUB.



HILLIANWALLAH has been avenged. Both Houses of Parliament, and the Court of Directors of the East India Company, have voted their unanimous thanks to Lord Gough and his brave companions in arms, for their victories in the Punjaub, of which that at Goojerat is only the most splendid because it is the completion of the series. There was at one time, and that not very far distant, a disposition in a portion of the press and of the public to take an unfavourable view of the talents of Lord Gough. His bravery was considered rashness, or that kind of courage admirable in a man who has to obey, but mischievous in him who has to give orders. If praised at all, it only received homage at the expense of his skill. It must be confessed, even now, in the hour of victory, that there was some occasion for this mistrust. The slightest real defeat of our arms, or even a victory which had the appearance of defeat, was a diminution of our moral power over the population of India. In the faith of our invincibility, almost as much as in the physical force at our command, lay the source of our power. Lord Gough, we are certain, has generosity enough to forgive his countrymen for their temporary alarm, and for the severe criticism of his operations with which it was accompanied, and good sense enough to know that, under all the circumstances, it was not unnatural. The tide has now turned; to unwilling dispraise has succeeded the willing and enthusiastic applause of the nation. His crowning success at Goojerat has been splendid enough to wipe out the recollection of the high price at which the previous victory of Chillianwallah was purchased, though not perhaps to make the country forget that there was good fortune as well as good management in the result; and that General Whish, by his rapid march from Mooltan to the Jhelum, was a special interposition which he could scarcely have calculated upon.

After fifty-four years of active service, Lord Gough retires from command, amid acclamations as loud as they are universal; at a period, too, when there is no further work to be done, except that of turning to account, for the prevention of future wars, the victory consummated by his courage, and by that of the brave officers and army by whom he was supported. Lord Gough, as the country was reminded by Sir Robert Peel, has now received the thanks of Parliament five times for his brilliant services: first in China, and during the later period of his life, at the decisive battles of Ferozeshah, Sobraon, and Goojerat. And we learn from the statement of Sir James Weir Hogg, that the veteran, in the course of his long and brilliant career, has fought fifteen pitched battles, and that every one has been a victory. To such a career, the total defeat of the Sikh force at Goojerat is an appropriate termination. By that battle a great and costly war has been brought to an end. Our moral as well as physical supremacy has been vindicated. The ambitious, able, and restless enemies of our power have been taught, in the school of a sanguinary experience, that neither treachery nor force can prevail against us. Their pride has been humbled, their self-confidence abased, their means of offensive operations against us effectually crippled, and our future intercourse with them placed upon a footing which will secure us for a long time, if not in perpetuity, against any renewal of the treacherous hostility which has been so effectually punished.

The Marquis of Lansdowne in the House of Lords, and Sir John Cam Hobhouse in the House of Commons, in introducing the vote of thanks to Lord Gough and the general officers under his command, as well as to the whole British and native army engaged in these operations, recapitulated the history of this last attempt of the Sikh nation to overthrow our power. But it was left to the Duke of Wellington to give the most succinct account of the war. The illustrious Duke, who spoke with great energy and earnestness, traced it from its origin, in the dishonour, perfidy, and faithlessness of the servants and officers of the native Government of Lahore, through all the complications of its incidents, to its termination at Goojerat. His Grace showed that the Governor-General, under the treaty, which succeeded the victories of Ferozeshah and Sobraon, was guardian of the infant Maharajah of the Punjaub, and, in that character, was bound to control the acts of the Government, and to assist in carrying on its operations. He showed that all the servants of that Government betrayed their trust; that the first open offender was Dewan Moolraj, the Governor of Mooltan, who not only refused to obey an order by which he was superseded in command, but caused the murder of Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson, the two gentlemen sent by the British resident to superintend the delivery of the fortress to the officers appointed by the Maharajah to succeed him. The consequences of this act of rebellion were the revolt of the whole country in the neighbourhood of Mooltan, and of three fortresses in succession, and the desertion of Shere Singh, an ally always suspected by the British, with whom he served, and who ultimately proved to be the very soul of the attempted revolution. With great clearness and precision, the noble Duke traced one event to another, and bestowed the high reward of his approval upon the whole of the operations. There can be no doubt that approbation so complete and so cordial, from such an authority as the Duke of Wellington, will more than make amends to Lord Gough for the adverse criticism to which he was once subjected; and that on the parts of Generals Thackwell, Whish, Gilbert, and the other leaders, as well as on that of Major Edwardes, and the other young officers who shared the glory and the dangers of the war, it will long be treasured as a reward only second in value to the unanimous thanks of Parliament, and enhancing even that by its spontaneity and completeness.

On occasions when all have deserved well it is commonly considered invidious to make selections; but, though the selection was not made in Parliament, the country cannot help remembering how much is due to Major Edwardes and to General Whish. The first-mentioned, alone, and without authority, made head against Moolraj, until the real character of the revolt was known at Lahore and at Calcutta, and until the arrival of reinforcements. General Whish, after the capture of Mooltan—of itself an achievement quite brilliant enough to make him famous—marched from that fortress to the Jhelum, a distance of 238 miles, in 17 days. The march was generally considered a 21 days' business, but it was accomplished in 17 days, and the army arrived in time to prevent the passage of the Jhelum by the Sikhs, and to secure the passage for the British army.

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

GENERAL THE RIGHT HON. LORD GOUGH, K.G.C.B., COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE FORCES IN INDIA.

This veteran soldier (who has just been honoured with the thanks of both Houses of Parliament for his recent brilliant services in India), was born November 3, 1779; and is the fourth son of George Gough, Esq., of Woodstown, county Limerick, and Letitia, daughter of the late Thomas Bunbury, Esq., of Lisnevah and Moyle, county Carlow. Lord Gough entered the army as Ensign, August 7, 1794, the same year with Sir Charles Napier; and his Lordship is but seven years the junior of the Duke of Wellington, who has been nearly sixty-two years in commission.

Lord Gough's other commissions bear date as follows:—Lieutenant, 11th October, 1794; Captain, 25th June, 1803; Major, 8th August, 1805; Lieutenant-Colonel, 29th July, 1809; Colonel, 12th August, 1819; Major-General, 22d July, 1830; Lieutenant-General, 23d November, 1841.

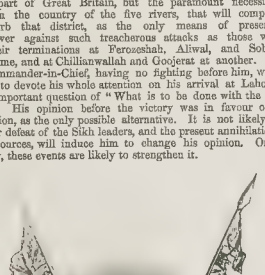
Lord Gough served at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope and the Dutch fleet in Saldanha Bay, 1795. He served afterwards in the West Indies, including the attack on Porto Rico, the brigand war in St. Lucia, and capture of Surinam. He proceeded to the Peninsula in 1809, and commanded the 87th at the battles of Talavera, Barossa, Vittoria, and Nivelle, for which engagements he has received a Cross. He also commanded this regiment at the sieges of Cadiz and Tarifa, where he was wounded in the head. At the battle of Talavera, his horse was shot under him; and he himself was severely wounded afterwards in the side by a shell: for his conduct in this action, the Duke of Wellington subsequently recommended that his Lieutenant-Colonelcy should be antedated to the date of his despatch, thus making him the first officer who ever received Brevet rank for services performed in the field at the head of a regiment. At Barossa, his regiment captured the eagle of the 8th French Regiment, and at Vittoria they captured the bâton of Marshal Jourdan. At Nivelle, he was again severely wounded. He commanded the land forces at Canton (for which he was made a G.C.B.), and during nearly the whole of the operations in China—for which service he was made a Baronet. On the 29th December, 1843, with the right wing of the army of Gwalior, he defeated a Mahratta force at Maharajpore, and captured 56 guns, &c. In 1845 and 1846, the army under his personal command defeated the Sikh army at Mooltee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon; for which services he received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, and was raised to the Peerage. Lord Gough is Colonel of his old and gallant regiment, the 87th Royal Irish Fusileers. His Lordship has held the office of Commander-in-Chief in India for six years, having been appointed the 15th March, 1843.

Lord Gough married, in 1807, Frances-Maria, daughter of the late General Edward Stephens, Governor of Plymouth, and has issue one son and four daughters.

The accompanying Portrait is copied (by permission) from a print published by Messrs. Graves and Co., Pall Mall, and bearing the following fac simile of Lord Gough's handwriting:—"A Portrait taken of me by a Chinese.—H. Gough."

plished in the shorter period, without a day's halt, over a country where there are no roads. By means of this extra speed, the gallant General and his division arrived at the banks of the Jhelum at the very moment when he was wanted, and just in time to stop the advance of Shere Singh upon the capital of the Punjaub. Had the Sikh leader accomplished this object, the war might, at this moment, have been raging; and Sir Charles Napier might have been left to complete the work of Lord Gough. These things are not lost sight of even in the blaze of splendour that surrounds the battle of Goojerat. To use the words of Sir Robert Peel, "great exploits have been performed, not only by veterans inured to the service, but by young men assuming great responsibilities and giving examples worthy of the name of Englishmen. When such things are done by the aged, and such examples are set by the young, we need never despair of the security of our empire in India."

But, after the victory, the great question remains how shall it be turned to account for the good government of the Punjaub and the security of our own frontier? The annexation or non-annexation of the Punjaub is the great question to be decided. Opinions, we know, differ both upon the policy and upon the necessity of any extension of our already unwieldy empire in the East. But if we shall hereafter annex the Punjaub, as Sir Charles Napier and many other high authorities are of opinion that we must, the great enemies of our power will not be able to say with truth that we sought any such extension of our empire. We desired no increase of territory. We would have been contented with the line of the Sutlej for our boundary. We had no wish to extend it to the Indus. If we are forced to do so, it will not be any ambition of conquest on the part of Great Britain, but the paramount necessity of peace in the country of the five rivers, that will compel us to absorb that district, as the only means of preserving our power against such treacherous attacks as those which had their terminations at Ferozeshah, Aliwal, and Sobraon at one time, and at Chillianwallah and Goojerat at another. The new Commander-in-Chief, having no fighting before him, will be enabled to devote his whole attention on his arrival at Lahore to the all-important question of "What is to be done with the Punjaub?" His opinion before the victory was in favour of its annexation, as the only possible alternative. It is not likely that the utter defeat of the Sikh leaders, and the present annihilation of their resources, will induce him to change his opinion. On the contrary, these events are likely to strengthen it.



CHINESE STANDARDS CAPTURED BY LORD GOUGH.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

ADMIRALTY VISIT TO PORTSMOUTH.—Captain the Hon. M. F. F. Berkeley, Captain Milne (Lords of the Admiralty), and Captain Sir Baldwin Walker (surveyor of the navy), attended by Isaac Watts, Esq. (assistant ditto), proceeded from town to Portsmouth on Tuesday, relative to the steam (screw) vessels, fitting and refitting at that port, as stated in our naval report of that day. It is understood that the board found fault with the circumscribed quarter of the Arrogant, which did not admit of the proper working of the guns in the bow ports; and also condemned the screw-shaft as defective, ordering a new one. They also ordered the armaments of the Rapaard and Picager, screw schooners, to be altered. Their broadside 32-pounder guns, of 3c cwt. each, are to be changed for 32-pounder carronades, and the long 58-pounder pivot gun aft is to be landed.

THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE SQUADRON.—The Southampton, 1, flag of Rear-Admiral B. Reynolds, C.B., with the Geyser and Ira steam-vessels, were in St. Simon's Bay, on the 20th of February. The Brilliant, 36, Captain R. H. Watson, C.B., sailed from St. Simon's Bay for the Mozambique Channel on the 10th of February. The Orontes, 14, Commander Hawker, had not arrived from England.

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY.—John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P. for Chichester, is appointed Secretary to the Admiralty, vice R. Ward Esq., who goes as High Commissioner to the Ionian Islands, vice Lord Seaton, coming home.

THE "AVENGER" SUBSCRIPTION FUND.—The last allotment to the sufferers by the loss of the Avenger steam-frigate took place at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth, on this (Saturday) morning, commencing at half-past ten.

THE NORTH POLAR DISCOVERY SHIPS.—The North Star, 26-gun frigate, fitting as a store-ship, under the command of Mr. Saunders, master, R.N., in the Thames, to carry provisions to the expedition under Sir James Ross, will be towed to the edge of the ice by her Majesty's steam-sloop Stromboli.

SECOND ACCIDENT IN PORTSMOUTH DOCKYARD.—A shocking accident occurred on Tuesday at the contract works of Mr. Bramble, in this dockyard. Some of Mr. Bramble's men were employed in clearing a schooner of some heavy stones, weighing seven tons each, in executing which they used, instead of a crane, what is called a traveller, which is a strong scaffolding of wood, having a tramway on its upper surface, on which works a moveable gin or crab for hoisting. The outer part of this scaffolding projects over the jetty, but, in the present case, not sufficiently to plumb the stone in the vessel's hold. The strain was consequently much greater than it would otherwise have been, and it resulted in the detaching the crab from its fastenings, and precipitating it with the labourers on it over the scaffolding into the vessel below. Of the men who were on it, five were more or less injured. One (Weddington) had one of his legs amputated the same night, both so seriously injured otherwise that he is not expected to live; another (Hatch, aet.) had his ribs broken; Hatch, jun., son of the former, both legs broken; Davis and Pierce severely cut about the head; Sullaway, who has escaped injury, jumped at the moment from the scaffolding into the water. The other sufferers are said to be in a fair way of recovery. The men had been previously warned of the consequences of persisting in the course which has had such a lamentable result.

DANISH CAPTURE IN THE BRITISH CHANNEL.—The Danish brig-of-war, Lougen, Lieutenant Commander Hansen, arrived at Cowes, from St. Jean-de-Luz, on Wednesday, and proceeded to London for inspection of Board of Trade, and, having returned, the Orana got under weigh on the 21st, and, instead of proceeding to Copenhagen, sailed for the westward, with the view of intercepting and capturing German and Prussian ships in the shops of the Channel homeward bound from foreign ports. Such vessels being, in all probability, ignorant of the resumption of hostilities, will fall an easy prey to the Danish brig. On the appearance of the Orana in Cowes roads on Wednesday (last week), all the German vessels congregated there for safety hoisted their national flags out of bravado—a measure they would doubtless have hesitated to adopt a few leagues from the coast.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

ROMAN WORKS OF ART.

Lord BROUGHAM inquired of the Government whether the rumour was true relative to the sale of works of art by the "good for nothing persons" who had seized the reins of power in Rome and Florence? He warned buyers against such fraudulent purchases.

The MARQUIS of LANSDOWNE said he had had no official information on the subject.

Lord REDESDALE remarked that the Government at Rome was a de facto Government as good as others that had been recognised by us. If speculators should buy those works of art referred to, and bring them to this country, he apprehended that purchasers would be found for them here.

NORTH WALES RAILWAY.

On the motion of Lord BEAUMONT, the petitions of the chairman and secretary of the North Wales Railway were taken into consideration, and the allotments having been called to the bar, they were reprimanded by the LORD CHANCELLOR, and ordered to be discharged from custody on payment of the usual fees.

THE RIVER PLATE.

The Earl of HARROWBY moved for copies of, or extracts from, all instructions given to her Majesty's Envoy at the River Plate, for their guidance in the intervention of Great Britain for the pacification of affairs in that river. He complained of the failure of all our negotiations, and of the sacrifice of our trade with Monte Video.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said that, though compelled to object to the motion, he was disposed to give every possible information relative to the intervention of the Rio de la Plata. Negotiations were pending; they rested essentially on the basis of instructions given to Mr. Hood, and they lately assumed a most promising aspect. If we did not go hand in hand with France in these arrangements, France would have the same object in view as we had. There was no foundation for saying that the Government disapproved of the conduct of Lord Howden with respect to the raising of the blockade of Buenos Ayres. At no time had the trade of this country been so beneficially carried on with that part of the world, under the Government of General Rosas, as it was at this time; and the General had given every assurance of his desire to encourage our commercial relations.

Lord BEAUMONT condemned our negotiations as an error from the beginning, and a gross job in the continuance.

After a few remarks from Lord COLCHESTER, the motion was withdrawn.

On the motion of the Marquis of CLANRICARDE, the Prisoners Removal (Ireland) Bill passed through committee, and the Spirits (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Sir G. GREY stated, in reply to Lord DUNCAN, that a bill to prevent burials in the metropolitan districts was in preparation, but it would require much consideration.

To a question from Mr. HUME, Sir G. GREY stated that Mr. Duffy, of Dublin, was out on bail to appear at the next commission. That was the only answer he could give to the query, if the Government intended to institute a fourth prosecution of Mr. Duffy.

In answer to Sir H. BARRON, Lord J. RUSSELL said that he hoped ere long to be able to lay before the House the intentions of the Government relative to the public assistance they would recommend for the encouragement of arterial drainage and railway construction in Ireland. He should, however, proceed first with the Rate in Aid Bill, which he proposed to go on with on Thursday.

THE NAVIGATION LAWS.

A great many petitions having been presented against the alteration of the Navigation Laws,

Mr. LABOUCHERE moved, without any observation, the third reading of the Navigation Bill.

Mr. HERRIES moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a third time that day six months. The right honourable gentleman said that they had arrived at that period of the debate on the measure when it was necessary to examine it on the broad and high principle of national policy, and on that view should the House determine whether to accept or reject it. For himself, he had done with statistical details—they had been ably discussed, and filled several folio volumes of blue books. His reason for not attempting to amend the bill during its progress was, that he believed it to be so framed as to render it impossible, by any change of details, to render it at all comfortable to his opinions. He would not then insist on the necessity of giving a preference to our own mercantile marine, nor contend that in a country like this—the most civilised, most wealthy, most heavily taxed in the world it was impossible that ships could be built as cheap as in other poorer and less burdensome countries; but he would show the chief reasons why the Government had resisted to the measure had, since the discussion began, entirely given way. That delusion which had for some time been endeavoured to be palmed off, that public opinion in England was favourable to repeal of the Navigation Laws had completely vanished. It was now quite evident that the current of the public mind had set strongly against the bill, which was not an attempt to amend, but to abrogate the Navigation Laws. The Government had likewise attempted to persuade the House that we had nothing to surrender. But it was obvious that the Government themselves were convinced that their measure was not an unimportant one, The advocates of the bill likewise had likewise attempted to persuade the colonies were in favour of it. But time had proved that this was not the case, and had shown that what the colonies really wanted was not the repeal of the Navigation Laws as an abstract proposition which was withdrawn from them, but a return to a protective policy itself. It had been assumed that foreign powers were willing to unite with us in this cause; but neither from the continent of Europe nor from America had any tidings arrived to justify that assumption. All the golden promises had in fact vanished into air. In his opinion, the consideration we should have to expect from the present Government, if not to abandon, to postpone the bill for the present. The adoption of the measure would alienate masses of the population from the Government, and strengthen the hands of the Manchester demagogues. The right hon. gentleman concluded his speech by imploring the House not, without reason or necessity, to venture on so dangerous an experiment as the repeal of the Navigation Laws.

Mr. ROBINSON seconded the amendment. He contended that foreign countries were looking at the conduct of this country in order to take advantage of our errors. It was vain for ever our cotton manufacturers to hope for ever to maintain their superiority over the manufacturers of all other countries. Every year, by experience, by the export of our machinery, and by the seduction of our artisans, other countries were becoming better able to rival us. In sacrificing our Navigation Laws for the benefit of our cotton manufactures, we were sacrificing the substantial advantages of our home and colonial trade to a vain hope that was unattainable.

Mr. H. GRADON did not apprehend any distressing consequences would result to the British shipowners from passing the bill, but, at the same time, could have wished that every restriction on British shipping had been removed, more particularly those restrictions which prevented the owners manning them when and where it was most convenient for them to do so. He could also have wished to have seen the customs on marine assurance and bills of lading done away with, the law relating to victualling altered, and British lighthouses put on the same footing as those of France and America, which would reduce the expense of those establishments one-half. If those restrictions were done away with, he feared no competition whatever. In proportion as the restrictions on navigation were relaxed, in common fairness Parliament was bound to do away with the burdens which pressed on the British shipowner and British shipping.

Mr. WALPOLE examined the question in its historical, economical, and national points of view. He contended that, whatever advantage the foreign merchants, the importers, or the consumers might derive from the reduction in freights that would be the consequence of this measure, the consumers would obtain no benefit from it. Our commercial marine was the foundation of our naval supremacy, and, therefore, to discourage the former, would be to injure the latter. Instead of repealing the Navigation Laws, and giving a power of retaliation to the Crown, he would advise the House to retain the laws with a power of relaxation. These laws had been a wise and safe defence to home, protection to our colonies, and that supremacy on the ocean which enabled us to find assistance in the world when our honour or our interest required it; and he, for one, was not prepared to hazard our national greatness for any trifling economical consideration.

Sir JAMES GRAHAM argued that the votes of gentlemen who represented great commercial and maritime communities were the best tests that the opinion of the commercial interests was favourable to the measure before the House. He proceeded to reply to Mr. Walpole's arguments, relative to the first principles of the Navigation Laws, and to the conclusions the Honourable and learned member had come to on the historical, economical, and national aspect of the question. He (Sir James Graham) contended that the repeal of the Navigation Laws would increase our shipping, would increase the number of our commercial seamen, and, consequently, would maintain our naval supremacy. It would be most difficult to carry further our principles of free trade; but the repeal of the Navigation Laws would simplify our arrangements with foreign states, and remove our difficulties. The right hon. gentleman cited a number of interests upon which the Navigation Laws, he said, pressed unthoroughly. As to the colonies, he fully maintained that they were not opposed to free trade. With regard to Canada, he declared that, unless the distress should either repeal the Navigation Laws or go back to the former policy respecting the Corn Laws, the loss of this colony was inevitable. The right hon. gentleman concluded by quoting a passage from a speech lately made by Lord Stanley—in which the noble Lord announced his profound conviction that a statement would have to retract its steps, and come back to the sound and rational principle of Protection, and taunted those hon. members in that House who condemned the policy of the repeal of the Corn Laws for not at once resuming their position boldly, and testing the opinion of the Legislature upon it. For his part, he (Sir James Graham) regarded the Navigation Repeal Bill as the capital stone which crowned the edifice of those measures of free trade that had been done by Parliament. Without which what would be the edifice? It would be incomplete. He considered this question as the battle-field on which the great struggle would take place, and he confidently called on the House to make a great effort to secure the victory.

Mr. T. BARING declared that the colonies had demanded the repeal of the Navigation Laws; or, at least, the representatives of some of the great commercial towns at home might with fair the opinion of the commercial interest in England was favourable to it. He believed the real principle of the bill to be the removal of all restrictions from foreigners, and the maintenance of preferential rights on Englishmen. The measure was a fresh forward in the dark. They were told that they must go forward, and for that they could not go back. Certainly, Englishmen did not like to retreat. But, if reaction was taking place, it had been produced by national distress. The reaction that was going on was one that might not be felt in that House, that could not be excited by party out of doors; it was a reaction caused by the intolerable suffering of all our national interests. Whatever might be the fate of the bill that night, he trusted, and the country trusted, that means would yet be found to prevent it from becoming the law of the land.

Lord J. RUSSELL adopted Sir J. Graham's defence of the measure. The noble Lord asserted that, economic ally, all these regulations had been injurious to trade, and that protect on of all sorts was reproductive to energy and destructive to exertion. Referring to the declaration made by Lord Stanley, and to the cry of protection that was being raised throughout the country, Lord J. Russell called on the House to consider the probable consequences of renewing the duties on articles of food. Masses of the people who were, he said, now contented and quiet, and who silently rejoiced that they were enabled to purchase their necessaries, would be driven to agitate by a return to protection. Three years ago, he added, they had abled us to go through the past year of disorder, and these were—the abundant harvests of the last three years, the cheaper advices of the repeal of the Corn Laws, and the enlargement of provisions. Should this last provision be removed, it would be the signal for fresh agitation.

Mr. DISRAELI thought Sir J. Graham had aptly illustrated this measure when he called it the necessary capital to the previous works. But he (Mr Disraeli) was not inclined to raise a costly capital on an ill-designed column. This measure had been brought forward to realise a theory that had utterly failed, and it had been propped up by assertions that had broken down. The House had been told by a high authority that night, that unless the 5s. protection duty on corn should be restored to Canada, or unless the Navigation Laws should be repealed, that colony would soon cease to belong to the British Crown. It was not likely that any paltry change in the Navigation Laws could compensate the Canadians for the 5s. protective duty taken from them; therefore it was well the people of England should know what, on the authority of Sir J. Graham, they would have to pay for the repeal of the Corn Laws. Mr. Disraeli glanced at the indications given by the nations of the Continent and by America to demonstrate that all the fine promises made to induce the House to pass this measure had all dissolved. The Government had that night, happily found a great ally (Sir J. Graham), and they were evidently delighted at getting such a disciple to aid them in their progress. But the public would like to know where they were to progress. Was it progress to paradise or progress to hell? He (Mr. Disraeli) wished to avail himself of the experience of the last three years—it was a magical term—and he could venture to promise Sir J. Graham that he should have ample opportunity for vindicating that policy for which he was responsible. Within the last three years the non-rates had increased 17 per cent., the capital of England had diminished to the amount of one hundred millions, and the average investments in the savings banks had diminished one-half. Their vote that night would break down that great statistical conspiracy which had trampled on the destinies of this great country.

Mr. CHARLES and Mr. MOFFATT ineffectually attempted to address the House. Their voices were drowned in cries of "Divide."

The House then divided.

For the third reading of the bill	..	273
Against it	..	214
Majority for the third reading	..	61

The bill was read a third time and passed.

The Indictable Offences (Ireland) Bill, and the Summary Convictions (Ireland) Bill, were severally read a third time and passed.

Adjourned at two o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

NAVIGATION LAWS.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE moved the first reading of the Navigation Bill, and gave notice that he would move the second reading on Monday week, when he proposed to have their Lordships summoned and to take the discussion on its principle.

Lord STANLEY acquiesced in this arrangement, and the bill was read a first time.

On the motion of Lord REDESDALE, the Smoke Prohibition Bill was read a second time.

THANKS TO THE ARMY OF THE PUNJAUB

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE moved, in a series of resolutions, distinct votes of thanks to the Governor-General of India, to the Commander-in-Chief, the officers, and men engaged in the late military operations in India. The noble Marquis traced the war in the Punjaub from its first breaking out to its successful termination in the victory of Goojerat. The war had, he said, its origin in acts of rebellion and treachery; it had been carried on with some celerity, it had cost us some bloodshed, but it had been closed by a triumph of the most brilliant and complete description. This was the first occasion in which the two most warlike nations in India—the Sikhs and the Afghans had been united in arms against us; but, thanks to the ability, the courage, the military skill displayed by our officers and army, British and native, these our combined enemies had been entirely dispersed, and nothing was wanting to render our victory perfect. The noble Marquis pointed out the gallant services rendered by the several general officers, and more particularly lamented the untimely fate of Major Edwardes and other young officers who had signalised themselves during the late operations. He expressed his conviction that their Lordships would unanimously assent to the proposed votes of thanks.

Lord STANLEY seconded the motion, and said that, however widely their Lordships might differ with one another on party politics, when the honour of the country and the glory of our arms were under discussion, party differences would ever be forgotten, and they would all equally feel pride and honour in giving their unanimous tribute of gratitude to those gallant men who fought our battles and sustained the greatness of the British name. He believed that in this instance no could congratulate their Lordships that as the cause of the war was one of the justest, and the success was of the most signal description, so the result of the success seemed likely to be of a most permanent character; for he trusted that by it we had laid the foundation of a long and lasting peace, fraught with the welfare of even that very enemy with whom we had been engaged.

The Earl of GALLOWAY, while willing to give his cordial assent to the vote of thanks to our army, thought the present night to adopt her Majesty to order a day of thanksgiving to the God of battles for this critical victory.

The Duke of WELLINGTON would not object to the Earl of Galloway's proposal at a fitting time, but that was not the time to discuss it. The noble Duke proceeded to give a succinct and most interesting narrative of all the operations during the late campaign, which he characterised as one that especially called for their Lordships' approbation. His Grace took occasion to vindicate the conduct of the 14th Light Dragoons, into which he said he had inquired, and the inquiry had satisfied him that their retirement was in consequence of a mistaken order.

The Duke of RICHMOND thanked the noble Duke for speaking so handsomely in favour of the 14th, whose was as gallant a regiment as any in the service, and which had distinguished itself on many occasions. He also expressed his gratification at seeing so large a concourse of their Lordships then present; that large attendance could not but enhance the value of their vote of thanks to the army in India.

Viscount HARDINGE could not avoid avowing his hearty admiration of the conduct of Lord Gough and his gallant companions in arms for their achievements in the late campaign, the result of which he, for one, never doubted. This was the fourth time that Lord Gough had received the thanks of Parliament as a general commanding our troops in India, and he moved a warm compliment to our artillery, and advised the Government to take good care not to suffer this invaluable arm of our service to be impaired through notions of unwise economy.

After a few remarks from the Duke of WELLINGTON and the Earl WALDEGRAVE, the votes of thanks were agreed to nem. con.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

Mr. HAWES stated, in reply to Mr. Gladstone, that the papers relative to rebellion losses in Canada would be laid on the table in the course of the week.

ARMY OF THE PUNJAUB.

Sir JOHN HOBHOUSE moved votes of thanks to the Governor-General of India, to the Commander-in-Chief, to the officers, and men, British and native, engaged in the late operations in the Punjaub—similar to those moved in the House of Peers.

Mr. HUME of GRANBY seconded the motion.

Sir R. PEEL, Sir James W. HOGG, Sir R. INGLIS, Mr. HUME, Mr. GLADSTONE, Mr. MANGLES, Mr. GRATTAN, and Colonel DUNNE spoke in approval of the motion, which was agreed to nem. con.

THE BRAZILS.

Mr. MILNER GIBSON called attention to the state of our relations with the empire of Brazil, and moved for leave to bring in a bill to repeal the Brazilian Act, 8th and 9th Victoria, c. 122. The hon. member admitted that there were circumstances which rendered the war of a good understanding between this country and Brazil, but considered that those difficulties were attributable not so much to any aversion on the part of Brazil to the abolition of the slave trade as to the fact that this country, in endeavouring to suppress it, was violating the rights of an independent state. The treaty entered into some time ago between Great Britain and Brazil was temporary in all of its articles except one, and that one had since operated against article enacted that the prosecution of the slave trade by Brazil should be deemed and treated as piracy. Upon the meaning of this clause of the treaty the question between us and Brazil mainly turned. Brazil insisted that it was only meant that the Government of Brazil would endeavour to get a law passed by the Brazilian Legislature; while, on the other hand, the construction put upon it by Lord Aberdeen was, that Great Britain had the right to treat as pirates all Brazilian subjects taken in the act of carrying on the slave trade, and on this construction he had called on Parliament to legislate. By international law, Brazilian subjects engaged in the slave trade could not be deemed guilty of piracy, and, in treating such parties as pirates, we were extending our criminal jurisdiction over those who were certainly not amenable to it. Our conduct in this matter naturally excited jealousy and irritation in Brazil, and to obviate such a state of things he was induced to make this motion.

Mr. HAMILTON HAMILTON seconded the motion.

Sir F. THESIGER, feeling perfectly satisfied that the act of the 8th and 9th Vict was the only security we had that the Brazilian Government would carry out its friendly the important stipulations in the treaty of 1826, was decidedly opposed to the repeal of that act. The effect of the treaty of 1826 was Brazil did place us in a position in which we were entitled to legislate and substitute another tribunal for the mixed commission courts that had ceased to exist. The act now sought to be repealed was the only means we possessed of enforcing that clause of the treaty which stipulated, on the part of Brazil, that the slave trade should be permanently abolished after 1830.

Mr Barclay and Mr. Anstey supported the motion

Sir E Buxton regretted that such a proposal should be made to the House, especially at a time when a committee on the slave trade was pursuing its inquiry. He also regretted that the right honorable mover should have made this proposition at the dictation of the men of Manchester, who were so far interested in the slave trade that their manufactures went in a very large proportion to pay for the slaves. The repeal of the Act of the 5th Victoria would take away the whole efficiency of our cruisers, and the next thing they would be called on to do would be to take away the cruisers themselves.

Mr. Hume said he might, with equal reason, charge all the distillers and brewers in the country with the encouragement of intemperance, as the hon Baronet had charged the manufacturers of Manchester with encouraging the slave-trade.

Mr. O'Connell thought the House ought to take its stand in resisting this retrograde movement towards slavery. The Slave Act of 1845 had given a great stimulus to the slave trade, and this motion, if carried, would have a similar effect; he therefore advised the House to resist it.

Sir R. Peel regretted to see the House inclined to apply to the Slave Trade the general commercial principles. The question of the Slave Trade would, he understood, be brought under regular discussion so soon as the committee then sitting should make its report, and therefore he thought it better not then to debate it. With respect to the proposal before the House, he thought it a most extraordinary one. The act of 8th and 9th Vict. was passed by the Legislature Commons unanimously, and without division, yet the House was asked to repeal it on the ground that it was a manifest violation of international [illegible] them (said the right hon. Baronet) repeal the bill as suggested by hon. gentlemen, and he believed by doing so they would substantially proclaim to the world that all their efforts to prevent the Slave Trade and to mitigate its horrors were at an end; and, having done that, his advice to them would be, to determine how they could encourage it.

Mr W. P. Wood referred to the peculiar circumstances under which the act in question had passed, and thought it might be reconsidered. At the same time he did not apprehend that any member of that House could believe that England would ever retrace the steps which she had taken in the great cause of humanity, and certainly if he thought such could be the consequence of supporting the present motion he should say nothing in its favour.

Lord Palmerston refrained from entering into the general question, and contented himself with exposing his hope that the majority of the House would adhere to those principles to which the honour of the country was pledged.

After speeches from Mr. Cobden and Col. Thompson, and some observations from Mr. Bright and Mr. M. Gibson in reply, the House divided, when the motion was negatived by a majority of 103—the numbers being 34 to 137.

Mr Wyld moved for leave to bring in a bill on the subject of Fire Inquests; but an objection being raised by the Attorney-General, on the ground that to make such inquests general over the whole country would make the measure an important addition to the county rates, the motion was negatived without a division; and, after the Report of Ways and Means had been received, the House adjourned at a quarter past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House met at noon, and sat till six o'clock

BRIBERY AT ELECTIONS

Sir J. Pakington moved the committal of the Bribery at Elections Bill, which had been amended by the Select Committee.

Colonel Sibthorp opposed the Speaker's leaving the chair, and hoped that the bill would meet the same fate as its predecessors.

Sir G. Grey appealed to the gallant Colonel not to insist upon dividing on the question of going into committee.

Colonel Sibthorp consented, and the House went into committee on the bill.

On the first clause, which enacted that a declaration should be taken by members, at the table of the House, that they had not, by themselves or their agents, been directly or indirectly guilty of bribery or corruption, a lengthened discussion took place, in which a general opinion was given adverse to the clause, and the committee divided—

For the clause	.. .. ..	54
Against it	.. .. ..	146
Majority against the clause	.. ..	—92

Sir J. Pakington then moved that the Chairman leave the chair, as he thought it would require time, after the decision of the committee, to amend the bill.

Progress was accordingly reported, and the Chairman obtained leave to sit again.

SUNDAY TRADING

Mr. Locke moved the second reading of the Sunday Travelling on Railways Bill, the simple object of which was to compel railway companies to attach a few passenger carriages to mail trains on Sundays, without interfering with the number of trains. The hon member entered into a variety of details to establish that the rule adopted by some of the Scottish railway companies, of refusing to take passengers under any circumstances on Sundays, was productive of much public inconvenience, was in no way conducive to the proper observance of the Sabbath, and was, in fact, injurious to the education, health, and morals of the people.

Mr. Cowan opposed the motion, and moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.

Mr. M'Gregor seconded the amendment.

Mr. Labouchere, having drawn a distinction between the practical inconvenience caused by the closing of some few railways to passengers in Scotland on Sunday, and the shock that would be given by this measure to the conscientious feelings of a large class of the people of Scotland, said, not without difficulty, to the conclusion of voting against the bill. He gave this opinion, however, in his individual character, and not as the opinion of Government.

Mr Fitzroy Kelly opposed the bill

Mr. Hume, Mr. A. B. Cochrane, Mr. Peto, Mr. Moore, and Mr. Reynolds spoke in support of the bill; Mr. Heald, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. F. Maule, Mr. Cumming Bruce, the Lord Advocate, Mr. Charteris, and Mr. Scott against it.

The House then divided

For the second reading	.. .. ..	122
Against it	.. .. ..	111
Majority against the bill	..	11

The bill was consequently lost.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

On the motion of Earl Grey, the New South Wales Land Bill was read a third time

The Smoke Prohibition Bill passed through Committee

LEASEHOLD TENURE (IRELAND) BILL

The Lord Chancellor moved the second reading of this bill. This bill was intended to remedy many evils which existed with regard to leasehold tenure in Ireland, and it would raise the value of landed property in that country.

After a short discussion, the bill was read a second time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

On the motion of Mr. Henley, a Select Committee was appointed to inquire into the Contract Packet Service.

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND)

Lord J. Russell then rose to move, pursuant to notice, for leave to bring in a bill to amend the act for the more effectual relief of the destitute poor in Ireland. He had stated on a former occasion the nature of the amendments he had intended to introduce himself. What he had now to propose, he proposed on the responsibility of the Government. The first and most important alteration was the introduction of a maximum both with regard to the rates upon each separate electoral division and the rates upon all electoral divisions. Its provision, whatever the amount might be, he admitted was contrary to the general principles of the Poor-Law of that country; but it must be remembered that in Ireland the attempt to carry out the principle of the Poor-Law as in this country that of relieving pauperism by a rate in support of the poor, and by a rate setting to work the able-bodied poor—had been found to be productive of great distress, and great scarcity, and such oppression on the tenant-farmer of the country and the property of the country, as to create great alarm. Such being the case, the Poor-Law Commissioners had considered whether it would not be desirable to propose a maximum rate. That question had been considered by the Government, and it was thought by them that a maximum rate ought to be enforced. What he, therefore, proposed by this bill was, that, supposing there was one electoral division that had incurred expenses to the amount of 7s., and that electoral division could only pay 5s., the other electoral division should pay 2s., in addition to their ordinary rates. He proposed, further, that the Poor-Law Commissioners should have the power of settling and determining the past liabilities of certain electoral divisions, in consequence of a new division of unions. Upon this part of the subject a report had been made by a commission appointed last year. It was, however, impossible to adopt all the recommendations contained in that report, but he might state generally that he was disposed to adopt the views contained in the report from time to time as the Poor-Law Commissioners should think fit. At the same time he thought the question relating to the workhouses might be disposed of now, and so far as they were concerned he was prepared at once to adopt the opinion of the report, that it would not be safe to make a further division of unions, without accompanying such a measure with a proposal for increasing the number of workhouses. (Hear, hear.) He proposed to introduce a clause, the effect of which he had alluded to on a former occasion, namely, that the owners of land should have power of declaring a portion of the rate on account of his rent charges (Hear, hear.) He proposed to make an important alteration in the provisions of the Poor-Law, with respect to the extinction which a tenant might have in his rent for the purpose of paying the poor-rate. He intended, for the future, that the tenant should have the power of deducting half the rate to which he was liable from the rent. He also proposed to introduce a provision with reference to the improvements which might be made upon the land—viz. that, in order to prevent any disputes and litigation, a valuation should be made of the improvements, and that there should be an increased valuation for a period of seven years

After some discussion, leave was given to bring in the bill.

The Solicitor-General obtained leave to introduce a bill to facilitate the sale of encumbered estates in Ireland.—Adjourned.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

It is understood, says the Sun, that Mr. Kyan, the discoverer of the means of preserving timber from the destructive influence of the "dry rot," has made application to the Government for participation in the benefits derived from what is commonly called the Royal Bounty Fund—a fund created for distribution among those who may be regarded as having deserved such assistance by their exertions for the public welfare, or by their own individual misfortune.

The staple industry of Paris is gradually improving. An English house last week made purchases in a Paris establishment of silk lace to such an extent as to raise the price of the article not less than 40 per cent. Another English house made similarly large purchases in ribband and silk manufactories.

The new dock at Gloucester was opened for the admission of vessels last week

Mrs. Wolfe Tone, the widow of the celebrated United Irishman, lately died at Georgetown, Pennsylvania, in the 80th year of her age.

A coil of gutta percha (nothing, 240 feet in length, has just been manufactured by the Gutta Percha Company for a gentleman in Warwickshire, to convey the supply of water from the park reservoirs to his mansion-house.

The Countess of Blessington, accompanied by her nieces, has left London for Paris, where it is her intention to reside in future.

During the last three months thirty large vessels have left Plymouth for the Australian colonies, taking with them 3650 passengers; and within the next week the following ships, bound to Quebec for timber, have also left that port, with upwards of 1058 passengers: the Cromwell, Prince Regent, Princess, Emperor, Dahlia, and Lucinda.

Government free passages are at an end for some time to come. [illegible] years from a circular just issued by the Colonial Land and Emi[illegible]

[illegible] agents for emigration in the [illegible]

Mr Commissioner Holroyd has appointed Mr. J. Johnston the younger to the responsible office of messenger to the Court of Bankruptcy, in the room of his father who for 28 years held that office

On Friday week Mrs. William Teil, who had for many years held the situation of secretary to his Grace the Duke of Devonshire, in addition to an office in the Board of Green Cloth, drowned himself in an iron tank sunk in the garden. The tank was 6 feet 6 inches in depth, and eighteen inches in depth, and was filled with water.

The Holyhead mail steamers having regularly reduced the time of transit of the mail bag by the route of Holyhead to Dublin, it is contemplated to make those steamers perform all the service of carrying the mails between London and Dublin, and to take off the Liverpool line of mail packets.

C. Macaulay, Esq., has received the appointment of Colonial Secretary at the Mauritius. Patrick Augustus Boyle, Esq., is appointed Colonial Surgeon at the Gold Coast

At the City of Hereford sessions, last week, the Mayor presented the Recorder with a pair of white gloves, in consequence of there not being a single prisoner for trial. A "maiden sessions" has not occurred there for 17 years.

It appears by the bills of mortality in Paris that the deaths in that city have increased in a progressive proportion since the year 1845. In that year the deaths amounted to 33,704, being one in 45. In 1846, 36,625, or one in 42; in 1847, 39,189, or one in 38. The returns for the year 1848 have not yet been published, but it is believed that the deaths amounted to one in 32.

The list of candidates at the approaching election for the Legislative Assembly of France for eight departments, prepared by the electoral committee of the rue de Poitiers, contains the names of one prince, twelve marquises, eight counts, six generals, and the remainder viscounts or barons

A correct p'an of the battle of Goojerat, showing the respective positions of the British and Sikh divisions before and after the battle, has just been published by Mr. Wyld, of Charing-cross

Last Sunday being the first in Easter Term, the Rev. S. R. Cattley, Chaplain to the Lord Mayor, preached at St. Paul's Cathedral in the morning, and in the afternoon the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress, with the City officers, attended, according to ancient custom, to mark Her Majesty's Judges. The sermon was preached by the Lord Bishop of London.

A luggage train on Thursday afternoon ran into some sheep which had strayed on to the Midland line at Wigston, and killed two or three of them On the arrival of the train at the next station (Leicester), it was found that in some means a sheep had been forced into the fire-box, and was still alive, although the wool was burnt off its back, its ears from its head, and even holes burnt through the nails. It was immediately killed and put out of its torture.

The committee of the Coventry Freehold Society have effected another purchase of land to the extent of nearly 80 acres, in the vicinity of that city. The estate, which is situated at Stoke, near the residence of T. S. Morris, Esq., has been purchased of the Coventry and Warwickshire Bank for £4400.

A return obtained by Mr. Cocks, M.P., shows the duty paid on bricks in the several Excise collections of England in the year 1848 "or have amounted to £448,310, of which £.9,886 was paid in the metropolis alone.

At a Court of Compensation, on Saturday, before the Recorder and a special jury of the city of London, £800 were awarded as compensation to the trustees of the Merchant Seamen's Society, for the loss of certain apartments, held on lease from the corporation, on the north side of the Royal Exchange, which was destroyed by fire a few years since. Fourteen years of the lease were unexpired at the time of the fire, and no terms could be agreed upon for granting a fresh lease of rooms in the new edifice.

John Awkright, Esq., of Hampton Court, Herefordshire, has returned ten per cent. to his tenants on rents due in August last. This is in addition to a permanent reduction of twelve per cent. made by the same gentleman a few years ago.

Joseph Martineau, Esq., of Basing Park, in consequence of the deficiency in the produce of the last year's crop, and the unfavourable weather for harvesting it, has signified to his tenants his intention to allow, at his two next half-yearly audits, an abatement of twenty-five per cent. on his rents.

Last week, Mr. Irvine, of Micklegate, York, tea dealer, left home, there being then in a closet in one of the rooms a tea-box, containing between £90 and £100 in gold. On his return in the evening Mr. Irvine found the door of his room fastened, and, on forcing it open, he discovered the cash box had been broken open, and the money gone

It is reported that Rear-Admiral Sir Lucius Curtis, Bart., C.B., at present residing at Malta, has become a Roman Catholic.

It has been ascertained that no less than 14,000 British seamen have deserted the merchant service during the past year, 8000 of whom have left their vessels on the American coasts

The total number of county parliamentary electors, whose names appeared on the register in Ireland on the 1st of January, 1849, was 34,107. The number entitled to vote for counties within the next six months is [illegible] a decrease as compared with the number entitled to vote in June [illegible] The number of names on the registries of counties of cities and towns and boroughs amount to 38,109. This number, added to the number of those entitled to vote in counties, shows a parliamentary constituency for the whole of Ireland of only 72,2.6.

Messrs. Sanford and Owen, of the Phœnix Foundry, Masborough, have recently completed their contract for 60 tons of main castings for gun carriages. These underwent the most minute ordeal of a Government Inspector, and not one was rejected! a circumstance, we believe, rarely to be met with. These immense castings have been furnished to Woolwich to be fitted up.

A singularly-grown violet was plucked a few days since near Truro, its stems, instead of being of the usual form, were flattened and winged, its leaves were suspended on a kind of stalk, while one of the flowers grew upside, as it were, in a state of transition between a leaf and corolla, and was illustrative of the botanic theory that flowers are but further developed leaves.

The branches of British industry have greater (if so much) cause to complain of the war system as the monopoly prevailing in Europe than the actual manufacturers: the blockade of Sicily depriving them of their supply of brimstone, while the blockade of the German rivers and ports precludes the means of their manufactures.

A considerable number of vessels belonging to the German ports are lying in the Tyne and the Wear, being deterred from sailing in fear of the Danish cruisers which are scouring the North Sea. The effects of the [illegible] the Danes and Germans begin to be severely felt in all the ports on the eastern coast.

The Viscount Ebrington, following the example of his father, Earl Fortescue, has enclosed a cheque in a letter of condolence to the Rev. James Shore.

The Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells administered the rite of confirmation last week, at the Abbey Church, Bath, to 464 candidates 352 females and 142 males.

The Rev. William O'Donnell, P.P. of Clonmany, in the diocese of Derry, lately received a war medal from the Horse Guards. He was formerly an officer in the 20th regiment, having served in the army from 1809 to 1817, and afterwards entered into holy orders as a Catholic priest.

A petition to Parliament in favour of the reform movement, namely, for retrenchment and direct taxation, is being got up in Liverpool, and has already been signed by great numbers

On Monday afternoon about three o'clock, a convict named Stradwick, under sentence of transportation, contrived to effect his escape from Newgate by climbing over the wall of the court-yard and descending into the street, by passing through the house of Mr. Macdonald, No. 7, Newgate-street.

A petition, signed by 520 tradesmen and manufacturers of Paris, has been presented to the National Assembly of France, praying that iron, a may be sent to Monte Video to protect French [illegible]

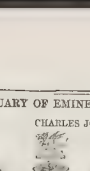
Colonel Frapolli, Envoy Extraordinary from the Roman Republic to the Government of the French Republic, has protested against the occupation of any portion of the territory of the Roman Republic by the French troops.

About 200 young Irish females leave Plymouth this week for Australia. They are a fine set of young women, and will be a valuable addition to the colony of Port Phillip, where females are much wanted They are sent out by the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners in the New Liverpool, 587 tons burden, Captain Beckerson.

M. Eugène Raspail, representative of the people, has been sentenced by default, by the Court of Correction, Police, Paris, to two years' imprisonment, and 5000 francs fine, for striking [illegible] on [illegible]

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

CHARLES JOSEPH, 2ND VISCOUNT MONCK.



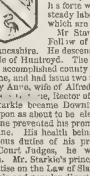
This Nobleman, who succeeded to the Peerage on the decease of his elder brother, the late Earl of Rathdown, on the 30th of last September, died a few days since at his residence in Dublin, after a long and painful illness. At the period of his decease, he was in the 68th year of his age. Early in life his Lordship, who held a military commission, fought with distinguished bravery throughout the whole of the Peninsular campaigns, and received, in consequence, many of the war medals and clasps recently bestowed on the officers who had survived those glorious services.

Viscount Monck married, 29th November, 1817, Bridget, daughter of the late John Wilmerton [illegible], of Killoskehane, county Tipperary, and by her (who died 22d of January, [illegible]) had a large family, the eldest son of which, Charles Stanley (who [illegible] elected at the last election the representative [illegible] He is married to his cousin, Lady [illegible], fourth daughter of the Earl of Rathdown. The Marquis of Drogheda claim descent from a branch of the Devonshire house, so illustrious by [illegible] of the famous General Monck, Duke of Albemarle.

THE LADY CARINGTON.

Charlotte, third daughter of John Hudson, Esq., of Ecrigny, county York, was born 1st May, 1770, and married, in 1787, the Rev. Walter Trevelyan, Rector of Benbury, near Brasted, brother of Sir John Trevelyan, Bart., of Nettcombe, Somersetshire, by whom she had issue two children, five sons and five daughters. She was secondly married, 19th January, 1808, to Robert Lee Carington, born 3rd February, 1752, her Lordship being then in his 56th year.

THOMAS STARKIE, ESQ., Q.C.



Thomas Starkie, a distinguished scholar of the University of Cambridge, was called to the bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn on the 23rd May, 1810, and practised on the Northern Circuit. His profound learning and untiring industry soon led him into very large business, and he also became eminent as a conductor of a series of law reports. Fame and fortune attended him through all his career as a junior, but his success was far less marked after taking a silk gown. Those essential elements of a leader, eloquence and display, were not the main attributes of Mr Starkie; he [illegible] was solid erudition, which, combined with slow but steady labour, enabled him to produce those sterling works which are of essential utility to the lawyer

Mr Starkie was the eldest son of the Rev Thomas Starkie, Fellow of St. John's College, and sometime Vicar of Blackburn, Lancashire. He descended from the Twiston branch of the ancient family of Starkie of Huntroyd. The learned gentleman married Lucy, daughter of the able and accomplished county historian, the Rev Thomas Dunham Whitaker, of the Holme, and had issue two sons, both deceased, and two surviving daughters, viz Lucy Anne, wife of Alfred Power, Esq., and Katherine Blanche, wife of the Rev [illegible], Rector of Crawley.

Mr Starkie became Downing Professor of Cambridge, and was at one time looked upon as about to be elevated to the judicial bench. Some political move at the time prevented his promotion, though no one had stronger claims to wear the ermine. His health being latterly delicate, he partially gave up the more complicated duties of his profession. On the appointment, however, of the County Court Judges, he was nominated to preside over the Court at Islington. Mr. Starkie's principal works, besides the Reports alluded to, were "A Treatise on the Law of Slander," "A Treatise on Criminal Pleading," and a very able and popular digest of the Law of Evidence.

In private life, Mr. Starkie was greatly esteemed. He was a man of the highest honour, and of much amiability of disposition; and his death will be deeply and sincerely regretted by the profession, and by a wide circle of friends. Mr. Starkie died at Cambridge, on the 15th instant

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

PRUSSIA

The difficulty created by the refusal of the King to accept, except on certain conditions, the Imperial Crown of the proposed German Federal Empire, which was offered to him by the deputation from the Frankfort National Assembly, has become more entangled and remote from solution by the course taken by the Legislative Chamber in Berlin The case at present stands thus: The Prussian Cabinet protests that it will not recognise the Frankfort constitution as it now stands; whilst the Chamber as peremptorily declares that constitution to be legally voted, and on a responsible ministry throughout the future assent of the future legislative German representation. The one demands modification as the preliminary; the other repudiates all modification, unless it be consequent.

The matter was brought to this dead lock on the 21st, when M. Rodbertus' motion on the Frankfort constitution of the whole was discussed. The report of the committee to which the motion had been referred recommended its acceptance by the Chamber. Count Brandenburg, in the name of the Ministry, strongly opposed the resolution, alleging that the alteration made in the constitution in the second reading at Frankfort rendered it impossible for Prussia to accept it unconditionally, though he acknowledged the efforts made to procure a modification of the present form of the constitution, in concert with the other powers, had failed

On the division, the third paragraph of the resolution of M. Rodbertus, pledging the Chamber to the unconditional recognition of the constitution, was carried by 179 to 150.

Up to the present time, twenty-eight principality houses and free towns have given their unreserved adhesion to the Frankfort constitution; but the kingdom houses continue to hold out.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The accounts from the seat of war are very justly characterised as "doubtful and contradictory." The Austrian papers regarding any result being favourable not to be relied on.

The principal theatre of operations at present is the vicinity of Pesth (the Hungarian capital) and the road leading from it by Waitzen and Gran to the important fortress of Comorn, which is still ineffectually besieged by the Imperial troops; skirmishes and engagements of more or less consequence are of daily occurrence, the Magyars seeking to open the road to Comorn, which they have, up to the latest accounts, succeeded to a very great extent in accomplishing. Baron Wohlgemuth, who has succeeded Jellachich in the command of Croatia, from Gallicia and the northern frontier, it is stated that orders have at length been given at St. Petersburg, in reply to the demand of Austria, that the Russian troops shall act against the Magyars according to treaty stipulations. Russia has promised the assistance of 20,000 infantry, 4000 cavalry, and 24 pieces of artillery.

DENMARK AND SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

No event of particular interest marks the intelligence from the seat of war, except the entrance, on the 20th inst., of a body of the Duchy troops into Jutland, thus carrying the war into the interior of the Danish kingdom. On the same day, the 5th sswig troops, under General Bonin, took the town of Kolding, which lies about one mile and a half from the limits of Schleswig, and nearly five miles from the fortress of Fredericia. Preparations for storming the island of Alsen are still going on. Some heavy battering trains have been brought to Hoper, and among them some 84-pounders.

The Danish blockade of the northern ports is vigorously maintained, to the great detriment of both English and German commerce.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Accounts to the 15th of February state that the country was quiet.

WEST INDIES.

We have intelligence this week from the various islands; but it is not of much interest

At Jamaica the Government had further prorogued the Legislature to the 1st of May. It was believed that it would be further adjourned till instructions had been received from the Colonial-office. Meetings continued to be held advocating a reduction of the expenditure and reforming the council of the island. Rain was much wanted in this island

From St. Lucia we learn that the ferment occasioned by the recent riots had quite subsided, and detachments of troops had left the island for Port Royal. At the assembly of the Legislative Council, the Lieutenant-Governor announced that he had received a despatch from the Governor-in-Chief, stating that approved of the establishment of a municipal body in the town of Castries.

In Grenada retrenchment occupied the public mind, and a committee of the House of Assembly had reported in favour of reducing the salaries of office

ITALIAN STATES.

Piedmont. The accounts from this quarter of the Peninsula partake more of the nature of rumours than of absolute statements, and are, therefore, to be accepted with caution, the more so as they are of a very unsatisfactory character, viz. that General Radetzsky intends renouncing the armistice, and resuming hostilities against Piedmont, because the latter state refuses to admit an Austrian garrison into Alessandria, and to pay the required war contribution; and also because Abbé Lambruschini from Venice; while Count Ricci, a partisan of Gioberti, has been appointed to treat for peace, instead of Count Revel, who was favourable to Austria.

Tuscany. The advance towards the restoration of order, which was commenced in Florence on the 11th, progresses satisfactorily, and the return of the Grand Duke may be shortly expected. On the 16th a deputation of the municipality and nobility, at the head of which was Count Serristori, formerly Minister for Foreign Affairs, and a man very popular in Florence, proceeded to Gaëta to entreat the return of the Grand Duke.

EMBARKATION OF THE FRENCH TROOPS IN THE OUTER HARBOUR, MARSEILLES.

Of all the cities and towns of Tuscany, Leghorn alone favours the Republicans; but that place, it is expected, will not long hold out against the strongly expressed will of the rest of the country.

One of the most satisfactory of the consequences of the change in the aspect of affairs, is the probable arrest of the progress of the Austrian troops in their march towards Tuscany.

ROME.—The annihilation of the vague hopes of the Republicans in Tuscany has opened the eyes of Mazzini and his colleagues in the usurpation of the Roman Government to their desperate position. On the 14th inst., in the Constituent Assembly, the following proclamation was agreed to. Whether the spirit that it breathes will be manifested in presence of the French bayonets which have gone to aid in the restoration of the Pope, remains to be seen:—"In consequence of the late events which have taken place in Italy, the Roman Constituent Assembly declares as follows:—The Roman Republic, the asylum and bulwark of Italian liberty, will neither give way nor consent to a compromise. The representatives and the triumvirs swear it in the name of God and the people. The country shall be saved."

NAPLES AND SICILY. The results of the sanguinary contest between the Neapolitans and Sicilians have, up to the date of the latest accounts, been unsuccessful for the brave islanders. Intelligence vid Turin states that the Provisional Government at Palermo had proposed to the Neapolitan General to capitulate.

FRANCE.

The preparations of the respective political parties to secure the triumph of their candidates at the approaching elections for the Legislative Assembly, assume greater animation as the period of the struggle approaches. Not the least energetic of the various sections of the electoral agitators are the Socialist clubs and committees. The agents of the police on more than one occasion during the week dispersed their meetings, as they refused to allow any officer to be present during their deliberations, which have been shrewdly suspected by the authorities to be of a character that would not bear the light of publicity. Those meetings were generally convened under the pretence of being held for election purposes. In one instance, a secret society, called the Friends of Equality, was discovered in the Rue St. le Banquis, and twenty-one of its members arrested and committed to prison. A quantity of balls and cartridges was found in their place of meeting. Among the persons arrested were several of the insurgents of June who had been transported and subsequently set at liberty.

The Moniteur announces, that, in order to give persons in the provinces who are interested in the public funds the most prompt information of the state of the money market, the prices of the Five per Cents and Three per Cents, and the Shares of the Bank of France, will be transmitted by the Government every day, after the close of the Bourse, by the electric telegraph established on the line of the Northern Railroad, for publication at Amiens, Arras, Lille, and Valenciennes, by the Prefects and sub-Prefects.

According to the latest official returns, the number of cholera cases in Paris amounted to 2250, and the deaths to 1744.

The Abbé Cazenove, late editor of the Gazette de France, recently died at Hyères, after a long illness.

In matters partaking more of a foreign than of a domestic character, announcements were made in political circles during the week on the vexed question of Piedmont, which, if true, would be much to be deplored. It is said for instance, with apparent vraisemblance, that the Austrian Government demands an indemnity for the late war of 200,000,000f. from Piedmont; that they insist on the occupation of the fortress of Alessandria, and that these harsh terms are proposed as a pretext for the occupation of the Piedmontese province of Lomellina; and it is added, that, as the French Government has pledged itself to the National Assembly to guarantee the integrity of Piedmont, an interference may become necessary.

Our latest accounts on the subject mention that it is positively asserted in well-informed circles that the French Government has notified to that of Austria that the occupation of Alessandria by the Austrians will be considered as a casus belli, and that, in such an event, a French army will forthwith enter Piedmont.

EMBARKATION OF TROOPS AT MARSEILLES.

THE Sémaphore de Marseilles, of the 21st inst., announces the arrival of General Oudinot in that city on the preceding day. The embarkation of the troops, to proceed to the Islands of the Hyères, where they were to meet the troops embarked at Toulon, and to proceed thence to Italy, commenced at six o'clock A M on the 20th, and was terminated in the evening, with a smooth sea and light winds. They were six fine battalions of the 33rd, 36th, and 66th Regiments of the Line, together with detachments of artillery and engineers, with their commanders. Generals Levaillant and Molière were on board the flotilla, which was to weigh anchor on the 21st for Toulon, if the weather permitted. A portion of the brigade of General Molière, composed of battalions of the 20th and 22nd Regiments, and a battalion of riflemen, had been embarked at Toulon. General Carrelet directed the preparations for the expedition with extraordinary activity. The troops embarked at Marseilles amounted to 7300 men, and it was reported that orders had been received to form a second convoy.

The 13th and 68th Regiments of the Line arrived at Marseilles on the 20th, and two others, the 16th and 29th, had been ordered to that city from Lyons.

Our Illustrations, sketched by M. Moral Fatio, show the embarkation of the expeditionary fleet. In the first is seen the outer harbour of Marseilles, with the troops embarking. In the second Engraving is the inner harbour, with the fortifications, the lighthouse, &c., and the steam-frigates Albatros, Labrador, &c.

THE FRENCH SQUADRON LEAVING MARSEILLES.

BOMBARDMENT OF CATANIA.—SKETCHED ON BOARD H.M. SLOOP "BULLDOG."

BOMBARDMENT OF CATANIA.

IN our Journal of last week we announced the destruction of the fine city of Catania by the Neapolitan troops, on Good Friday, (!) April 6. We are now enabled, by an obliging Correspondent on board H.M. sloop Bulldog, to illustrate the sad spectacle, as well as to subjoin a few descriptive details :—

"The beautiful city of Catania, situated at the foot of Mount Etna, on the eastern shore of Sicily, has, after a short but sharp resistance, been subjected to the control of the King of Naples. The Neapolitan fleet, consisting of three frigates and twelve steamers, sailed from Messina on Monday, 2nd April, for Catania, taking in its route Taormina.

On Thursday, the 5th, at half-past nine, A.M., six Neapolitan steamers were seen rounding the Cyclops Rocks, and standing in towards the town, about gunshot off the land. As soon as they were within range, the northernmost fort opened her fire, which was quickly returned by the steamers. After an hour and a half's hard firing the steamers sheered off, and stood away to rejoin their squadron. The Sicilians, during the attack, seemed in high spirits. At every shot they fired, they raised cries of 'Guerra Guerra!' &c. Next day (Good Friday) the whole squadron was seen, at half-past eleven, A.M., rounding the Cyclops—the Admiral leading. The Sicilians commenced action, and the Neapolitans, keeping well out, fired their shell at the town. The Sicilians had no shell, and the Neapolitans kept so far out, that most of their shot fell short. At one o'clock the troops were perceived about ten miles off rapidly approaching, driving the people before them, and firing every house as they advanced. All the houses were barricaded the people firing from the windows on the advancing troops At half-past two, the three frigates beat up under single-reefed topsails, with an ensign at each mast-head, the Commodore leading. When within range, she put her helm up, and fired her broadside, which, however, fell short; she received only one shot, and that about her water-line. The next frigate fired hers with the same ill-luck. The other could not beat up in time. The firing continued till sunset, when the steamers got out of range. The troops had advanced into the suburbs, and the whole country, for miles behind them, was on fire. However, as the evening advanced, they were forced to retreat behind the town, where they bivouacked for the night. Early next morning they entered without much opposition, and gained the town. At half-past 8 A.M. the forts hauled down their colours, and the place was taken possession of.

"The town is a second Messina. On Sunday, when we saw it, it was in a dreadful state. The dead Sicilians still lay about the streets. In and about the Strada Etnea, along which the troops entered, we ourselves counted nine corpses. The streets were full of soldiers, and blocked up with spiked guns, ammunition-waggons, burnt beams, dead horses, &c.; the houses mostly burnt.

"On Monday following, Augusta and Syracuse surrendered on the approach of the squadron, without firing a shot.

"The loss at Catania on both sides must have been severe; but the Neapolitans will not admit that on their side."

The following letter from a Neapolitan officer has appeared in the Debats:—

"On the morning of the 6th, near the Baltati, on one of the slopes of Mount Etna, our vanguard was briskly attacked by the enemy, who had taken up a position with two field-pieces. Our artillery soon dismounted them. The first brigade advanced and gained the village after a bloody battle. Thence we advanced on the heights which crown the eastern gate of Catania, and which were defended by a battery. Here the Sicilians made a firm stand, but our howitzers dislodged them, and our chasseurs turned their battery, and made themselves masters of it, and at the same time a squadron of lancers charged their front in the high-road. From this point to the entrance into Catania our troops went down in double quick time, passing the first barricades. But in the town a desperate conflict commenced. The main street, called the Stesicorea, was intercepted by barricades defended in great part by foreigners; the houses were filled with men firing upon us in every direction, and the Sicilians had, it was said, undermined several houses, with the intent of blowing us up when we should have taken them. We advanced, therefore, step by step through their fire, burning the houses before us, in order to explode the mines, before going any further, and at the same time dislodging the enemy. In this advance along the main street, we took three pieces of cannon. From some unknown cause one of the ammunition waggons caught fire, and a tremendous explosion ensued, throwing up clouds of red smoke. At first it was believed to be an explosion of a mine, and our soldiers were for a moment so much astonished by it, that they faltered, and were thrown into disorder, till the Commander-in-Chief came up and reassured them. Upon this they resumed the advance. Houses and palaces continued to keep up a well-sustained firing upon us from both sides of the street, while at the end of it a battery of four guns thundered away upon our front. At last, at eight in the evening, after a whole day of most horrible fighting, the enemy gave up the possession of this unfortunate city. We had 300 men put hors de combat, of whom about 60 were killed. The enemy left 182 dead in the streets, besides the wounded, the number of whom is not known. We took 200 prisoners. Such is the summary of the attack upon this city of 25,000 souls, fortified by enormous barricades, and armed with 48 pieces of cannon. The town suffered severely, and many of its palaces are in ashes. May these dreadful consequences fall upon the heads of those who lighted up the fratricidal war."

DUNDURN CASTLE.

THE handsome structure, which Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Richard Bonnycastle refers to as "one of the few attempts at castle building in Canada," is beautifully situated at the upper end of Burlington Bay, at the head of Lake Ontario. It was built for the residence of Sir Allan Macnab, Speaker of the House of Assembly of Canada: the mansion is a great ornament to the vicinity of Hamilton, embowered as it is in the natural forest. Near it, however, is a vast swamp, in which is Coot's Paradise; so named, it is said, from a gentleman who was fond of duck-shooting, or, perhaps, from the coot or water-hen being there in bliss.

Hamilton is a thriving town, exhibiting the rapid progress which a good location ensures. The other day it was in the forest; to-day it is advancing to a city. The voyage across Burlington Bay is very pleasant and picturesque, the land being more broken, elevated, and diversified than in the lower portions of Canada West; and the Burlington Heights, so important a position in the war of 1812, show to great advantage.

The news just received from Canada, and noticed in our Journal of last week, is of an important character; the commotion which prevails through the country seeming to denote some great change to be at hand. The New York correspondent of the Standard states:—

"The Governor-General has become most unpopular. As yet he has not signed the Indemnity Bill: it is believed that he intends submitting it to the powers that be at home, although there is little doubt that his first intent was to sanction the odious and unjust measure; he has, however, taken the alarm at the determined front of the British population, who formerly rejoiced in the names of Loyalists of Canada, but who now seem to be goaded and driven by the colonial government of Lord Grey to become open advocates of annexation to the United States. The larger towns of Canada are said to present the appearance of armed citadels. Military officers are busily employed in reviewing and putting all things in order; the streets are crowded with the police, which, within a few days has been greatly increased. The bowie knife and revolver are as common, and are considered as indispensible as they would be in California. Meetings are nightly held, in which the public feeling and indignation is as loudly and openly proclaimed as it would be in the United States. All business seems to have come to a stand-still, awaiting the final decision of that fatal bill. It is evident that a dreadful storm is fast gathering, and ere long will break forth in one mighty torrent. Already we have open outbreak On the 22nd the Ministerial measure for the payment of the rebels of 1837 and 1838 resulted in a serious riot in Toronto. Messrs. Baldwin, Blake, and Mackenzie were burned in effigy."

DUNDURN CASTLE, HAMILTON, CANADA WEST.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

THE RIGHT HON. J. C. HERRIES.

THE last struggle in the House of Commons in behalf of the doomed doctrine of Protection (in the politico-commercial sense of the word) was decided on Monday night. The occasion was the third reading of the bill introduced by

THE RIGHT HON. J. C. HERRIES, M.P. FOR STAMFORD.

Mr. Labouchere for the abolition (in all but a few exceptional respects) of that code of regulations which have now, for two centuries, so vexatiously fettered the free action of our mercantile marine, and which are popularly known as the Navigation Laws. It would not be easy to point out, in full operation, in any one country pretending to the same political and commercial enlightenment that we deem ourselves justified in laying claim to, a system more absurdly mischievous, more directly at variance with the true sources of commercial prosperity, than that which, after much deliberation and lengthened discussion, the Lower House, by a considerable majority, condemned as no longer tenable, on the occasion referred to. And yet, there were not wanting voices which have heretofore commanded attention in the high places of power and of dignity, to advocate its maintenance—foremost amongst which was that of the Right Hon. gentleman whose portrait we present this week. Mr. Herries commenced the debate by moving the amendment of "that day six months," the customary mode in parliamentary tactics of dealing a death-blow at a proposed measure of legislation; but the speech with which he followed up his motion was tame and even feeble, and fell wholly pointless on the House. He did not venture into the arguments for or against, bearing upon the subject, contenting himself merely with the enunciation of vague generalities, and the indication of the organised opposition which had been got up against the bill in some of the leading ports and commercial towns of the kingdom. Never very forcible in his harangues, even on the most popular occasions, the financier of the Protectionists was on Monday evening more than usually unimpressive; and not even the knowledge that he had the ready aid of the brilliant eloquence and epigrammatic point of the right honourable member for Buckinghamshire, could impart vigour to his address. He appeared what he then was, the minister of a fallen faith, which even its former votaries had abandoned; and the measure he opposed, and which forms the complement of free trade, was carried by a majority large enough to usher it into the Upper House with the prestige of undeniable success in the people's chamber.

Mr. Herries was brought up in the very lap of Protection, having been at an early period of his political career Private Secretary for many years to Mr. Perceval, and he has the merit certainly, quantum valeat, of unswerving consistency in his political tenets. He is the eldest son of the late Colonel Herries, who, at the time of the late war, when it was thought "the country was in danger," was one of the first of those patriotic gentlemen who bethought themselves of raising an volunteer corps for the defence of our sea-girt land. The right hon. gentleman received his education in the university of Leipsic. He has a pension of £1350 a-year, given as compensation on the abolition of an office which he held as Commissary-in-Chief, that sum being equivalent to half the emoluments of the situation. He has also been auditor of the Civil List, from the year 1823 to 1827, he was Secretary to the Treasury, then Chancellor of the Exchequer for a short time, and subsequently (from 1828 to 1830) he was Master of the Mint, from which office he was transferred to the Presidency of the Board of Trade for a few months in the latter year. In the brief Conservative administration during the winter of 1834-35, he was Secretary at War. It is thus seen that his tenure of office, "in the good old times," was pretty lengthy.

The right hon. gentleman has a brother who is a distinguished officer in the army, viz. Major-General Sir William Lewis Herries, K.C.H., &c., who holds the important situation of Chairman of the Audit Board.

Mr. Herries (Right Hon. John Charles) represented the borough of Harwich in Parliament from the year 1823 until the general elections in 1841, when he was unsuccessful at the hustings. He continued out of Parliament until 1847, when he was returned for Stamford. He married the daughter of John Dorrington, Esq., principal Commitee Clerk to the House of Commons.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 29.—3rd Sunday after Easter. Moon's First Quarter, 3h. 17m. P.M.
MONDAY, 30.—Sun rises 5h. 57m., sets 7h. 19m.
TUESDAY, May 1.—St. Philip and St. James.
WEDNESDAY, 2. Mrs. Piozzi died, aged 82, 1821.
THURSDAY, 3. Invention of the Cross.
FRIDAY, 4.—Jenny Lind's first appearance in England, 1847.
SATURDAY, 5.—Sun rises 5h. 28m, sets 7h. 27m.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 5.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h. m. 0 7	A. h. m. 10 7	M. h. m. 0 48	A. h. m. 11 20	M. h. m. 1 30	A. h. m. 11 52	M. h. m. 2 12
A. h. m. 0 29	M. h. m. 10 48	A. h. m. 11 2	M. h. m. 11 42	A. h. m. midnight	M. h. m. Tide	A. h. m. 12 34

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—MDLLE. JENNY LIND.—The Nobility, Patrons of the Opera, and the Public are respectfully informed that a Grand Extra Night will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, MAY 3, 1849, when will be presented DONIZETTI'S Opera, entitled, LA FIGLIA DEL REGGIMENTO. Maria, Mdlle Jenny Lind; La Marchesa, Mdlle Grisi; Sulpizio Bourgeois, Sig Lablache; Ortensio, Sig Aldebolini; and Tonio, Sig Gardoni.

To conclude with the highly-successful comedietta new Grand Ballet, by M Paul Taglioni, if M. Sig Pagni, entitled ELECTRA, or the Lost Pleiad. Principal Characters by Mdlle Carlotta Grisi, Mdlle Marie Taglioni, Lauretta, Amendola, Albert Rosati, Desplaces, and Mdlle Marie Taglioni; MM. Gouriet, Vernitte, Di Matteis, and P. Taglioni.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre, where the Tickets may be obtained on usual prices 10s 6d each.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. WM BATTY. Continued success of the new Grand Easter Spectacle.—On MONDAY, APRIL 30th, the Performances will commence with Tilbrill's Great Romantic Equestrian spectacle THE WHITE MAIDEN OF CALIFORNIA; or, the Horse of the Ocean; with new scenery, &c. To a succession of Scenes of the Arena, illustrative of the remarkable feats of the British and Foreign Artistes. To conclude with the LONDON CABBIES.—Business upon Sam Hicken's Pet Pony.—Stage Manager, Mr. C. Tilbrill.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY. - The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed, the FOURTH CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 30. Vocalists—Madame Sontzeni, Lotter 7, Haydn Concerto in D minor Pianoforte Mrs Anderson, Mendelssohn. Overture, Beethoven. New Symphony, No 8 Beethoven. To conclude with Weber's Mass in E flat. Vocalists—Madame Caradori Allan, Lindpaintner. Vocal Performers—Mdlle De Treffry and Miss Rainforth; MM Sims Reeves, Hobbs, Phillips, Lawrence, Alexander, Albert Rosati, and Mdlle Marie Taglioni; MM. Gouriet, Vernitte, Di Matteis, and P. Taglioni.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre, where the Tickets may be obtained on usual prices 10s 6d each.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. WM BATTY. Continued success of the new Grand Easter Spectacle.—On MONDAY, APRIL 30th, the Performances will commence with Tilbrill's Great Romantic Equestrian spectacle THE WHITE MAIDEN OF CALIFORNIA; or, the Horse of the Ocean; with new scenery, &c. To a succession of Scenes of the Arena, illustrative of the remarkable feats of the British and Foreign Artistes. To conclude with the LONDON CABBIES.—Business upon Sam Hicken's Pet Pony.—Stage Manager, Mr. C. Tilbrill.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY. - The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed, the FOURTH CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 30. Vocalists—Madame Sontzeni, Lotter 7, Haydn Concerto in D minor Pianoforte Mrs Anderson, Mendelssohn. Overture, Beethoven. New Symphony, No 8 Beethoven. To conclude with Weber's Mass in E flat. Vocalists—Madame Caradori Allan, Lindpaintner. Vocal Performers—Mdlle De Treffry and Miss Rainforth; MM Sims Reeves, Hobbs, Phillips, Lawrence, Alexander, Albert Rosati, Desplaces, and Mdlle Marie Taglioni; MM. Gouriet, Vernitte, Di Matteis, and P. Taglioni.

MUSICAL UNION, WILLIS'S ROOMS, TUESDAY, MAY 1, at Half past Three o Clock. MADAY will perform with Dulcffre, Tolbecque, Hill, and Hallé. Quartet, No 5, E flat, Mendelssohn, Sonata, in G, Op 96, Piano and Violin, and Quartet, No 8, B minor, Beethoven.—Single admissions, half-a guinea, to be had at CRAMER and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street. Members can pay for visitors at the Rooms. No artist will be admitted without tickets.

48, Wellbeck-street. J. ELLA, Director.

EXETER HALL.—WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—The Directors of the London Wednesday Concerts beg to announce that the LAST CONCERT of this season will be held on WEDNESDAY EVENING NEXT, MAY 2, and will be for the BENEFIT of Mr. STAMMERS, Managing Director, when will appear Misses Dolby, Lascelles, & Williams, A. Taylor, Reimers, and Tedder; Messrs Wilkinson, Bodda, Lawler, Lazarus, Weiss, Williams, Phillips, Collins, Harper, Hoare Pischek (his First Appearance for England), and Mr. Sims Reeves. Upon this occasion the whole of the Music will be executed from the works of English Musicians with the exception of Herr Pischek's songs.—Stalls, 5s and 3s; Reserved Seats, 6s; Stalls, 7s; may be had of all musicsellers; and of Mr STAMMERS, 2, Exeter Hall.

EXETER HALL.—Mr. S. J. NOBLE will make his FIRST APPEARANCE on WEDNESDAY EVENING NEXT, MAY 2nd, at the LAST of the WEDNESDAY EVENING CONCERTS (which will be for the BENEFIT of Mr. STAMMERS, Managing Director), when he will perform an Adagio and Rondo from Moscheles' Concerto, and introducing the "British Grenadiers March." Tickets to be had of Mr STAMMERS, 2, Exeter Hall

HERR STRAUSS (of Vienna) respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public that he will give, on MONDAY, the 30th of APRIL, a GRAND CONCERT at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, to commence at Two o'Clock, and on alternate Evenings. Lecture on Chemistry, daily, at Half-past Two and Seven o'Clock, and on alternate Evenings. The Museum, Diorama, Cosmorama, Panorama, Van Diemen's Land, from Sketches made on the Spot by Mr. ANTHONY, and the MISSISSIPPI painted by J. H. SMITH Esq., the celebrated American artist, extending over four miles of canvass, and depicting scenery for Two thousand miles of American scenery, showing on these and miles more of the Mississippi than any other moving Panorama in the World. Hours of Exhibition, Morning, Half-past Two; Evening, Eight. Admission, Back Seats, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s.; Stalls, 3s.

THE EXHIBITION of the Association for Promoting the Free Admission of MODERN ART is NOW OPEN at the Gallery, Hyde Park-corner, daily from 9 till dusk. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 6d. BELL SMITH, Hon. Secretary.

SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.—The FORTY-FIFTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION WILL OPEN at their GALLERY, 5, PALL MALL EAST, on MONDAY, APRIL 30th.—Admittance, One Shilling. Catalogue, Sixpence. GEORGE FRIPP, Sec.

THE NEW SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.—The Fifteenth Annual Exhibition of the Society is Now Open at their Gallery, FIFTY-THREE, PALL-MALL, near St. James's Palace, from Nine o'clock till Dusk. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d. JAMES FALEN, Secretary.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Subscriber."—The Border Marriage Engravings are in No. 334 of our Journal.

"A Town Subscriber."—To the Lord Chamberlain's office.

"Alfred."—"The Royal Calendar" is an accredited work for the purpose in question. The "Traits of the Reform Association," now publishing, profess to give such details.

"E. C." Newcastle.—Buy "The Shilling Manual of Oil-Painting." We have not room for recipes.

"G. A. B."—We cannot reply to your indefinite inquiries.

"H. P. P. W." Pimlico.—In the first line named the verb should be singular; in the second, plural, as written by you.

"Cater."—Received.

"H. S. S." Dudley-hill.—The fullest account of Labuan will be found in the journals of Rajah Brooke, lately published by Murray.

"T. O."—Eye of Horus

"B. W."—There are in the Royal Mews black Hanoverian horses, eight of which are sometimes harnessed to the Queen's state carriage.

"A Lieutenant of Thirty-two Years' Standing."—Received.

"Theodore."—There is no one work that we know of.

"J. P."—Chancery-lane.—Apply to Newton and Son, patent agents, Chancery-lane.

"An Old Subscriber," Lynn.—See the "Penciluood Papers," for some excellent remarks on capital punishment.

"W. N." &c.—Your plan of illustration is impracticable.

"Contror."—St. George's Hall, Liverpool, has only just been roofed in.

"D. E. F." should apply to the publishers.

"A. B."—It would afford us much pleasure to supply genealogical particulars of the family in question, but we have not the means of doing so. All we know of the name is, that Sir Thomas Byard held the rank of Post-Captain in the Royal Navy, and was a distinguished officer. He resided at Mount Tamar, Devon, and left daughters and co-heirs, one of whom, Mary Ann Stuart, married George Sheppard, Esq., of Broomfield House, county of Somerset. A pedigree of the Sheppards appears in Burke's "Landed Gentry."

"C. B. S."—See Fielding's "Treatise on Painting in Oil and Water Colours."

"A Correspondent," Bromley.—No record of any kind has been offered for a Queen Anne's farthing, seeing that the coinage is not rare. (Vide "Popular Errors Explained," p. 181.)

"P. L." Cambridge.—"A Subscriber," Sunderland; "W. D." "W. S. D.," Kelso; "Junius"—We cannot inform you.

"A."—See the article Boston, in the "Penny Cyclopædia," p. 238, vol. 5.

"J. W. C." Woodbridge.—Apply for tickets to Ackermann and Co., Strand.

"G. B." Tedworth.—"Lewis Arms"

"W. J. S." Hull.—Apply to Mr. Wyld, geographer, Charing-cross.

"A Subscriber."—Saint Pancras New Church was built by Messrs. Inwoods, 1819-22.

"Dago." Miss O'Neill was married in 1819 to Wm. Becher, Esq., created a baronet in 1831. Lady Becher is living.

"A Country Subscriber," Walton.—The address is No. 19, Montpelier-square, Brompton.

"H. M." and "C. T. R."—A clicker is a person who cuts out boots and shoes.

"Emigrant," Dublin.—We cannot inform you.

"Tooting."—See Thornton's "Family Herbal."

"Lorenzo."—"Le Spectateur du Nord" was attributed to Mirabeau, is known to have been written by the Baron D'Holbach. Voltaire condemned it as absurd, illogical, and abominable.

"Dramaticus."—We do not think the song is published.

"Lah," Kensington.—Mr. Ward's great exhibition picture may be heard of at his residence, 6, Newman-street, Oxford-street.

"Undine" will find accommodation for bathing at Ostend.

"Delia," Plymouth.—Apply to Messrs. Hoopir, 45, Fleet-street.

"M." Manchester.—We cannot aid you.

"E. B. C."—Fanny Elsler was the original Esmeralda, at Her Majesty's Theatre.

"An Invalid," Rathkeay.—The city of Cork lies upon high ground, on both sides of the river Lee, four miles from its entrance into Cork harbour.

"A Correspondent at Ferrycarrig" is thanked for the Sketch, though we have not room to engrave it.

"J. D.," Dublin," is thanked. Should the plan be carried out, the illustrations would be of interest.

"J. P." Sydenham; "Ancient History," and "N. L. C."—Declined.

"M. S." Garstang.—We have not room for the anecdote.

"A Subscriber." Four R. H.

"Megarbear."—Of a music-seller in London.

"F. W. B." Ipswich.—Declined.

"P. L." should consult a surgeon.

"R. H.," Aberdeen, can remit by Post-Office order.

"T. E. A."—Hemphrey's Lessons on Cases, recently published.

"An Old Subscriber," Pentonville.—In Bronchitis the middle syllable is long.

"F. W. R.," Halton.—Evans's "Sketch of all Denominations," &c. Mrs. Hemans' works are published by Blackwood.

"W. H.," Gmabruck.—The name of one of the extinct gigantic birds, whose bones have lately been found in New Zealand, is the Dinornis, or Danger-bird. There are also the "Fear-bird" or "Fearful-bird," engraved by Harding.

"La Musique."—Apply to Mr. Novello, music-seller, Dean-street, Soho.

"J. L." Manchester.—Write to the Secretary, or search the Gazette.

"C. S. R."—The statements have not been confirmed in the English journals.

"Cavalry."—The distention would be unjustifiable.

"A. J. H."—We have not room.

"D. P." Greenwich; "Puzzle," Dublin.—Declined.

"H. W."—Apply to Mr. Weale, publisher, High Holborn.

"C. J."—Apply at the Art-Union office, West Strand.

"Amateur."—Apply to the keeper of the National Gallery.

"B. A." Hatchlife.—There may be more than one "leader."

"Camorra."—A female is not entitled to bear a crest.

"W. W."—In strict conformity to the laws of heraldry, a person bears the arms of his existing wife only. The children, by each co-heiress, will quarter their respective mother's arms with their paternal coat.

"G. L.," Poplar.—The queries would be considered a subject.

"J. B. S.," Bury.—Her Majesty is a lineal descendant of William the Conqueror.

"Hermias."—No precedence.

"Hiemsteus."—A dark cannot, when forming an appendage of the crest, exhibits only the run and medallic pack.

"J. P. D." Newcastle.—"E. W." Leith, "A Young Sawyer," "Eddystone," A Subscriber," Carysfort; "J. X. Z.," Birmingham; "J. S.," Knightsbridge.—We cannot inform you.

"J. P. D." Newcastle.—A specimen of Mr. Silvertop appeared long since in our Journal, previously to the receipt of "D.S." communication.

"H. V."—No crest can be assumed unless the wearer is entitled to it by descent or grant.

"A Landlord at Carberry."—Received.

NEW CHURCH OF ST. STEPHEN, PORTLAND-ROAD.—Mr. J. R. Hamilton writes, that he was associated with Mr. Daukes in the design for this new Church, engraved in our Journal of last week.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

China and the Chinese.——Hall's Historical Rambles in Sussex.——Dowling's Popular Nature History.——Dr. Beard's Works.——Toffer's Tales and Sketches.

MUSIC.—"Sunday, Year, of Days."

In the Press, and shortly will be Published, price One Shilling,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON SPELLING-BOOK.

This work is rendered peculiarly attractive by the EASY ARRANGEMENT of the SPELLING, which smooths all difficulties experienced by beginners, and by the PLEASING ORIGINAL READING LESSONS, which entice the learner to advance of his own accord, while the whole is illustrated by UPWARDS OF ONE HUNDRED and FIFTY BEAUTIFUL WOOD-CUTS of objects and scenes described, forming by far the most alluring introduction to learning ever published.

Published at the Office of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, London.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1849.

THE accounts from the distressed districts of Ireland are almost as deplorable as they were in the great year of the potato famine. The Union of Skibbereen preserves its ancient pre-eminence of misery. In the workhouse of that union there are, according to a recent letter, no fewer than 3784 paupers, being an excess of 366 over the number sanctioned by the Poor-Law Commissioners; while on the list for out-door relief there are 15,748 persons. The returns of money in the hands of the Treasurer of the Union are expressed by the single word nil; while the debts due by the Union on its current expenditure are upwards of £6000. Some thousands of persons have lately been struck off "out-door relief lists by a resolution of the Board of Guardians, limiting the numbers to be relieved out of the workhouse; and hundreds who have travelled to Skibbereen from distances varying from ten to forty or fifty miles, with the hope of procuring admission, have been compelled to sleep in the fields and ditches in the neighbourhood of the town. Some of them, after lying down, have slept that last sleep which levels all the distinctions of this earth. "Many villages," says a letter in the Cork Examiner, "which had formerly a considerable population, have now scarcely an inhabitant; most of those who had any means whatever to reach America, having fled from their native country as from a plague." Nor is the distress confined to the peasantry alone. The Dublin Evening Mail states, on competent authority, two instances of the universal misery: the first, that of three respectable Roman Catholic Priests, who have been forced by necessity to have their names placed upon the relief lists; and the second that of a beneficed Protestant clergyman, who has been largely entrusted with the distribution of relief, and who has discharged the trust with honour; who has, within the last few weeks, petitioned a relief association for permission to appropriate half a ton of the oatmeal confided to him, to the purpose of saving his children from starvation. In addition to starvation, disease, its invariable concomitant, has made its appearance in the west. The cholera is rapidly thinning the ranks of those who might otherwise linger on for some time longer in misery and destitution. The Dublin correspondent of the Times states that the poor are dying of cholera by scores in their wretched huts and on the road-sides; and adds that, in many instances, the bodies have been left for whole days without the rites of burial. A letter from Ballinrobe states that "the mortality in the workhouse is awful; and, what with fever, dysentery, and cholera, the people are dying like rotten sheep." A gentleman who has, within the last few days, returned from the western districts of Connaught, corroborates all these distressing accounts, and states, moreover, a new circumstance, which has not been previously noticed. He says that in a ride from Swineford, in the county of Mayo, to Longford, a distance of forty miles, the whole country right and left is laid down with grain to the exclusion of every other crop, not even a perch of potatoes being planted. The seed has been thrown into the ground without ploughing, amid the stubble of the last crop, covered thinly with a few loose shovelfuls of clay. He suspects that some Communist movement is contemplated, and that no landlord in that part of the country need calculate upon any rent, as the measurings of the various fields have been purposely obliterated, so that no man, not even the owner, can define his real boundaries.

Meantime, the Government, having failed to persuade the Irish members, in their celebrated conference with Lord John Russell, that either a Rate-in-aid or an Income-tax was desirable, has taken its own course, and proceeded with the former measure. It has taken a vote of money on the security of that rate, and will, doubtless, deal with that is possible with such small means to stay the progress of this appalling destitution. Nevertheless, this measure, as a reliance, is a rotten staff. Neither force nor alms, singly or in combination, can heal such evils as these. Lord John Russell has been told by others than the weekly caricaturist, "that his carriage stops the way." Sir Robert Peel has startled the Whigs from their dream of a dolce far niente. Some time ago, Lord John Russell, in his famous letter from Edinburgh, announcing, that, in his opinion, the time had come for a settlement of the Corn-Law question, gave an impetus to the slow intentions of his great rival. Sir Robert Peel, by his still more famous speech, recommending a "plantation" of Connaught, has administered to the lazy Whig an impetus quite as considerable upon a question of even greater urgency.

It must be confessed, that, although Lord John Russell contrived to forestal Sir Robert Peel, and rob him of some portion of the credit of spontaneity as a Corn-Law repealer, Sir Robert has taken a full and very fair revenge. He has chalked out the course of policy for Ireland, which, sooner or later, his tardy and unwilling rival must follow, or resign office. The symptoms that a spur is in the side of the Whig Premier are already apparent. Before Easter, the laissez faire principle was vaunted as sufficient, or nearly so. His Lordship, however, seems to have meditated upon the matter during the holidays, and to have come to the conclusion that coercion and charity were not of themselves sufficient to remove such evils as those which render Ireland a curse to herself and to us, and our opprobrium in the eyes of the civilised world. On the night of the reassembling of Parliament, his Lordship gave notice of the intention of the Government to introduce two bills: the one to amend the Poor-Law Act—in what respect not stated; and the other to facilitate the sale of encumbered estates. It is generally admitted that the Poor Law, as it at present stands, is either inapplicable or highly injurious in many districts of Ireland; and if, without exempting from its operation the new settlement, the Ministers can so modify the details as to make it work more beneficially for the poor and for the ratepayers, they will confer a boon both upon England and Ireland.

The second measure is a step in the direction of Sir Robert Peel's plan. Whether it will be framed so as to meet the object in view may be questioned by the friends of the introduction of a solvent proprietary into Munster and Connaught, remains to be seen. But, whether or no, these measures are mere "nibbles." They show no boldness of statesmanship. They are palliatives, not remedies; cobblings, not renovations; makeshifts for a day, not reconstruction for a permanency. Upon this great Irish question, by far the most interesting and important social problem of the present age, most the capacities of all who pretend to the character of statesmen be weighed and tested. All the other matters upon which Parliament may debate, important as they would at other times be considered, must yield to the urgency of this. Sir Robert Peel has both simplified and magnified the issue to which it must come. Laissez faire has had its day; and the Whigs, in adhering to such a policy —if we may dignify it with such an appellation—will have had theirs. The premonitory symptoms of their fall are already visible.

In another column will be found the particulars of an accident at Kensington, which has been followed by the death of a lady, and the serious, if not mortal, injury of the gentleman, her companion, who drove the vehicle. This accident has excited public attention in a very strong degree to a great and increasing nuisance. It appears that the noise created by an itinerant brass band, stationed opposite a public-house, was the sole cause of the accident. The horse started at the uproar of the instruments, and, becoming perfectly unmanageable, all these fatal consequences ensued, which have brought affliction and death into two respectable families, if not into three or four. By some unlucky oversight of the Legislature—or, perhaps, in consequence of some undue tenderness for Italian boys who grind the organ, or blind men who play the fiddle in our thoroughfares—street music and the exhibition of Punch were exempted from the operations of the recent Police Act. In the case of the exhibition of Punch we should be sorry to see any of the terrors of the law evoked; but in the case of those abominable nuisances, the brass bands and the monster organs, or apollonicons, we think it is high time that the act should be amended, so as to make it a part of the duty of the police to prevent such invasions of the public peace. The evil is intolerable to studious or to sick people; but, as this unhappy case shows, it is sometimes worse than a nuisance. It is the cause of frightful and fatal calamities. The evil has attained such a pitch of late years as to call loudly for redress and prevention. The speculators in noise know perfectly well that the greater the din made by their brazen instruments, or their monster organs, the greater their chance of profit. To be relieved of the odious disturbance, a sensitive or a sickly housekeeper is often contented to pay handsomely for the absence of this miscalled music. If he pay once, he is a marked victim. His tormentors "know the value of peace and quietness;" and their return is as periodical as that of the tax-gatherer. There is no possible cure for the evil, except to forbid the playing of bands in the streets. A solitary fiute, a fiddle, or a hurdy-gurdy may be tolerated; but a whole orchestra of discord is a nuisance, which even as a nuisance ought not to be permitted; but which, as the probable cause of calamities such as that which has just occurred at Kensington, calls for the strong arm of the law to prohibit entirely, under a severe penalty upon all transgressors.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

On Sunday morning the Queen and Prince Albert, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household attended Divine Service in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace. The sermon was preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The prayers were read by the Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay.

On Monday the Queen, attended by the Countess of Gainsborough, Lady in Waiting, and Colonel Buckley, Equerry in Waiting, visited her Majesty Queen Adelaide, at Marlborough House. The Queen and Prince Albert honored the Haymarket Theatre with their presence in the evening.

